This movie grossed so much money and lasted so long that intermission and naps should have been allowed. It feels like it was written for commercial success and nothing else. It has no depth to the characters. The movie beat out films like "Good Will Hunting" and "L.A. Confidential" that year. Is "Titanic" better than either of those two films? Not in a million years. One is about love, and finding yourself while the other is a crime thriller starring Russell Crowe, Kevin Spacey, Guy Pierce and Kim Bassinger. Movies that year that were overlooked and were surely better films, stories and much more unique were "Boogie Nights" and "Wag the Dog." "Titanic" won 11 Oscars that year and it was a shame.

Chicago (2002)

"Chicago," a musical starring Richard Gere, is a smear on the Academy's choices for Best Picture. Gere's good looks could not save this movie. The year "Chicago" won Best Picture, it was up against "Gangs of New York" and there is no way "Chicago" is better than "Gangs of New York" because "Chicago" didn't have Daniel Day-Lewis as Bill the Butcher; "Gangs of New York" did.

Kevin Koczwara can be reached at kkoczwar@student.umass.edu

COURTESY MIRAMAX

Renee Zellweger received an Academy Award nomination for Best Actress for her performance in "Chicago." "Chicago" beat out several notable films for Best Picture in 2002.

COURTESY CHARTOFF-WINKLER PRODUCTIONS

Many movie and sport fans love "Rocky," but according to some critics, the film did not deserve to beat "Taxi" for Best Picture during the 1976 Academy Awards.

COURTESY PARAMOUNT PICTURES

Tom Hanks' performance in "Forrest Gump" is considered his best. The movie earned him his second Academy Award for Best Leading Male Role.

Rams too much for UMass

By Eli Rosenswaike
Collegian Staff

The disparity in free throws may have been the difference.

It could have been the disparity in rebounds or the disparity in points scored by Ricky Harris (three) compared to his season average of 18.8.

Massachusetts men's basketball coach Travis Ford wasn't sure what it was against Fordham last night, and he's tired of trying to figure it out.

What he does know, however, is that the Minutemen are in serious danger of missing out on the NCAA Tournament for the 10th straight season after dropping a close game to the Rams, 76-72, at the Mullins Center.

"It was sad, it was sad; it was pitiful," Ford said after the game. "I'm tired trying to figure out this team. There is no [chance at an] at-large [bid into the tournament], there is none. So that's done. It's probably pretty safe to say. If we win out, I think we'll be all right. We'll see."

"But if you play like this, give me a break," he added, after pausing briefly.

The victory for Fordham (9-12, 3-6 Atlantic 10) snapped a four-game losing streak, and marked just its third win in the last 10 games. The Minutemen (15-9, 4-6 A-10) have dropped three of their last four in the conference.

Up by two points with eight seconds remaining, Fordham's Marcus Stout hit both free throws on a one-and-one to give the Rams a two-possession lead. UMass guard Chris Lowe missed a lay-up and the ball skipped out of bounds as time expired.

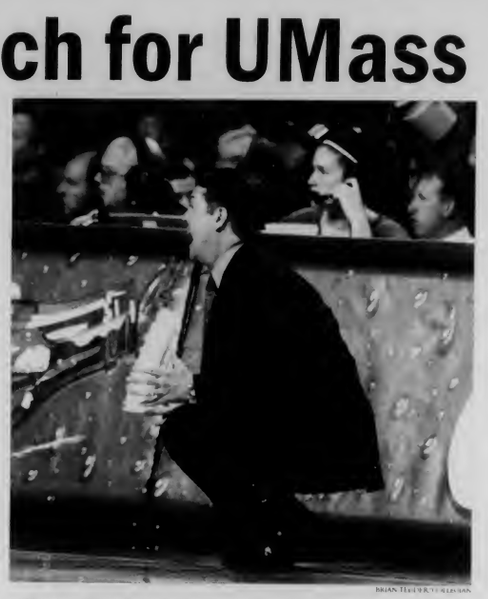
The Minutemen had chances at the end. Gary Forbes hit two free throws with 31 seconds remaining, cutting the lead to two. Brenton Butler hit one foul shot for the Rams 14 seconds later to extend the lead to three, but it remained a one-possession game. Dante Milligan was then fouled with 10 seconds left on a lay-up attempt, but missed the front end.

His second shot banked off the glass and went in, cutting the lead to two but also giving Fordham a chance to ice the game with two made free throws which Stout did.

The Minutemen were outrebounded by nine, but the key difference was at the foul line – where the Rams had a 14-point edge (22 to eight).

Stout paced Fordham with 22 points, while standout Bryant Dunston added 15 points and 12 rebounds. Sebastian Greene provided a spark off the bench, registering a double-double with 13 points and 11 rebounds.

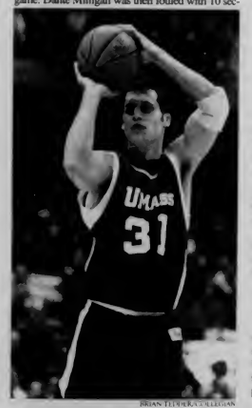
Forbes led all players with 23 points and 13 rebounds, but he didn't get enough help from his teammates after halftime. Etienne Brower had a big first half with 14 points, but he took just one shot in the second half due to foul trouble. Only Matt Glass (six points) scored off the bench for UMass, despite five players combining for 49 minutes on the floor.



Milligan battled foul trouble once again, but finished with 15 points. Lowe had a season-high 10 assists to go with his eight points.

The first half was relatively uneventful with both teams shooting poorly and turning the ball over, but Brower provided a spark, hitting a 3-pointer at the buzzer to give the Minutemen a two-point lead.

UMass led for the majority of the first half, but the lead constantly changed sides in the second stanza. The lead altered on nine instances after the intermission, with the Rams taking the lead for good on a 3-point shot by Butler with just under three minutes remaining.



The Minutemen return to the Mullins Center on Sunday at 2 p.m. against Saint Louis.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@dailycollegian.com.

BRIAN HAUSER/COLLEGIAN

UMass coach Travis Ford was displeased after his team's 76-72 home loss to Fordham. The Minutemen were 8-of-11 from the free throw line while the Rams went 21-of-33.

BRIAN HAUSER/COLLEGIAN

Forward Luke Bonner scored zero points in nine minutes off the bench last night.

Lack of bench points dooms Minutemen

By Michael King
Collegian Staff

In an ideal situation, a bench can provide starters with much-needed rest while maintaining the status quo in a basketball game. When a member of the starting five experiences foul trouble or suffers through a poor overall performance, capable reserves become invaluable.

In last night's 76-72 loss to Fordham, the Massachusetts men's basketball team was undone by its bench as the Minutemen's starting five could not defeat the Rams on its own.

Entering last night's game, the Minutemen's five starters accounted for 86 percent of the team's 82.4 points per game average. Last night they scored all but six.

In fact, three of its starters, senior forwards Gary Forbes and Etienne Brower and junior point guard Chris Lowe had strong overall performances.

However, two of the Maroon and White's starters spent much of the game in foul trouble and sophomore shooting guard Ricky Harris – the Atlantic 10's fourth-leading scorer – had his worst offensive effort of the season. These factors created the necessity for a strong performance off the bench.

The Minutemen received no such performance.

After the game, even UMass coach Travis Ford was at a loss for words while trying to analyze his team's lack of bench production.

"I don't know; we'll see coming up," he said.

Freshman forward Matt Glass was the only non-starter to score a point. Though his two 3-pointers late in the second half were important for stalling Fordham runs, UMass needed more production to defeat the Rams with Harris having an off-night.

During the first 30 minutes, the UMass bench scored zero points even as five non-starters logged at least two minutes. Besides Glass, just three other Minutemen attempted a shot. That group's only tangible impact was four rebounds and seven fouls.

In sharp contrast, Fordham received 19 points from its bench by that point in the game. That production allowed the Rams to avoid overextending its starters. Coach Dereck Whittenburg rested senior center Bryant Dunston for eight minutes in the first half. The rest seemed to pay off for the senior in the second, as he finished with 15 points and 12 rebounds.

But UMass coach Travis Ford did not have that luxury.

Forbes, Lowe and Harris each log an average of 32 minutes and it's not unlike the trio to see only one or two minutes of rest in certain games. Against the Rams, Forbes and Lowe played all but three-combined minutes.

Meanwhile Harris' 23 minutes were 10 under his average. The sophomore's offensive struggles drew the ire of Ford and a seat on the bench for a usually long portion of the second half. Harris did not register his first point until the final three minutes – a 3-pointer that gave UMass a short-lived 67-65 lead.

Junior forward Tony Gaffney, arguably the team's most important player off the bench, averages 3.6 points in the typical 22.3 minutes he sees per game. But his impact can be felt on other areas of the court, as he far and away leads all bench players in rebounds, blocks and steals.

Last night, he registered three rebounds and blocked two shots but failed to stay on the court for extended periods due to foul trouble.

Gaffney's woes forced senior center Dante Milligan into extended duty with four fouls for much of the second half.

Two other key reserves, freshman point guard Gary Correia and junior center Luke Bonner, were non-factors.

Correia logged the most minutes of any reserve (15). Entering the season Correia's intended role was to back-up Chris Lowe. Yet the freshmen spent nearly all of his playing time last night on the court with Lowe, even though he has shown a limited ability to contribute on offense.

Bonner has started 15 games in 2007-08, including 13 straight starts through much of the nonconference schedule. He was ineffective last night on both ends of the court, especially against Durston in the paint.

Michael King can be reached at mking@student.umass.edu

RICH LUMBARELLO/COLLEGIAN

Kate Mills will try to lead the Minutewomen to a road victory on Saturday at St. Louis. Mills leads the team in both points and rebounds, with 18 and 7.1, respectively.

Take out a classifieds ad

THE DAILY COLLEGIAN

now offers free online classifieds for students at

WWW.UMASSLIST.COM

- More complete, local and relevant category listings than any and all competitor web sites combined
- Users can setup daily e-mail updates for relevant listings. No more searching for apartments, now they come to you.
- Post unlimited online listings
- Little to no spam

By listing on this site you are supporting your local college newspaper, The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

UMass travels for A-10 game with SLU

Rebounding will play major factor

By Mike Connors
Collegian Staff

When the Massachusetts women's basketball team faces Saint Louis on Saturday, it won't be playing one of the best teams in the Atlantic 10.

The Billikens (9-15, 4-5 A-10) struggle to stop teams from scoring, as evidenced by the 68 points they allow per game. They also have trouble shooting from 3-point range – they average slightly over three successful 3-pointers per game at a 28.4 percent rate. Since UMass (11-13, 3-6 A-10) often has trouble guarding the perimeter, this works in its favor.

However, the Minutewomen will have to focus on rebounding – an area that's crippled them throughout the season.

St. Louis averages almost 40 rebounds per game, including 14.88 on the offensive glass, which is good for second in the conference.

In the Minutewomen's 69-45 loss to No. 14 George Washington on Wednesday, the Colonials' Whitney Allen led the way with 13 points and 11 rebounds, as UMass was outrebounded, 43-26.

UMass coach Marnie Dacko has stressed all year that the team needs to focus on rebounding, but for the most part, the results have been lacking.

"They outwork people, they outwork teams," Dacko said of St. Louis. "They're not the most talented, but they work extremely hard, and that's something we've got to be ready for."

Against GW there were few bright spots, but freshman Teya Wright gave UMass the tough rebounding they needed to succeed in the conference. She scored eight points and grabbed 10 rebounds in the loss. She also played 25 minutes without fouling out.

Foul trouble has plagued Wright this season, and Dacko has been trying to teach the young forward how to keep her balance and move her feet so she can remain on the floor. Per 40 minutes, Wright is averaging 13.8 rebounds – over five more than leading-rebounder Kate Mills averages in those same minutes.

Six-foot-four sophomore center Amanda Kemezys leads the Billikens with 8.1 rebounds per game, and averages 10.8 points per game.

Though St. Louis rebounds well, Dacko believes Mills will effectively use her low-post moves to score inside against the Billikens. The senior forward was 3-of-3 from beyond the arc against GW, but Dacko was displeased that Mills didn't call for the ball more often inside the paint in order to draw fouls on the Colonials' post defenders.

"Kate's got to get the ball and shoot," Dacko said. "She can't get the ball and dribble because [the St. Louis defenders] are like flies on tar paper. The ball's going to go inside and they're going to be all over it like gnats. They're small and they're all over you."

While UMass looks for Mills to lead on the offensive end, the Billikens' Theresa Lisch serves the same purpose for her team.

The sophomore guard averages a team-high 17.1 points per game and is a good rebounding guard (4.5 per game).

Dacko says St. Louis penetrates to the hoop well, and one thing the Minutewomen don't want to do is allow Lisch to shoot free throws – she's shooting 91 percent from the line.

Lisch isn't the only one who shoots free throws well for the Billikens – the team leads the conference in free-throw percentage (75.6) and free-throws attempts (537).

Senior Alicia Tatham will be responsible for covering Lisch, while the rest of the team plays a "sagging man-to-man" to prevent dribble penetration to the basket.

If UMass can stop the dribble penetration, Dacko hopes the Billikens are forced into taking tough shots from the perimeter.

Though the Minutewomen rank in the middle of the A-10 in scoring, they've encountered difficulties in finding multiple players to score points.

Pam Rosanio averages 15.5 points per game, but is the only other player besides Mills to average double-digits.

Junior guard Stefanie Gerardot provides a three-point shooting threat and can also drive to the basket. She's established herself as the team's third most reliable scorer, but when she's not scoring, the rest of the players rarely reach double-figures in points.

The team had a light practice yesterday to recover from the GW game, but Dacko believes the team can reel off a string of wins before heading into the conference tournament.

Mike Connors can be reached at mjconnor@student.umass.edu.

RICH LUMBARELLO/COLLEGIAN

Freshman Cerie Mosgrove is averaging 2.5 points this season in limited game action.

Runners hope for sucess at A-10s

Adam Miller
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts indoor track and field teams travel to Kingston, R.I., over the weekend for the indoor Atlantic 10 Championships on Saturday.

The Rams' home track is not in the best condition, but both UMass squads have seen it before. UMass's full squad was in Kingston for the Rhode Island Invitational Feb. 2, and the Minutewomen were there for the New Year Classic on Jan. 11.

A team like Temple, which generally competes on tracks that are in excellent condition, could struggle getting used to URI's track.

"The advantages are strong for both the runners and the field event [athletes]," LaFreniere said. "[Temple] might have a tough time adjusting to URI's track with tough turns and no banking. It will be an adjustment."

The men's team placed fourth in the A-10s last season. Senior Nathan Barksdale and sophomore Ian Hackney will be strong contenders in the 200-meter dash.

Hackney (22.61 seconds) and Barksdale (22.62) have markedly improved their times in the 200-meter from last season, which were over 23 seconds.

If the season is any indicator of how the Minutemen will do this weekend, they should have plenty to look forward to. Freshman Darius Velez will try to improve from last weekend's 55-meter dash, in which he placed sixth (6.5 seconds).

UMass also had 10 people qualify for the New England Championships and three for the IC4A Championships.

"I thought we did a good job with last week's meet," said UMass men's coach Ken O'Brien. "We had some performances that were above and beyond what we hoped to get."

One of the qualifiers for both championships, sophomore Tyler Cotto, is coming off a personal record in the 55-meter hurdles (7.7 seconds). This weekend will be his first career indoor championship.

Junior Jesse Regnier and sophomore Nicolai Naranjo will race in both the 3,000- and 5,000-meter runs.

Junior Josh Boone raced in the one-mile run last week, as well as the 1,000-meter run. But O'Brien pulled him from the 1,000-meter to put him in the relay.

Sophomore Brian Miller will lead UMass in the high jump and long jump competitions. Last week he placed sixth in the high jump with a height of six feet, six inches.

O'Brien said the top teams to watch out for will be UNC-Charlotte and URI, but the middle spots are up for grabs.

"It's a true championship meet," O'Brien said. "These teams are battling for the 4- to 8-spot. There is no [reason] to believe any of those teams are a favorite."

The Minutewomen will turn to senior Christina DeRosa's consistency to rebound from last season's 10th place finish. DeRosa placed ninth with a time of 9:49.36 in the 3,000-meter run at the BU Valentine Invitational. DeRosa's time gives her the third-fastest time at UMass.

DeRosa will race in the 3,000- and 5,000-meter runs. LaFreniere expects DeRosa to have a tough weekend, but believes she will have one of the top performances this weekend.

Freshman Gina Perno set a personal record in the 1,000-meter run, taking second place at the Valentine Invitational with 2 minutes, 56.88 seconds. She will compete in the 1,000-meter again this weekend. She will also compete in the 4x8 relay with an all freshmen team of Liz Fisk, Aaron Meghan, and Lauren Stocker.

"They're freshmen that are running very well, except they're not going to be top-8 in conference," LeFreniere said.

Redshirt senior Danielle Bolt has already had an impressive season. She placed first in the 55-meter dash with a time of 7.16 seconds at the Reebok Indoor Games Jan. 25, and hopes to improve on that this weekend.

Bolt's performance was the third fastest in school history and qualified her for the New England and ECAC Championships.

Redshirt senior Kristen Bakanowski will participate in her first indoor championship since 2006. Previously, she won the pole vault event at the A-10 Championships in 2005 and 2006.

Bakanowski also won the pole vault at the URI Invitational with a height of 12 feet, 1.5 inches, setting a new UMass record.

Despite a number of talented athletes, LaFreniere acknowledged that a lack of depth on the roster will make it difficult to come out on top.

"We're going go [to Rhode Island] and do the best job we can," LaFreniere said. "But we just don't have as many individuals in the events that are in scoring position."

Adam Miller can be reached at ajmill@student.umass.edu

RICH LUMBARELLO/COLLEGIAN

Kristen Bakanowski will try and win her third pole vault title in the A-10 Championships.

Minutewomen hit road for Friday, Saturday matches

By Ryan Fleming
Collegian Correspondent

The Massachusetts tennis team plays its fourth match of the season when its travels to Ithaca, N.Y. to take on Binghamton and Cornell this weekend.

This is the third consecutive weekend the Minutewomen (1-3) will be playing in New York.

Today, UMass faces off against Binghamton.

Against the Bearcats, the Minutewomen have always fared well, with an overall record of 5-1. However, they lost their last match against the Bearcats, 4-3, in March.

The Minutewomen have another tough test against them Saturday, this time against Cornell (2-0).

UMass' record against Cornell is 0-8.

"We won't prepare any differently than we always have," said UMass coach Judy Dixon. "Last year the score was 4-3, we've been close. We always play Cornell second as opposed to first. It always comes on the heels of a hard fought match the day before. We really need help at the bottom of the lineup and that's what I'm looking for this weekend – more mature play."

Coach Dixon is looking for certain players to step up to get her team on the right track this weekend.

"Our No.1 [Masha Pozar] always needs to step up and set the tone, that's for sure. She has been doing quite well so far. I think she's looking to continue improving with each match.

"In particular with this weekend, I'm looking to Kaitlyn Carpenter," Dixon continued. "I think she has a lot of talent and I want her to play up to her talent."

Carpenter is 1-2 in singles, having played at the No. 5 spot twice and once at the No. 4.

Senior co-captain Pozar, the team's No. 2 singles player last season, has moved up to the first singles spot after the graduation of Michele Spiess. She's 2-1 in singles and has an identical record at the No. 1 doubles partnered with freshman Candynce Boney.

Including their fall schedule, the Minutewomen have yet to play a home match this season. Following this weekend's matches, they'll play Wednesday on the road against Dartmouth, before hosting Army on Saturday.

"That makes it very rough," Dixon said of playing on the road. "This will be our third weekend away in a row. After this week it will start to wear on us. We're going to need that home match on the 24th to regroup. When you have a young team on the road a lot, you just have to be tough mentally."

In addition to playing away from home, UMass must also deal with the illness of Kristin DiPiero. The senior co-captain is sick and will not be joining her team for this weekend's matches.

Ryan Fleming can be reached at rfleming@student.umass.edu

Comixxx

"I MAY NOT AGREE WITH YOUR OPINION, BUT I WILL SMACK YOU IN THE FACE IF YOU OPEN YOUR MOUTH AGAIN"

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

APT. FOR RENT

Hobart condos 1,2,3 bedrooms. NOW SHOWING for June and Sept. NO FEES. schedule a showing 253-7879 view apts at www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

Japanese speakers! Rent us your ears! $12/hr for participating in listening experiments contact phonetics lab. phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu 545-6837

French speakers! Rent us your ears! $12/hr for participating in listening experiments. Contact the phonetics lab. phonetics_lab.linguist.umass.edu 545-6837

Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

EMPLOYMENT

THE GREATEST SUMMER OF YOUR LIFE CAMP PONTIAC is coming to UMASS! Located in NY State Camp Pontiac, a premier co-ed overnight camp in New York, is looking for fun, enthusiastic and mature individuals who can teach and assist in all areas of athletics, aquatics, the arts, or as a general bunk counselor. Interviews will be held on Thursday, Feb. 21st 9:00AM-11:30AM Campus Center/Student Union Complex-Room 901. Please email: stefanie@campponticac.com or call Stefanie at 516-626-7668 to set up an interview.

UMass Amherst is in search of new tour guides and/or orientation counselors. See us in the Campus Center concourse this week to pick up an application. Applications are also available at the Visitor's Center and at www.umass.edu/new-student/student-jobs/counselor. The application deadline is February 15, 2008. Apply Now.

SERVICES

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthright.org.

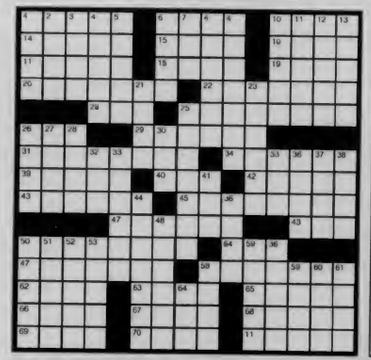
SERVICES

Concerned About Your Eating?
Do you eat too little? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic, 577-5101

TAPESTRY HEALTH providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling &rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable, Safe. 413-548-9992. 27 Pray St. Amherst. www.tapestryhealth.org

---

Free! Ride to Church & back in Dwight Chapel Van. Be at Haigis Mall @10am or Converse Hall @10:20am Sundays. www.dwightchapel.org See you there!



ACROSS
1 Storage box
6 Jakarta's island
10 Ancient Briton
14 Moorland
15 Radiate
16 Done with 17 Faux pas
18 Court order
19 Refer to in a footnote
20 Comfortable, in a way
22 French roll
24 Slippery swimmer
25 Makes concessions to appease
26 Superior skill
29 For one
31 Pie topping
34 Scottish plaid
39 Occupied
40 "Sesame Street" network
42 Staphappy
43 Considered
45 Desire for nourishment
47 Presidential coin value
49 WWII troop transport
50 Caffeine or nicotine
54 Sprite
57 Deranged
58 Catherine the Great, for one
62 Crazy way to run
63 Ground grain
65 Danger
66 Dunce-cap shape
67 Likewise
68 Paris divider
69 Was aware of
70 TV drama, "___ Blue"
71 English county

DOWN
1 Masticate
2 Present!
3 Noble title
4 Lifted with light fingers
5 Spleen
6 Goldblum of "The Fly"
7 French friend
8 Practicable
9 Draw in 10 Hot drink
11 Boot out
12 River of Hades
13 Family charts
21 Marking device
23 Glacial epoch
25 Parti-colored
26 In the thick of 27 Surrealist Magritte
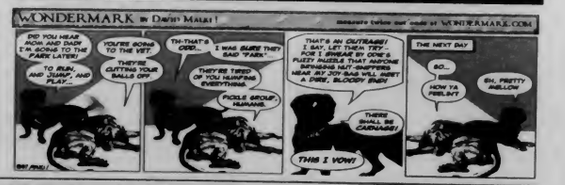
28 Steadfast
30 Young dog
32 Belief: suff.
33 Conifer leaf
35 Decompose
36 Hard work
37 Stem areas
38 Dimitri's denial
41 Health haven
44 Hotel's cab caller
46 Chief exec
48 Probable
50 Taken (surprised)
51 Dud
52 Jockey Julie
53 Cockeyed
55 Memory blackout
56 Emancipates
58 Doofus
59 "A Severed Head" writer Murdoch
60 Number of Muses
61 Actor Karras
64 Cleo's undoing

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!



WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Continuing & Professional Education
UMassAmherstOutreach
Summer Session 2008
No Matter where you are...
Session I: June 2 - July 10
Session II: July 14 - Aug 20
Online Gen Ed's
Small Classes
Great Faculty
PLAN AHEAD!
UMassULearn.net

WONDERMARK By David Malki

This is the doodle box.

Scan and submit your doodles to comics@dailycollegian.com

Flog the math dolphin.

3				4	2		7
		8	9					3
2						1
			7	6		4
9			2		4			6
		2		9	3
		3						1
1					7	6
	6		3	8				4

Horoscopes

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Snuffleupagus called and he wants his large furry body back. He may be invisible, but he still has feelings.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Be careful what you wear tonight, lately you've looked less put together than Humpty Dumpty.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Attempting to hide from your problems is as futile as trying to take care of official paperwork at UMass.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Try and integrate the metric system into your daily life. It makes everything sound bigger. Wink!

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
This weekend, try to stick a slice of American cheese to some girl's cleavage without her noticing.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
You™ are 100% unique.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Represent old men who have been marginalized by the film industry and find them a country.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Dear Southwest girl, you've already got the spandex suit, might as well become a superhero. Undies on the outside!

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
It is important to pleasure those around you but it is more important to pleasure yourself.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Here's a secret: Your parents used to smoke drugs and watch Sesame Street with you.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
You will never be as quick as your roommate. He is a true minuteman.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Find a stranger on Facebook and tag the empty space in all their "naughty" pictures as their conscience.

Retro Geek By Steven Dickenson and Todd Clark

Quote of the Weekend

> Dance like it hurts, Love like you need money, Work when people are watching.
>
> — Scott Adams

Bliss By Harry Bliss

"Don't take it personally, Ed. Your wife told me I was a terrible kisser, too."

Illustre By Heather Maes

Sports Weekend

Friday, February 15, 2008 www.dailycollegian.com

Minutemen seek answers

Fordham 76
Umass 72

UMass heads to St. Louis

Not Published

Holiday

INSIDE: UMASS KNOCKS OFF BILLIKENS AT HOME | PAGE 10

THE MASSACHUSETTS
DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

WINDY : HI: 37 LO: 20 | WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM | TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 19, 2008

Student safety an issue

Groups hold forum in light of violence

BY EMILY REYNOLDS
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

The Student Government Association and The Office of African, Latino/a, Asian and Native American Affairs (ALANA) held a forum on the public safety of the campus based on recent violent events at the University of Massachusetts.

The event's intended topic was student safety, though much of the discussion centered around UMass student Jason Vassell, who was involved in a violent altercation on Feb. 3, and has since then been arrested for his participation in a stabbing in Southwest.

The organizations provided handouts detailing what happened to Vassell and the other people involved in the incident. The first to speak was professor Michael Thelwell of Afro-American Studies.

Speaking to a room that was so full that people were standing in the back and on the sides, he began his remarks by saying, "Thank you all for being here. I take that as your sense of community."

Thelwell stated the facts of the case, then followed up by talking about what students can do to make UMass a more secure place.

"We have to start the conversation that has to take place on this campus," Thelwell said. "UMass is a community of students, it's a community of faculty, it's a community of administrators – of black and white."

Another call for community learning to make UMass a safer campus came from Marianne Winters of the Everywoman's Center.

"I was asked to come here to talk about some of the broader implications," said Winters. "There is a lack of safety and a feeling of vulnerability in our community."

Winters added that the best way to help a community is to know more about it and educate its members to not only prevent crime, but also to encourage people to report crime.

UMass student trustee Ruth Thompson addressed the audience about campus safety and an e-mail sent by Interim Chancellor Thomas Cole last week to all students.

MICHAEL PHILLIPS/COLLEGIAN

Afro-American Studies professor Michael Thelwell spoke at last Thursday's public safety forum.

See FORUM on page 3

The SGA and ALANA co-sponsored a public safety forum Thursday. The event was precipitated by the recent acts of violence on campus, including a stabbing involving UMass student Jason Vassell.

Student protestors braved the rain in November to call attention to issues deemed critically important by the strike's organizers.

Student strike negotiations continue

Student leaders and UMass officials discuss campus issues

BY ADAM COULTER
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Three months have elapsed since the student strike protest at the University of Massachusetts last semester. The negotiations between student leaders and the administration that began in November are still in progress, with a status report expected in the coming weeks, according to University spokesman Ed Blaguszewski.

"Administrators have pulled facts and looked at past policies in an effort to improve students' issues," said Blaguszewski.

After the strike last semester, Interim Chancellor Dr. Thomas Cole agreed to weekly negotiations between 10 students and top members of school administration, with the focus to be on the four demands of the strike organizers, according to the Graduate Student Senate's Web site.

The demands include student fee rollbacks, funding and accountability for diversity on campus, more control of space in the Campus Center and an end to unwanted police presence in the dorms.

The strikes held on Nov. 15 and 16 were an effort to pressure administrators to address these student complaints, according to the GSS Web site.

Jeff Napolitano, president of the GSS, said concerning the individual demands, "The school is considering giving up more control of event space in the Campus Center."

With regards to the other three demands, Napolitano said there was "largely no progress."

Furthermore, Napolitano indicated that the issue of police presence in the dorms remains a controversial issue, with questions remaining whether there has ever been a University policy sanctioning the practice.

"It's unclear, we've been told that the policy has been revoked, but I have also heard otherwise," said Napolitano.

See STRIKE on page 3

UMass administrators, including Interim Chancellor Thomas Cole, agreed to begin talks with student leaders after last semester's strike.

Mass Attack gets back on track with win

BRIAN TELLERIA/COLLEGIAN

Junior centerman Cory Quick makes a diving attempt to slip the puck past Northeastern goaltender Brad Thiessen in Saturday's 3–1 victory at the Mullins Center. The victory put the Minutemen within three points of seventh-place UMass Lowell in the Hockey East standings.

Colleges institute overseas programs

BY ERIK TABER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Universities around the United States are becoming a major export. Many schools are taking their programs overseas, where the American system of higher education has long been the envy of other countries' higher education systems.

American universities are competing to set up outposts in countries with limited higher-educational opportunities. These schools are starting or expanding hundreds of programs and partnerships in booming markets, such as China, India and Singapore.

Overseas programs can help American universities raise their profile, build international relationships, attract top research talent and gain access to a new pool of tuition-paying students.

Many are considering full-fledged foreign branches, particularly in the oil-rich Middle East.

Already, students in the Persian Gulf state of Qatar can attend an American university without the expense, culture shock or post-Sept. 11 visa problems of traveling to America.

At Education City in Doha, Qatar's capital, students can study medicine at Weill Medical College of Cornell University, international affairs at Georgetown, computer science and business at Carnegie Mellon, fine arts at Virginia Commonwealth and engineering at Texas A&M.

New York University has plans for a liberal arts branch campus in the Persian Gulf, set to open in 2010. John Sexton, the president of NYU, has committed to building NYU's international presence since he met Omar Saif Ghobash, an investor who enticed him to open a branch campus in the United Arab Emirates.

However, the University of Massachusetts does not have any current plans to open an overseas campus.

"The President's Office and the Board of Trustees are always eager to consider academic and research proposals developed at the campus level," said University spokesperson Robert Connolly.

Universities with overseas branches say the education equals what is offered in the United States.

"Where universities are heading now is toward becoming global universities," said Howard Rollins, the former director of international programs at Georgia Tech, which has degree programs in France, Singapore, Italy, South Africa and China, as well as plans for India.

"We'll have more and more universities competing internationally for resources, faculty and the best students," he added.

Erik Taber can be reached at etaber@student.umass.edu.

PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS

► Celebrity intern club.*

pwc.tv/ch1

Newbies now playing on www.pwc.tv/ch1

*connectedthinking

© 2008 PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP. All rights reserved. "PricewaterhouseCoopers" refers to PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP (a Delaware limited liability partnership) or, as the context requires, the PricewaterhouseCoopers global network or other member firms of the network, each of which is a separate and independent legal entity. "connectedthinking is a trademark of PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP (US). We are proud to be an Affirmative Action and Equal Opportunity Employer.

Forum addresses recent violent acts

FORUM from page 1

"He's calling on us to make this campus as safe as it should be," said Thompson.

Even those not set to speak in the forum had their opportunity during the question and answer period. Amilcar Shabazz, chairman of Afro-American Studies, spoke about a few things to help get the campus aware of safety issues.

"We must be more engaged in the question of violence and what violence can do to a community," said Shabazz. "We ought to be more proactive, more engaged."

Much of the audience was there to be involved with the Vassell case.

"I could never see him in a violent, life-altering situation like this," said Tracy Kelley. "I was just like, 'I have to do something, I have to fix this.' This is an issue that needs to be addressed."

"This is the last person I would expect to be in this situation," added Mishy Leiblum.

The room was full of faculty, students and others who came to hear about Vassell's situation and learn about campus safety.

"I'm an ally of Student Bridges, where Jason worked," said Vilay Senthep. "I'm also an alum, so issues of diversity and making this campus a welcome and inclusive environment is still important to me."

"My ultimate goal is to get these charges reconsidered because they are extensive," said Kelley. "In the long term, I want to change the violent climate at UMass."

Freshman Tishani Tyler attended with her class. She expected the forum to be mostly about student safety.

"I think that it was getting outside of the subject at hand," said Tyler.

Emily Reynolds can be reached at ereynold@student.umass.edu.

Panelists at Thursday's public safety forum, co-sponsored by the SGA and ALANA, spoke to a large audience about the recent acts of violence on campus, especially the one involving UMass student Jason Vassell.

The UMass student strike last November included 600 protesters. The participation was significant enough for UMass officials to begin negotiating with strike organizers about key student issues.

Strike negotiations continue for leaders

STRIKE from page 1

The November strike included a mid-day rally in the Student Union ballroom, followed by a rainy march to the Whitmore Administration Building, attended by up to 600 people, according to school reports. The demonstrators were met at the chancellor's office by Vice Chancellor for Administration and Finance Joyce Hatch, who briefly met with some protesters, according to the University's Office of News and Information.

No arrests were made in the two days of protests and only minor incidents were reported.

Between Feb. 22 and Mar. 1, a general assembly of graduate students and undergraduates will convene to vote on the results of the negotiations.

Adam Coulter can be reached apcoulte@student.umass.edu.

College paper fights takeover

BY CATE DOTY
NEW YORK TIMES

J. David McSwane, the student editor of The Rocky Mountain Collegian, was looking forward to a quiet spring semester at Colorado State University after drawing global attention last fall for a four-word editorial criticizing President Bush.

What he got instead was another storm.

On the first day of classes in January, Mr. McSwane learned that the university president was meeting with representatives from the local daily, The Fort Collins Coloradoan, which is owned by Gannett, to discuss a potential "partnership" with the student newspaper.

The Collegian, now worried about its future as an independent student newspaper, is planning to fight any possible takeover by a media company. And Gannett and The Coloradoan have become targets for harsh criticism from college newsrooms and journalism departments across the country, who portray Gannett as a "dark lord" that wants to rein in student press freedom.

"If The Coloradoan were to take over The Collegian, only Gannett would win," The Daily Nebraskan, the campus newspaper at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln, said in an editorial.

Gannett dismissed any suggestion that it planned to conquer student journalism.

"There is no grand Gannett strategy," said Tara Connell, a spokeswoman at its headquarters in McLean, Va. "Gannett is not looking to buy college newspapers. We look at all sorts of things."

Gannett owns two student newspapers in Florida, however. The Tallahassee Democrat owns The FSView & Florida Flambeau at Florida State and Florida Today owns The Central Florida Future at the University of Central Florida in Orlando. Both are for-profit newspapers, although the vast majority of student newspapers, including The Collegian, are nonprofit.

Media companies find college newspapers attractive properties for several reasons: operating costs are low because student labor is inexpensive, sometimes even free. Advertising is on the rise. And perhaps most important, the newspapers are read - frequently - by a young audience with relatively deep pockets, et are found in a state university town.

Service reduces textbook burden

BY LISA M. KRIEGER
SAN JOSÉ MERCURY NEWS

Faced with escalating textbook prices, college students are applying a lesson from Econ 101 to the book-buying experience: competition.

This is the time of year when students finish final exams and schlep their used books over to the campus bookstore, only to discover that the shiny, near-new Calculus text that cost $120 only four months ago is now worth $24.95.

But increasing numbers of students are opting to rent, not buy, through a new Santa Clara, Calif.-based, Netflix-style textbook rental company.

Others are organizing online book swaps. And online price comparison sites are growing in popularity.

Some students are opting out of textbooks altogether. The Foothill-De Anza Community College District encourages faculty to post course materials online, as a substitute for commercial textbooks.

"The more options that are out there, the better for students," said Danny Katz of California Public Interest Research Group.

Book publishers say they welcome the competition, but caution that it could have the unforeseen consequence of pushing up textbook pricing still further.

As rented and other used books grow in popularity, fewer new books are sold. To recoup their investment, publishers say, they must boost the price of each new book.

"The single biggest factor behind the increased price of new books is used books," said Bruce Hildebrand of the Association of American Publishers.

"Everybody's looking for a bargain," Hildebrand said. "But the used book market is so efficient that the ability to sell new books goes down. So the student saves money up front, but in the process, raises the price of all books."

Critics dismiss that argument, saying that free enterprise could transform the entire industry. Until recently, they charge, the textbook market was about as open and free-wheeling as the bread business in Cuba.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 86

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Exter
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Ryan McAskill
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Tim McCall
COMICS EDITOR Adam Staigin
EDITORIAL EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jerem Race
FEATURES EDITOR Dave Humphreys
PHOTO EDITOR Michael Phillis
WEB EDITOR James Hale
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Szymczak
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Marsea Whooten
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Stephanie McPherson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Skye McIntyre
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Garber
ASSISTANT NEWS Michael King
ASSISTANT NEWS Kate Olesin
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Seabury
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Connors
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Meloni
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenwaike
ASSISTANT PHOTO Brian Tedder
ARTS WEB EDITOR Michelle Abbracciano
EDITORIAL WEB EDITOR Leif Walcutt
NEWS WEB EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS WEB EDITOR Steve Games

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1907, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914, AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1936. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JAN. 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Meghan Murphy

COPY EDITOR
Kirsten Swenson

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

THE DAILY COLLEGIAN
UBLOG
News online in real time
HTTP://DAILYCOLLEGIAN.BLOGSPOT.COM/

It's GOOD to Be YOU! Events

EATING DISORDERS AWARENESS WEEK

"THIN"
Wednesday, Feb. 20, 5 – 7:30 p.m.
Campus Center, Room 917
Join the Women's Health Project to watch and talk about this HBO documentary, which tells the stories of four women being treated for eating disorders.

WEIGH YOUR SELF-ESTEEM
Monday, Feb. 25, 5:30 – 7 p.m.
Berkshire Dining Commons
Stop by our table for fun, interactive information on self-esteem, body image and eating disorders.

ANDREA'S VOICE
Monday, Feb. 25, 6 p.m.,
Franklin Patterson, Hampshire College
Tom and Doris Smeltzer share their journey through their daughter Andrea's eating disorder in this unique presentation.

HEALTHY EATING WORKSHOP
Tuesday, Feb. 26, 5 – 6 p.m.
Room 302, University Health Services
Hands-on activities and helpful information to get you thinking about what you're eating!

"SMASHING THE BEAUTY BOX"
Wednesday, Feb. 27, 7 – 8:30 p.m.
Malcolm X Cultural Center,
Berkshire Dining Commons
Author Rosie Molinary redefines beauty in this empowering presentation.

Sponsored by the Bilingual Collegiate Program; Everywoman's Center Counseling Services; Health Education at University Health Services; the Josephine White Eagle Cultural Center; the Malcolm X Cultural Center; and the Women of Color Leadership Network.

UMassAmherst

Coming Soon!

North Apartments Online Room Selection
Begins Thursday, Feb. 21st!

Read your Room Selection Bulletin and come to one of the Online Room Selection Information Sessions:

The Housing Assignment Office will review online room selection instructions, guidelines, and strategies, and will show you online room selection menus so you can get ready to select your own assignment.

Pick a one-hour information session prior to the room selection period you plan to participate in, and we'll see you there!

Date	Times	Location
Tuesday, February 19	6:00-7:00pm or 7:00-8:00pm	Campus Center Rm.174-76
Thursday, February 28	6:00-7:00pm or 7:00-8:00pm	Campus Center Rm. 917
Tuesday, March 11	6:00-7:00pm or 7:00-8:00pm	Campus Center Rm. 168C
Tuesday, March 25	6:00-7:00pm or 7:00-8:00pm	Campus Center Rm. 168C
Tuesday, April 1	12:00-1:00pm or 1:00-2:00pm	Campus Center Rm. 174-76
Wednesday, April 2	6:00-7:00pm or 7:00-8:00pm	Campus Center Rm. 174-76
Monday, April 14	6:00-7:00pm or 7:00-8:00pm	Campus Center Rm. 174-76
Tuesday, April 15	6:00-7:00pm or 7:00-8:00pm	Pierpont Hall Main Lounge
Wednesday, April 16	6:00-7:00pm or 7:00-8:00pm	Campus Center Rm. 174-76

www.housing.umass.edu UMassAmherst

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 19, 2008

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
- Joe Salmon Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Free speech at a high price

Joshua H. Wilder

Remember back in middle school when someone would sketch a hilarious picture of another student and pass it around the class? Usually the picture would grossly exaggerate a specific feature – height, weight, etc. – in a way only kids can.

While most of the class used the picture for a good laugh, there was always someone else who took it the opposite way – mainly the kid actually being made fun of.

A similar sort of situation is taking place now in the classroom of world politics, but the only problem is that the party being angered by funny comics is armed and dangerous.

Last Wednesday, Danish newspapers reprinted highly controversial cartoons depicting the Prophet Muhammad in a less-than-flattering manner. Originally popping up in 2006, the cartoons were put back into print by the Danish papers as a gesture of solidarity after learning of a death threat to kill the artist.

There is one big problem.

These cartoons are not that of the beloved Tom and Jerry, or what some say is the most controversial of pictures, artist Kurt Westergaard depicts Islam's prophet wearing a turban shaped, like a bomb, with a lit fuse.

Anyone who has ever bothered to read the cliff notes version of 2008 world politics could have predicted the response in the Muslim community. Nearly two years ago, the comics sent shock waves throughout the world, angering already-fanatical Muslims and raising the question of free speech.

After drawing harsh criticism from various Muslims and other media outlets for printing the infamous comics, the Danish papers stressed their firm commitment to freedom of speech.

Last Tuesday, three people were arrested in western Denmark after being accused of plotting to kill Westergaard. The demonstrator that they wouldn't be pushed around, the paper let its comics do the talking. But was it the right move?

Understandably, those in the Muslim world are disturbed and angered at the lack of respect being shown to their Prophet. Islamic law typically opposes any depiction of Prophet Muhammad, even favorable, for fear it could lead to idolatry. Turning Muhammad into a bomb, however, takes it to the extreme.

Anyone who has even bothered to read the cliff notes version of 2008 world politics could have predicted the response in the Muslim community.

Despite their potentially noble intentions, the Danish newspapers approached this situation in the wrong way. Westergaard infuriated an entire sect of people by embarrassing their Messiah, and now he is a wanted man.

While it is unfortunate that his life is on the line for simply exercising his freedom of expression, it shouldn't be coming as a big surprise. To think that extremist Muslims, the same people who willingly blow themselves up for Muhammad, wouldn't get upset by seeing their God defiled in western newspapers is a bit naive.

When this incident first erupted in 2006, the world saw two giant forces meet head on. Just as people have the right to express themselves via print, radio and other mediums, surely those on the other end have the right to get riled up about what they see.

If chaos and violence are the end result of a groundbreaking news story or eye-opening report, then it seems as though freedom of speech worked. The media was able to get out important information that might have otherwise been hidden. Freedom of speech is there to protect those with something important to say.

But to print a comic that has already been printed, simply as a way of saying "take that" to people whom you went out of your way to offend? That is just rubbing salt in their wounds.

Obviously attempting to kill someone is wrong, but it is an expected response from someone who has had their religion talked into question. More people have been killed in the name of God than any other. Freedom of speech protects the right to reprint the comics, but what does it achieve?

It raises the question being debated about in this column, and most people at UMass would probably agree that they support the paper's right to print. The crux of this issue is not whether they can or can't, but if they should.

If the newspapers were to print a new comic, perhaps one that puts a different spin on the issue at hand, then maybe it would be a worthwhile endeavor. But to print an old comic as retaliation against those plotting to kill the artist, well, that doesn't seem to protect the artist or make a lot of sense.

Here in America we are all proud of our ability to express ourselves however we see fit, and we should continue to support other countries that do the same. The Danish papers should feel free to print whatever they choose, but sometimes things are better left in the paper shredder.

Joshua Wilder is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at jhwilder@student.umass.edu.

For Americans in Egypt, haggling is a must

Greg Collins

Bargaining is a crucial skill to possess in Egypt if you are intent on maintaining a positive balance in your bank account. Because merchants try to sell their products to foreigners at outrageously high prices by Egyptian standards, tourists will be forced inevitably to suggest a lower figure, succumb to the original price, or not buy the product at all.

I encountered this situation when American University in Cairo students traveled to the pyramids of Giza and Saqqara, the world-famous mausoleums honoring pharaohs that were built thousands of years ago. These highly-frequented tourist destinations are an oasis for Egyptian merchants, camel drivers and craftsmen to hound Americans and Europeans for cash, cash and more cash by attempting to sell what they claim are "authentic" Egyptian artifacts.

At the Saqqara pyramids, I considered buying a foot-long figure of an Egyptian mummy from a local craftsman. He first told me the mummy cost £300, but I recognized immediately that this figure was bogus and responded with an offer of £150. At first he objected, but then lowered his price by £50. I knew that this was still incredibly expensive.

I told him I was not going to buy the product for more than £100, and the craftsman's facial expression twisted into a noticeably peeved look. After I actually placed the mummy in my hands and determined with confidence that the figure was merely made out of wood and painted over, I decided I was not going to relinquish more than £20 for it.

The merchant finally lowered his priced to £100, then to £50. Even though I ended up not buying the product, I realized what I had essentially accomplished – I lowered his initial offer of £300 by more than 75 percent. Simple lesson learned – you have to stand your ground here if you want to optimize the value of your money.

A more unfortunate feature of this bartering is the large amount of children who also act as merchants at the pyramids. Even though you want to walk through the sites unbothered, they will accost you, trying to sell postcards, headscarves and water. From an American's perspective, they are rude and disrespectful, similar to the adult merchants at tourist sites and on the streets of Cairo.

I feel that the kids here are exploited frequently by their parents, or whoever encourages them to engage in these acts. It is not shameful for parents to have their children earn money for their family. But it is downright immoral to use children as objects attempting to win sympathy by posing as impoverished and helpless, an act that occurs daily in Cairo.

The tragic element is that many of these beggars are, in fact, mired in poverty, a reflection of President Mubarak's iron grip on the Egyptian economy.

On more than one occasion, I have passed by children wearing dirty rags, begging for money. When I looked back, they would be laughing and grinning. Other times, women with babies in their arms would walk up to foreign tourists and put on similarly deceptive performances.

The tragic element is that many of these beggars are, in fact, mired in poverty, a reflection of President Mubarak's iron grip on the Egyptian economy.

In any event, visiting Giza and Saqqara for the first time was like stepping right into the pages of a book on Ancient Egypt, similar to the ones we used to read in elementary school. In particular, the Sphinx at Giza was a remarkable sight to behold; it is crafted as the mythical-winged monster with a female's head and the body of a lion. Meanwhile, Saqqara contains 11 major pyramids, where countless famous pharaohs and political leaders were buried; the Step Pyramid, built in 2650 B.C., is the world's earliest stone monument.

It is fashionable to say that civilization is an evolving advancement of progress and enlightenment. However, these truly amazing pyramids reveal that ancient peoples were not products of unenlightened, backward societies. On the contrary, Ancient Egyptians' accurate calculations of pyramidal measurements, the position of pyramids in relation to the sun, and the symmetry of the monuments show how mathematical, scientific and architectural advancement existed even before modern-day technological discoveries. Scholars today are still astounded by the magnanimity and precision of these structures.

Back in Cairo, I recently attended a training session for STAR, a program whose volunteers teach English to Sudanese and Iraqi refugees. Starting in a couple of weeks, my class will consist mostly of adults, some of whom have a better command of the English language than others. There are few more rewarding endeavors than helping those who are less fortunate than you are.

So an Egyptian had better help me with my Arabic homework ASAP.

Greg Collins is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at gcollins@student.umass.edu.

DAILY COLLEGIAN READER POLL

Last Wednesday, the University delayed its opening to 11 a.m instead of closing school. Did the weather complicate your commute?

☐ Yes. ☐ No. ☐ My socks are still on the radiator.

Cast your vote online at www.dailycollegian.com!

"The Daily Collegian UMass Yak-Back!"

AIRING DAILY ON UVC-TV 19 AT 1 P.M. AND 5 P.M.

STAY TUNED TO UVC AND THE [EDITORIAL/OPINION] PAGE

Superdelegates and the smoke-filled room

John Gruenenfelder

This primary election season remains close for the Democrats and shows no signs of letting up. As a democrat, I enjoy the whole process – most of the process, anyway. The concept of "superdelegates" is, to put it lightly, unwelcome.

A superdelegate is a person who is given a nomination vote at the convention because of current or past party relation. These people include former presidents and vice presidents, current senators and representatives, and higher-ups in the party organization.

Surprisingly, both Republicans and Democrats have superdelegates, though the Democrats have substantially more. They currently have 796 superdelegates, which make up nearly one fifth of the total number of available delegates. This means that for the close 2008 election, the superdelegates are suddenly thrust into a new light.

I've voted in the past two presidential elections and I have never recalled any mention of superdelegates either time. I suspect that this is because neither primary election was as close as the 2008 Democratic primary. In fact, superdelegates were added to the Democratic primary in 1980 as a way to give active politicians and party officials more say in the nominating process.

The problem with superdelegates, and what sets them apart from regular delegates, is that they are free to vote for whomever they wish, regardless of how their respective states voted. To have such a non-democratic system set up in an election feels very wrong.

The naïve voter might expect that the delegates at the convention will reflect the will of the voters when choosing a nominee. The pledged delegates will do just this, but the superdelegates may choose to throw voter choice to the wind.

Representative Emanuel Cleaver of Missouri wondered if a superdelegate's job is to reflect the voters, or

I've voted in the past two presidential elections and I have never recalled any mention of superdelegates either time.

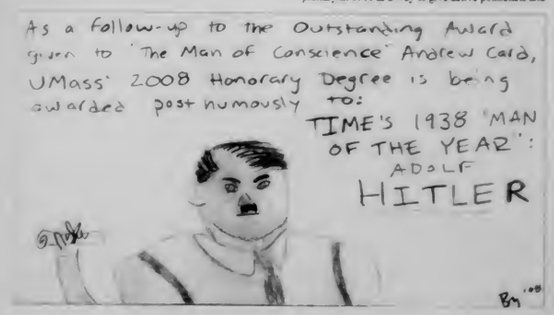
"are we to use our best judgment to do what's in the best interests of our constituents?"

He has reason to ponder since he is giving his vote to Clinton even though the majority of voters in his state chose Obama. Moreover, he has said that his friendship and loyalty to Senator Clinton is the reason for his vote.

This is troubling. If he was merely endorsing a candidate, then more power to him. But he is actually playing a part in choosing the nominee. His friendship may certainly give him some insights into Senator Clinton and how she might lead, but his choice should really be based on something more tangible.

Here in Massachusetts we have 24 superdelegates. Currently, nine are backing Clinton, 10 are backing Obama, and the remaining five are undecided. The actual split in the primary votes was 56 percent to 41 percent in favor of Clinton. Clearly, the superdelegate distribution is close, but does not quite match the primary votes. How will the undecided choose? And how have they all arrived at their choices?

Supporters of the superdelegate system say that they rarely go against the wishes of the voters. Also, the system allows party officials to make more nuanced choices based on their years of experience.



Some also suggest that superdelegates must still answer to voters, if they choose poorly then they will not be re-elected to whatever post they hold. But this isn't entirely correct. We can choose to not re-elect current representatives and senators, but what about former politicos or party officials? To whom do they answer?

Superdelegates exist to prevent a tough fight that lasts all the way to the convention, something which could possibly happen this year. In the last few elections, however, superdelegates really haven't been important.

The moment should be seized to correct this situation. Superdelegates aren't needed and could do more harm than good. If they follow the will of the voters then they don't matter. If they exercise their power and tilt the election to choose a winner prior to the convention then they will alienate a great many voters. So why keep them at all?

The Democrats proportional distribution of delegates is a good idea and this year has given us a much more engaging primary election season. It also more properly reflects the will of the voters than the winner-takes-all system used in Republican primaries. The superdelegates, on the other hand, serve only to obfuscate the election and take choice away from the voters. Promises that we won't go back to the days of "smoke filled back rooms" are good to have, but why have the possibility at all? Superdelegates are a solution in search of a problem that doesn't exist.

John Gruenenfelder is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at johng@uaa.arizona.edu.

SUBMIT A LETTER OF OPINION

E-mail: editorial@dailycollegian.com

Fax: 413-545-

Mail: Letters to the Editor 113 Campus Center Amherst

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 19, 2008

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Behind the scenes at the Mullins Center

BY CHASE WHEELER
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Secluded from all the usual erratic noises and delirium of the ice-covered surface in the Mullins Center, the video board room crew is hard at work. This narrow room, garishly lit by a myriad of screens, computers and complex equipment, has the leaden responsibility of turning a sporting event into an art work.

Consisting of seven working members, the crew that runs the three-year-old program includes a director, an instant replay operator, a streaming video worker, a graphics machine controller and three cameramen stationed at three different positions throughout the arena. Six of the seven positions are filled by UMass students.

In addition to broadcasting the game on both of the Mullins Center's two video screens and online, the team is constantly busy rolling back replays, queuing up commercial reels and holding the aesthetic presentation together.

Finding new and interesting ways to keep avid UMass fans informed and entertained is what this group is all about.

As one of the chief overseers and advocates for the video board, Todd McDonald, the assistant athletic director based out of corporate sales and marketing, lent his synopsis on the video board.

"[The video board room] has been unbelievable," he said. "It has really allowed us to add a lot to each game, and the more experience we get with the program the more we can continue to add to the presentation."

Sponsors, vital elements to any form of broadcasting, have also seen more and more air time on the video board.

"The video board adds a lot of value to our sponsors," said McDonald.

As the video board's relevance continues to grow, so do the number of sponsors. Advertisements ranging from Big Y supermarkets to local car dealerships to UMass's own Alumni Association can be seen streaming from the two screens during Mullins Center events.

Marketing value aside, the video board has been a big hit with spectators as well.

"It's really encouraging to see fans reacting to themselves on the screen," said McDonald. "It's a very positive feeling, and the fans have been great."

In attempts to give a more intimate view of the inner workings of the video board, director Bob Allen, smiling with one hand clamped over his headset microphone, pondered what it is like to be in control of what 9,000 screaming spectators see during a game.

"It's not so much about worrying what everyone will see, but rather taking what I've got, evaluating it, and picking the shots people want to see," he said.

A veteran director of 16 years, Allen finds the video board experience different than a normal television broadcast.

"After working professionally for so long, this job is quite an adjustment. Here I'm in more of a teaching role, showing [the student crew members] the trade," he said.

Justin Hicks, in his second year studying at UMass and working in the video board room, said that "it's cool to be behind the scenes and see the game from a different perspective.

"Learning about how a game is broadcasted is really interesting," said Hicks. "It's also important because we're trying to enhance what the crowd sees, and that's what I like the most about the job."

Originally a manager for the men's basketball team, Hicks was drawn to the video board room by chance.

"I was at the Mullins Center for a men's [basketball] game when one of the [other video board crew members] came up to me and asked if I wanted to run one of the cameras," he said.

The rest is history, according to Hicks, who now finds running one of the video room's three cameras as his favorite position.

"[Camera is] a lot pressure, but it's something I really enjoy doing," he said. "It's really cool to see your work up on that screen."

Tonight, Hicks is seated in front of the graphics machine, charged with both building and updating different still pages and titles to be presented on the video board throughout the game. In response to whether or not he found his job to be hard work, Justin simply said, "No. It's a great learning experience and it's a lot of fun."

When posed the same question, Allen admits that being in charge of the room can be easy at times and difficult at others.

"I've been used to working with professionals most of his career so trying to execute a show while teaching students with little to no experience in this field is sometimes tricky," he said.

However, Allen said that "[the video board] is much more relaxed than real television because you don't have to worry about missing some things that you absolutely can't miss on TV. You can show the mascot or the crowd while play is going on and viewers will still love it."

He smiled again when the question of his overall experience working in the video board room pops up.

"I love my job and I really enjoy working with the students," he said. "To me, there's nothing better than seeing these kids having fun and growing in the environment."

Chase Wheeler can be reached at cwheeler@student.umass.edu.

Writer's strike officially over

Networks agree to pay union for Web site show watching

BY RYAN MCASKILL
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Over the past three months, the entertainment world has been hollow because of the Writers Guild of America strike. Last Wednesday, the strike officially came to an end as the WGA and the Alliance of Motion Picture and Television Producers reached an agreement that will provide the writers with payment for Internet revenue.

The strike put a damper on the spring line-up as we were subjected to bad television with shows like "American Gladiators," "The Moment of Truth" and the upcoming "My Dad is Better Than Your Dad," as well as a Golden Globe Awards show that was the equivalent of sitting through a lecture.

Granted, there were some bright spots, notably the incredibly fake late night feud between Conan O'Brien, Stephen Colbert and Jon Stewart, but with the strike over, attention is now turned towards the writers getting back to work and the future of television.

For the past few days, all the major networks and cable outlets have announced what the schedule for the rest of this season will look like.

For a majority of the networks, early March through early May will feature a bulk of the returning shows, as time is needed for writing scripts and filming. Shows that are returning in the spring will only be featuring a handful of new episodes, resulting in shortened seasons overall.

The most disappointing aspect of this issue is the highly anticipated showdown between Jack Bauer and Tony Almeida in the seventh season of "24." New episodes of the hit FOX primetime show won't be aired until spring 2009. With only eight episodes filmed, FOX has opted to wait a year instead of interrupting the show midseason while new episodes are written and filmed.

"The Office," the fan-favorite TV comedy that has not filmed any new episodes because star Steve Carell refused to cross the picket line, will be shooting six

See STRIKE on page 6

Seth MacFarlane and company will bring back "Family Guy" for several new episodes this year, but fans will have to wait until 2009 for "24."

Grad student hosts new art exhibit at UM

BY CHRISTINA FONG
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Contemporary art has a way of leaving people utterly confused. A part of the University Gallery's annual exhibition, "The Unexpected Encounters of Looking Again" is meant to restore the significance of viewing such art.

Rebecca Karp (M.A. Art History '08) organized the exhibition in conjunction with assistant professor Mario Ontiveros' seminar "Problems in Contemporary Art: 1970s to the Present."

The exhibit showcases a small collection of contemporary pieces selected from the University's permanent collection. It opens with Leon Golub's Wasted Youth II. It's a large, digitally produced photo-serigraph of a young man and woman. The young man is depicted flipping the viewer off, begging the question, "Why start with this piece?"

It stresses the importance of encounter between the artwork and the viewer like many of the other pieces in display.

The piece is mostly colored black, with the outline and slight facial and body details of the pair marked by bright prismatic colors. Karp starts off strong with such a dark and somewhat unsettling piece.

The exhibit continues with what seems to be more unusual yet intriguing artwork. Al Souza's "Packing a Can of Sardines" contains nine color photographs showing step by step how a can of sardines is packed and sealed.

What's unexpected is the peculiar interest it generates. Although there's nothing truly remarkable about the packing process, the photographs engage the viewers no less.

The exhibition invites people to pay more attention to the rest of the pieces. Some are more humorous than others, such as Robert Colescott's "Miss America,"

See EXHIBIT on page 6

New episodes begin this March

FILE/KRISTEN TWOLEY/TRIBUNE

Television shows such as "The Office" will return with new episodes for the first time in several months due to the resolution of the writer's strike. Producers are expecting eight or nine new episodes for the series.

STRIKE from page 5

new episodes that will begin airing April 10.

"Lost," which is currently in the beginning of its fourth season and had eight episodes completed before the strike began, will shoot five additional episodes to air in late April or early May.

The final season of "Scrubs" has five pre-strike episodes remaining and the possibility of four episodes to come. The additional episodes may be complied into a straight-to-DVD collection instead of being aired on NBC.

"Saturday Night Live," which has been off the air for the entirety of the strike, will be back on the air on Feb. 23, with former head writer Tina Fey hosting. Current Hollywood "it" girl Ellen Page of "Juno" fame has committed to hosting the late night comedy show on Mar. 1.

All the late night talk show writers went back to work as of Wednesday with all the late night hosts giving praise for having them back. Colbert opened "The Colbert Report" holding a stack of scripts, and O'Brien featured a segment with all of the "Late Night" characters, including the "Masturbating Bear" and "Triumph the Insult Comic Dog," where they were removed from storage and brought back to the studio.

Not all of the network shows will be back this spring. "Chuck," "Dirty Sexy Money," "Private Practice" and "Pushing Daisies" are all slated to return but not until the fall season.

The strike has also put the future of numerous shows in doubt. "Friday Night Lights," "Cane" and "The Unit" are all to be determined while "Big Shots," "Bionic Woman," and "Journeyman" are done indefinitely.

Ryan McAskill can be reached at rmcaskil@student.umass.edu.

Exhibit will remain open until March

EXHIBIT from page 5

which was done simply with pencil on paper.

Featured prominently in the center of the paper is a portly woman in a bikini two sizes too small for her. Wearing a crown on her head and a cloak on her back, it appears as though she's won a pageant. Behind her are 16 crude panels depicting a sexual encounter between her and someone who may or may not be a pageant judge. The piece isn't too difficult to read into and is something light and comical to come across at the exhibit.

Towards the end of the room is Larry Clark's "Untiled from led from 42nd Street," a black and white photograph of a young teen standing outside a subway station somewhere in Times Square. The boy is looking at the camera, but more importantly, he seems to be looking through the camera.

This photograph epitomizes the object-viewer encounter the exhibit highlights. With the viewer's eyes able to make contact with the boy's eyes, the photograph feels like the most personal of all the pieces.

The eclectic collection of pieces was organized by Karp alongside the Art History seminar "Problems in Contemporary Art." The seminar explored the emergence of postmodernism in the visual arts and the critical and theoretical issues that have defined it. They focused on concepts such as deconstruction, text, difference, fragmentation, multiculturalism, schizophrenia, abjection and hyperspace.

All the pieces invite viewers to harvest an intimate relationship between them and the artworks that are often unexpected. Although it may not be possible to fully comprehend some of them, the encounter between each is distinctive.

The exhibition opened Nov. 28 and will run until March 15.

Christina Fong can be reached at cfong@student.umass.edu

"The Unexpected Encounters of Looking Again" is hosted by grad student Rebecca Karp. Karp is an art history major.

'Graceland' inspires new disc

Vampire Weekend's debut album has African sound

By Chad Jewett
Collegian Correspondent

Vampire Weekend's debut self-titled release overcomes one of the greatest curses threatening indie bands today — hype. Ever since the band posted early demos on the Internet in 2006, the buzz over the Brooklyn foursome has almost overshadowed the refreshingly spare, sincere and radiant sound they specialize in.

But luckily for both them and listeners, the group delivers. "Vampire Weekend" is an excellent mixture of pop whimsy, African and Caribbean flavors, and literary and musical smarts that both overcomes and reflects their collegiate image – all four members of the band attend Ivy League schools.

Album opener "Mansard Roof" could serve equally well as a thesis statement as it does a lead-off track; singer Ezra Koenig's lyrics reference French architecture as melodies and polyrhythmic drum and keyboard interplay reference a decidedly non-European musical background.

Clocking in at an economical two minutes and seven seconds, its mix of Latin rhythms, European strings and Afro-pop indebted melodies serve as a catchy introduction to the mixed bag of different sounds and cultures that "Vampire Weekend" proves to be.

Comparisons to Paul Simon's similarly African-influenced album, "Graceland," have abounded in describing "Vampire Weekend," and tracks like "Cape Cod Kwassa Kwassa" with its playfully exotic guitar work and hand percussion certainly bear a resemblance, although clever lyrics about upper-middle class ennui put this and other "world music" indebted tracks over the level of simple imitation.

"M79" and "I Stand Corrected" largely dispense with exotic sounds in favor of a more conventional sound, the former embracing only the slightest tinge of Island rhythm under a Baroque bed of strings, the latter depending on little other than guitar, organ and drums to build a lean pop/rock tune more reminiscent of Elvis Costello than Ladysmith Black Mambazo.

Much of the record's greatness is thanks to the economic, but always tuneful, playing of keyboardist Rostam Batmanglij, who peppers the songs with tasteful bits of melody reminiscent of fellow indie rockers, Islands.

The interplay of bassist Chris Baio and drummer Chris Tomson is also impressive; the two are often in lock step, and the grooves they produce on tracks like "One" prove that the band's exotic musical roots run deeper than a few world music compilations.

With their fun and addictive new album, Vampire Weekend gives listeners a musical triptych that globe-hops between familiar guitar, drum and bass pop and less-familiar keyboard and polyrhythmic African music and Caribbean music, but with their eyes and ears always focused on melody and charm.

Chad Jewett can be reached at cjew-ett@student.umass.edu.

Vampire Weekend has overcome hype several times in their young career. Each time, the band succeeds expectations and surprises listeners.

Take out a classifieds ad

THE DAILY COLLEGIAN

now offers free online classifieds for students at

WWW.UMASSLIST.COM

- More complete, local and relevant category listings than any and all competitor web sites combined
- Users can setup daily e-mail updates for relevant listings. No more searching for apartments, now they come to you.
- Post unlimited online listings
- Little to no spam

By listing on this site you are supporting your local college newspaper, The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

Maple Farm Foods

EVERYDAY LOW PRICES

Farm Fresh Fruits & Vegetables

TOMATOES 99¢ lb	CANTALOUPE $1.49 ea. or 2 for $2.00	JUMBO CELERY 99¢ ea
ICEBURG LETTUCE 99¢ ea.	CALIFORNIA ASPARAGUS $1.99 lb	BROCCOLI CROWNS 99¢ lb
GRAPES RED & GREEN SEEDLESS $1.59 lb	JUMBO EGGS $1.59 dozen	ALL GUIDA MILK $3.29 1 gallon

Open 7 Days 9-8

10 So. Maple St., Hadley • 585-1117

Point guard leads way

LOWE from page 10

"He had an unbelievable basketball game. He was one of the best point guards in the country tonight; period," Ford said. "For what he did for our basketball team, there is not another point guard who could have done what he did."

Saint Louis coach Rick Majerus echoed those sentiments post-game, but took it a step further – comparing Lowe to all-time NBA great John Stockton.

"Oh, he's very good. Obviously he had 13 assists and two turnovers, so the statistics speak for themselves – those are Stockton-esque statistics."

And if Lowe was Stockton on Sunday night, Dante Milligan was Karl Malone. Much like the Stockton-to-Malone connections for the Utah Jazz in the '90s, Lowe consistently targeted his passes in Milligan's direction in the low-post – giving his big-man easy baskets.

Five of Milligan's eight field goals came off passes from Lowe, and all five of those baskets were close-range lay-ups. Milligan finished with a career-high 21 points with Lowe's assistance.

"We watched the scouting reports and watched how their big men [played] on us the last game, and I just told Dante I was going to look for him," Lowe said. "He just caught the ball and hit good shots. Good pass; good shots; easy offense."

The offense was nearly flawless when Lowe was on the floor, but not nearly as efficient when he wasn't. The junior guard played all but four minutes, subbing out on three separate occasions for brief rests. When he did, though, the Billikens took full advantage.

In Lowe's four minutes off the court, SLU outscored the Minutemen, 16-6.

When on the floor, Lowe and the Minutemen outscored the Billikens by 21 points (82-61).

The ball movement by Lowe and others was exceptional. The Minutemen registered 23 assists compared to 12 turnovers, and only three of the 26 UMass baskets went unassisted.

Lowe had six assists in the first half, but struggled with his shot (0-of-4) as the Minutemen went to halftime with a 41-36 lead. The Billikens kept the game close throughout the end, but Lowe made sure his team never relinquished the lead.

Following a 10-4 run for the Billikens – to cut the lead to eight – with just over five minutes remaining, Lowe picked the perfect time to start hitting his shots. After Ricky Harris missed from the perimeter, Lowe picked up the offensive rebound, stepped back, and hit a 3-pointer to give the Minutemen a double-digit lead.

The Billikens quickly answered back with two baskets, including a 3-pointer of their own to get right back into it at 72-66. But with just under three minutes to go and the shot clock winding down, Lowe did it again – draining another triple to put the game away for the Minutemen.

Lowe rarely takes it upon himself to score, but once again displayed his ability to do so when called upon late in games. Sometimes Ford can't help but be impressed with how much his point guard takes on during any given game.

"We make him bring it up and race it up and down the court; I don't know if there is any point guard in the country that is required to do what he does for 94 feet," he said. "People watch him and he's from end-to-end, and it's not easy. I told him that the other day: 'If you can't do it, let me know.'"

Sunday's performance was a pretty good indication … that he can.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@dailycollegian.com

Point guard Chris Lowe tallied 13 points as well as assisting on 13 baskets in a UMass victory over St. Louis on Sunday. The junior averages 12.3 points and over five assists per game.

Rosanio's 24 not enough for UMass

Alisha Tatham had 14 points on 6-of-7 shooting on Saturday. The senior co-captain leads the team with her defense and toughness.

W. BASKETBALL from page 10

game 5-of-10 from 3-point range, including 4-of-7 in the first half. Second-leading scorer Katie Paganelli paced SLU with 21 points and hit both of her 3-point attempts.

Balanced scoring has been a problem for the Minutewomen this season, but they received double-digit scoring from Kate Mills (15), Pam Rosanio and Alisha Tatham (14).

Rosanio led the way with 24 points on an efficient 9-of-15 shooting. Dacko was pleased with the way the senior played but the same could not be said of the bench's performance.

The bench players for the Minutewomen missed all six of their field goal attempts, failed to get to the foul line, and turned the ball over four times while assisting on no baskets.

While the bench players struggled, Dacko wasn't entirely pleased with her starter's production.

"[St. Louis] went to the foul line 22 times after [being fouled] 18 times," she said. "We [got fouled] 17 times and only go to the line 13 times so we're not attacking, but at the same time we're fouling on their attacks."

Three-pointers hurt the Minutewomen in the first half and it was the Billikens' free-throw opportunities that hurt them in the second. Of SLU's 22 attempts, 13 came in the second half, with 12 of these being converted.

Theresa Lisch, the Billikens leading scorer on the season, went 8-of-9 from the line and finished with 19 points despite finishing 4-of-12 from the floor.

St. Louis entered the game averaging over 39 rebounds a game but was neutralized on the glass against by the Minutewomen. UMass held the slight rebounding edge, 31-28, an area they've struggled in all year.

Freshman Teya Wright led the Minutewomen with eight rebounds and also contributed eight points. It was the second consecutive game Wright played significant minutes (26) without fouling out, a problem she's encountered this season.

After struggling from the field in the first half, both teams shot high percentages in the second. UMass was 16-of-27 from the field (59.3 percent) while St. Louis shot 13-of-25 (52 percent).

Game Notes

SLU's Heather King had four offensive rebounds and a season-high 12 points … The Minutewomen's starting lineup included Wright, Tatham and Kate Mills, all forwards … St. Louis led 32-25 at halftime … The Billikens bench had 12 points on 3-of-10 shooting.

Mike Connors can be reached at mjconnor@student.umass.edu.

Milligan key contributor in Sunday's win assists, and was largely responsible for getting his teammates involved offensively.

M. BASKETBALL from page 10

"This is the type of team we really are," Lowe said. "We're a team that shares the ball and feeds off of each other. This is the way we need to play."

In the front court, senior Dante Milligan was dominant with 21 points and six rebounds. The center managed to keep himself out of foul trouble for much of the game despite collecting his fifth with 35 seconds remaining.

"It was a big relief; I had so much frustration after [Thursday's loss] to Fordham," said Milligan, whose minutes were not significantly tapered by foul trouble for the first time in several games.

"I've been working hard on screen-and-rolls in practice – putting myself in position to make the simple play," he added. "I felt that I had an advantage over their big men."

Saint Louis coach Rick Majerus benched center Hryce Husak for all but two minutes in the second half in favor of a rotation of his smaller, yet more athletic guards.

"I thought small was a way where we could generate some points, get a better degree of toughness and perhaps eliminate some of our defensive circumstances," Majerus said.

Billiken guards Danny Brown and Paul Eckerle thrived in the smaller offense. Though, the Minutemen held guard Tommie Liddell III, SLU's second-leading scorer, in check with six points.

If there's any cause for concern, it's the UMass team defense, which allowed the Atlantic 10's worst scoring offense (59.8 points per game) to score 77. Billiken junior guard Kevin Lisch torched the Minutemen for 25 points, including a trio of 3-pointers late in the second half that kept Saint Louis within striking distance.

Once Saint Louis reverted to the smaller rotation, UMass had trouble adjusting to the team's perimeter offense. SLU scored all but 11 of its 41 second-half points from beyond the arc and rarely took the ball inside or drove toward the basket.

This in turn led to a season-low one blocked shot, but also kept the UMass big men out of foul trouble. Against Fordham last Thursday, three Minutemen who play a combination of center and power forward had at least four fouls.

After the nationally-televised home loss to the Rams, UMass coach Travis Ford aggressively challenged his team in practice over the next two days and demanded a tangible difference in his team's play against Saint Louis.

"We had to have this one, psychologically," Ford said. "It's been a long two days and we needed a reward. I warned them before the game that when we left this gym today, people better not be talking about winning and losing, but about how hard you played. I'm proud of the way they responded."

Judging from the first 10 minutes of basketball, the Minutemen heeded their coach's request and established a double-digit lead. But against a Saint Louis team that runs methodical, half-court sets, a 10-point advantage is much more significant than a similar lead against an up-tempo offense.

In the second half, the Minutemen extended their lead to a game-high 14 points three minutes in. The UMass advantage hovered between eight and 12 points.

The Billikens executed an 8-0 run to trim the lead to six, as the UMass offense fought through a brief scoring drought. But the Maroon and White held on as Lowe scored 11 of the team's final 16 points to seal the victory before 5,149 fans.

Michael King can be reached at mking@student.umass.edu.

Dante Milligan led UMass with 12 points in Sunday's victory over the Billikens. The senior finished an efficient 8-of-11 from the floor and also collected six rebounds.

Thank you for reading THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

Accounting Majors

Master of Science in Accounting and Taxation

Earn the extra hours you need for the CPA Certificate

Earn your MS degree in as few as seven months... or at your own pace

Choose between a concentration in Financial and Assurance Services or Taxation

- A program of study designed for you to achieve your professional goals
- Full-time resident faculty and advising services
- Classes held on our scenic and convenient West Hartford campus
- Classes offered in a variety of delivery modes to suit your needs
- No-Hassle services—receive books, parking pass, and e-mail account right at the Barney School the first week of class. No running around campus
- Tuition includes all books and fees

To apply or get further information:
[illegible] barney.hartford.edu/msat msat@hartford.edu
860 768 4343

200 Bloomfield Avenue
West Hartford, CT 06117

Barney School of Business
University of Hartford

Alumni Association

Student Alumni Association

The UMass Amherst Alumni Association is proud to offer the following scholarships:

Leaders in the Making Scholarship
Four $2,000 scholarships given to promising sophomores and juniors with diverse records of achievement in academics and volunteerism.

Life Member Scholarship for Internships
One $2,000 scholarship given to a sophomore or junior to help defray the cost of a summer unpaid, away-from-home internship.

Michael W. Morris Scholarship
One $2,000 scholarship given to a student from Lawrence or Lowell, MA. The scholarship is in honor of Lawrence native and longtime UMass Amherst champion, Michael W. Morris '63.

Senior Leadership Award
Twenty-five $500 savings bonds will be given to graduating seniors who have demonstrated outstanding leadership and service to the campus community. Students must be nominated by faculty or staff.

DEADLINE FOR MOST SCHOLARSHIPS IS FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 22, 2008

For scholarship eligibility and applications, visit UMassAlumni.com/students or Memorial Hall

You were. You are. UMASS.

Thousands of Dollars in Scholarships Available!

Attention First-Year Students:

TIME'S ALMOST UP!

Have you completed MyStudentBody? It's easy, interesting ... and required for all first-year students. To avoid a registration hold, you must take and pass the course no later than Monday, February 25th. For instructions, go to:

www.umass.edu/uhs/cadap/msb/

Center for Alcohol and other Drug Abuse Prevention

UMass returns from A10s

Men finish in fifth while women place seventh in R.I.

BY SAM GROSSACK
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

In a weekend filled with fierce competition, the Charlotte men and women's track and field teams pulled out victories to win the Atlantic 10 Championships in Kingston, R.I. The Massachusetts men's track team finished fifth overall while the Minutewomen finished seventh.

The win secures the third consecutive A-10 title for the 49ers women, as their 180 points is the second-highest output in conference history. This score nearly doubles the amount gained by second place Dayton, who finished with 91 points, Dayton's second-place finish is the highest they have achieved in school history. The Minutewomen finished in the middle of the competition with 55 points.

UMass senior Christina DeRosa finished second in the 5,000-meter run with a time of 16 minutes, 42.99 seconds that broke the school record by almost two seconds. DeRosa also placed second in the 3,000-meter run (9:55.18).

The other UMass top female performer was Kristen Bakanowski, the team's only A-10 all-conference first team athlete. The senior set the conference record in the pole vault when she jumped to a height of 12 feet, 6 inches (3.81 meters). For Bakanowski, this is the third time she has won gold at the A-10 championships.

The 49ers women were led by Lamarra Curries and distance runner Aja Jackson. Curries won the 55- and 200-meter dash, while Jackson won the 1-mile run and the 800-meter run en route to sharing the Most Outstanding Track Performer. LaSalle's Rachel Papin broke the A-10 record in the 5,000-meter run, and shared the award with Jackson.

There were several other noteworthy performances on the women's side, including 49ers freshman Ebony Cunningham winning the 400-meter dash and placing third in the 200-meter dash. She was named A-10 Most Outstanding Rookie after her performances. URI senior thrower Sara Thorton was named A-10 Most Outstanding Field Performer.

On the men's side, URI kept the competition close throughout the weekend with Charlotte. The two were constantly exchanging leads until late in the day on Sunday, when the 49ers went ahead for good to secure their second title in three years.

Sophomore Brian Miller led the way for UMass with his high jump of 6 feet 6.25 inches, good for second place.

Other noteworthy performances for UMass were turned in by Nicolai Naranjo and Ian Hackney.

Naranjo finished fourth in the 5,000-meter run, qualifying him for the New England Championships. Hackney finished third in the 200-meter dash, and Darius Velez also finished third in the 55-meter.

LaSalle graduate student Sean Quigley was awarded the Most Outstanding Track Performer for his record-breaking performance in the 5,000-meter, shattering the old record by almost 40 seconds. Quigley also ran the last leg of the distance medley, leading his team to victory. 49ers freshman Darius Law earned the Most Outstanding Rookie Award as he won the 400-meter dash and finished second in the 200-meter dash.

URI's Yudehweh Gbaa won the Most Outstanding Field Performer after winning the triple jump with a height of 15.45 meters. The score was good for the highest in the conference this year.

In two weeks, the UMass men's and women's teams will travel to Boston to compete in the 2008 New England Indoor Track and Field Championships.

Sam Grossack can be reached at sgrossac@student.umass.edu.

ERIC REED / MASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Christina DeRosa broke the UMass school record in the 5,000 meter run. The senior finished second in the event amongst A-10 competitors.

BRIAN THEOBALD/COLLEGIAN

Shawn Saunders has played in eight games for the Mass Attack this season. Injuries have cause coach Don Cahoon to give some of his younger players more significant minutes.

Berry scores two in first period vs. NU on Saturday six minutes later, scoring on the power play with a feed from James Marcou.

HOCKEY from page 10

The junior had the puck on the left wing and dumped it down to Chris Davis behind the net. After fighting to keep control of the puck, James Marcou dug it out and gave it back to Berry, who had drifted toward the net and buried it past Thiessen.

"Things were going well for me," Berry said. "I've been in a bit of a slump lately scoring goals, but I just got a couple opportunities tonight to finish."

Marcou helped pad the lead again in the second, finding Fenton with the man advantage for the early 3-0 lead.

The pair found themselves in a 2-on-2 charge toward the net. Marcou passed the puck left-to-right through both defenders to Fenton, who easily beat an out-of-position Thiessen.

"Marcou's play is one for the books," Cahoon said of his freshman star forward. "He sees the ice like no one's business. I don't think anybody in the building thought he was going to move the puck to P.J. there, never mind P.J."

The Huskies best chance to get back in the game came with 13:39 left in the third period following a hooking penalty by Justin Braun. Northeastern's Tyler McNeely drew the penalty by catching defenseman Pat Dineen out of position at the blue line, forcing Braun over to help.

McNeely split the defense and Braun did the only thing he could do to stop the break away, and the referee awarded him a penalty shot.

UMass goaltender Paul Dainton (30 saves) cut off the angle, but McNeely's shot went well to the right of the net anyway and bounced off the boards.

Kraemer got NU off the snide anyway, scoring while catching UMass in a slow line change and beating Dainton glove side 11:30 into the third.

Cory Quirk got his own penalty shot attempt with 1:33 remaining, but Thiessen swallowed up his back-hand attempt.

Berry had just three goals entering the night, and Cahoon was happy to see the junior find his shot again, but said he has not been invisible on the ice, contributing to a lot of scoring chances.

"Alex is one of the guys going into his junior year who we were hoping to get a little more offense from," Cahoon said. "I think he's given us some really good games."

Jeremy Rice can be reached at jeremyr@student.umass.edu

Cahoon preaching discipline

TURNAROUND from page 10

Junior Alex Berry scored UMass's first goal at 7 minutes, 19 seconds of the first period with a blistering slap shot from the blue line just beyond the left face-off circle. The shot surprised NU goaltender Brad Thiessen and sailed over his left shoulder. But Berry's goal came as part of a series that began with brilliant cross-ice outlet pass from defenseman Martin Nolet.

The play displayed Nolet's instincts. When players feel pressured to score, they start to worry and try to make plays beyond themselves.

And the same goes for Berry's shot. Nolet's pass led to a 2-on-1 as a teammate headed for the right face-off circle as Berry gained the zone. The best asset of Berry's offensive game is his shooting ability. Rather than try to make a nice pass, Berry let the shot fly.

"I've tried to take the pressure of goal production off him, because sometimes that can really make it difficult when you start thinking that's totally the way you're going to be evaluated," Cahoon said of Berry. "I've tried to get him to deal with the nuance of the game. And that's what I've tried to do with the team. Make the pressure of scoring goals not the central theme even though we need to score more goals. We think it's a by-product of doing a lot of little things well."

Staying out of the penalty box is one of those things. Down, 2-1, with 52 seconds remaining on Friday night, a slashing call on sophomore winger Will Ortiz shorthanded the Minutemen, essentially sealing the win for Northeastern.

Ortiz did not play on Saturday night.

"All of the players are cognizant of how much we value the discipline piece," Cahoon said. "I don't need to cite specific examples, but you can look around and see what's happened; why certain people are sitting out certain games."

Discipline bit UMass again on Saturday as referees whistled the Minutemen for six penalties – four in the third period alone. NU converted one of its power plays into a goal to get themselves back into the game midway through the third. But the UMass penalty killers bailed their teammates out – namely freshman Paul Dainton who made 12 saves in the each of the final two periods.

NU created several chances late in the game including a puck that slipped through Dainton and onto the goal line before senior Mike Kostka slapped it away.

In Saturday's first two periods, the Minutemen resembled the team that occupied the top half of the Hockey East standings during the first half of the season. The third period wasn't perfect, but they got through it. They know they're better than they've played in the last two months.

It's only a matter of time before they start playing as well as they did in the season's first two months.

Joe Meloni is a Collegian editor. He can be reached at joe.meloni@gmail.com

BRIAN THEOBALD/COLLEGIAN

UMass coach Don Cahoon hopes the Minutemen can build some momentum in Hockey East after Saturday's much-needed victory over Northeastern at the Mullins Center.

The Daily Collegian has a NEW and IMPROVED Web Site

BEST OF THE WEEK
NEW LOOK
PHOTO SLIDESHOWS
BLOGS
New User Interface
PODCASTS
FORUMS
Expanded Media
INTERACTIVE JOURNALISM

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Look'n fo' digits?

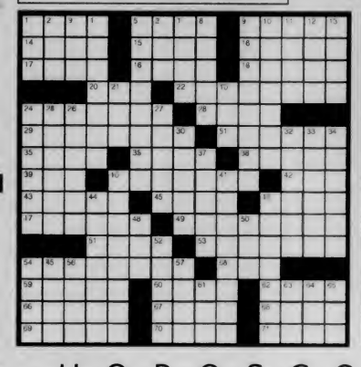
		3		7	2
5	6		8
4		7	5			1
	8			1
7	3					8	6
		2				3
9				3	4		1
				8		6	5
		1	4		8

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

ACROSS
1 Information
5 "Auntie Mame" co-star Peggy
9 Bedaub
14 Prayer ender
15 Slender woodwind
16 ___ firma
17 Groaning or Dillon
18 Lion's fare
19 Director Woody
20 Nightmare film street
22 Most roly-poly
24 Cocker ___
26 Farm enclosures
29 City's principal street
31 Scorsese film
35 Bear of the sky
36 Projecting rock
38 More docile
39 Blue Hen St
40 Setback
42 Tablet
43 Hellenic: pref
45 Landed
48 Fill past full
47 Test papers
49 Pedant
51 Legal lead-in
53 Violent killers
54 Successful Olympic athlete
58 Corner pipe
59 Mystery excuse?
60 Delicate color
62 Soprano Gluck
66 Causes rancor
67 Send forth
68 Harvest
69 Narrow bay
70 City on the Truckee
71 Danny of Hollywood

DOWN
1 Beaver's handiwork
2 MDs' org.
3 Asian holiday
4 Insect's sensory organ
5 Business
6 Lincoln or Fortas
7 Cleansing agent
8 Establish
9 Lie fallow
10 Actress Gilbert
11 Perry's creator
12 Greek god of war
13 Declaim violently
21 Cover
23 Xmas mo.
24 Blurred mark
25 Peering looks
26 Audience dividers
27 Insect stage
30 Some Isle of Man residents
32 Pierce with a sharp stake
33 More lofty
34 Commands
37 Southern breakfast item
40 Monarchist
41 High-tapering heel
44 Competent
46 Frolic
48 ___ Lanka
50 Ripken of the diamond
52 Fall bloomer
54 Wise Men
56 Zest
58 Picks flavoring
57 What prisoners do
61 Diarist Anais
63 Poetic meadow
64 New Jersey cape
65 Mimic

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM



CAPTION CONTEST!

Submit captions at: www.dailycollegian.com/caption

QUOTE OF THE DAY

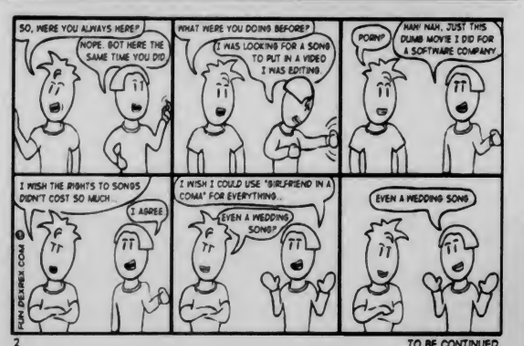
"Stay humble stay low blow like Hootie, True pimp playaz spend no dough on the booty..."
-Mase

Submit your comics!
comics@dailycollegian.com

Submit your classifieds!
(413) 545-3500



CORNY ON THE COBB BY JOHN COSTELLO AND AMANDA GRAFSTEIN

WONDERMARK BY DAVID MALKI

MEN IN THE BOX BY DAN LUCEY

2 ...TO BE CONTINUED

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Design a scavenger hunt on campus that includes finding and obtaining a math professor's toupee.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
What are you, French? Don't act like you don't know what I'm talking about.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
Crawl into a hole and hibernate until Nelly releases a new CD.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
You are about to pee your pants. Stop reading this and go to the bathroom you incontinent fool.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
You best get your tickets to Carrie Underwear before they sell out.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Your professor will undoubtedly see through your claims that menopause was the cause of your most recent absence.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
You are the chapstick that will soothe the blistered lips of this weary planet.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Make a tape that explores the differences between men and women.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Wear a train conductor's outfit and ride around on a bus all day screaming about how you're in charge. Bring a whistle.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Shredder will be calling to recruit you. Don't fight your clandestiny.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Become a vegetarian as an excuse to act like you're better than everyone.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Letting Grandma into your game of Spin the Bottle was a bad idea.

You've got Comics.
I want to see them.
[illegible]dailycollegian.com

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

APT. FOR RENT

Center of town 1,2,3 bedrooms. NOW SHOWING for June and Sept. NO FEES. Schedule a showing 253-7879 view apts. at www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

Put Up Posters! Through summer, car, sell, commitment needed. Up tp $12/hr w/bonus. 20 hrs between Mon-Wed, excellent communicator, fast-paced, punctual, resume and formal cover letter to postering@artspromo.org Hiring ASAP

Japanese speakers! Rent us your ears! $12/hr for participating in listening experiments contact phonetics lab. phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu 545-6837

French speakers! Rent us your ears! $12/hr for participating in listening experiments. Contact the phonetics lab. phonetics_lab.linguist.umass.edu 545-6837

Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

THE GREATEST SUMMER OF YOUR LIFE CAMP PONTIAC Is coming to UMASS! Located in NY State Camp Pontiac, a premier co-ed overnight camp in New York, is looking for fun, enthusiastic and mature individuals who can teach and assist in all areas of athletics, aquatics, the arts, or as a general bunk counselor. Interviews will be held on Thursday, Feb. 21st 9:00AM-11:30AM Campus Center/Student Union Complex-Room 901. Please email: stefanie@camppontiac.com or call Stefanie at 516-626-7668 to set up an interview.

A GREAT JOB! Spend your summer in a lakefront cabin in Maine. If you're looking to spend this summer outdoors, have fun while you work, and make lifelong friends, then look no further. Camp Mataponi, a residential girls camp in Maine, has female/male summertime openings for Land Sports, Waterfront (small crafts, skiing, life guarding, WSI, boat drivers), Ropes Course, Tennis, H.B. Riding, Arts & Crafts, Theater, Cooking, Gymnastics, Dance, Videography, Group Leaders & more. Top salaries plus room/board & travel provided. Call us today toll free at 1-888-684-2267 or apply online at www.campmataponi.com.

HOUSE FOR RENT

28 Stockbridge St. 6 bedroom house- 2 baths, living room, eat in kitchen, pantry, laundry, finished basement, yard, 2 car garage. 1.5 mi to campus! $2, 925+ www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

SERVICES

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthright.org

Concerned About Your Eating? Do you eat too little? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic, 577-5101

TAPESTRY HEALTH providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling &rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable, Safe. 413-548-9992 27 Pray St. Amherst. www.tapestryhealth.org

TRAVEL

WHAT ARE YOU DOING FOR SPRING BREAK? Want a cooler Spring Break than the typical Cancun? Travel to Amsterdam, Paris, Italy, or Prague and get a FREE Ipod Shuffle and $100 off! Contact your Contiki Umass Reps at pbordona@student umass.edu or cromano@student.umass.edu or go to the STA Office for more info! Be a traveler not a tourist!!!

Spring Break 08 Hot Deals, Hot Destinations, Hot Parties, Ask About Group Deals and FREE TRIPS. 1-800-426-7710 www.sunsplashtours.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 19, 2008 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Minutemen down SLU

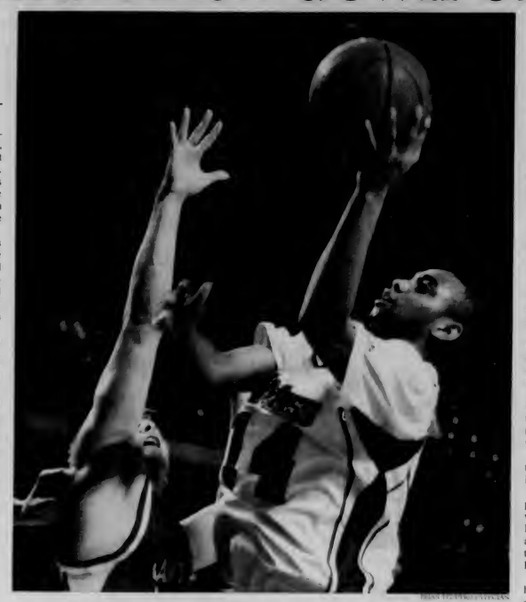
Balanced offensive attack leads UMass to home victory

BY MICHAEL KING
COLLEGIAN STAFF

For the Massachusetts men's basketball team, a second chance was all that was needed to get its season heading back in the right direction. After losing to Saint Louis Feb. 2 in one of its worst shooting performances of the season, the Minutemen defeated SLU, 88-77, Sunday afternoon at the Mullins Center in the second edition of the teams' home-and-home series.

UMass	88
St. Louis	77

Entering Sunday's game, the Maroon and White had lost two straight and five of seven. But the victory proved how successful the team can be offensively when the Minutemen have a low-post presence and are hitting their shots.



Comparing to its 59-point output against Saint Louis (14-11, 5-6 Atlantic 10) two weeks ago, UMass (16-9, 5-6 A-10) boosted its field-goal percentage by nearly 20 percent and hit nine additional 3-pointers.

"[The Billikens] didn't change their game plan too much," said senior forward Etienne Brower, who was nearly unstoppable offensively in the first half, scoring 12 points without missing a shot. "We had to approach the game with a different mindset from last time when we came out flat and sluggish. In this game we came out on fire. Defensive intensity can change the game a lot, especially with the way we play; so I thought that was the difference."

Yet it remains to be seen if that direction will lead to the NCAA Tournament. The Minutemen face a rematch with conference rival Rhode Island (20-5, 6-4 A-10) Thursday on the road.

Sunday's victory was one of the Minutemen's most balanced offensive performances of the season with five players scoring in double figures. Junior point guard Chris Lowe registered a career-high 13

See M. BASKETBALL on page 7

Chris Lowe and the Minutemen improved their record to 16-9 overall and 5-6 in the Atlantic 10 after defeating St. Louis at the Mullins Center, 88-77 on Sunday.

Lowe excels at finding open teammates in win over Billikens

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

At Sunday's postgame press conference, Chris Lowe's coach lauded him as one of the best point guards in the country. The opposing coach compared him to one of the top point guards in NBA history.

It was that good of a night for Lowe, who helped lead the Massachusetts men's basketball team to an 88-77 victory over Saint Louis on Sunday at the Mullins Center.

With 13 points and a career-high 13 assists, Lowe accounted for nearly half (43 points) of the UMass offense. He even chipped in off the glass with six rebounds, and on defense with two steals and a difficult assignment against SLU leading-scorer Kevin Lisch.

He did a little bit of everything – and a lot of timely passing and shooting – in his 36 minutes of action. Even UMass coach Travis Ford, who has admittedly been hard on his floor general lately, was impressed.

"I was as hard on him [on Saturday] as I've been on any player in a long time," Ford said after the game. "Everything starts with him and I expect more. I was not happy. I challenged him. And this was in front of his teammates.

"And he responded. He ran [the offense] like I told him; he ran it like that's the way my point guard is supposed to run it," he added.

Ford's in-house criticisms of Lowe came after the point guard had set a previous career-high in assists with 10 during Thursday's home game against Fordham – showing just how high the expectations are for the junior guard. The Minutemen dropped that game to the struggling Rams, 76-72, prompting Ford to challenge his leader.

Lowe responded with perhaps the best game of his career, and Ford responded at the press conference with some high praise.

See LOWE on page 7

Mass Attack splits with NU

Minutemen fall in Boston before returning home for win

BY JEREMY RICE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It wasn't the type of win the Massachusetts hockey team wanted following a 2-1 loss Friday night to the same Northeastern team, but at this point, the Minutemen will take it.

UMass won, 3-1, in front of 4,921 Saturday night over the Huskies, powered by Alex Berry's two goals in the first period. P.J. Fenton made it a three-goal lead in the second before NU's Kyle Kraemer broke the shutout in the third.

The Minutemen played most of the third period on their heels, and it was clearly noticed by the Huskies, who were a penalty shot away from a one-goal game with plenty of time left.

"It wasn't a perfect performance by any means," UMass coach Don Cahoon said. "But it was a start. I'm just happy to get through the evening, come out with two points and give us a chance to move forward and hopefully right the ship."

UMass got on the board first, 7 minutes, 19 seconds into the game with Berry's first goal of the night.

The puck went end-to-end and showed what the Minutemen can do with the almost-Olympic-sized rink they call home.

Defenseman Martin Nolet took control of the puck to the left of his own goal and rifled it up to Berry, who crossed the red line on the right side of the rink, pulled up at the faceoff circle and fired past Northeastern goaltender Brad Thiessen (30 saves).

Cahoon has stressed that the team needs to take more shots on goal to increase the team's offensive output. Berry wasted no time putting that into practice.

NU	2
UMass	1
UMass	3
NU	1

"It's one of our biggest goals is to take a lot of shots and get them in early," Berry said. "I just tried to get to the net and create some rebounds. I got a lot on it, and it found the back of the net."

Berry found the net again just

See HOCKEY on page 8

Alex Berry celebrates one of his two goals in the Minutemen's 3-1 victory Saturday over Northeastern. The junior forward has five goals and five assists on the season.

Joe Meloni

UMass's failures than the stalling of an offense that ended 2007 scoring at least four goals in four consecutive wins, three over Top 10 teams.

The statistics tell one story. But Cahoon believes there is more to that tale, that which a calculator cannot tell.

Goals haven't come easy for the Minutemen. But rather than focus solely on offense in his team workouts, Cahoon chose to remind his players of the small things they must do create scoring chances.

The Minutemen owned the neutral zone early in the season and during the success of 2006-07. They moved the puck crisply from zone to zone and avoided the turnovers and mental lapses that breed easy scoring chances for opponents and fits of rage from coaches.

See TURNAROUND on page 8

UMass looks to return to earlier form

Summing up the feelings of Massachusetts hockey coach Don Cahoon after his team defeated Northeastern, 3-1, in the back end of a home-and-home series Saturday night is best done with one word – relief.

"I'm just happy to get through the evening and come out with two points, and give us the chance to move forward and hopefully right the ship," he said. "It wasn't a perfect performance by any means. But it was a good start. We came out the gates pretty good. We executed [well] in a couple of situations. Then in the third period, things got a little tough for us. At least we weathered the storm."

The Huskies defeated UMass, 2-1, Friday at Mathews Arena, continuing the descent down the Hockey East Standings that began with a two-game sweep at the hands of New Hampshire on Jan. 11 and 12. The Minutemen are currently eighth in the conference – good enough for the final playoff spot in the Hockey East Tournament – and four points clear of ninth-place Maine heading into a pair of games with the Black Bears this weekend in Orono.

Wins have been a rare commodity for the 2007-08 Minutemen since the new year began. Cahoon believes that there is more to

Minutewomen defeated again

Turnovers, need for bench production cripple UMass

BY MIKE CONNORS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts women's basketball team's starters combined to go 27-of-47 from the field and scored 65 points against Saint Louis Saturday. However, they also turned the ball over 18 times and fell to the Billikens, 71-65.

St. Louis	71
UMass	65

"Our team is playing really, really hard, and we're not playing smart," UMass head coach Marnie Dacko said. "It's tough when you lead the conference in field goal percentage and you lead the conference in assists, and then you're last in turnovers.

"You can put yourself in a position to win ballgames, but if you just throw the ball away you're not going to win ballgames."

The Minutewomen had 18 assists, which was right around their season average of 17 per game, but they also turned the ball over 22 times – these miscues led to 17 Billiken points.

Point guard Sakera Young tied a game-high with five assists but also turned the ball over a game-high six times. Dacko feels the Minutewomen are playing well enough to win games when they don't turn the ball over but has yet to find a solution to the problem.

The Minutewomen tied the game at 65 with 2:10 remaining in the game but due to a pair of turnovers and missed shots, they failed to score the remainder of the game.

In addition to struggling with turnovers, 3-point field goal defense has also plagued UMass this season. The Minutewomen rank last in the conference in this category, allowing opponents to shoot 38.6 percent from beyond the arc.

"When a person goes to shoot, you're supposed to be able to get a hand in their face, and we didn't do that," Dacko said. "We kind of just stared at them and they shot the ball."

The Billikens finished the

See W. BASKETBALL on page 7

Kate Mills and the Minutewomen fell on the road to St. Louis, 71-65, on Saturday. The senior forward had 15 points on 6-of-13 shooting and also dished out five assists.

CARRIE UNDERWOOD AT MULLINS TONIGHT | PAGE 5

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

PARTLY CLOUDY : HI: 35 LO: 16 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 20, 2008

Free speech or pornography?

A brochure (above) depicting two men engaging in sexual acts posted in the office window of the Radical Student Union has drawn criticism from the University of Massachusetts Republican Club. A rally condemning the display will be held outside of the Student Union later this week.

Researchers use deer ticks to study HIV

BY HOLLY SEABURY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The attachment of the HIV-1 virus to T cells in the human body may be preventable, according to researchers at the University of Massachusetts, and it's because of an unlikely source.

According to a recent study done by a research team on campus, the use of a certain protein found in deer tick saliva could be the critical step toward curing the virus that potentially leads to AIDS, and in a number of cases, death.

The study showed that the protein may also be an effective treatment for diseases such as asthma and multiple sclerosis caused by an overactive immune system, and could also be useful in containing the immune system to prevent the rejection of transplanted organs.

The research team, including Juan Anguita, Ph.D., assistant professor of veterinary and animal sciences, published its results in this month's edition of "Biochemical and Biophysical Research Communications."

The research team also includes Ignacio Juncandella, Tonya Bates and Elias Olivera, all of veterinary and animal sciences.

"Deer ticks, which are carriers of Lyme disease, produce a protein that can interfere with the initial attachment of the HIV-1 virus, which could lead to new treatments that stop the infection process before it begins," said Anguita.

The specific protein found in deer tick saliva, Salp15, would work by stopping T cells, or white blood cells, from activating by attaching to a specific site on their surface called the CD4 receptor. The HIV-1 virus weakens the human immune system when it targets T cells from the body's strongest defense system in fighting infections, but Salp15 may prevent this step from happening, thus preventing the virus from infecting at all.

"Salp15 binds to proteins in the CD4 receptor that are furthest from the cell membrane in both mouse and human cells," said Anguita.

Anguita and Juncandella were part of a different study, with the Vermont Lung Center and the University of Vermont, that proved Salp15 slowed down the development of asthma in mice. The team produced asthma in a group of mice that also received Salp15 and compared them to a control group. The results that were published in the June 2007 issue of "The Journal of Immunology" concluded that the mice that received Salp15 had airways that were less reactive, and showed lower levels of several biochemical markers that indicated a T cell response.

Because the action of Salp15 is so specific, Anguita believes that it will be used as a treatment for HIV-1, transplant rejection and autoimmune diseases.

"HIV-1 and transplant patients are on powerful medications for life, and most of these have secondary effects like nerve damage and liver problems," he said. "This makes the development of new treatments an important area of research."

"Our current efforts are aimed at validating these results with real cells and real viruses, but before we do that, I need to secure some funding," said Anguita.

However, he added, "this is preliminary and it can be developed into something more useful, such as a vaccine."

Holly Seabury can be reached at hseabury@dailycollegian.com

Alum takes shot at national golf organization

BY ERIC SCHLICHTE
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

UMass alum James R. Fitzroy '70 was recently elected to the position of secretary/treasurer for the Golf Course Superintendents Association of America (GCSAA).

His latest honor is one highlight in a long career dedicated to the management of golf courses in and around New England. A member of the GCSAA for 41 years, Fitzroy held a position as the superintendent of a course in North Quincy for over 30 years before being elected secretary/treasurer at the beginning of the month.

He was the superintendent of courses in Sutton and New York prior to accepting the North Quincy job.

Fitzroy, who earned an associate's degree in turf management from the Stockbridge School of Agriculture in 1967 and a bachelor's degree in park administration from the University in 1970, was still actively involved at UMass long after his graduation.

While president of the Golf Course Superintendents Association of New England, he served on the original committee that conducted a feasibility study for the Troll turf research building in South Deerfield.

"I think my experience in building construction within the laws and regulations of the state helped direct the efforts of the staff toward a plan that could result in the appropriate type of facility built within the organizational structure of public projects," he said.

Fitzroy was hooked on the allure of the golf course from an early age. As a youth he played golf, and one summer he got a part-time job at a course.

"I found the concept of managing a golf course just fascinating, and the natural progression was to continue my education in that area," he said.

Choosing a college to attend was an easy choice for Fitzroy.

"UMass has always had one of the premier curriculums in the country for Turf and Golf Course Management," he said.

Now Fitzroy has much more to focus on than regional projects. His appointment to a position on the board of a nationwide organization will demand the majority of his time. Despite his absence, he feels that students at UMass will still be more than ably led as they continue their progress toward a degree in turf management.

"At this time I'm concentrating on my service with the Golf Course Superintendents Association of America, but there are many golf course professionals in New England who strongly support the UMass program," said Fitzroy.

"Steve Curry from the Berkshire Hills Country Club is president of the UMass turf alumni group and they do a wonderful job of fundraising and advising staff on course content issues that will help students succeed in the field," he added.

Even with his successes, Fitzroy still looks back on his time spent at UMass with a sense of nostalgia. Aside from the obvious benefits of the degrees he earned, his experiences in student life have also stayed with him.

"I have many fond memories of my time at UMass, both as a student at Stockbridge and then at the University," he said. "The friendships I developed there have stayed with me over the course of my career and life, and I still enjoy getting back to campus for a football or basketball game."

In his nearly 40 years of involvement with the UMass campus, Fitzroy has also seen a lot of change and growth and summed up the University's progress in one short sentence.

"The Mullins Center is a far cry from 'the cage,'" he said.

Professor to leave for South America

BY HOLLY SEABURY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

An associate professor at the University of Massachusetts was awarded a Fulbright fellowship to Argentina for spring 2009.

Max Page, of the architecture and history department at UMass, will travel to Buenos Aires next year to lecture about historic preservation in the United States. To help with his book about the history and politics of historic preservation, he will study the politics of preservation in Argentina.

"I learned about receiving the fellowship just a couple of weeks ago," said Page. "When I applied, it was aimed toward teaching in a specific country, and to help with my new book."

Page's award also includes his plan to develop an exchange program between his department and El Centro de Estudios de Arquitectura Contemporánea at Universidad Torcuato Di Tella, the site where he will be living during the fellowship.

Last April, Page received a $25,000 grant from the Howard Foundation to support his book project, "Priceless: The History and Politics of Historic Preservation."

He was also awarded a Guggenheim Fellowship in 2003.

An associate professor, Page teaches urban, architectural and public history. He is also the author of "The Creative Destruction of Manhattan, 1900-1940," which won the Spiro Kostof Award of the Society of Architectural Historians for the best book on architecture and urbanism.

Max Page was awarded a Fulbright fellowship to Argentina.

Page is also the co-editor of "Building the Nation: Americans Write Their Architecture, Their Cities and Their Environment," with Steven Conn, and "Giving Preserving a History: Histories of Historic Preservation in the United States," with Randall Mason.

The Fulbright fellowship was founded by J. William Fulbright, a well-known and influential longtime member of the U.S. Senate Foreign Affairs Committee. The grant aims to "bring a little more knowledge, a little more reason and a little more compassion into world affairs, and thereby to increase the chance that nations will learn at last to live in peace and friendship," according to its Web site.

Holly Seabury can be reached at hseabury@dailycollegian.com.

Wheaton sued over cost of exchange

BY JESSICA SACCO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Hingham lawyer James P. Brady has sued Wheaton College for the price of a study abroad program his daughter attended last spring.

According to the Boston Globe, the suit contends that because the program Brady's daughter, Jennifer Bombasaro-Brady, took in Durban, South Africa was completely separate from Wheaton, Brady should not have to pay the comprehensive fee.

This fee includes tuition and room and board. The trip to Durban costs about $4,400 less than what Wheaton is charging.

However, the policy for studying abroad is clearly stated on the college Web site and in program material, according to Wheaton's assistant vice president for communications Michael Graca.

Their study abroad program is consistent with the way the school charges students for classes. One person will not be charged more tuition money if they choose to take more than the required number of classes per semester, and a student will have to pay the same rate if they take fewer classes.

Wheaton also gives institutional grants and financial aid to students who are in need that they can use wherever they go.

"About 60 percent of students receive financial aid," Graca said. "We feel that it is an appropriate policy."

Unlike Wheaton, and many other private colleges, the University of Massachusetts does not base its study abroad programs off of the home tuition.

The education abroad fee determines a large part of the trip's cost, and differs depending on where one wishes to study. There is no one flat rate for every program.

Each UMass student must also factor in the standard study-abroad fee of $750, as well as round trip air fare and expenses once he or she has reached the destination.

One benefit about this program is that students who currently have financial aid are able to attend meetings where their application can be re-evaluated to adjust their aid depending on the cost of the program. This will factor in all aspects of the trip, including expenses.

About 1100 to 1200 undergraduate UMass students travel abroad each year, and ultimately have a lot of opportunities as to where they are able to go.

In the end, most in-state students will pay about the same or a little more than what it costs to live at UMass for a semester, while people who are out-of-state will probably pay a little less.

"Yes, it costs a lot, but with some help and planning you can put the pieces together and get out of here," said Carol Lebold, who is the program director for study abroad in Africa, the Middle East, Australia and New Zealand.

Senior Jackie Forman, who traveled to Ghana, West Africa in the fall of 2006 says that her trip was the most significant experience of her life.

"I learned about myself, independence, what it means to be an American and what it means to be a foreigner. I've been back for well over a year, and I still think about it every day," Forman said.

See ABROAD on page 2

Sale of shoreline property nets Amherst College $58 million

BY ASHLEY COULOMBE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The surf's up at Amherst College after officials sold a former student's donation of beachfront property in California for $58 million.

The gift was a stretch of shoreline in San Clemente, Calif., about seven tenths of a mile long, housing 90 cottages, reported the Boston Globe last Thursday.

A member of the class of 1919, Roger C. Holden, donated the land in 1968 by establishing a trust that gave the land rights to the College. At the time the parcel was worth $1.5 million. College officials sold the land to a homeowners group representing residents of Capistrano Shores for the reported $58 million, according to the Globe.

There is already a campus theater named after Holden, but the College plans to put $2.5 million toward creating an endowed professorship in the theater department supporting the study of dance in his honor.

Holden followed in the footsteps of his father when he enrolled at Amherst, but did not graduate from the liberal arts college. A student of theater, according to the Springfield Republican, Holden still won a prize for his writing while at Amherst.

Serving in the military during the First World War, Holden also worked in the newspaper business and turned from reporter to professional fundraiser during the course of his career.

Holden moved to California in 1958 with his wife and became involved in the real estate business.

His donation of shorefront property reverted to Amherst College after his wife passed away in 2006.

College officials have not decided what to do with the remaining money, which the Globe described as a "$58 million windfall," and Amherst College members agreed.

"I think a windfall is a pretty accurate way to describe it," said Amherst's chief advancement officer Megan Morey in an interview with the Globe. "We had no sense of the value."

Derrick Perkins contributed to this report

Ashley Coulombe can be reached at acoulomb@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 87

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Exter
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Tim McCall
COPY EDITOR Adam Scagin
EDITORIAL EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Rice
FEATURES EDITOR Dave Humphreys
PHOTO EDITOR Michael Phillis
WEB EDITOR James Hale
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Szymczak
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Marsea Whooten
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Stephanie McPherson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ryan McAskill
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Skye McIntyre
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Garber
ASSISTANT NEWS Michael King
ASSISTANT NEWS Kate Olesin
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Seabury
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Connors
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Meloni
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenswaike
ASSISTANT PHOTO Brian Tedder
ARTS WEB EDITOR Michelle Abbasciano
EDITORIAL WEB EDITOR Leif Walcutt
NEWS WEB EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS WEB EDITOR Steve Games

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS COLLEGIATE SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY OWNED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIDELIGHTS IN 1903, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1936. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN DISTRIBUTED SINCE JANUARY 1992 FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL 413-545-3500 BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 5:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Katie Huston

COPY EDITOR
Greg McCarthy

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Michael Saffes

Across the Nation Around the World
News Wire

Violent trend grows across U.S. colleges

By Scott Canon
McClatchy Newspapers

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — With each gunman-on-crowd shooting – Columbine, Virginia Tech, Kirkwood, the Omaha mall and now Northern Illinois – the next one becomes more likely.

As the bizarrely awful becomes a recurring tragedy, troubled souls see how someone else shot his way out of a bind, crime and mental health specialists say.

One man's burst of twisted glory doesn't exactly prompt a copycat crime, they say. Still, it at least makes more plausible the possibility of grabbing attention, revenge or whatever wild escape shooters hope to find by gunning down the defenseless on their own sprint to suicide.

"The shooter in the news serves as a role model for a kind of behavior that wasn't in the viewer's repertoire a moment earlier," said Park Dietz, a psychiatrist and instructor at the FBI academy at Quantico, Va. "Suddenly, it's brought into his consciousness that there's another way. You can get even..."

Theories to explain the shootings run as varied as the killers. Bullied boys obsessed with violence and infamy. A mental illness unchecked. Irrational anger. A life in freefall. Who knows why?

The temptation to find a motivational thread is as tempting as it is illusive.

"Nobody's an expert in this," said Steven Mandracchia, a forensic psychologist at Western Missouri Mental Health Center. "People want answers. People want explanations. But the reality is there are no explanations. There's no way to conceptualize irrational acts."

But those who study crime and the mind say the people who unload their weapons in school cafeterias, college campuses or the office don't necessarily share much more than tactics. If one mass shooting begets another, it's largely in the way that each bloody rampage makes clear the possibility of another.

Inspiration abounds.

The killing rage by two students at Columbine High School in April 1999 that left 12 dead and 23 wounded in Littleton, Colo., stands out in American culture as the dawning of a frightening age of school shootings. Yet it was preceded a year before by the work of two middle school students who shot to death four girls and a teacher and injured nine more.

Before that came the slaughter by a Chinese graduate student at the University of Iowa in 1991, when he executed five of his academic advisers on a cold November afternoon after he felt cheated out of a physics prize.

More recently, Seung-hui Cho killed 32 people at Virginia Tech University last spring. A town gadfly opened fire this month at a city council meeting in Kirkwood, Mo., and killed five. A woman – in the sort of crime usually limited to boys and men – went into a classroom at Louisiana Technical College in Baton Rouge last week and shot two dead.

Then on Thursday, a former graduate student at Northern Illinois University returned to DeKalb after he reportedly had stopped taking medication, crashed into a lecture hall with a shotgun and handguns and opened fire. A previously well-thought-of scholar, he killed five people and wounded more than a dozen others before fatally turning a gun on himself.

Perhaps what they share in common is what Charles Whitman realized by taking a sniper's perch in the clocktower at the University of Texas' Austin campus in the summer of 1966 and using a rifle to kill 14 people and wound at least 30 more: Unarmed civilians are easily shot down.

Dietz describes that particular type of mass killers as "pseudo commandos." What sets them off can vary widely or remain forever unknown. But Dietz said they tend to share a few characteristics.

He said they suffer from profound depression and a willingness to die (a condition that one in 10 Americans experiences in a lifetime). They have access to weapons (true of about half of U.S. households). And, he said, the adults experience paranoia and the children paranoia or deep anger.

Staged fights increasingly popular on video Web sites

By Vikki Ortiz
Chicago Tribune

CHICAGO — Huddled around a cell phone in a West Chicago school, the five boys immediately caught a teacher's eye because the use of such devices is banned there. But when officials looked more closely, they discovered a new disciplinary issue. The 8th graders were using the camera phone to watch video of a fake fight they staged in a bathroom at Benjamin Middle School. They had filmed multiple rounds of a shoving match – no more than a couple of minutes long – and planned to post it on YouTube.

"I'd read about instances like that," said Philip Ehrhardt, superintendent of Benjamin School District 25. "We weren't aware of it being done here."

The students involved were suspended, from one to four days for engaging in potentially dangerous behavior. School districts throughout the Chicago area have discovered, often painfully, that video-recorded fights have become an Internet rage for teens and young adults.

Confronted with legions of Web-savvy students willing to push the envelope, educators increasingly are caught in a bind as they try to make sure bones aren't broken while not stifling creativity, experts say.

Administrators at Benjamin are considering offering classes on blogging and video techniques to channel misguided activities into productive learning.

Since 2006, nearly 1,000 security personnel in Chicago public schools have received special training on MySpace, Facebook, Xanga and other popular sites to help maintain safety, a spokesman said.

A student who sneaks into a bathroom for a YouTube shoot could slip and hit his or her head on a sink and be seriously hurt, officials say. Fake fights also can quickly escalate into real fights.

"Who ever heard of YouTube five years ago?" asked Steven Klein, director of student affairs at Elgin, Ill.-based Unit School District 46. "The Internet opens up all kinds of possibilities."

In surveys, a majority of 12- to 17-year-olds who use the Internet say they watch videos on sites such as YouTube and Google Video. Surveys also have found that 14 percent of Internet-using teens say they have uploaded a video, said Mary Madden, senior research specialist for the Pew Internet & American Life Project.

Amateur fights – between cheerleaders, between nerds, on the bus, in the cafeteria and in myriad other settings – have emerged as especially appealing to teens and young adults.

"The boys think (filming fights) would make people think they're tough, they must be popular," said Morgan Wisted, an 8th grader at Benjamin, where news of her classmates' suspensions spread quickly. "A lot of people are just kind of laughing at it."

Correction

An article published Tuesday, Feb. 19 titled "Student safety an issue" incorrectly reported the topic of last Thursday's forum hosted by the ALANA Caucus and the Student Government Association as student safety. The intended topic was building a safe and inclusive campus climate for all.

Newspapers should have no friends.
-John Pulitzer

But then again, he doesn't know you like we do.

dailycollegian.blogspot.com

Costs of studying abroad less at UM

ABROAD from page 1

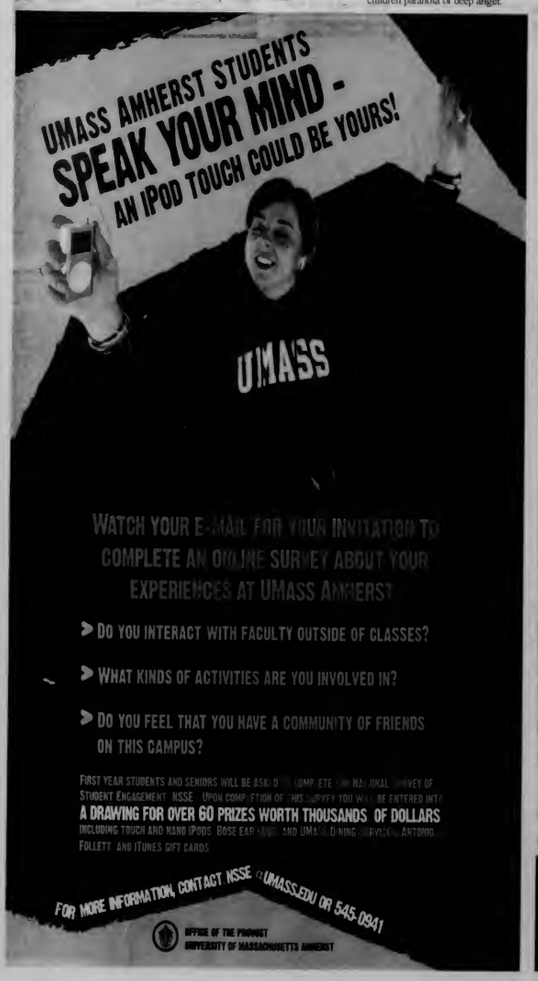
An in-state student at UMass, Forman traveled through the School for International Training and, because it is a private organization, she paid more than the cost of a semester at UMass.

"I got scholarships from UMass and SIT, and I always knew I wanted to study abroad, so cost wasn't a problem," she said.

Senior Lauren Murphy spent the fall of 2006 to the spring of 2007 in the United Kingdom, and agrees with Forman that studying abroad is an amazing experience.

"It helped me academically and helped me socially. England has definitely become a really special place to me," she said.

Murphy admitted that without the financial aid she received from UMass, her trip would not have been possible.



"UMass is definitely generous with financial aid. I also got grants and scholarships," she said. "The University sets out your budget so you're secure and safe when abroad."

Also an in-state resident, Murphy said she paid a little more than what it would cost her to be at UMass, but considering how the exchange rate was in the United Kingdom, she believed the price for her trip to be fair.

Both seniors were adamant that study abroad is one of the best things to do for any student.

"No one regrets going abroad. People regret not going abroad," Forman said.

Jessica Sacco can be reached at jsacco@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 20, 2008

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
- Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Exercising restraint

Katy Bruck

As a UMass student, it's hard to ignore the news stories that are circulating on not only this campus, but also on the national news recently. Thursday's Northern Illinois University shooting is the most recent in a number of college shootings that have garnered national attention.

A few weeks ago, there was a shooting in Baton Rouge, La. And there were, of course, the Virginia Tech shootings last spring. A subject that perhaps hasn't made as much news as it should is the subject of gun control.

Even after the Virginia Tech shooting, which was the most shocking and deadly mass shooting in American history, there wasn't as much talk about gun control as one would expect.

This was particularly puzzling considering that, even then, political pundits were slobbering over the upcoming presidential elections. I have vague memories of the Clinton administration, and I remember gun control being more of an issue than it was last spring.

Senator Barack Obama has been the only presidential candidate as of Friday afternoon to even respond to the shooting in Illinois, his home state.

Upon reading up on this subject, it becomes very clear that perhaps the reason for this lack of any noticeable or credible debate on gun control is that there simply aren't two coherent, rational sides to the issue.

The NRA's Web site makes it sound like even the idea of registering and tracking gun licenses and guns themselves is a flagrant violation of the Second Amendment.

Apparently anyone who supports anything resembling such tactics is a "Lefty-Loon," as one blogger on the Chicago Tribune's Web site put it. How any self-respecting politician, Democrat or Republican, is supposed to respond or corroborate that in a mature fashion is beyond me.

To an individual like myself, who has had both positive and negative experiences with guns, the idea of having to obtain a license before buying a gun, and the idea of that gun being coded and capable of being traced by the federal government, does not seem to violate any of my rights.

We have to obtain a license before we can drive a car – a mechanism that is both an inseparable part of the American identity, and capable of destruction. I often hear jokes (stated a little less politically correct than in this column) that elderly people should have to renew their driver's licenses every year to compensate for failing eye sight, physical weakness, dementia, etc.

Gun control, whether we like it or not, is becoming an issue that we are being forced to think about.

So why is the idea of a background check to own and operate something that was exclusively invented to cause physical damage to another living organism so "un-American" and apparently socialist, fascist, communist or, God forbid, liberal?

All the logistics of the gun control debate aside, one piece of the puzzle that has been starkly absent from the news recently is the response of college students.

I mean, sure, there's already been probably a half dozen interviews with eye witnesses and family members of the victims of the NIU shooting. But that's only the acute, emotional reactions from people who shouldn't be expected to dissect or contextualize their experiences yet.

Talking to UMass students who do have opinions and have contextualized what they've been seeing in national news, and on our own campus, there seems to be a general feeling of, "How long until this happens to us?"

Maybe it is naïve, but I don't think a mass shooting is in our future. Most of the violence that occurs on this campus is mainly motivated by individual conflicts and is influenced by alcohol.

Demographically, there are too many people in this small valley for there not to be occasional upsurges in violence. But considering the emphasis the current presidential candidates (some more than others) have been putting on youth turnout, I think it's time we take our concerns and worries and place them in a political context.

Clearly, we represent a population that is becoming more and more vulnerable to the policy decisions of our elders, particularly when it comes to national security. Of the number of people who are killed every day in gun-related incidents in this country, 25 percent are under the age of 20.

Whatever justifications there are for these statistics – "Oh, more people die from choking than from guns," or "64 million gun owners didn't kill someone yesterday" – it is still unacceptable for college students, or anyone in this country, to be fearful of going out their front door.

And I guess one question all those UMass students who wholeheartedly support the Second Amendment should ask themselves is, how would that off-campus fight between laerosse players, or the attempted rape and murder in Southwest, have turned out if any or all of those individuals happened to have had guns?

Gun control, whether we like it or not, is becoming an issue that we are being forced to think about. So next time MASSPIRG hands out one of those little presidential candidate communication post cards, why not step outside the box and ask "What do you plan to do to quell gun-related violence in this country?"

Katy Bruck is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at kbruck@student.umass.edu.

Acknowledge the facts

Michael Phillis

In an election where Hillary Clinton is criticizing Barack Obama for having no content in his speeches, Clinton is leaving a lot out of her post-election speeches.

In the hours after the polls closed in the Potomac primary, where Virginia, Maryland and Washington, D.C. all went to Obama by convincing margins, the networks went through the usual routine of televising the speeches of the winners and losers.

After the latest round of voting in and around America's capital, momentum had built for Obama in an undeniable way. That night, both candidates were not speaking in the states that had voted. Obama held his victory speech in Wisconsin while Clinton headed south to El Paso, Texas.

With Clinton, those watching the election coverage were treated to a stump speech. The new speech did not follow the traditional post-election formula. Clinton did not mention Obama's wins; instead she decided to talk about cowboys and hats, claiming Obama was all talk and no action.

The odd part of Clinton's speech that night was her lack of talk. Not mentioning a loss simply because the loss is bad news has been in the campaign's rule book from the beginning of the primary season. After a defeat, what little remarks Clinton grants to a day that did not go as planned are minor, if they exist at all.

Granted, it is normal for a campaign to downplay a loss, but to ignore one all together is misguided.

Clinton has shown that her ability to ignore bad news does not start and stop with a concession speech. The Iraq vote could very well be Clinton's Achilles' heel. It was a major issue and an instance where she acted with her political interests at heart instead of the needs of her constituents.

In the in-depth biography on Hillary Clinton written by Jeff Gerth and Don Van Natta Jr., "Her Way," the two Pulitzer Prize winning authors detail Clinton's thought process leading up to her vote for the Iraq war.

The biography argues that Clinton did not read the classified intelligence report that was made available to her. The classified report painted a picture that outlined some weaknesses in Bush's argument during the buildup to the invasion.

These facts further the idea that, when it was time to cast arguably the most important vote of Clinton's career as a Senator, she made the decision based on political motivations, with her presidential ambitions in mind, instead of doing her research and making a decision based on policy.

Granted, it is normal for a campaign to downplay a loss, but to ignore one all together is misguided.

Clinton has not yet admitted the mistake that she made in casting her vote for the war. John Edwards, who also voted for the authorization to use force in Iraq, did apologize to the American people. The apology by Edwards demonstrated his ability to admit a mistake. The reality that must be reached by voters is that all candidates will make mistakes.

Candidates will cast votes that should have been considered differently or they may make personal decisions that do not look good after the fact. A candidate's ability to learn from mistakes, instead of becoming more stubborn on a position they know is wrong, is an important trait for any politician.

Clinton is showing more evidence toward the latter position. She seems to worry that any admitted mistake will open her up to increased media criticism. But again, that judgment is flawed. Politicians should be making their decisions based on their beliefs and not a judgment on their personal image.

If Clinton is indeed showing a trend toward stubbornness, then we have a precedent to predict where her actions might point this country if she becomes "Madame President." One of the defining characteristics of President George W. Bush's legacy will be his ability to ignore bad news.

There has been a range of issues where Bush has simply dismissed reality and put in place an argument that would simply suit his own beliefs and ambitions. The Iraq War, Hurricane Katrina and the trial and later action by Bush to commute the sentence of Scooter Libby paint a vivid picture of the Bush Administration's policy of handpicking facts to back up their own beliefs.

This kind of policy has steered this country for the past eight years to where we are today. America is headed toward a recession and has been in Iraq for a longer period of time than it took to win World War II.

There is a trend to be found in W's stubbornness, and about two-thirds of America acknowledges that the results have been negative. America knows what to expect from a president like, "The Decider."

The question the American voters must ask themselves is whether or not electing Clinton, with her history of carefully ignoring those disappointing facts, is setting the country up for an extension of Bush's most vivid trait; stubbornness.

Michael Phillis is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mphillis@student.umass.edu.

Instant fame supercedes news

Nicholas O'Malley

As I cheered in the stands at the basketball game last Thursday, I noticed something quite odd: not everyone was watching the game. In most cases, all attention is aimed at the floor with fans cheering along.

This game, however, was quite unique in that many students found themselves turning away from the court; instead, they turned to the cameras that dwelled in the rear.

Unlike most games, this one was being broadcast on national television, during a 9 p.m. primetime slot. These were not your standard, everyday, local broadcast cameras. This was ESPN2.

The fact of the matter is people will do anything to get on TV. Whether it's ignoring your collegiate loyalties, risking personal injury or chancing humiliation, the chance to get caught in the public eye is far too alluring to pass up.

Instead of the team on the floor during the game's timeouts, the main attraction was that magic red light above each camera that might just give fans their 2.5 seconds of obscure fame during a broadcast.

Signs aloft and matching ESPN T-shirts flaunted, UMass students (myself included) preened for the camera as the rest of America was coming back from a commercial break. The student-made signs, such as "Pullman in '08" and those signs that play around with acronyms, probably took more effort than their research papers due on Tuesday.

It's no fault of the fans; it's normal behavior. Why watch the same athletes you've been watching for the past hour stand in a huddle when you could be trying to get on national television? It's an ordeal that might just end with the victorious call from home when you've just been spotted.

Getting on television is man's one greatest accomplishment that doesn't involve accomplishing anything. Regardless of the show or channel, just a shot to get on that box you watch constantly is enough to do the absurd.

Getting on television is man's one greatest accomplishment that doesn't involve accomplishing anything.

Let's face it, if you didn't try out at the "Real World" auditions last week, you at least know someone who did.

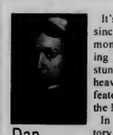
There were even published stories about a certain comics editor who might have potentially had a chance to perhaps get a shot to maybe get on television.

From "The Apprentice" in New York to "I Love New York," and from the "X-Factor" to "Fear Factor," there are countless reality shows on TV today with a camera and Internet access can become the next online celebrity. The "Numa Numa Dance" and "Chocolate Rain" were nothing until they hit the Web and spread like wildfire.

In most cases, talent isn't required to become famous – just the capacity to do something ridiculous or dangerous. In fact, most people would rather watch a video of a guy crushing his nuts trying to grind on a handrail than someone playing a cover song on a guitar.

With the rise of sites such as Break.com, which reward popular videos with a monetary reward, sledding down a mall staircase suddenly sounds like a pretty good idea.

There's nothing wrong with amateur media's growing popularity on the Internet; it's a great thing that allows people to share their talents. Never before have there been so many ways to reach the public eye.



Years ago, the only way for the typical person to get on television was to get noticed by the local news station, which is now occasionally turning to amateur online media to spark interest in viewers.

Nowadays, you'd be hard-pressed to find many college students that regularly watch the news; instead, they've turned to the Internet for their information. That local news, however, is the holy grail of personal exposure. YouTube is great, but getting on the news means you're important.

The most interesting item on the news is anything remotely related to you, or at least in your town. If there's a fire down the street or a drug bust in some nearby house, it's not out of the ordinary to run down there and hunt down some cameras to see if someone wants your opinion on the event you didn't even see unfold. If not, you're watching the six o'clock news. That is, of course, if you remember what channel the news is on.

Nicholas O'Malley is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at nomalley@student.umass.edu.

Where does all the swag go?

Dan Nicastro

It's been two and a half weeks since the Boston sports world momentarily shattered, leaving fans all across New England stunned. The team which was heavily favored to roll to an undefeated season lost to a member of the Manning family.

In anticipation of a Patriots victory, the NFL ordered merchandise celebrating the "World Champion Patriots." Unfortunately, events did not unfold the way everybody planned. This begs the question: what happened to all this stuff?

Apparently all of those shirts, hats and other useless items ended up in the hands of Nicaraguan children. In a very charitable move, the NFL has been sending these unwanted items to Latin America and Africa for years.

This is obviously a good program. What would happen, however, if merchandise was donated for less altruistic reasons? Then I realized nothing speaks of "less altruistic reasons" than a presidential race.

Since this campaign season started last year, candidates have had more time to spend their campaign funds on shirts, hats and bumper stickers in order to promote themselves.

Where does all of this swag (as it is affectionately called) end up once a candidate drops out of the race? I've given this some thought and I may have figured out where candidates dump the physical reminders of their tattered dreams.

While some of the "higher-tier" candidates recently dropped out of the race to more media fanfare, there were some candidates whose campaigns never really had a chance. For example, Duncan Hunter, who started his campaign in 2006, had the noticeable handicap of being Duncan Hunter.

A more public example of a candidate with no chance of winning is Tom Tancredo. After running on a platform of his visceral hatred of illegal immigrants, Tancredo decided to drop out of the race.

Unfortunately for him, I think he was close to convincing would-be illegal immigrants in Mexico and Central America that they should stop crossing the border. That is, until he dropped out of the race and sent his campaign swag to Mexico.

Emboldened by Tancredo's "care" for the underprivileged, foreigners everywhere changed their minds and decided that America really did want immigrants to come and share in the dreams offered by the land of opportunity.

There's also Dennis Kucinich, who managed to get rid of a huge amount of his campaign swag by merely sticking it in his famously deep and magical pockets. Kucinich has fashioned the rest of it into a hat which should (for now) stop the aliens from reading his mind.

I may have figured out where candidates dump the physical reminders of their tattered dreams.

As for Fred Thompson, his swag is still sitting outside his office in boxes collecting dust. Thompson has repeatedly mentioned that he never sought to acquire all this swag, but the people convinced him that it was in the best interest of the nation. He swears he will get rid of it, right after a quick nap.

What about candidates who actually had a valid chance of winning their party's nomination? While always on the outside of the pack, John Edwards certainly had cause to believe he could be elected.

With this in mind, he probably produced several boatloads worth of campaign swag outfitted with 'Edwards '08," or "Two Americas," all of which became useless once he bowed out of the race in January.

Ironically, when getting rid of all of this junk, the message of Edwards' metaphorical "Two Americas" was horribly misconstrued. Instead of shipping his merchandise to lower income families in America, merchandise labeled with this message is now floating along the coasts of the literal, geographical two Americas.

Unfortunately, instead of aiding the poor in our own country, this unwanted merchandise will most likely be used by college students on spring break in Cancun.

The most viable candidate to drop out of the race thus far is Mitt Romney, who conceded the nomination to John McCain earlier this month. After spending millions of dollars of his own money, Romney is not about to send his swag just anywhere because that would aid the jihadists and, by extension, the Democrats.

Because of this, Romney is covering all his bases and sending half of his campaign shirts to South America, half of his hats to Africa, and a third of his bumper stickers to Canada.

As for the rest of his swag, half will be preserved in case Romney sees an opportunity to forcibly seize the 2008 nomination. The other fifty percent of Romney '08 merchandise will have the '08 crossed out with a sharpie and replaced by '12 in order to cut down on campaign costs when Romney runs another failed campaign four years from now.

I, for one, can understand why candidates are so willing to get rid of their swag by any means necessary. I've even managed to get my hands on a box of Bill Richardson's campaign swag.

Call me a conservationist, but I figure it will be cheaper in the future to replace "Richardson" with "Nicastro" then it will be to buy completely new stuff. Or, if my political career stalls, I can finally live the American dream: make money by selling Bill Richardson his own merchandise at an inflated price. I can't think of anything more quintessentially American.

Dan Nicastro is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at dnicastr@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 20, 2008

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Former Idol brings country to Mullins

Duo of Underwood, Turner prepare to play UMass tonight

BY KAITLIN MORRIS
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Music lovers don't always accept country music with open arms. But if you find yourself to be a fan of fun, catchy beats, lyrics with actual meaning and happen to follow pop culture at all, you have definitely heard of Carrie Underwood.

If you are one of those people who shun country music without a second thought, kindly lend your ear to the fourth "American Idol" winner and she will definitely change your opinion.

Tonight, Underwood and country singer Josh Turner will be playing the Mullins Center at 7:30 p.m.

Three seasons ago, Underwood performed the Heart classic, "Alone." After this, American Idol judge Simon Cowell predicted she would not only win the competition, but also sell more records than any other previous Idol winner. With over seventeen major musical awards, including four Grammys, Underwood is well-deserving of your attention.

CARRIE UNDERWOOD
TONIGHT
MULLINS CENTER
7:30 P.M.
$35-$55

Coming three seasons after the first and most popular "American Idol" winner, Kelly Clarkson, Underwood has proved Cowell's prediction correct. Underwood's first album, "Some Hearts," was the fastest-selling debut country album of the SoundScan era, which began in 1991.

"Some Hearts" has reached a septuplet platinum, while Clarkson's albums "Thankful" and "Breakaway" only hit two and five times platinum. Underwood's most recent album, "Carnival Ride," which was released in October 2007, has already reached double platinum.

During Underwood's competition on "American Idol," she was the second Idol to never have been voted in the bottom three during the entire competition.

What sets Underwood apart from most country singers is her lack of stereotypical hokey-ness. Her songs have soul, rhythm and beat that makes her listeners want to get up and dance.

Not many country singles make it to mainstream radio stations; however, not every country singer records crossover hits like "Before He Cheats." The single was such a success that it made RIAA history when it surpassed two million paid downloads and qualified as a double platinum digital single.

Her single "Wasted" is currently nominated by the CMT awards for Video of the Year, while "So Small" has also been nominated for Female Video of the Year.

Turner will open the Mullins Center show. Turner fans might recognize such hits as "Your Man" and "Would You Go With Me," both 2007 Grammy nominees.

Turner's career officially took off in 2001 with his debut performance at the Grand Ole Opry. He performed the song "Long Black Train," which he had written himself. In the middle of the performance, the audience was so impressed they gave him a standing ovation.

In 2004, Turner won two Inspirational Country Music Awards for "Long Black Train." He won for song of the year, as well as songwriter of the year.

"Would You Go With Me" is thought to be Turner's most popular hit. The single reached 48 on Billboards Hot 100 in 2006. Turner's third album, "Everything is Fine," was released in late October 2007. With his deep melodic voice, his southern beats will remind you of a relaxing summer's day.

Tickets are still on sale at the Mullins Center box office and range from $35-$55.

Kaitlin Morris can be reached at kamorris@student.umass.edu.

Country superstar Carrie Underwood is performing at the Mullins Center tonight along with Josh Turner. The former "American Idol" contestant is the most successful artist to come out of the popular television show.

Hiking over Irish countryside

Rain doesn't dampen unique view of Ireland's rolling hills

BY MICHELLE FREDETTE
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

After being accepted to study abroad at University College Cork in Ireland this semester, it seemed like everyone I talked to about it was telling me to join the Mountaineering Club. JoAnn Bernhard, advisor for all University of Massachusetts Ireland programs, recommended it, as did a friend of mine who had been at UCC a few years ago and one of the presenters at my UCC orientation.

The hubhub about this one club out of the many that UCC offers piqued my curiosity. Since I like hiking, I went to the UCC Mountaineering Club's Web site to find out how to sign up.

The first hike on Jan. 13 was to the Knockmealdowns in County Waterford. Apparently, all I had to do to go along was pack a lunch, bring a change of clothes and show up at a specific intersection at 8:30 a.m. with seven Euro to pay for the bus. Sounds easy enough, right?

It turns out signing up is the only easy part. It's called "Mountaineering Club" and not "Casual Walk in the Woods Club" for a reason. You can tell the experienced hikers from the first-timers from their gear.

The people with no idea what to expect wore jeans and sneakers, while the experienced club members had waterproof everything, including what looked like waterproof shin guards and waterproof backpack covers. I was somewhere in the middle, with my waterproof jacket, hiking boots, and cargo pants.

After a two-hour bus ride we arrived at the Knockmealdowns, split into groups and headed straight up the mountain under a light rain and overcast sky. One expects beautiful views and green grass hiking in Ireland, but instead the ground was brown and rocky and the thick mist prevented much sightseeing.

After about six hours of climbing up and over the mountain we finally got back to the bus. As cold and windy as it had been at the peak, the last few miles were on flat ground and offered a few views nice enough to bring me back the following week.

Unfortunately, it poured that week. The club split into two groups, "long" and "short." I was in the short group, which ended up hiking an hour and a half longer than the long group. Mountaineering is a strange combination of adventure, fun and misery. The misery aspect at least offers a feeling of accomplishment, though.

The next hike made all the hardships of the previous two weeks worth it. The hiking was still just as strenuous as ever, with lots of difficult terrain and steep climbs, but the views were spectacular. Other non-Irish hikers kept saying it felt like something out of "Lord of the Rings."

On my first hike I had expected about 20 hikers and was surprised to find that about 55 people had shown up. Some Irish club members explained that numbers typically decline as the season goes on. On the second hike, there were so many people they had to call for a second bus. By the third hike, when we still needed more than one bus to get everyone to the mountain, I commented on my surprise that the numbers hadn't gone down yet.

Of course, I spoke too soon. A forecast of rain kept me home the next Sunday. I missed the bus the Sunday after that, and I opted out of an entire weekend of hiking in County Wicklow this past weekend. It seems people do stop going on the hikes after a few weeks, but I never thought I would be one of them.

After having done three hikes with the UCC Mountaineering Club it makes sense to me why it's so highly recommended. The club offers a chance to see a lot of different areas of Ireland for a low cost and also gives one the opportunity to meet lots of Irish and international students.

Michelle Fredette can be reached at mfredett@student.umass.edu.

The scenic countryside of Ireland is the backdrop for the Mountaineering Club at the University College Cork for students who travel abroad. While the weekly hikes range in difficulty, the view alone is enough to get even the most novice outdoorsman on the trail.

'Futurama' invades with DVD special

The cult classic "Futurama" is getting the movie treatment, in direct-to-DVD form, with "Bender's Big Score."

BY CHAD JEWETT
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

In the spring of 1999 FOX aired the first episode of "Futurama," an animated series created by Matt Groening, co-creator of "The Simpsons." Now, following in the footsteps of "The Simpsons," "Futurama" takes the leap into film, but of the direct-to DVD variety, with "Futurama: Bender's Big Score."

The show tells the story of Philip Fry, voiced by Billy West, a twenty-something slacker who is accidentally frozen while delivering pizza to a cryogenics lab and thawed a thousand years later at the dawn of the 30th century.

Over the course of the show's initial run, Fry grapples with his culture shock while encountering a bevy of aliens, robots and mutants and working for his distant nephew, Hubert Farnsworth's delivery service, Planet Express.

Other major characters include the hilariously humanesque robot, Bender, voiced by John DiMaggio, who has a penchant for drinking and theft, and Fry's one-eyed mutant love interest Leela, voiced by former "Married With Children" star Katey Segal.

The show's satire look at American concepts of the ideal future, technology and progress put it shoulders above more "lowest common denominator" animated series. Its smarts have earned it accolades including an Emmy and a cult following, though it never reached the popularity necessary to sustain

See FUTURAMA on page 6

"FUTURAMA: BENDER'S BIG SCORE"
VOCIES: BILLY WEST AND KATEY SEGAL
4/5

'Step Up' to nothing original

COURTESY TOUCHSTONE PICTURES

The plot of "Step Up 2: The Streets" is a rehash of every teen drama in recent memory. With numerous lame plot twists and outlandish scenarios, the film culminates in a dramatic street danceoff in the rain.

BY PETER RIZZO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

"Step Up 2: The Streets" is proof that without any original thought expended on your behalf, you too can make a $30 million box office hit – although it's a bit harsh to have any expectations when a movie's tagline is "It's not where you're from, it's where you're at."

The cookie-cutter plot is used loosely as a means to lead up to the scenes of extravagant dancing, composed of nothing the average movie-goer is unfamiliar with.

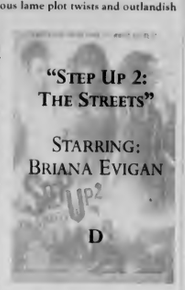
The film follows a talented young female dancer named Andy (Briana Evigan), who leads the double life of a troubled teenager under the care of her deceased mother's best friend by day and break dancing hooligan by night.

Particularly comical is the movie's first scene, in which the film painfully tries to set up this forced mother-daughter relationship. The scene begins when Andy and her notorious dance crew, the 410, decide to stage a highly-choreographed dance routine in a subway car, which soon sets off a police chase.

Upon seeing the highlights of this in the news, her mother figure decides that these are the kind of people her dead friend would not want her daughter associating with. Andy defiantly protests with dialogue that is so banal it is hard to believe someone took the time to write the script. As a result of her teenage angst she is henceforth going to be sent to Texas.

She quickly gets one more shot in perhaps the movie's lamest gimmick. Channing Tatum (Step Up) makes his only appearance in the movie as Tyler Gage. This quickly prompts swooning from the females in the crowd, and it's upon his suggestion that Andy will get a chance to enrol at a prestigious art academy across town and dance.

After passing the audition and winning the heart of local player Chase Collins (Robert Hoffman), Andy quickly runs into a conflict so large it can't be cured with the power of her tears and incessant text messaging. Her dance crew, the infamous 410, decides that if she's going to school and trying to make something out of her otherwise squalid life, there is no way that she can run with them anymore.



These problems can all be solved with the power of dance. As the movie overstays its welcome on the screen, the plot meanders along and the dance moves really come out. The final scene consists of Andy and the eight members of her new school crew shaking their groove things for about five minutes in the rain.

The movie is like watching an hour and a half of music videos, but with a terrible plot line interfering at intervals. Even someone unfamiliar with the intricacies of dancing can admire just how long and complex the dance scenes are.

Newcomer Evigan is able to make you feel for her character no matter how clichéd it actually is. The movie ends with Andy getting everything her heart desires: a new man, new friends and a second chance at school.

Don't worry, that was the end-ing to the movie. However, I'm sure if you actually intend to see this movie you probably don't care about the plot one bit, and are probably angrier than I am that Channing Tatum is hardly in it. If those two lines pertain to you, so does this movie.

Peter Rizzo can be reached at prizzo@student.umass.edu.

Atlas Sound blends styles in new album

BY IAN NELSON
COLLEGIAN STAFF

At this stage of the musical game, it's hard to find a record drenched in waves of sound and hiss which also gives way to fresh, clean moments.

Bradford Cox, of Deerhunter fame, achieves this on his first full-length record under his Atlas Sound moniker. Through its entirety, the album jumps from influence to influence, never quite sticking to one idea. However, the unifying force behind "Let The Blind Lead Those Who Can See But Not Feel" lies in the likeness in feel from one song to another, each and every one eerily distant and hypnotically thick.

Most of the album's tracks exist within a murky dreamworld, slaves to Cox's unconscious wisps of layered vocals and downbeat rhythms. This idea is predominant in songs like "On Guard" and "Winter Vacation," which features an echoed vocal over a sort of house backbone underscoring ambient washes of sound.

These increasingly electronic, robotic moments bring to mind the cold, ambient sounds found on early Aphex Twin recordings. While essentially monotonous, "Winter Vacation" succeeds, embodying a frigid mood often associated with the season.

Another like track, "Scraping Past," is more upbeat, employing an actual bass line to fill out the song. Sonic Youth-like noise spills from the guitar, which pulses in and out of the mix, yet is harnessed by the nearly danceable backbeat.

Other archetypes rest within the record as well, including the strictly ambient and the more pop-leaning. These genres normally do not meld together, but Cox has managed to create simultaneously beautiful and disastrous moods.

Tracks such as "Small Horror" and "Ready Set Glow" are examples of his taking the ambient path. "Small Horror" churns and chimes along after its opening blare of horns, the unintelligible vocals recalling the less structured work of My Bloody Valentine. "Ready Set Glow" adds to the sonic confusion, with opening phrases jumping from speaker to speaker and no vocal to be found. This effect quite correctly mimics the whirring blade of a helicopter, dissolving and resolving over and over again.

The pop elements do not rise to the surface, yet are buried beneath the hiss and haze. The most golden of these moments appears quickly, right at the beginning of the second track, "Recent Bedroom." This pop hook could have been borrowed from a melodic Pavement song, a perfect guitar tone used in the right place, even though the sunny element exists within the cold, hard winter defined by the rest of the album.

Other more pop moments are not as successful, however, leaning toward the monotonous and generic. These songs, namely "River Card," "Bite Marks" and "Ativan," tend to go nowhere. These tracks fail in that they plod along in limbo, neither solid enough to remember nor enveloping enough to feel.

The general alienated feel works in a few ways. The record is not an underground indie-pop showcase, nor does it have an ambient mood throughout. It's a strange departure from the norm, a mixing of sounds, ideas and genres to create something fresh and new.

This is not an artistic statement from some frozen tundra miles away from civilization, but from Atlanta, Georgia. Perhaps this is where the bright elements factor in, injecting the record with sunshine from the nation's Southeast corner.

This quickly balances out with Cox's own alienation, his oft-mentioned possession of the physical deformations associated with the genetic disorder Marfan Syndrome. All is not destruction, however, and this sentiment shines through his music. Atlas Sound has made a balanced record full of interesting choices and layers upon sonic layers to peel through and discover.

Ian Nelson can be reached at inelson@student.umass.edu.

"LET THE BLIND LEAD THOSE WHO CAN SEE BUT NOT FEEL"

ATLAS SOUND

KRANKY RECORDS

3.5/5

Kidd trade finally goes down

Star point guard returns to original team in huge deal

BY JEFF CAPLAN
MCCLATCHY NEWSPAPERS (MCT)

With five words shortly before noon Tuesday, Jason Kidd officially returned to the Dallas Mavericks.

"Deal is done and official," Mavs owner Mark Cuban announced via e-mail.

After a week of torturous twists and turns, the NBA finally put its stamp of approval on the second version of a blockbuster trade that sends the disgruntled Nets point guard to the Mavs for up-and-comer Devin Harris.

It became apparent Monday night that the trade would go through after serious doubt crept in numerous times throughout the saga. Harris is already in New Jersey for his physical.

Joining him in the trade are backup center DeSagana Diop, reserve swingman Trenton Hassell, little-used second-year guard Maurice Ager and the linchpin of the deal, the semi-retired Keith Van Horn, who will pocket $4 million to get the salaries to match.

The Mavs also throw in $3 million and first-round draft picks in 2008 and 2010. To first sign Van Horn before they could trade him, the Mavs had to waive rookie Nick Fazekas on Tuesday.

Along with Kidd, the Mavs receive 6-foot-10 forward Malik Allen, who is not a typical banger, gathering just 2.7 rebounds and 5.4 points in 15.9 minutes a game, plus Antoine Wright, a third-year guard who has been slow to develop as a pro since leaving Texas A&M after his junior season.

The Mavs introduced Kidd, Allen and Wright at an afternoon news conference. Coach Avery Johnson, team president Donnie Nelson and Cuban also answered questions at the news conference.

Kidd, drafted by the Mavericks second overall in 1994 and then traded away by the former ownership in 1996, returns as one of the best assists men ever to play the game.

After taking over as point guard for the Nets in 2001-02, he transformed one of the worst assists teams in the league into one of the best the very next season, leading New Jersey into the NBA Finals.

"Jason Kidd has been the best player to wear a Nets uniform during my current tenure with the Nets," team president Rod Thorn said in a statement released by the team. "He was the toughest competitor with the fiercest will to win and he was the main component in the most successful period in the Nets' NBA history.

"Jason is a first ballot Hall of Famer and the man most responsible for transforming the Nets into a high quality NBA team."

The Mavs already have the high-quality team. They're seeking the final leadership piece to return them to the Final for a second time in three seasons, but this time to win it all, which would be a first for the franchise.

By making the trade and passing on the soon-to-be 25-year-old Harris, the Mavs have put a two-season window on winning a championship. Next season Kidd will earn $21.4 million on the final year of his contract.

He wanted a contract extension from the Nets for another season at around $20 million, but the Nets hedged. Whether Cuban will extend Kidd soon or wait to see the results of this season will be a question the owner will likely have to address.

Kidd, with Dirk Nowitzki and Josh Howard, gives the Mavs a Big Three – and throw in Jason Terry for an impressive core of four – to match Tim Duncan, Manu Ginobili and Tony Parker of the Spurs and Steve Nash, Amare Stoudemire and Shaquille O'Neal with the Suns, while seemingly put the Mavs at the top of the heap along with other contenders, including the strengthened Los Angeles Lakers.

It would seem that Johnson's use of the underdog card throughout this season won't hold water any longer.

"As a player, you just want to come to work and play hard and give your team a chance to win," Kidd said during over the weekend. "Hopefully you put yourself in position to win a championship. There's no guarantee."

The Mavs resume play Wednesday against the Western Conference-leading Hornets in New Orleans. If Kidd can play it will kick things off with Kidd going up against the Hornets' rising point guard, Chris Paul.

An indication of just how tough the West is with most teams having 30 or fewer games to play is that the Mavs (35-18) are two games out of the conference lead, but also two games out of the lottery.

Kidd said he's looking forward to returning to the West, where the style of play is faster and more wide open than in the laboring East.

"I love to run," Kidd said. "So if I've got guys that are going to run with me, that's when it becomes a lot fun."

The Mavs reconvene for practice later this afternoon, their first time back since losing at Phoenix on Thursday and after a bizarre weekend of on-again, off-again trade speculation that left half the team in limbo.

Devean George nixed the original deal when he blocked the trade through the use of a no-trade clause. Then Jerry Stackhouse set off a wild sequence when he blabbed that the Nets planned to waive him and that he would return to the Mavs are a 30-day waiting period.

That raised red flags with the league, which apparently put enough fear into the Mavs that leaving Stackhouse in the package would either kill the deal or the league would prevent Stackhouse from returning to the team.

In the end, while the Mavs gave up plenty, and the two first-round draft picks should be not be taken lightly, they did give up less in actual personnel.

Ager had recently been sent to the NBA Development League and had no place in Johnson's rotation. Hassell, in his first season with the Mavs, was mostly out of the rotation. By not being in the deal, Stackhouse won't have to miss 30 days, crucial in this tight race.

The on-again, off-again trade between the Dallas Mavericks and the New Jersey Nets is officially now on. The Nets traded Jason Kidd and Malik Allen for a package that centers around young point guard Devin Harris.

UMass begins new season with victory lead down by adding a goal from senior attacker Kristine Corkum, but UMass had a number of long possessions, resulting in a goal by senior attacker Melynda Zwick, increasing the lead to five goals.

LACROSSE from page 10

Scanlon added her second goal for the Crusaders with just over three minutes to go, but by that juncture it was too late to mount a comeback.

It was a physical game for both sides, with Holy Cross receiving two yellow cards. Both teams were even on draws, while the Crusaders were able to capitalize on their one free-position shot.

Last year, the Minutewomen lost their season opener to the Crusaders, 7-6, in a road game on Feb. 21.

"They are a well-coached team. We haven't been able to beat them the past two years, and it was a huge team effort for all our girls," Venechanos said.

UMass went 0-for-6 on free-position shots, but dominated on ground balls, winning 18 to the Crusaders' 11.

UMass has 10 starters returning to the team, including its whole starting back four. Headlining the 2007 recruiting class is Lyons, along with freshman midfielders Nazy Kerr and Kelsey Schreiner.

"It's been good having the upperclassmen and freshmen play together," Venechanos said. "We've been throwing people in on the midfield lines, hopefully as the season goes on they [freshmen] will gain enough experience."

The Minutewomen were not included in various annual preseason rankings, something that Venechanos doesn't take personally.

"We're just trying to get competitive every day; we have a very tough competitive non-conference schedule that will hopefully prepare us for the conference games," she said. "We need to take care of business so that we can get into the A-10 tournament; that's the first step."

This Friday, UMass hopes to continue its strong start to the season as it hosts No. 4 Maryland, where Venechanos played and graduated from.

"They are a tremendous team," she said. "We are really excited for this opportunity to compete against them and to hopefully come away with the win."

McCormick, who redshirted last season due to a knee injury, said, "It feels unbelievable to be back.

"We've been working so hard in the offseason," she said. "It was tough last year watching on the sidelines with the knee injury, but coming back, I feel 110 percent."

"I knew we could beat them," Pasquantonio said. "It was just a matter of us finishing our shots and playing good defense. We are just going to play our game, and I believe we can beat anyone."

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch a student umass edu

CHECK OUT
THE DAILY COLLEGIAN
SPORTS BLOG
dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com

New DVD a thank you to fans

FUTURAMA from page 5

its run and was cancelled.

Cartoon Network quickly picked up "Futurama" for syndication, however, re-running the show's four seasons as part of its Adult Swim lineup. The show's popularity skyrocketed and soon the show's producers began work on the first "Futurama" movie.

The result: "Futurama: Bender's Big Score." It picks up where the episodes left off, with Fry trying earnestly to win Leela as they and the rest of the Planet Express crew travel the galaxy. Things go awry when nearly every crew member mistakenly opens junk e-mail sent by a group of parasitic aliens, unwittingly giving the scammers access to company funds.

The aliens, cartoonishly depicted as squishy pink reptilians, stumble upon a Time Travel code tattooed on Fry (see if you can guess where). With the help of Bender, whom the scammers enslave with a virus, they travel through time amassing treasure. At one point, Bender even steals the "Mona Lisa" while Leonardo da Vinci is still painting it.

The scammers eventually succeed in stealing the entire planet, as a series of complicated plans are hatched by the Planet Express crew to stop them. Fry and Leela's romantic troubles exist, as always, as a constant subplot, but are handled deftly and with true heart; one can't help but empathize with Fry as the lovable loser trying to overcome his own ineptitude in order to gain Leela's affection. As in the show's original sitcom format, nearly all conflicts are resolved by the end of the film's 90 minutes.

Like "The Simpsons Movie," also co-written and produced by Groening, "Bender's Big Score" seems to operate largely as a love letter to fans. The plot often seems molded and at times ungracefully shoved in whatever direction is necessary to introduce a beloved character, including a drastic detour to the fortress of an evil robotic Santa Claus, voiced by John Goodman.

Appearances by other past Futurama characters like Al Gore's Head, voiced by the man himself, are introduced with more of an eye on plot, and while the often mind-boggling twists the film takes, constantly bouncing between centuries, can make it a confusing first view, its complexities are far more welcome than the inane cutaway jokes of other animated comedies.

Much of what occurs in the film, especially the myriad copies of Fry and Bender that are created by frequent time travel, makes little sense, but instead of concocting explanations the writers are content to poke fun at their own contrivances and on a larger scale, the contrivances of all science fiction.

That is where "Futurama: Bender's Big Score" works best: as a gentle but hilarious mockery of sci-fi clichés, romantic sitcom melodrama and our notions of the future. And as always, it contains several humorous and thinly veiled jabs at FOX.

The DVD comes with a generous portion of extras, including a lecture on the science of Futurama, and an animated promo for Al Gore's "An Inconvenient Truth." The disc itself is packaged in an environmentally-friendly cardboard sleeve.

The "Futurama" franchise's first film often depends too heavily on fan-favorite material and often proves confusing or downright impenetrable to those unfamiliar with the series. Even if a few viewings are necessary to keep up, the story is still rich with surprisingly multi-faceted characters and clever, meaningful laughs.

Chad Jewett can be reached at cjewett@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY KRANKY RECORDS

Bradford Cox, formally of Deerhunter, is the brainchild behind the latest album release for Atlas Sound.

Allure of nightclubs can be strong for college athletes

BY KENT BABB
MCCLATCHY NEWSPAPERS (MCT)

COLUMBIA, Mo. — The neon lights are off at the Athena Night Club.

Snow falls on the pavement out front, and a few people eat at the restaurants connected to the bar. Athena is closed. Missouri students had to find a new hangout after Jan. 27 because of an incident no one here wants to talk about. The incident left Tigers guard Stefhon Hannah with a career full of question marks and this voicemail greeting on his cell phone:

"For all who don't know," Hannah says quietly, "I got my jaw broke. So I really can't talk that well."

In this downtown building, trouble started in the early-morning hours of Jan. 27.

Hannah allegedly started a fight with Athena employees, and one of the employees broke Hannah's jaw. The injury sent him to the hospital in serious condition. His involvement led to his arrest and an assault charge. Sixteen days after the bar fight, Mizzou coach Mike Anderson kicked Hannah off the team.

Like Columbia, most college towns have a bar district. Many have a place that appears often on the police ledger. Sometimes it is for underage drinking or fights. Other times it is for stabbings or shootings. Last year, police were called to Athena about 150 times, many of them because of gunshots or violence. Athena is one of Columbia's most notorious bars – but one whose temptations college athletes cannot resist.

"It's been on our radar screen for some time now," Columbia police Sgt. Ken Hammond says. "Some bars attract a rougher crowd, and sometimes it gets out of hand. This is a college town."

College coaches have learned to identify dangerous bars but must reinvent plans each year to keep players away from them and enforce curfew rules.

Some coaches forbid players from going to any bar. Others think of-age players should be free to go to bars but must avoid certain ones. But when temptation is too powerful for coaches' warnings, players go there anyway – even at the risk of winding up in hospital beds or handcuffs.

"It's something you have to worry about 24-7," says Rice University basketball coach Willis Wilson, whose worst worries were realized last April when Owls guard Jonathan Bailey was stabbed to death in a bar near the Texas A&M campus.

Hannah is the latest example of why coaches plead with players to avoid bars with violent reputations. Anderson has invited speakers and former players to talk to the Tigers about some nightspots. But he has had little luck in finding a foolproof method to keep players out of certain bars and in by midnight.

For now, Athena is doing the work for Anderson. It is shuttered. An employee says it is closed for remodeling, but there is no sign of construction. After Jan. 27, no one is saying when or if Athena will reopen. It is quiet and dark and empty.

It is time to go find a new place.

It's a Wednesday night in Lawrence, Kan. The place to be is Club Axis, where on this night the drink specials are $2 beers and $1 shots. The dance floor is packed. Burly security guards stand in doorways and watch for stare downs, an early sign of a night going bad. The youngsters on the dance floor pay the guards no attention. The music keeps pumping, and the drinks keep flowing.

Look at them go. Even on a school or work night, Kansas University students tip the drinks and hit the floor, all of them looking for something or someone to ease them through the night. The music is loud, and alcohol numbs the senses. They come for the music and the drinks and the girls.

Something brought former Kansas basketball player J.R. Giddens here three years ago. Back then, in May 2005, the club was known as the Moon Bar. It was popular, but fights broke out often and underage visitors occasionally slipped through the front door.

Giddens came in with a few friends. He was a former McDonald's All-American with NBA talent. He did not mind when other people at bars reminded him of his greatness. In here, he was a celebrity. He rarely passed on an opportunity to spend a few night-time hours at the Moon Bar.

"I was out quite frequently," Giddens says now.

On that Wednesday night in 2005, the music was loud, and girls packed the dance floor. As always, drinks were cheap and available, especially to a 20-year-old star shooting guard. Then tempers flared. Shoves turned into a fight in the Moon Bar parking lot between Giddens and an Olathe man named Jeremiah Creswell. Creswell told investigators at the time that about a dozen men, including Giddens, attacked him with fists, bricks and bottles. Creswell stabbed Giddens in his right leg, severing an artery. Four others were stabbed at the Moon Bar that night.

Giddens needed 23 stitches to close the wound and seven more to repair the artery, but even then he was uncertain he would play again. His teammates abandoned him. Coach Bill Self told Giddens it might be best if the 6-foot-5 sophomore left KU; start over at a place where nobody had heard of the Moon Bar.

Two months after the stabbing, Giddens announced plans to transfer to New Mexico. He has since put the night behind him and says he prefers not to speak about it in detail.

"That night is just a night I try to forget and get past," he says. "I think I will be scarred for life."

After Giddens' stabbing, the Moon Bar became known as the infamous Moon Bar. Police spent more time there. Students didn't want that kind of trouble. Part-owner Sonny Liu closed the Moon Bar five months after the stabbing. He tried to sell it, but it stayed on the market two years before Liu and his partners gave up; they rented it last April. The Moon Bar and its reputation had to die before Club Axis could be born. That death took nearly two years.

"Yeah, it used to be bad," a bartender at Axis says. "J.R. Giddens got stabbed, a couple people got shot. But it's not like that anymore."

Giddens is a senior at New Mexico. His friends still call him and ask him to join them for drinks. Giddens says he has been to a bar only a handful of times since May 2005 and that he has not been inside a bar in more than a year.

"I just came to learn that being in places like that, there's a high probability that something bad will happen," he says. "Now, I just stay in the house and just watch TV because it's a lot safer. It's better that way if you're an athlete.

Athletes have gone to bars for decades, but in recent years the number of nights in college towns ending with violence has been on the rise.

Nolen Ellison is 67 years old. He and his teammates went to bars when he played at KU in the 1960s. The place with the worst reputation was a bar called the Green Door, where drugs and prostitutes were sold on the cheap.

Sure, Ellison went into the Green Door. Twice. He was curious. That's where other young, black students went. The girls there showed skin and did the twist, and it was next to the barbershop in the area of Lawrence that Ellison calls the "hood." He peeked inside a couple of times and decided the Green Door was no place for an athlete with his future in mind.

ALUMNI ASSOCIATION
In recognition of your contributions to campus as a Student Leader
STUDENT ALUMNI ASSOCIATION
The UMass Amherst Alumni Association and the Student Alumni Association invite you to our STUDENT LEADER & VOLUNTEER APPRECIATION RECEPTION
Sunday, February 24, 2008
Join us for a reception prior to the men's basketball game. You'll have the unique opportunity to network with alumni and students from various fields and organizations.
This invitation is exclusively for student leaders. Don't miss out!
11:30 a.m. Pre-Game Reception
Memorial Hall
2:00 p.m. UMass vs. St. Bonaventure
Mullins Center
Tickets and refreshments are complimentary for student leaders.
Register at UMassAlumni.com/students by Thursday, February 21 at 5:00 p.m.
For questions, please contact Wesley J. Dunham '99 at 413.545.3049 or wdunham@admin.umass.edu

Domino's Pizza
AMHERST / HADLEY
413-256-8911
Rt 9 Across From Stop & Shop
Store Hours:
Open 11am-4am Thurs.-Sat.
11am -3am Sun.-Wed
Mt. Holyoke Location: 893-9500
GREAT ONLINE COUPONS
WWW.DOMINOS.COM
FREE BREADSTICKS | LARGE UNLIMITED TOPPING PIZZA $10.99 | ANY LARGE SALAD ANY BREADSTICKS ANY 20 OZ DRINK ONLY $7.99
MONDAY, TUESDAY, WEDNESDAY
BUY ANY MEDIUM OR LARGE PIZZA AT MENU PRICE
GET ANY ORDER OF BREADSTICKS FREE
NO DOUBLE TOPPINGS
NOT GOOD WITH ANY OTHER SPECIALS EXPIRES 3/28/08
1 PERSONAL PAN PIZZA
WITH 2 TOPPINGS +
10 WINGS OR KICKERS
ONLY $9.99
WE ACCEPT OCMP
Find Out More About autismspeaks.org

Submit your beer related questions to arts@dailycollegian.com, so the Beer Dudes can answer your brew-related queries in the new Beer Dude podcast

Attention First-Year Students:
TIME'S ALMOST UP!
Have you completed MyStudentBody? It's easy, interesting ... and required for all first-year students. To avoid a registration hold, you must take and pass the course no later than Monday, February 25th. For instructions, go to:
www.umass.edu/uhs/cadap/msb/
Center for Alcohol and other Drug Abuse Prevention

VOTE!
"YES" TO BE A UMASS AMHERST RA!
VOTE FOR ALL
BALLOT
Gain vital leadership experience for your resume!
Help shape the UMass Amherst community!
Have fun!
Apply to one of the best-paying student jobs on campus!
UMASS AMHERST
For more information and an application, visit www.housing.umass.edu
Minimum Qualifications.
GPA 2.4 or higher
Be free of current University judicial sanction
Have lived in a residence hall for one semester
Undergrad enrolled in degree-granting program
Information Sessions:
Date | Time | Location
Monday 2/11 | 7:00PM | Berkshire Dining Commons
Tuesday 2/12 | 7:00PM | Cashin Main Lounge
Thursday 2/14 | 7:00PM | Campus Center Room 905-09
Tuesday 2/19 | 7:00PM | Campus Center Room 905-09
Wednesday 2/20 | 7:00PM | Brown Main Lounge
Thursday 2/21 | 7:00PM | Baker Conference Room
Monday 2/25 | 7:00PM | McNamara Main Lounge

A-10 Tournament set to begin

Yarworth expects Bonnies to be tough competition for team

By Mike Gillmeister
Collegian Staff

According to Massachusetts men's swimming and diving coach coach Russ Yarworth, "big [St.] Bonaventure" will be the toughest competition for his team at the Atlantic 10 Conference Championship Meet this week. The meet will be held at the Flickinger Aquatics Center in Buffalo, N.Y.

In terms of Saint Bonaventure being rivals of UMass, Yarworth said, "They always have and they always will be."

A win at this year's meet would be the seventh in the past eight years for Yarworth's squad. Last season, the Minutemen beat St. Bonaventure, 733-510.

The Bonnies' record this season in meets against multiple teams hasn't been good. Third place is the highest that SBU has placed in any non-dual meet.

The key events to watch for in this meet are the breaststroke events and individual medley events; both teams have the conference's top swimmers in these events.

Sophomore Mike Berthaume is having a breakout season, emerging as one of the most reliable swimmers in the 200-yard butterfly event. Berthaume regularly finishes in first or second place in the 100 and 200 fly events.

George Washington junior David Zenk is one to watch for this week. At last year's meet, Zenk set records in both the 200 and 400-yard individual medley events.

UMass men's swimming coach Russ Yarworth leads his team into the Atlantic 10 Conference Championship starting today in Buffalo, N.Y.

UMass counters with freshmen Max Butler and Bryan Schmidt. Both swimmers proved themselves early in the season, swimming their fastest times on Nov. 16 at the Terrier Invitational in Boston.

Both swimmers have been a consistent force for the team.

Zenk has the fourth-fastest time in the 200-yard individual medley in the conference, Schmidt is just behind him, with the fifth fastest. Zenk is again fourth in the conference in the 400-yard individual medley but Schmidt leads the conference.

Schmidt has the fastest time of any Minuteman in both of these events.

Another tough opponent for UMass swimmers will be Fordham sophomore Ryan Coombs. Coombs also swims the 200 individual medley, but the butterfly events are his primary swims.

UMass had the upper hand in a dual meet against Fordham earlier this season in the butterfly events. Senior captain Zack Priest's first-place finish led the way as the Minutemen swept the 200-yard butterfly event.

Yarworth's golden boy, Juan Moliere, should be a huge factor at the A-10s this year. It was his defeats at the conference meet last year that caused him to work that much harder this past off-season. Moliere worked specifically on his breathing in the 50 and 100-yard freestyle events. Moliere believes that he would have swept both of his freestyle events if he'd taken one less breath in the 100.

This year, Moliere is working on another team Most Valuable Player season, holding top times in both the 50 and 100 free.

Senior co-captain A.J. Vozella is equally as capable in the 100-yard freestyle and UMass's top swimmer in the 200-yard freestyle. In his last home meet as a Minuteman, Vozella set a new pool record in the 200 free.

Vozella and Moliere will also play key roles for the Maroon and White in the freestyle relay events. Along with junior Nate Bromage and sophomore Trevor Ziegler, Vozella and Moliere make up one of the fastest relay teams in the conference.

Saint Bonaventure will be right on the heels of UMass in the medley relay events, as a squad of Bonnies sits behind a squad of Minutemen in each of the two events.

Now comes the time of year where all swimmers must prove that they belong at the Division-I level. All of Yarworth's swimmers who made the conference meet have proven that they have the ability to compete at this level.

"We've been talking about [the meet]," Yarworth said. "They're well prepared mentally, they're well prepared physically and I think from top to bottom, they'll be ready to go."

On the diving boards, things are progressing nicely for UMass coach Mandy Hixon's squad. Senior co-captain R.J. Rappe is as consistent as any one member of the Minutemen. Rappe is one of the best divers in the conference and has the credentials to back it up. Rappe leads the conference in both the one and three-meter dives after six attempts. The Minnesota native is undefeated at home in both events.

Rappe has been backed up all season by the strong diving of sophomore Byron Johnson and co. The freshmen have been consistent as well. Zach Lichter is just behind Rappe in the conference standings and Adam Duffield is in the same position on the three-meter board.

The Minutemen occupy each of the top-three spots in each diving event.

The four-day meet will start with the one-meter dive and the 200-yard medley event.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu.

Women's squad excited to compete in conference tourney

By Melissa Turtinen
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's swimming and diving teams left Tuesday morning for a seven-hour bus ride to the Atlantic 10 Championships at the Flickinger Aquatics Center in Buffalo, N.Y.

The Minutewomen have looked forward to this meet all season and are very excited for the upcoming four days of action. The tournament will start today and go until Sunday, with preliminaries in the morning and final races later in the day.

Last year they finished in second place behind the long-reigning champions, the Richmond Spiders. This year they hope to continue their successful season with a finish near the top.

Richmond is expected to finish first again for the sixth year in a row. Also expected is a close race with tough competition between UMass, Fordham, Xavier, Duquesne and St. Bonaventure for the next five spots.

Richmond has been successful due to its standout swimmers and high level of performance. Typically, two or three swimmers from Richmond move on to the NCAA tournament.

Coach Bob Newcomb doesn't expect any of his swimmers to qualify for the NCAAs, but he's not putting it past any of them to give it their best shot. Two divers are eligible for the NCAA qualifying meet that will take place in a couple of weeks.

"[The Minutewomen will] go into the meet swimming fast and give it everything they have," Newcomb said.

The divers are expected to continue their very successful season into their final dives at the A-10's. Junior Karen Upperco has had a "spectacular year and she will put her mark back on the conference," according to Newcomb.

Also expected to lead the team are junior Christa Narus in the fly and freestyle, sophomore Elizabeth Walsh in the backstroke and freshman Jessica Starosielec in the breast stroke.

In recent weeks the Minutewomen have been "tapering," according to their coach, meaning they have been resting. The season has been a long and grueling 24 weeks and allowing them to rest, refine and put it all together at the final stages is a big thing for the team.

They have shown all of their excitement through their tradition of "decorating" Newcomb's lawn the night before they leave for the A-10s. Monday night the Minutewomen went to their coach's house and put toilet paper and signs all over his trees and cars. Then they did a team cheer on the front lawn, waking up the neighbors.

"It's something fun they've done where they are all together and having fun doing a team activity, which is very important," Newcomb said. "They've rested and allowed themselves to stay relaxed."

Melissa Turtinen can be reached at mturtine@student.umass.edu

UMass, Duquesne square off

BASKETBALL from page 10

point guard Kristi Little, who is averaging a team-high 17 points. Little fills up the stat sheet as the 5-foot-4 guard is averaging 4.5 rebounds, 5.7 assists and 3.4 steals per game.

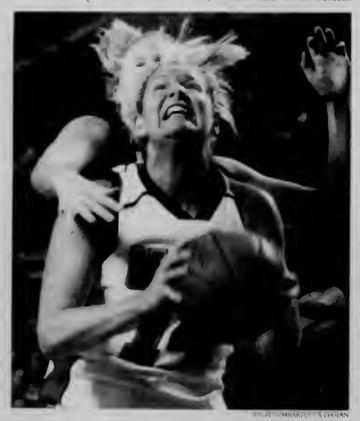
"She's a pistol; she's just a pest on defense and she pushes the ball so we have to get back in transition," Dacko said about Little.

It will be a tough task for junior point guard Sakera Young as she will most likely be the lone point guard for the Minutewomen. In the last three games, sophomore point guard Kim Benton has played a total of 12 minutes as she has been battling injuries all year.

"[Yesterday] was her first day that she was able to practice," Dacko said about Benton. "Hopefully we'll be able to get Sakera some minutes on the bench and we might be able to use Kim's services."

Little is helped by a balanced scoring attack from sophomore guard Keri Pryor and redshirt freshman forward Samantha Pollino. They are both averaging 10 points per game.

"They're big wings and they like to shoot and they like to penetrate so hopefully [freshman forward] Teya [Wright] will be able to play one of them," Dacko said. "Well be more effective if we put some big [players] against them."



The Dukes' strengths could exploit the Minutewomen's weaknesses. Little is aggressive and can get a lot of steals, while the Minutewomen have been prone to throwing the ball away. Throughout the season Dacko has said the team is not a strong rebounding squad, and the Dukes are one of the best offensive rebounding teams in the A-10.

"We're different teams. We want to get the ball inside and they're really an inside-outside team," Dacko said. "We have to limit their second-chance opportunities."

If the season ended today, UMass would be one game ahead of the Dukes for the final spot in the A-10 postseason tournament. Although both teams have three games after tonight's matchup, this game is crucial for any tie-breakers, if necessary.

"They're struggling to get out of the basement and were struggling to stay on top, so it's going to be a good matchup," Dacko said.

Steve Games can be reached at sgames@student.umass.edu

UMass senior Pam Rosanio ranks second on the Minutewomen with 15.9 points per game. She is also third in rebounding and second in assists.

Minutemen still on outside of Top 20

HOCKEY from page 10

was stopped by Saint Lawrence goaltender Kain Tisi in a 3-1 UMass win in this season's second game. The last UMass player to score on a penalty shot was Jeff Turner on Feb. 6, 2000, against UMass Lowell.

Assistant referee or linesman?

In the first period, NU's Randy Guzior sent a UMass player into the boards. Benedetto did not see it and it looked as though it would go uncalled. But an assistant referee, formerly known as a linesman, eventually put his arm up for the delayed penalty call and sent Guzior to the penalty box.

It is rare to see an assistant referee call a penalty, but both Cahoon and NU coach Greg Cronin agreed with the call.

"I thought it was a good call. [Benedetto] called two or three hitting from behinds, not flagrants, but took people off the ice for the boarding call," Cahoon said. "I thought it was there. And I don't know if Timmy was blocked out and couldn't see it, but the linesman that saw it was in front of my bench and he saw it."

The hit came with UMass leading, 1-0, and the Minutemen scored their second goal on the power play they received from the hit. Alex Berry scored his second goal of the night off a feed from junior Chris Davis behind the NU goal to Thiessen's right.

How the experts see it

For the second consecutive week, the Minutemen are outside of the USCHO/CSTC Division I Men's poll. Earlier in the season, Cahoon commented that while his team doesn't focus too heavily on the weekly polls, the 10 at-large bids to the NCAA Tournament are based heavily on how pollsters and the selection committee view different teams.

The Minutemen are the fourth team outside of the Top 20 behind Minnesota, Harvard and Michigan Tech. UMass's three remaining opponents – Maine, Boston University and Merrimack – are unranked, so UMass has to win a majority of its remaining games and get some help from its Hockey East rivals to sneak back into the polls before the regular season ends on March 8.

UMass is 23rd in the PairWise rankings, and with serious competition from teams in the Western Collegiate Hockey Association and the Central Collegiate Hockey Association for those precious at-large berths, the Minutemen do not look likely to receive a bid should they lose in the Hockey East Tournament.

As it currently stands, UMass would take on UNH in the first round of the conference tournament and is seven points from the fourth spot which would assure the Minutemen home ice in the first round. Berry spoke to the importance of home ice after Saturday's win over Northeastern.

"I don't know if it's [Northeastern] specifically," he said when asked about UMass's success at home. "It's all teams. Home ice is a huge advantage. You saw last year with the playoffs. It's just good to play in front of your hometown fans. They bring a lot of energy to the game. When they're coming out and supporting us, we really want to get a win for them."

Both UML and BU have games against other teams in the middle of the pack the rest of the way, so if UMass can put together five or six wins in its remaining eight games, home ice isn't out of the question at all. ... Freshman Marc Concannon scored his first career goal Friday against NU. He was the eighth UMass player to score his first career goal this season ... UMass is 11-2-2 when scoring at least three goals in a game this season ... Berry's pair of goals were his first since Dec. 30 against Colorado College, a span of 11 games.

Joe Meloni can be reached at joe.meloni@gmail.com.

Take Out a classifieds ad

THE DAILY COLLEGIAN
now offers free online classifieds for students at
WWW.UMASSLIST.COM

- More complete, local and relevant category listings than any and all competitor web sites combined
- Users can setup daily e-mail updates for relevant listings. No more searching for apartments, now they come to you.
- Post unlimited online listings
- Little to no spam

By listing on this site you are supporting your local college newspaper
The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

Forward Alex Berry registered two goals in UMass's 3-1 victory over No. 15 Northeastern Saturday at the Mullins Center. The two-goal performance ended an 11-game streak without a goal for the junior.

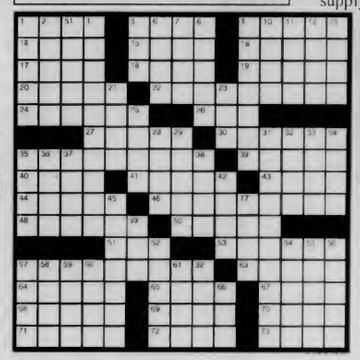
Seven O's
EVERY WEDNESDAY
KARAOKE
2/21/08 THURSDAY
CHARLIE THE DOGG
2/22/08 FRIDAY
RIVERBEND
2/23/08 SATURDAY
MARK SNOW
LOOKING FOR EXPOSURE?
STUDENT BANDS WELCOME TO PLAY AT SEVEN O'S
LOOKING FOR A PLACE TO HAVE A PRIVATE EVENT/PARTY?
CALL 413-530-6996
ROUTE 116, 330 AMHERST RD SUNDERLAND, MA 01375 (413) 665-6700
3 PM TO 1 AM M-F
1 PM TO 1 AM SAT&SUN
NEXT TO CLIFFSIDE APTS.

You've had a few too many numbers. You're shut off.

2		3	8	7	9
				5			9
1			4	2				7
		1				6	8
				1
		2	4			1
4				9	2			6
	9			8
			6	3	1	5		9

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM



ACROSS
1 Units of work
5 Mail unit
9 Bit of bread
14 Small pie
15 Hawaiian dance
16 Peer recognition
17 Eye part
18 Morays
19 Baker or Brookner
20 Distributed the deck
22 All wet
24 Goes in 26 Suitable
27 Repasts
30 Unspairing
35 Diplomatic offices
39 ___ Decimal System
40 Way of walking
41 Fencers' foils
43 Tunney or Tierney
44 Old World snake
46 Splashed and spotted
48 Transferred title
50 Ice fall
51 Evergreen
53 Tent pegs
57 Claim
63 Film critic Roger
64 Syrup source
65 Fed
67 "Doctor Zhivago" heroine
68 Zodiac sign
69 Greek letter
70 Organic compound
71 Down the ___!
72 Gloom's companion
73 Certain

DOWN
1 Musical study
2 Poe bird
3 Extensive
4 Forced a draw
5 Thai girl
6 Color qualities
7 ___ podrida
8 Noodles
9 Mapped
10 Barrett or Jaffe
11 College credit
12 Dust particle
13 Hail or Pitt
21 Very in Versailles
23 High times
25 Unsolicited ms. enclosure
28 Facial feature
29 Oozes
31 Greens
32 Decorative pitcher
33 Actress Russo
34 Checked out
35 Mid expletive
36 Created
37 Tarry
38 Tight closure
42 French holy women
45 Give new vigor to 47 Beret tiller
49 Morse unit
52 Unbending
54 Reeves of "My Own Private Idaho"
55 Goof
56 Past the sell-by date
57 Indian nursemaid
58 Poet Teasdale
59 Narrow point of land
60 AC/DC power
61 "Types" sequel
62 Allied org.
66 '60s war zone

CAPTION CONTEST!

Submit captions and see the picture in color at:
www.dailycollegian.com/caption
The winner gets a lifetime supply of edible underwear.

Submit your comics!
comics@dailycollegian.com
Submit your classifieds!
(413) 545-3500

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"See I'mma tell you, like you told me Cash Rules everything around me."
– Akon

Ecology By Jen Fill

Wondermark By David Malki

Bliss By Harry Bliss

"These quiet walks in the park remind me of what a psycho you were before you started taking the meds."

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Heed the warnings of Admiral Akbar. It's a trap!

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Allow your bread to age and sell it to science labs for a profit. Fortune favors the mold.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Exercise caution when jumping into new situations. You have weak legs and even weaker judgment.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
You were born to be a basket weaver. Your life's work will be used to store picnic-related items.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
You will bring shame to your family and cash flow to your wallet. This is not a worthwhile trade.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
The prices of your vices are taking their toll. Steal your booze, bum a cigarette and abstain from porn.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Nine out of ten Bill Shakespeares agree, you are more lovely and more temperate than a summer's day.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Try listening more. You've got two ears and one mouth for a reason.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
When you catch a caterpillar trying to mate with your eyebrow, take it as a sign that you need a good plucking.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Pop zits, not pills.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Your clothes smell like a wet dog and your hair is following suit. Drop the canine condition and clean up your act.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Stand outside the Mullins Center tonight and kidnap Carrie Underwood. Sell her on eBay.

You've got a MILFF.
(Mother I'd like to Facebook friend)

comics@dailycollegian.com

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

APT. FOR RENT

Hobart condos 3 Bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, phone (internet access), in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for June and September. No FEES. 253-7879 www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

Put Up Posters! Through summer, car, self, commitment needed. Up tp $12/hr w/bonus. 20 hrs between Mon-Wed, excellent communicator, fast-paced, punctual, resume and formal cover letter to postering@artspromo.org Hiring ASAP

EMPLOYMENT

Japanese speakers! Rent us your ears! $12/hr for participating in listening experiments contact phonetics lab. phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu 545-6837

French speakers! Rent us your ears! $12/hr for participating in listening experiments. Contact the phonetics lab. phonetics_lab.linguist.umass.edu 545-6837

Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

EMPLOYMENT

THE GREATEST SUMMER OF YOUR LIFE CAMP PONTIAC Is coming to UMASS! Located in NY State Camp Pontiac, a premier co-ed overnight camp in New York, is looking for fun, enthusiastic and mature individuals who can teach and assist in all areas of athletics, aquatics, the arts, or as a general bunk counselor. Interviews will be held on Thursday, Feb. 21st 9:00AM-11:30AM Campus Center/Student Union Complex-Room 901. Please email: stefanie@camppontiac.com or call Stefanie at 516-626-7668 to set up an interview.

EMPLOYMENT

A GREAT JOB! Spend your summer in a lake-front cabin in Maine. If you're looking to spend this summer outdoors, have fun while you work, and make lifelong friends, then look no further. Camp Mataponi, a residential girls camp in Maine, has female/male summertime openings for Land Sports, Waterfront (small crafts, skiing, life guarding, WSI, boat drivers), Ropes Course, Tennis, H.B. Riding, Arts & Crafts, Theater, Cooking, Gymnastics, Dance, Videography, Group Leaders & more. Top salaries plus room/board & travel provided. Call us today toll free at 1-888-684-2267 or apply online at www.campmataponi.com.

SERVICES

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthright.org.

Concerned About Your Eating?
Do you eat too little? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic, 577-5101

TAPESTRY HEALTH providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling &rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable, Safe. 413-548-9992. 27 Pray St. Amherst. www.tapestryhealth.org

TRAVEL

WHAT ARE YOU DOING FOR SPRING BREAK? Want a cooler Spring Break than the typical Cancun? Travel to Amsterdam, Paris, Italy, or Prague and get a FREE Ipod Shuffle and $100 off! Contact your Contiki Umass Reps at pbordona@student.umass.edu or cromano@student.umass.edu or go to the STA Office for more info! Be a traveler not a tourist!!!

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSWEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 20, 2008 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Typadis, UMass start season strong

Massachusetts senior attack Kathleen Typadis scored one goal yesterday in UMass's 9-5 season-opening victory over Holy Cross at McGuirk Stadium. Typadis had a school-record 52 goals last year.

UMass midfielder Kaytlin McCormick was one of three Minutewomen to score two goals yesterday in the win over Holy Cross. The Maroon and White play again Thursday at home against Maryland.

Three players score pair of goals in season-opening win

BY DAVID BRINCH
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts women's lacrosse team opened its season yesterday afternoon at McGuirk Stadium, defeating in-state rival Holy Cross, 9-5.

Junior midfielder Kaytlin McCormick, junior attacker Julie Pasquantonio and freshman midfielder Jaclyn Lyons led the way for UMass as all three scored two goals. McCormik added two assists and Pasquantonio one. The Minutewomen dominated offensively, recording a 32-12 shot advantage against the Crusaders, while causing 28 turnovers on defense.

"This is a big win for us and a great start to the season," UMass coach Alexis Venechanos said after the game. "Holy Cross is a great team. They won the Patriot League Championship the last two years, and they went to the NCAA Tournament last year."

The Minutewomen notched their first goal of the 2008 season 13 minutes into the game, as Pasquantonio found sophomore midfielder Merritt Cosgrove to put UMass up 1-0.

Two minutes later, senior attacker Kathleen Typadis found the back of the net, giving Massachusetts a two-goal lead. Lyons notched the third goal of the game and her first collegiate goal with a little over 12 minutes to go in the first half.

Holy Cross cut the deficit to one, after freshman midfielder Meg O'Leary scored back-to-back goals for the Crusaders.

With eight seconds to go before halftime, Pasquantonio put the Minutewomen up 4-2 on a pass from McCormik.

UMass	9
HC	5

Pasquantonio picked up where she left off in the first half, scoring her second goal of the game three minutes into the second half.

A minute later, McCormik scored her first goal, giving UMass a 6-2 lead early in the second half.

Senior attacker Cashel Scanlon made it a 6-3 game, scoring her first goal for the Crusaders on a free-position shot.

But the Minutewoman offense was too potent, as McCormick and Lyons both scored goals separated by only nine seconds, putting the Minutewomen up, 8-3, with 13 minutes left in the game.

Holy Cross attempted to cut the

See LACROSSE on page 7

Seniors, returning starters provide depth

BY MELISSA TURTINEN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts women's lacrosse team is all about team chemistry this season, with 17 returning letterwinners from last year.

Of the 17 returning players, 10 of them are starters from last season, led by senior captain and last year's leading scorer Kathleen Typadis. She had 52 goals in 17 games in 2007, setting a new school record.

"[We have] great chemistry. The youth and the experience – I think teams need both," UMass coach Alexis Venechanos said. "The returning players will take the younger players under their wings and the younger players look up to the older players. This will give us the chemistry we need on and off the field."

In their first game of the season yesterday against in-state rival Holy Cross, the returning players led the team to a solid performance and a 9-5 victory where the Minutewomen showed their true offensive strength. Close to 90 percent of their offense has returned for the 2008 season and almost their entire starting defensive squad.

"We are known as the team that works really hard. We like to put a lot of pressure on the ball and we hope to do that this year all over the field," Venechanos said.

In the 2007 season – also Venachanos's first year – the Minutewomen placed fifth in the Atlantic 10 with a 3-4 record; 8-9 overall. This year she is looking to improve their record and win the A-10s.

"Our goals right now are to get better every day. Hopefully towards the end of the season we can control our own destiny and win the Atlantic 10s and hopefully get into the NCAA tournament," Venechanos said. "But right now it is to get better every day. I think we are a lot better than we were this time last year."

In an A-10 preseason poll, UMass was picked to finish second; behind Richmond, the 2007 champion.

Venechanos looks to senior leadership to keep everyone on the same page. A weakness many teams have is that when they get new athletes, they have to improve their team chemistry on and off the field, which is a season-long process.

"[The younger players] bring energy and experience from winning at the high school level," Venechanos said. "We have a warm family environment and they can really be themselves."

Besides chemistry, Venechanos is looking to the depth that the team has this year. Last year the Minutewomen struggled in the second half of the season, but this year there are a lot of people that can play in different positions that will help them later on.

Melissa Turtinen can be reached at mturtine@student.umass.edu.

The Massachusetts women's lacrosse team returns 10 starters this season, including senior defender Julie Papaleo.

Battle for final spot begins

Minutewomen, Dukes hope to sneak into A-10 tourney

BY STEVE GAMES
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The window for an Atlantic 10 tournament berth is dwindling for the Massachusetts women's basketball team. UMass enters tonight's matchup with Duquesne having lost three straight games.

Duquesne (11-14, 2-8 A-10) has not won a game in the month of February and currently rides a five-game losing streak. In those five losses, the Dukes have lost by a slim margin of 4.6 points per game. In three of those games they have lost by less than four points. UMass (11-14, 3-7 A-10) is coming off a 71-65 loss at Saint Louis. Senior forward Pam Rosanio scored 24 points and added five assists, but once again the Minutewomen committed 20-plus turnovers.

"Duquesne likes to do a lot with the ball, a lot of penetration and kick out, and we've got to be able to defend and contain," UMass coach Marnie Dacko said. "It's the same mantra since day one; we need to take care of the basketball."

After traveling to Saint Louis over the weekend, Dacko gave the team a day off on Sunday. They practiced hard on Monday and had a two-hour practice yesterday before finding out that their flight was delayed three hours.

"We leave at 4 [p.m.] then get in at 11," Dacko said. "[The next day] we'll shoot around from 12 p.m. to 1 p.m., and then we play at seven."

The Minutewomen beat the Dukes at home last year using a 40-point second half to propel them to a 70-57 win. In that matchup four Minutewomen scored in double figures. They have not had four players score in double figures since they put up 91 points against URI back on Jan. 12. For the most part this season, Rosanio and senior forward Kate Mills have led the scoring charge, averaging a combined 33.8 points per game.

The Dukes are led by junior

See BASKETBALL on page 8

UMass point guard Kim Benton has played sparingly over the past few games due to injury. Coach Marnie Dacko is hopeful she can play tonight.

Penalty shots spark excitement for UM

BY JOE MELONI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

At six minutes, 21 seconds of the third period in the Massachusetts hockey team's 3-1 win over Northeastern on Saturday night, redshirt senior defenseman Patrick Dineen hooked Northeastern's Tyler McNeely as he skated in alone on UMass goaltender Paul Dainton.

Referees whistled Dineen for the hook, and awarded McNeely with a penalty shot with his team trailing, 3-0. This was the first time Dainton had seen a penalty shot in his young career at UMass. McNeely's shot sailed wide of the goal, preserving UMass's three-goal lead.

UMass Hockey

"It was pretty nervewracking, but I just kept it simple," Dainton said. "I just came out and cut off the angle. [McNeely] shot and missed the net. So hopefully there wasn't too much to shoot at."

McNeely's penalty shot was the first against UMass since Nov. 21, 2003, when Maine's Colin Shields' attempt was stopped by then-UMass goaltender Gabe Winer. The last time an opponent has scored on a penalty shot was on Jan. 17, 2003 when New Hampshire's Preston Callender beat UMass goaltender Michael Waidlich.

NU added a power-play goal at 11:40 of the period and turned up the offensive pressure from then on. The Minutemen succeeded in creating some transition opportunities; the best came with 1:33 left in regulation when junior Cory Quirk broke in on Brad Thiessen. An NU defenseman hauled Quirk down, and, once again, referees awarded a penalty shot – this time to the Minutemen. Thiessen eventually stopped Quirk's attempt.

"I thought the plays were pretty similar," UMass coach Don Cahoon said.

"They were definitely penalties, but if [referee Tim Benedetto] didn't call the first [penalty shot], I don't think he would have called the second."

Before Quirk, sophomore Wil Ortiz was the last UMass player to take a penalty shot. His attempt

See HOCKEY on page 8

INSIDE: HOEDOWN AT THE MULLINS | PAGE 5

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

MOSTLY SUNNY : HI: 28 LO: 18 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 21, 2008

Radiator explodes in Herter

BY DEVON COURTNEY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

With new construction all over the University of Massachusetts campus, maintenance issues in current buildings have recently been a problem.

The explosion of a radiator on the second floor of Herter Hall provoked concern from students, especially those in the room when it happened.

"There was a big old bang; I'm sitting on the left side of the room and I see everyone on the right side stand up," said Devin Ashe, a senior political science and Chinese major.

"The puddle expanded; the liquid was steaming too," Ashe said.

Other students in the room had similar reactions.

"Water just started pouring out of the heater," said senior sports management major June Chen. "It covered about one-third of the room," she said.

The radiator exploded at approximately 2 p.m. on February 12, in the middle of a class in Herter 225. The malfunction and its subsequent flooding forced everyone in the Chinese 433 course outside.

There is concern that the malfunctioning device may not be fixed, or could break down again.

Although the radiator was open two days later, it had not been fixed by then.

"I think it's pretty unacceptable how academic departments on campus are under-funded and unable to secure adequate space when millions are spent on New Dirt projects," Ashe said.

The Physical Plant was contacted on Friday, and they have planned to fix the device before the start of last weekend.

"The University needs to fix old things," Chen added. "What would have happened if it had really burst or blown up?"

Classes scheduled to be in Herter 225 have not yet been relocated.

Devon Courtney can be reached at dcourtne@student.umass.edu.

RSU keeps controversial brochures

Nathan Lane and Matt Morin talk in the Radical Student Union office in the Student Union, where safe sex brochures are displayed in the windows.

Safe sex guides not 'porno'

BY DERRICK PERKINS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A brochure in the front office window of the Radical Student Union depicting two men engaging in sexual relations won't be coming down despite calls from University officials to remove the flyers.

"It's a clear-cut free speech issue," said Alex Peterkin, a member of the registered student organization. "We're not taking the posters down."

According to the University of Massachusetts spokesman Ed Blaguszewski, the administration considered the location of the brochure "inappropriate for placement."

"The University administration has concluded that the brochure in question should no longer be posted in a window of the Student Union, in a public place where members of the publican can come across it in daily business," Blaguszewski said. "Many people may find it offensive."

President of the UMass Republican Club Brad Del lumeri said the decision handed down by the administration was a victory for his organization.

"Any time you get the administration to do something is a victory," he said. "The ability to force the administration to act a certain way is a victory for the club."

Del lumeri called on the RSU to remove the brochure displayed in front of their office last week and organized a campaign against what he considered "pornography."

"Children as young as four run through the [Student Union] escorted by teenagers," Del lumeri said in a statement released earlier this week. "They are now exposed to an obnoxiously grotesque display of public indecency on taxpayer property."

"It's an educational brochure," Peterkin said. "This is nothing but standard material."

Matt Morin, an RSU member, said he had spoken with students across campus about the brochure.

"They all think it's not porno," he said.

Shaun Jamieson – the assigned advisor for both groups in the Office of Student Affairs – said he had been in discussion with the Republican Club and the RSU over the issue and had assisted both groups in his

See RSU on page 2

Senate rejects minutes after new appointment

BY MICHAEL FOX
COLLEGIAN STAFF

For the first time in Student Government Association history, the approval of the previous week's minutes failed during last night's senate meeting, in response to the appointment of student Derek Khanna to the body last week.

According to Shaun Robinson, the Interior Chair of the ALANA Caucus and a senator who voted to reject the minutes yesterday evening and Senator Khanna's appointment at the last senate meeting, the move to invalidate the minutes of the previous meeting opened a debate among senators.

"Although no substantive change was brought forth due to the fact that Senator Khanna is still a voting member of the senate, the night's events did open dialogue between disagreeing members of the senate," Robinson said. "I would like to welcome him to the senate and he can hopefully do some good work."

Khanna expressed displeasure with the events of the evening, but praised SGA leadership.

"It speaks well of the senate, that their leaders decided on a constitutionally based position rather than one based on political beliefs," he said. "Unfortunately, some senators used the bylaws to create a mockery of the system rather than represent their constituents. Perhaps this is why the SGA is known as a do nothing body."

It took three recesses and a thorough review of the SGA bylaws by Speaker Carla Dominguez, Attorney General Sarah Morgan and Chief Justice Jennifer Jean-Baptiste to make a judgment over the night's event. A rejection of the previous week's minutes is a course of action that should only be taken due to a technical error in the record of the minutes; the rejection of the minutes was ruled invalid due to their lack of flaws, according to Dominguez.

Due to the lack of clear direction in the SGA bylaws and the unprecedented nature of the procedure in senate history over a rejection of the minutes, the validity of them is up to the speaker of the senate to decide.

Dominguez decided to let last week's minute's stand.

"The bylaws are a living document and are subject to interpretation. My response is to interpret them to the best of my judgment. I believe that they were interpreted correctly and I am content with the outcome," Dominguez said.

Mike Fox can be reached at mgfox@student.umass.edu

UMass Boston receives large donation for older students

BY ANNA JENNESS
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

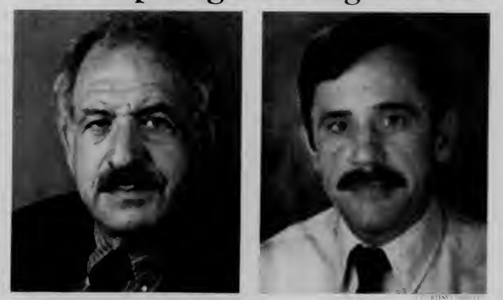
The University of Massachusetts Boston is receiving its biggest private donation, of 2.1 million dollars from the Bernard-Osher foundation.

The donation will fund two preexisting programs: the Osher Lifelong Learning Institute and the Reentry Scholarship Program, both of which help nontraditionally-aged students resume their studies.

According to Nan Cormier, the assistant vice chancellor of the University Advancement Department, the school will first increase the staff of both organizations in order to transform them from relatively small programs to major forces on campus. The school appropriated one million dollars of the donation to each program.

Because of the money, the Osher Lifelong Learning Institute will provide over 70 noncredit courses for people over 50. In addition, the Reentry Scholarship Program can now afford to offer 10 annual scholarships of $5,000 to students between the ages of 25 and 50 seeking degrees. Cormier said the Bernard-Osher foundation was "very pleased with what we were able to do."

The foundation's approval, and investment in UMass Boston serves as recognition that these UMass programs excel in helping nontraditional students take advantage of the college system.



Though both of these programs help older students benefit from a college education, they each cater to alternate paths within the college system. The Osher Lifelong Learning Institute provides noncredit courses for those who wish to continue their education for personal fulfillment, and not necessarily a degree. The Reentry Scholarship Program helps students between 25 and 50 who seek to earn a degree in order to change or advance their careers. Both of these avenues are central to the goals of the Bernard-Osher Foundation.

The California-based Bernard-Osher Foundation decided to focus on lifelong learning programs back in 2001. Since then, they have made donations ranging from $100,000 to $1 million to such programs across the country. Usually, they invest $100,000 at first, and if the subsequent progress of the program impresses them they then invest $1 million in it.

Cormier emphasized the fact that a west coast foundation chose invest so heavily in an east coast school, and said that this "says a lot about what we are trying to accomplish at UMass Boston." Their contribution to UMass is particularly distinguished because according to Cormier, they only make such a large investment "every now and then when they really approve of the work being done."

Anna Jenness can be reached at ajjennes@student.umass.edu.

Two UM professors honored with top engineering awards

Professors Stephen Malkin (left) and Thomas P. Russell (right) of the University of Massachusetts were elected into the National Academy of Engineering.

BY ELYSE WOOD
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Professors Stephen Malkin and Thomas P. Russell of the University of Massachusetts were elected into the National Academy of Engineering this month.

Election into this academy is one of the highest honors for an engineer, awarding those who have made outstanding contributions to engineering research, practice or education, or pioneering new and developing fields of technology.

Stephen Malkin has been a professor of mechanical and industrial engineering at UMass since 1986 and is well-known for his work in grinding and abrasive processes. Malkin is the author of more than 200 technical papers and a book, "Grinding Technology: Theory and Applications of Machining with Abrasives."

"I'm obviously delighted," said Malkin. "It's big for the University to have a member of the National Academy as faculty. It affects how we are ranked."

Malkin is being recognized by the academy for "pioneering research in and the implementation of grinding-system stimulation and optimization." He has also received awards from the American Society of Mechanical Engineers and the Society of Manufacturing Engineers and is a member of both societies. At UMass, he has received the College of Engineering's Outstanding Senior Faculty Award and in 1998, he was appointed as a Distinguished Professor.

"The president, chancellor, vice chancellor, and provost all sent congratulatory e-mails with this one," Malkin said. "That's when you know it's a big deal."

Thomas P. Russell became a faculty member at UMass in 1997 and also the director of the Materials Research Science and Engineer Center in 1997. He helped form MassNanoTech, which is a nanoscil-

See AWARDS on page 2

Cooley Dickinson to invest in Western Mass. communities

BY EDEN UNIVER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Cooley Dickinson Hospital is making a small investment for big changes in the health of local communities, and students could make all the difference.

The Cooley Dickinson Healthy Communities Committee is offering small grants of up to $5,000 for community projects that aim to make the local communities healthier. This may be a unique opportunity for University of Massachusetts students to get involved locally, according to Jeff Harness, director of the Western Massachusetts Center for Healthy Communities, a Holyoke-based program of Cooley Dickinson Hospital.

"We see a lot of collaboration between community projects and college students and we think it's a win/win situation," said Harness. "If UMass students see ways they can get involved, we would encourage that. And, for the projects we fund, we can connect them to interested students."

See COOLEY DICKINSON on page 2

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 88

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Exter
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Tim McCall
COMICS EDITOR Adam Scaggin
EDITORIAL EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Bice
FEATURES EDITOR Dave Humphreys
PHOTO EDITOR Michael Phillis
WEB EDITOR James Hale
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Stysnczak
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Marisa Whooten
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Stephanie McPherson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ryan McAskill
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Skye McIntyre
ASST. EDITORIAL James Matheos
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Garber
ASSISTANT NEWS Michael King
ASSISTANT NEWS Kate Olesin
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Seaburn
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Connors
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Melore
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenwaike
ASSISTANT PHOTO Brian Tedder
ARTS WEB EDITOR Michelle Abbascano
EDITORIAL WEB EDITOR Ted Waknin
NEWS WEB EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS WEB EDITOR Steve Gaines

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN is published Monday through Friday during the academic year except during vacations and exam periods. Subscriptions are available for $150 per semester. Back issues are available for $1 each. Advertising rates are available upon request. Third-class postage paid at Amherst, MA 01004. POSTMASTER: Send address changes to THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN, 113 Campus Center, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, MA 01003. ISSN 1060-1961. ©2008 THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN. All rights reserved. Reproduction without permission is prohibited.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Nicholas Belanger

COPY EDITOR
Amber Vaillancourt

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

Safe sex manuals cause campus stir capacity.

RSU from page1

"I think that there are definite free speech issues with the flyer, but I think that there are concerns about whether or not it's appropriate," he said. "There's also good arguments that I've heard on both sides for keeping it up and taking it down and I just want to help both groups express themselves in the marketplace of ideas."

Jamieson helped provide the logistics for the Republican Club "Rally for Public Decency" in front of the Student Union today at noon.

According to DeFlumeri, the rally came as the result phone calls he had fielded in regards to the brochure as president of the Republican Club.

"We have received over 35 phone calls from upset students, staff and alumni asking that we do something about this," he said. "Pornography should not be on display in state-owned buildings."

DeFlumeri said he supported the administrations decision to remove the flyers and expected the RSU to have the brochures down by Friday at the latest.

"[The brochures] are offensive in our view," he said. "We will pursue action legally and politically to pull these posters down. They bring disgrace to this campus."

Derrick Perkins can be reached at dperkins@dailycollegian.com

NAE honors UM engineering faculty

AWARDS from page1

ence and nanotechnology initiative He is the author of over 300 publications; his work has been published in Macromolecules, Nature, Science and Physical Review Letters. He is also the associate editor of "Macromolecules," a journal focusing on the fundamentals of polymer science.

Russell has also received the Dutch Polymer Award from the Netherlands, the Cooperative Research Award of the American Chemical Society and the High Polymers Prize by the American Physical Society. Russell was appointed as a Distinguished Professor on campus in 2004 as well as the Conte Distinguished Professor in 2006. He is being elected into the NAE for his "contributions to the processing of thin-block copolymer films to achieve well-organized nanostructures," which has led to faster and more energy efficient chips for microelectronic devices.

"Being elected to the NAE is a recognition that goes beyond the bounds of your specific discipline and is a recognition from the general scientific community," said Russell.

There are six members of UMass faculty, including Malkin and Russell, who are currently members or emeritus members of the NAE.

The NAE had 600 people nominated this year and that number was then whittled down to 65 elected members. Only 40 of those are university recipients and eight new members are from Massachusetts. The academy now has 2,227 members as well as 194 foreign associates.

The NAE was founded in 1964 and is a private, non-profit institution which is a part of the National Academies including the National Academy of Sciences, the Institute of Medicine, and the National Research Council. The NAE conducts independent studies on important topics in engineering and technology as well as advising the federal government.

An induction ceremony will take place for the new members in Washington, DC this October.

Elyse Wood can be reached at ewood@student.umass.edu

Local hospital gives back to local communities by request

COOLEY DICKINSON from page1

According to Kyle Bernier, a UMass sophomore, because the local community is very much a college community, helping out should relate to college students.

"Because this is a college campus, giving out some sort of STD testing could help by making sure that the community is safe," said Bernier.

One may wonder what constitutes as a community project focused on making the community healthier.

According to Harness, "These grants are unique in that we are defining health broadly, and we are intentionally leaving plenty of room for community project to define for themselves how they want to approach the opportunity."

However, Harness feels that since health in itself is a difficult topic to pin down to just one definition, the grants are very open to interpretation.

"We decided to not over analyze what it means to be healthy," he said. "We think that everyone can come up with their own definition of what it means to be healthy. We do know that health is more than just being free of disease and illness. In addition to being physical healthy – this is one common way to think of health – one can also be healthy mentally, spiritually and socially."

Bernier thought a good idea for a grant could be to start up an internship program at Cooley Dickinson Hospital.

"Students could follow a doctor around to let them know what being a doctor is like," said Bernier. "That could help people decide if they would like to go into the medical field."

UMass student Sonia Righter, thought that helping a younger generation would be a beneficial way to help the health of local communities.

"I think that it is important for people in college to have a good influence on younger kids," said Righter.

Ideas are readily available, but when faced with the issue of community health, many students jump to the suggestion of helping the local homeless community.

UMass sophomore Mari Nazzaro has worked at the Amherst Survival Center and knows first hand of the issues that face the homeless.

"There is a really big [homeless] community locally, so I think that's an area around here that could use a lot of focus," said Nazzaro.

Bernier agrees that helping the health of the community means helping the homeless.

"Walking through town you see a lot of homeless people," said Bernier. "Getting food for the homeless could definitely help out the community."

The main goals of the grants are specifically to form a healthy community, but it is also clear that the grants also aim to produce a connected community. Health, according to Harness, actually comes from this connection.

"We know that when people are connected to others in their community, and when they trust each other, make decisions together and work together, health is a naturally occurring by-product," said Harness.

"Even if we don't understand all of the details of how that works, though we do understand some of it, an engaged citizenry is an important part of a healthy community."

Grant applications are currently being accepted through Monday, March 31 and awards will be made in early spring. To submit a proposal, e-mail Jeff_Harness@cooley-dickinson.org, fax (413) 540-0340 or mail to Cooley Dickinson Hospital, ATTN: Healthy Communities Mini-grants, 30 Locust Street, P.O. Box 5001, Northampton, MA 01061-5001.

Eden Univer can be reached at euniver@student.umass.edu

The Daily Collegian has a NEW and IMPROVED Web Site

BEST OF THE WEEK
NEW LOOK
PHOTO SLIDESHOWS
BLOGS
New User Interface
PODCASTS
FORUMS
Expanded Media
INTERACTIVE JOURNALISM
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

"SMASHING THE BEAUTY BOX"
with
ROSIE MOLINARY
Author, Hijas Americanas: Beauty, Body Image and Growing Up Latina

An enlightening, empowering presentation about beauty, body image and breaking free!

Wednesday, Feb. 27, 2008
7 – 8:30 p.m.
Malcolm X Cultural Center, Berkshire DC
FREE ADMISSION

SPONSORED BY:
Bilingual Collegiate Program
Everywoman's Center
Counseling Services
Josephine White Eagle Cultural Center
Malcolm X Cultural Center
University Health Services – Health Education
Women of Color Leadership Network
UMASS AMHERST

SKYPLEX
18 Plus College Night
Thursdays
The #1 Place to Party!
3 Different Rooms/3 DJ's spinning the best In Top 40, Dance, House and Select Mashup

THE ULTIMATE HOT BODY CONTEST
$100 Best Male $100 Best Female

The Hottest 19 Plus SATURDAY NIGHT Dance Party

NOW HIRING!
Bartenders
Cashiers
Security Staff
Barback
Waitstaff

SkyPlex 10 Stearns Sq. Downtown Springfield 413.827.9000 www.SkyPlex.us

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
EDITORIAL OPINION
THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 21, 2008
"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
- Sir Salman Rushdie
EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

FB: friend or foe?

Matthew R. Janko

Facebook is an online social networking utility that allows users to share personal profiles with pictures, text and lots of personal information.

Despite the fact that this pandemic phenomenon is so popular that it now doubles as a verb, a recent upsurge in interest is not all positive. Despite FB's presidential debate sponsorship and new alliance with Apple, its spot atop the American popularity charts has been brought into question by recent news.

Via FB, most of us voluntarily make the following information accessible online: Our favorite media, addresses, birthdays, contact info, our sexual orientation, jobs, daily schedules, pictures and familial and social relationships are all available in the public domain. But most of us are not aware that FB does not and cannot legally reserve our lifelines solely for "friends."

According to the FB terms of service, by posting content on any part of the Web site users agree to grant FB the irrevocable right to use and distribute the content, and to authorize sublicenses therein.

Here's a "status update": While FB claims to stop short of disclosing identities to third-party marketers, FB is providing information about preferences to marketing agencies. It may not bother you that the advertising group Omnicom can contribute to FB's $100 million annual revenue and know about a bisexual conservative female from a small town in Western Massachusetts whose interests include shopping at the GAP and drinking Starbucks, but that's not the whole of the "honesty box" on "where her info's been."

Consider that users' private information and pictures are liable to be compromised by the Protect America Act or illegal intelligence-gathering performed on Americans by telecommunications firms at the behest of the National Security Agency, as was done for the last few years. Is "wire-tapping" one word or two in "scrabulous?"

This frightening reality surpasses the predictable responses by reputable organizations like the University of Daytona, which warned its student body to leave off FB any evidence that might lead to students being punished exclusively for pictures or information posted. Imagine your questionable spring break bikini photos being scrutinized by not only your "top friends" but also the University Judiciary Committee and the guys in the Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency (DARPA).

At the risk of sounding like an alarmist, I do believe we need to recognize a fundamental difference between posting our most recent escapades for friends and potentially revealing sensitive information to unidentified third parties, including the Orwellian Information Awareness Office of DARPA.

In a nutshell, it's harder to lose Facebook than a DungeonMaster's virginity.

Imagine the perfectly plausible scenario in which you are communicating via FB to a sibling partying in Cancun or a friend studying in Cape Town. Pursuant to the expansion of the Patriot Act-enhanced Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act, your "post" will have been viewed and downloaded than the Paris Hilton sex tape.

Couple these disturbing civil liberty violations with the recent news surrounding FB withdrawal. I'm not describing the theatrical condition of forlornness from Facebook detachment, but instead of the near-impossible act of deleting your account.

In other words, your current gal-pal will have long forgotten about that "naughty poke" to the ex before your information is given up by the FB.

While perusing the site, it did not escape my attention that private information is given out to partners such as Microsoft (which currently owns two percent of FB private stock), or if FB is acquired by another corporation. FB has about 64 million active users, and amazingly the FB group "How to permanently delete your Facebook account" has over 10,000 members.

At present, even if one can manage to permanently delete one's profile, the content of said profile will remain property of FB indefinitely. In a nutshell, it's harder to lose Facebook than a DungeonMaster's virginity.

Additionally, FB purports in its privacy policy to use information collected from other sources, including but not limited to newspapers and online blogs to supplement profiles. This may mean, as in the case of November 2007's "Beacon" application, that a users' friends are notified about online purchases without the users' consent.

Saying one has nothing to hide is not grounds for an unconstitutional intrusion in the form of data mining and surveillance. Pusillanimous pundits may pontificate from paper pulpits, but perhaps purveyors of privacy will pull together and prevent this putrid profiling practice. These services are at once fun and useful, but with our backs up against the 'wall' we had better know who's leering at our online offerings.

Matthew R Janko is a collegiate gadfly and alliteration aficionado. He can be reached at mjanko@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY FACEBOOK.COM

Facebook pictures are in the public domain. That means we can print stuff like this in the paper without fear of legal recourse.

Congress having a field day with MLB, Pats

Nick Milano

Because of the intense coverage of the current primary season, I was beginning to have hope in the United States' democratic system once again.

CNN and the other news networks have been devoting several hours a night to the latest political news. There seems to be widespread acceptance of a need for change in the country's partisan political landscape. Both Barack Obama and John McCain represent men who have remarkable popularity in their respective parties.

But, this past week has sent me back to my pre-election season cynicism. The media was captivated for days about Roger Clemens' appearance before the House Committee on Oversight and Government Reform and Senator Arlen Specter's demands that Roger Gooddell talk to him about the New England Patriots' taping scandals. Is there not more important work for the government to be tackling?

Is there not more important work for the government to be tackling?

It should be expected of the Oversight Committee to spend its days self-righteously inserting its head into affairs that should not even appear on their radar. One would be correct to remember the committee's involvement – or rather, its members' overdramatic reaction to and publicizing of – with the horrible Terry Schiavo case. For the Republican members, those of the party supposedly dedicated to small government, to so overextend itself was a waste of the government's time and resources. The same is true of the Roger Clemens saga.

Anabolic steroids and most other performance enhancing drugs are prohibited by federal law and their use by professional athletes is shameful, but is this enough to warrant hours of research and investigation and an overhyped hearing? Professional athletes who perpetrated a fraud on the American public deserve their punishment and the government has an obligation to ensure that this happens. But a four hour hearing that seemed to divide largely along party lines?

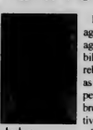
The line of questioning and sharp commentary was quite often laughable. Representative Tom Davis, a Virginia Republican who led the charge on the Schiavo folly, accused Massachusetts Democrat Stephen Lynch of redefining lynching when he posed Clemens a too "technical medical question."

Representative John Mica, a Republican from Florida, spent his five minutes questioning Clemens and his trainer, Brian McNamee, on the various colors of the different substances at issue. In the end, Clemens' reputation was ruined and his hopes of a ticket to the Hall of Fame are surely hindered. McNamee, who was blatantly called a habitual liar by Republican Darrell Issa, suffered much of the same character assassination.

But sitting among such fickle legislators were a few like Lynn Westmoreland, a Georgia Republican who recognized that the committee had no business questioning one man on his "alleged bad behavior," especially when considering the many other Major Leaguers who were ousted by the Mitchell Report.

As Westmoreland said, it is quite obvious that government intervention into the MLB steroid problem produced serious results. Since the infamous hearings in May 2005 during which Mark McGwire all but admitted his own abuse of steroids and Rafeal Palmeiro adamantly denied any use (only to fail a test in August of the same year), baseball has adopted a strong drug testing policy and launched an investigation into the history of performance enhancing drugs in the MLB.

Despite all this, why were these elected officials who just last year awarded themselves another pay increase (since 1998, their median income has grown three times faster than the average median income in the United States), wasting their time debating the personal history of one star pitcher?



There are plenty of issues that the Committee on Oversight and Government Reform should be looking into (not the least of which is the constitutionality of their self-rewarded raises which Jeff Jacoby of the Boston Globe astutely observes).

With such a massive budget, is the federal government carefully procuring goods and services? This, not baseball and steroids, is the Committee's main responsibility. Its jurisdiction may not lend itself to flashy hearings that garner 24 hour news coverage, but will guarantee a more efficient government. MLB responded to the 2005 hearings with the Mitchell Report and harsh drug testing policies.

That was not a waste. Mostly partisan bickering over Roger Clemens is.

Nick Milano writes on Thursdays. He can be reached at nmilano@student.umass.edu

Government programs are less than stimulating

John Glaser

Last week the president and Congress agreed on an "economic stimulus package" to be signed into law. Costing $150 billion, the bill will be used to give tax rebates of $600 to individuals, as well as $1,200 for couples plus an extra $300 per child. Much of the bill gives tax breaks for small businesses and incentives for citizens to invest in business.

The bill was in response to the apparent slowdown in some parts of the economy, what with the languid housing industry and tight credit market resulting from the subprime-mortgage issue. Fears of a recession are enveloping the public. The powers that be tell us that this bill will jumpstart our economy and help avoid a recession. But will it? Or is this just another flawed government initiative?

While nobody hates to receive a check in the mail, how condescending is it that our government has so precisely lived up to it's "nanny state" label that it's now even giving us an allowance?

And anyways, isn't it the creed of Democrats and big government Republicans that the American people aren't smart enough to spend their own money in responsible ways? Isn't the whole idea of welfarism and Social Security that the government knows better than us how to handle the bulk of our incomes? Are they reneging? Doubtful.

They say it will create jobs, but if government planning and temporary rebates is what creates jobs, why not do this once a year? Once a month? Our economy could be booming if only our bureaucratic saviors in government would butt in and create them for us, right? Wrong. As Henry David Thoreau once said, "This government never furthered any enterprise but by the alacrity with which it got out of the way."

Additionally, nobody is asking where this $150 billion dollar tip from the tooth fairy will come from. With the massive deficit that our president has thrust upon us, we don't have this kind of money on hand. To just dole out cash the government either has to raise taxes, which are known to hamper the economy and is thus counter-productive, borrow the money even though we're already in heaps of debt, or have the Federal Reserve print more bills, which causes inflation – making all of us poorer. What a genius bunch of knuckleheads we have in Washington, planning our lives.

These sorts of economically illiterate temporary fixes won't work in the long run. And besides, if rebates are good, why not make them permanent? If more cash in the hands of the people, as opposed to the government, is what stimulates our economy and makes us more prosperous, why not cut taxes (significantly) for good? Apparently it's because the American people would rather continue feeding our monster government.

The truth is that freedom is our savior, not government.

The truth is that these sorts of flawed beliefs about economics, the government and the relationship between the two are much more pervasive than just this one stimulus package would have you believe. Economist Bryan Caplan calls this "Anti-Market Bias" – a tendency to underestimate the economic benefits of the market mechanism. In his book, "The Myth of the Rational Voter: Why Democracies Choose Bad Policies," Caplan says, "The public has severe doubts about how much it can count on profit-seeking business to produce socially beneficial outcomes", but that economists disagree.

Politicians pander to this misinformed public sentiment. Barack Obama condemns profit in his speeches, decrying Exxon's $11 billion income last year. What he's too ignorant to realize is that oil is becoming increasingly inaccessible and demand has shot way up. All this costs money for oil companies; each barrel costs more to produce and more to process as a product. What does he think, oil tycoons wake up greedy and set their own artificially high prices? If that's so, what happens when prices decrease? Were they less greedy that day? The notion that anything but the laws of supply and demand control prices is asinine.

Hillary Clinton has promised to cap interest rates of credit card companies. "I've proposed real consumer protections against abusive interest rates– capping them at no more than 30 percent and working to get them far lower," she said at a speech in Ohio earlier this month.

But as Caplan reminds us, "a government that successfully stamped out interest payments would be no friend to those in need of credit, for the stamp would crush lending as well." Not to mention what a socialist idea it is for the government to be controlling business; setting prices and capping rates.

The unwillingness of the public to understand simple economics is leading us down a long and undesirable road. Freedom from excessive government control of our economy has become a deplorable notion to most people. Capitalism has become a dirty word, while crippling government regulation has become a noble endeavor. The truth is that the liberty to freely trade, conduct business, and participate in an economy not stifled by giant government is exactly what we need to stimulate our economy. The truth is that freedom is our savior, not government.

The only stimulating that this bill will do is to stimulate the questions from politicians and voters alike over whether the government has the right or the ability to plan our economy into better days.

John Glaser is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at jnglaser@student.umass.edu.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Editorial@DailyCollegian.com

VIOLENCE, SCHMIOLENCE

Dear editor:

Violence, schmiolence. Of course there is going to be an occasional stabbing here and there when you live in a compressed community of over 11,000 resident students. Leave it to a few isolated incidents of violence (involving people who, oh, I don't know, carry knives?) to stir up the media and have people hiding indoors and questioning our campus security.

Well, if you haven't noticed, we have an entire police department all to ourselves. The UMPD is dedicated to the safety of the people of our campus community, and not only are they fully trained and equipped officers of the law; they also have the Amherst police department helping them out. That's right, we have TWO, not one, fully functional police departments patrolling our campus and keeping us safe. Much better than the two rent-a-cops my girlfriend's school offers.

I mean, how much safer do you want it to be? Should people be subject to warrantless searches if they want to be on campus property? Maybe you have a curfew in mind? Hell, we might as well all go home and take our classes online.

In such a time of "crisis" I offer you some wise words from Bob Marley, "Don't worry, Be happy."

"Every little thing, is gonna' be alright."

Nathan Davies
UMass student

FREE SPEECH OUGHT TO BE FREE

Dear editor:

Re: "Free speech at a high price," Josh Wilder, Ed/Op, Feb 19, 2008.

Josh Wilder suggests that the Danish newspapers that re-printed images of the Muslim prophet Mohammed in a provocative manner did so out of bitterness. Wilder seems to say that while the Danish papers should be allowed to publish these cartoons, they ought to have reconsidered in light of what could be described in one word as "respect."

Wilder fails to see that by provoking discussion within the Muslim world, the West is asserting the liberal value of free speech. While we cannot do much to change the lack of human rights seen in many of the 57 Muslim countries on Earth, Denmark is leading the way in standing up for Western (read: classical liberal) values.

Does the Muslim community show respect when Iran hangs gay teenagers? Does the Muslim community show respect when Palestinians murder thousands of Israelis in suicide bombings? Did the Muslim community show respect to the 3,000 Americans that were murdered in half an hour by a group of Islamists on 9/11?

In all of these instances, there has been barely a peep from mainstream Muslim organization denouncing these crimes against humanity. The least thing we should be concerned with is whether we Westerners are being polite. To focus on a stupid cartoon is to take precious attention away from the people who need it most – Muslims who are oppressed by Muslim governments and Westerners who are oppressed by Islamists.

Not to mention, that just below Wilder's column appeared a cartoon comparing a Bush administration official to Hitler. Such a comparison is offensive. Yet, you don't see Jews or Americans burning UMass embassies, now do you? Maybe the Muslim world should take note of the prevalence of Western freedom of speech.

Matt Hoffman
UMass student

DISGRACEFUL DOODLE

Dear editor:

Although I do not agree with UMass's decision to give Andrew Card an honorary degree, I found the comic that ran in Tuesday's Collegian incredibly offensive.

Yes, Hitler was Time Magazine's "Man of the Year" in 1938, but there is absolutely no reason to make a joke of giving him an honorary degree. I found this extremely distasteful and am shocked that you chose to run it.

Rebecca Schoen
UMass student

PARKING PARANOIA

Dear editor:

As a poor college student who is struggling just to buy my necessary books for class, I find if more than annoying that our school feels the need to create new ways to drag more and more money out of our pockets.

My newest form of debt is the unnecessary parking violation fees and tow company costs. I think I speak for all students who own a vehicle when I say that this matter is getting completely out of hand.

Last week, I parked my car outside of my building for 15 minutes. I came back just in time to see the tow truck driving away with my little green neon attached to the back. My cries and screams to the tow driver were not heard and I was forced to find a ride to the local tow company.

I pleaded my innocence to the tow truck driver when I stated that my car is allowed to be in front of my building for 15 minutes and it was not there a minute more. The tow truck driver blankly starred at me, shrugged his shoulders, and handed me my list of fees. I had two unpaid parking tickets (one which I had already appealed, and the other was for parking an extra four minutes past the meter time) and on top of that I had to pay an additional $120 for the towing and $50 for every night it was left at the tow company.

Now down $210 total, my car was parked back in the yellow lot and I angrily walked the approximate five minutes back to my dorm. The fact that I paid $265 for a parking spot that is a five minute walk away from my residence is a story in its own, but to then be charged for false violations is a circumstance I cannot let slide.

I don't think the school would go into debt if they became a little more lenient on their parking regulations. As students, we pay enough money to the school each year with tuition, books, meal plans, etc.

We need to stand up for our rights and put a stop to the ever-growing ticket giveaways. So until something is done about UMass's parking situation I suggest you walk to class, read signs carefully, and appeal your tickets.

Katelyn Tamilio
UMass student

MISQUOTE OF THE DAY

Dear editor:

I am writing this letter to voice my complaint concerning the Quote of the Day for February 20, 2008. It is a quote by Akon from the song "Sweetest Girl (Dollar Bill)."

As it reads in the paper, the quote say, "See I'mma' tell you, like you told me, Cash Rules everything around me."

This quote is incorrect.

The song actually says "See I'mma tell you, like Wu told me." "Wu" refers to none other than the infamous Wu-Tang clan and their well-known song "(C.R.E.A.M (Cash rules everything around me)." How a mistake like this happened is beyond me.

Ol' Dirty must be turning over in his grave. Alas, I don't expect naive pop-culture lovers to understand the reference, but its pretty bad to quote a song you don't even know the lyrics to. Wu-tang clan ain't nothing to f— with.

David Geller
UMass student

POINT-COUNTER-POINT

"Freedom rings where opinions clash." - Adlai E. Stevenson

Educational or unacceptable?

THE ISSUE: The Radical Student Union (RSU) has several brochures on safe sex depicting, in detail, two men engaging in intercourse on display in their office window in the Student Union. The Republican Club has asked the Radical Student Union to remove the brochures, claiming that they are offensive to passersby – including alumni and young children. The RSU claims that the opposition to the display is motivated by homophobia, and that they are within the parameters of free speech.

Public education

Matt Morin

The safe sex posters hanging in the Radical Student Union windows appeared at the end of October last semester. It was a rough time for the RSU, as members had been assaulted and demeaned on separate occasions by the Republican Club. In fact, the pamphlets were there while a queer member was called a "faggot" in our own office. The posters were there while Republican Club membership approached the lone student in our office, harassed him and then proceeded to instigate a fight.

As the president of the Republican Club, as well as other members, have demonstrated their homophobia publicly, we must question their condemnation of our pamphlets as pornographic.

It is clear, that if the pamphlets depicted a heterosexual couple, there would not be such a virulent reaction from the group.

It is clear, that if the pamphlets depicted a heterosexual couple, there would not be such a virulent reaction from the group. The main agitator, if not the only one, is the president of the Republican Club, Brad DeFlumeri.

The irony is that he is hardly in the position to denounce anything as obscene or pornographic. The RC recently seceded from the Massachusetts Alliance of College Republicans, amid allegations of sexual harassment. His past Halloween costume, displayed in photographs in the public domain on Facebook, was that of gynecologist, and depicted a comic of a women getting molested on the back of a white lab coat. This sort of misogyny is the sort of thing that needs to be stopped on campus, not educational materials.

But that is not the only noteworthy piece of this whole scandal. The most interesting thing is that now the Chancellor is asking the RSU to take these posters down, not because of public outrage or illegality, but because of the agitation of one individual. Our administration is being frightened by DeFlumeri's threat of publicizing the pamphlets, to such an extent that they are willing to abridge the rights of the students they are charged to serve.

If the Republicans really care about a less obscene campus, they need to commit to drastic internal change.

Matt Morin is a member of the Radical Student Union. This article by no means reflects the attitudes or thoughts of the RSU as a whole on this issue.

Public indecency

Brad DeFlumeri

Early last week the matter of sexually suggestive posters being displayed in the office of the Radical Student Union was brought to my attention by a concerned parent. The parent was the mother of a child, a high school junior in Massachusetts, who had recently toured the school and discovered the poster of two men engaging in oral sex, one man's genitalia clearly exposed.

The woman suggested that the Republican Club was a natural enemy of the public display of explicit material. Following this, numerous complaints were phoned into my office from angry parents and alumni. I immediately asked members of the Radical Student Union to remove the posters and cited the recent complains I had been receiving as evidence to do so.

They quickly declined and, in fact, proceeded to hang up additional copies of the posters in an effort to inflame the situation.

Since that point, I have attempted to bring this matter to the attention of the UMass administration. I met with Associate Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs Byron Bullock last Tuesday and told him that my group and many other UMass community members found the posters offensive, and I asked him to act on the matter.

The posters need to come down, the RSU needs to go back to work planning protests for all our events.

Additionally, I scheduled an appointment with Dean of Students Joanne Vanin for 2 p.m. last Friday. I expressed to Vice Chancellor Bullock that, given the offensive nature of the posters, I would be forced to compel the Administration to act if the posters were not down by the end of the week. I described the means by which I would force the Administration to act – media attention and a public rally.

Despite these warnings, Dean Vanin canceled her meeting with me last week and advised me, through her staff, that the meeting was a "routine appointment" and not of great importance.

In my view, when a paying student at a public university attempts to meet with an administrator because of a potential violation of the school's sexual harassment policy, the meeting is anything but routine and is always important. Dean Vanin apparently sees otherwise.

At the end of last week, I scheduled a public rally on behalf of my club which will occur today at noon. The purpose of this rally is to raise awareness of the posters and to clearly state that we are opposed to the sexual objectification and sexually suggestive pictures which the Radical Student Union so proudly displays on their window.

Their office – 413A Student Union – is the first office that any community member passes on the way to the SGA and is almost directly above the Cape Cod Lounge, where day care sessions are conducted on week nights. The thought of a four or five year old child passing these disturbing images of men's genitalia – which the RSU boldly displays and our administration tacitly endorses – is unacceptable.

Furthermore, UMass's own Sexual Harassment Policy includes as sexual harassment "the display of pictures, posters or cartoons that a reasonable person would find offensive or sexually suggestive."

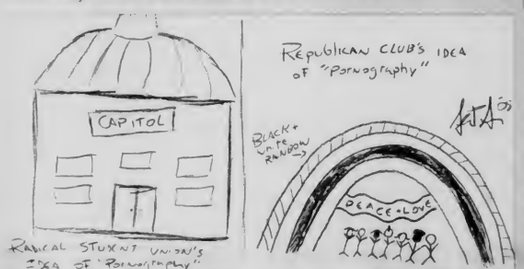
To say that a reasonable person would not find the images on the RSU window to be sexually suggestive is to say that Mike Gargano was the most popular man on this campus; it simply is not so.

The posters are clearly sexually suggestive and more than one UMass employee has already expressed to me that they think the posters should be removed. This is what we expect to effect during today's rally.

We would like to focus attention on the fact that the RSU is hiding behind a mantra of promoting "safe sex awareness" in their effort to advocate the practice of sex between two men.

Let me be clear: The Republican Club does not oppose the presence of the posters because of their homosexual nature – we believe they would be equally offensive, sexually suggestive, and inappropriate for placement in a public building if the sex depicted was between a man and woman.

However, it is critically important to note that the Radical Student Union is a political group, whose main objective is promoting their political ideas. They have about as much business promoting safe gay sex or safe straight sex as I have performing brain surgeries in the Blue Wall.



In short, these posters are unfit for public display and should be placed in Health Services where a customer has to look to find them, away from the view of a school employee passing by them on their way to work; certainly away from the view of schoolchildren running around the Student Union.

We condemn the Radical Student Union for caring so little about public decency and the welfare of children as to put such material on public display disguised as some type of health promotion pamphlet.

The posters need to come down, the RSU needs to go back to work planning protests for all our events and uncooperative administrators need to learn how to take action in favor of public decency without the Republican Club forcing them to do so.

It is unfortunate that the matter has played out as long as it has and taken some of the spotlight off of the questionable activity of the lacrosse team, and for this I apologize. By next week, all of you can stop begrudgingly agreeing with those right-wing extremists in the Republican Club and start hating us again. And if that fails, at least we can enjoy spring break knowing that Mike Gargano is gone.

Brad DeFlumeri is the President of the UMass Republican Club.

Point-Counter-Point is a weekly series in which Collegian columnists and campus community members go head-to-head on controversial issues. Submit possible topics to editorial@dailycollegian.com.

Questions lead to questions

Daniel Mills

So, here we are.

The only problem is, where is here?

Now, imagine you had a little too much to drink – or if you don't drink, perhaps someone stealthily slipped a little something into your more innocuous beverage of choice – and you wake up the next day in some completely foreign environment that is all strange, beautiful and new.

It also hurts. It hurts so much you cry. You have absolutely no recollection of how you got there or what you were doing beforehand. You finally compose yourself, still confused and speechless, and you find other people all around you.

They talk to you at great lengths, being the social creatures that they are, and give you lots of attention, given that you're a new arrival. Some of them even tell you – with the utmost confidence – where you are, how you got there, why you're there, etc. You trust them at first, being impressionable and disoriented, but as time goes on you realize the catch: None of them know anymore than you do.

Sound familiar?

Do me a favor.

Search "Hubble Ultra Deep Field" (HUDF) on the Internet, and you should find one of the most remarkable photographs mankind has ever taken. In this picture, taken of a patch of sky about a tenth of the diameter of the moon, you'll see roughly 10,000 galaxies, some of them dating back to 13 billion years, nearly the age of the universe itself (13.7 +/- .2 billion years old).

Life is just one long, enigmatic hangover that you just kind of get used to experiencing.

While looking at this photograph, consider the fact that it includes only 10,000 galaxies – nothing compared to the hundreds of billions within the observable universe. Also keep in the mind that everything you're seeing – every single galaxy, each with hundreds of billions of stars, an incalculable quantity of planets, and an unfathomable amount of hot, radiant gas – is luminous baryonic matter. matter made up of atoms that emits and reflects light (i.e. everyday matter, such as our own bodies, our planet, and our star).

Baryonic matter, according to latest models, only makes up only about four percent of the entire cosmos - 3.6 percent of which is non-luminous, such as intergalactic gas and black holes. That leaves a measly 0.4 percent left to the matter that composes stars, planets, and living organisms like us.

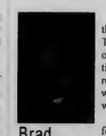
So what makes up the other 96 percent of the universe? Well, some say 23 percent dark matter and 73 percent dark energy. Dark matter, which is supposed to include the majority of the universe's mass, is believed to be non-baryonic matter that exerts a gravitational pull, but does not emit or absorb light, hence us not being able to see it and it being described as "dark."

Dark energy, on the other hand, is an unidentified form of energy that makes up two-thirds of the universe's density, counteracts gravity and causes the universe to expand at an accelerating rate. Some researchers suggest that dark matter and dark energy may be different manifestations of the same thing, just like conventional matter and energy. Others say that dark matter and dark energy are merely illusions, and all we need to do is revise our modern understanding of gravity and other laws. Either way, you won't see dark matter or dark energy in the HUDF, even though they may make up the bulk of the cosmos.

To further complicate the situation, remember that we only perceive the HUDF with visible light through three dimensions, which leaves us with a very incomplete image when you consider the rest of the electromagnetic spectrum and certain variations of superstring and M-theories that postulate the existence of 10 or 11 total dimensions.

There's also the idea that our entire universe is just one of an infinite amount of parallel-universes, all located within the hypothetical "multiverse" or "meta-universe," which encompasses all of reality.

So here you have this already humbling photograph further enhanced by what it doesn't show. What it actually shows is crazy and what it doesn't show is even crazier.



And this is all stuff we're thinking about now – just imagine what our descendents are going to be aware of in the future that we don't have the slightest inkling of today. They'll laugh at our concept of the universe in the way we laugh at the geocentric model of Aristotle and Ptolemy.

To put it further in perspective, consider that it wasn't until 1925 that Edwin Hubble's discovery of galaxies beyond our own was officially announced. That means that less than 100 years ago, people thought that the universe consisted entirely of the Milky Way Galaxy (not quite "billions and billions," right?).

All of these realizations, findings, and ideas feed the notion that existence is overpoweringly mystifying, breathtakingly awesome and anything but mundane. Remember: Life is just one long, enigmatic hangover that you just kind of get used to experiencing. And as for where we are, how we got here, why we're here: Don't ask me – I don't know any more than you do.

Daniel Mills is a UMass student.

Dining with history, part two

Brad Leibowitz

You can invite three guests to dinner. Those guests can be out of any historical time period for any reason you want. Who would you invite and why?

Question: Suppose for a second that everything you and I know, all the information which has led us and the rest of humanity to this given point in time, is absolutely, totally and wholly incorrect. Suppose for a second that everything you or I have ever been taught is based on a lie or a series of lies put forth by the lowest common denominator which spread through the years as a medical pandemic spreads through a civilization. If this is true, to correct all that is, where do you look to? Who would you go to for answers?

You can invite 3 guests to dinner. Who would you invite and why?

The answer: You would look to history. Not history in all of its totality. You would look for the first available source of human knowledge ever written down. You would shift through centuries of time and documentation until you arrived at the start of said documentation and time. You would look at the Sumerian Culture.

If you were to look at human history on as a basic time lapse, it would become evident that we are currently living in the nine-to-11-thousandth years of said history. With this stated, in the piece which preceded this, which was predicated upon the aforementioned hypothetical question, my first choice of diners was Mary Magdalene for a few reasons.

However, I left my main reason out. When one charts Mary Magdalene on a basic time lapse, it could be said that she marks the start of a new world. She delineates a period of time which the world we are currently living in was born out of. With this in mind, I began thinking about my second and third guests for dinner.

My second and third guests jumped to my attention because of their placement in history. If Mary is the middle child of time (so to say), then undoubtedly the people of the ancient Jericho (9,000 B.C.) and Albert Einstein would be the beginning – and latter-most children of time, respectively. Due to this, my second guest would be Albert Einstein.

Taken as a whole, Einstein represents the foremost furthered thought to all of humanity. It could be argued that within the history of humanity no one has contributed more to the future thought of society as Einstein. His equations are still thought about and will, one day be applied to a future human society for the benefit of all man kind. In a sense, with his equations Einstein laid the path and set the groundwork for the future of human thought. He wrote the blueprints for the future of humanity.

Conversely, my other guest would be anyone from the ancient settlement of Jericho. If we assume that everything we have ever been taught is or has a high possibility of being incorrect, it would seem only natural to want to rediscover where all said thought originated. The answer to that are the people of ancient Jericho. However, because we can't pinpoint a single name of significance from this oldest of settlements, my third and final guest I would have for dinner would be an ancient ruler named Anbu.

Anbu was, in short, the first known human ruler of Sumer. He ruled Sumer for 30 years under the Dynasty of Mari. Before him, all the kings of ancient Sumer were noted by Sumerian history to have lived for a few hundred/thousand years (Gods); essentially, he was the first human king of any civilization. With this said, Anbu is the first known child of time. He is the start of it all.

My three guests at dinner would be Anbu, Mary Magdalene and Einstein; three different souls from three entirely different eras of human history. I would have them all for one meal to pose two different questions. Those questions being: While you were alive, did you think humanity was on the brink? That is to say, did you think, in all your knowledge of the world that we would survive longer then your given life span? The second question would be, now that you see that humanity has survived, what are your thoughts on it and do you think we will survive for another nine to 10 thousand years?

I would ask them this because it has been said time and time again, but the more we all know about each other, the greater chances we have of surviving. My main reason for asking Mary Magdalene and the other guests to dinner would be to have a greater understanding of what makes us all human.

In some ways we have evolved – humanity has gone from huts to skyscrapers, from feet to spaceships and from dirt to sky. Yet, for as much as we have changed, we are still the same. I would invite said guests to get a better understanding of what binds us all. I would ask them to dinner to redefine and rediscover what human means.

Brad Leibowitz writes on Thursdays. He can be reached at bleibowi@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 21, 2008 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Carrie Under-par

By Meghan Murphy
Collegian Staff

Former "American Idol" winner Carrie Underwood performed at the Mullins Center last night as part of her first headlining tour. She focused on most of the songs from her newest album, "Carnival Ride," along with some older fan favorites from 2005's "Some Hearts."

The three years since her "American Idol" win have transformed the Oklahoma native into a completely different performer. Her stage presence has evolved, focusing more on the pumping up the crowd than on showcasing her vocal talents.

Underwood started off shakily with the first track off her new CD, "Flat on the Floor." She rose out of the stage from underneath, which made for an exciting entrance, but the vocals through her first few songs were mediocre as she began her set.

Following the first five songs, she changed into a floor-length blue dress and transitioned into Grammy award-winning song "Jesus Take the Wheel." The song was one of her earliest singles and the first of the night from her first album. The crowd instantly recognized the song, and Underwood let them sing the first chorus on their own.

The crowd's reaction to the song gave her an obvious confidence boost and energy for the middle of her performance. She followed "Jesus Take the Wheel" with powerful ballad "I Know You Won't."

This song and the ones that followed finally showcased Underwood's true vocal abilities, creating a different stage presence than earlier in the show. She shifted to a series of more upbeat songs with "I Ain't In Checotah Anymore" and "Crazy Dreams."

Towards the end of the show, Underwood seemed to lose momentum a bit. "All-American Girl" was well-received, but she seemed to have lost some of her energy by the time she got to "So Small," one of her newer songs.

Underwood's encore started with a ballad and moved on to an unlikely choice, a Guns 'N Roses cover. As more of a ballad performer, '80s metal is not where her strengths lie. It wasn't her best song vocally, but gave her band a chance to have fun and do something different onstage. She ended her set with her latest and most successful hit, "Before He Cheats." This was a definite crowd favorite.

Although Underwood's catchier songs carry her albums, her ballads were where her voice really shone in a live performance. She seemed most comfortable with the slower songs, during which she gave herself a chance to belt out the strong notes and showcase her talent.

Josh Turner opened for Underwood with a simple set that featured his deep, crooning voice. "Would You Go With Me" from his 2006 album "Your Man" was especially popular with the female portion of the Mullins Center crowd.

Meghan Murphy can be reached at mmurphy@dailycollegian.com.

Gospel choir to play Amherst

Charity group to perform

By Heather Waxman
Collegian Correspondent

The Harlem Gospel Choir, the most renowned gospel choir in America, is coming to Amherst College's Buckley Recital Hall this Friday, February 22, at 8 p.m.

The fantastic group comprised of singers from the black churches of Harlem and the New York tri-state area. They share messages of love, faith and brotherhood through their performances and try their utmost to give their audiences a better understanding of African American culture through music. The profits of each performance go towards a different children's charity.

The Harlem Gospel Choir strives to urge people to make the world a more peaceful place to live. Every performance possesses the same theme, "bringing people and nations together and giving something back," according to the choir's website.

The Harlem Gospel Choir's founder, Allen Bailey, got the idea to start up the choir during his attendance at a celebration honoring Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. at the Cotton Club in Harlem. Bailey has been involved in the entertainment industry for over 40-years. He was a promotional director for such stars as Prince, Michael Jackson and Lionel Richie and the Commodores.

He has consistently been active in the Harlem community, coordinating the entertainment for the Nelson Mandela celebration held at Yankee Stadium. Bailey's talents extend to charitable organizations as well. He aided in raising funds for the Leukemia Society, Cancer Foundation, and the United Negro College Fund.

He was also a chairman for the Martin Luther King Holiday Campaign, through which the Harlem Gospel Choir was born. He directed the Harlem Jazz Festival, the largest jazz festival in the world. Allen now dedicates the bulk of his time and energy to the Harlem Gospel Choir as their front-man and MC.

Aside from their impressive outlook on life is their resume. They have performed for such great musicians at Nelson Mandela, Pope John Paul II and Sir Paul McCartney. They have also performed alongside Sir Elton John, Whoopi Goldberg, Yolanda Adams, Cyndi Lauper as well as Jessica Simpson at the Walt Disney World Christmas Parade. The choir also made an appearance on "The Colbert Report" with Ambassador Young and most recently took the stage on "Good Morning America" to help collect over 155,000 coats for the homeless.

The choir never seems to take a breather. Every Sunday afternoon, the group gathers at the B.B. King Blues Club in Times Square for a festival of singing, dancing and food. The choir puts on a lively act filled with foot-stomping and hand-clapping. Their energy is contagious, empowering the audience to get up out of their seats and dance the afternoon away.

For some refueling, a home-style "all you can eat" soul food buffet is served and is constantly being refilled to ensure maximum pleasure for everyone. The tickets are a bit pricey, peaking at $37.50, but cover the show, the buffet, and beverages.

Harlem Gospel Choir merchandise, including any one of their three CDs, a stuffed kente elephant, or a multi-color "God Bless the Children" silicone wristband, can be purchased via their website. Every time someone purchases a wristband, the choir donates all of the proceeds to "Feed the Children" in honor of their distinct love for children.

Tickets for the Amherst College show are free and can be picked up at the Keefe Campus Center.

Heather Waxman can be reached at hwaxman@student.umass.edu.

The Harlem Gospel Choir will be bringing their soulful message to Amherst College on Friday night for a free show.

HARLEM GOSPEL CHOIR
AMHERST COLLEGE
2/22
FREE

Quirky tunes of Keller at Calvin

By Matthew Solomon
Collegian Staff

The eclectic and gritty sounds of Keller Williams & the WMD's will be coming into town Friday night to play what should be an energetic and uplifting night of musical delight at the Calvin Theater in Northampton.

Keller, the master of the loop station and the one man show, will be taking a different approach to this performance, utilizing the WMD's to create a fresh new style never before heard by many of Keller's fans. This is an especially exciting event since this newly formed all star-group is currently riding the waves of success in style, seemingly at the pinnacle of their musical careers.

This past summer, they debuted at Bonnaroo and other big-name festivals around the country. They'll more than likely be rocking out hard, breaking it down and then rocking it hard again without warning throughout the evening.

Despite the possibility that there will be an absence of a loop station and Keller's normal array of wacky toys, it's expected that Keller's head will be bobbing from side to side and his hair will be bouncing as usual. Dancing fans will likely be grooving, and it's bound to be an extremely open and friendly atmosphere, a feeling reflected by the vibes of the music.

The WMD's consist of Keith Moseley on bass (The String Cheese Incident), Gibb Droll on guitar (Marc Broussard), and Jeff Sipe on drums (Aquarium Rescue Unit, Trey Anastasio, Susan Tedeschi, Phil Lesh). Keller will be playing guitar and quite possibly an array of other random instruments as he tends to do. He has an incredible knack for creating wild, quirky dream-like music. He has a wide range of original material including songs such as "Butt Ass Nipple," "Spun," "Tribe," and "Bob Rules."

Keller also plays covers with his own breathtakingly original spin on things. He doesn't really have any limits or restrictions when it comes to remakes. He will take on any challenge and he usually stumbles upon magic simply by following his own path and creating a unique style that can't help but make you smile.

A few artists he's been known to cover are The Grateful Dead, Michael Jackson, Green Day, The Allman Brothers Band, Guns & Roses, Bob Marley, Phish, Led Zeppelin and Humphrey's McGee. Intricately re-woven show tunes such as The Pink Panther and Scooby Doo theme songs are also fair game in this wild carnival-like affair.

Expect Keller and the WMD's to play mainly original Keller songs reworked in an original quartet format. His original material is extremely entertaining, lively and uplifting and this time, rather than jamming with himself over layers of his own clever loops, Keller now has friends to share the stage with.

One song of his rightfully named "Port-a-potty" is about his experience falling in love with a dreadlocked angel "in the Port-a-Potty line of some show." He wrote a song for his dogs, Earl and Sheeba and has been known to show footage of them in the background while playing it. One song called "One Hit Wonder" is extremely witty, stating "Oh to be a one hit wonder that would be oh so superb, oh only for 15 minutes or so, in and out nobody gets hurt." After that, he jumps straight into a beautiful and delicately orchestrated guitar solo. Apparently "over play is the only way."

Keller is in fact not only an incredible musician but a poet and comedian as well. His lyrics are always clever and oftentimes outright hilarious. His music was brewed up in a stew with just the right balance of spice and flavor. His intentions of dispersing smiles and causing hips to shake worldwide are a righteous cause and expect the talented WMD's to feed off this amazing energy while at the same time reflecting it back on Keller himself. But in the words of Keller, if you really want to understand his music "just focus on the bass."

Tickets are $25 and the show starts at 8 p.m.

Matthew Solomon can be reached at msolomon@student.umass.edu.

Keller Williams brings energy and a unique feel to both original songs and covers. He will be performing at the Calvin on Friday with the WMD's.

KELLER WILLIAMS & THE WMD'S
CALVIN THEATER
2/22
$25

UM stumbles at Duquesne

RECTL COMBAS/COLLEGIAN

Pam Rosanio scored a game-high 22 points, but it was not enough to push the Minutewomen past the Dukes.

W. HOOPS from page 8

Kristi Little leads her team in scoring, and also struggled in this game. The junior guard finished with 13 points but was 3-of-13 from the field. The majority of her points came from getting to the free throw line (7-of-8).

Little's 13 led the Dukes, and although they only had two players in double figures, their balanced scoring provided enough on the offensive end.

Both teams finished the game with similar stat sheets. The Dukes outrebounded the UMass, 39-37, while getting outrebounded on the offensive glass, 12-11.

The Minutewomen turned the ball over 15 times while Duquesne had 14 turnovers, and both teams assisted on 12 baskets.

UMass jumped out to an 11-4 lead five minutes into the game, but the Dukes outscored the Minutewomen, 27-17, to enter halftime with a three-point lead.

Duquesne built an 11-point lead with just over eight minutes remaining in the game, but UMass cut the deficit to four with 2:33 remaining and would get no closer.

UMass coach Marnie Dacko has said she would like to see more contributions from the bench, and with Mills struggling, the Minutewomen needed more players to score off the bench last night.

Stefanie Gerardot was 1-of-6 from the floor with two points and Cerie Mosgrove had three points on 1-of-3 shooting. The other three members of the bench combined to miss all three of their field goal attempts in limited action.

Mike Connors can be reached at mjconnor@student.umass.edu.

Key games on tap before A-10 play

W LAX from page 8

win streak, but have not played the Terapins since 1990.

The team will play a pair of games against two Ivy League contenders, facing Dartmouth on March 5 before returning to Amherst to challenge Yale on March 12. The team will then head to Evanston, Ill., to take on perennial powerhouse Northwestern on March 16.

"Our team has great energy and has had great practices, we want to play against the best and see where we match up against them," Venechanos said. "They're ranked for a reason, we are hoping to just play our game the way we can play."

Last season, the teams went 3-4 in conference play, winning its final two games, but were unable to reach the A-10 Tournament or the NCAA Tournament. This year's conference play begins March 28 against Richmond, a team that beat the Minutewomen at home last year, 10-4.

Following her debut season last year, Venechanos spent three seasons as an assistant coach and recruiting coordinator from 2004-06 for Northwestern, where she was part of two national championships.

Last season, the Minutewomen were defeated by the No. 2 Wildcats, 18-4, but hope to make the rematch this year competitive.

Venechanos was also an All-American goalie for Maryland, were she was part of two national championship teams.

"I've been fortunate to be part of two great programs, at Northwestern and Maryland," Venechanos said.

"It takes a lot of hard work and a dedicated team and a dedicated coaching staff. And I think right now, we are in the process of building our program up."

Part of this process will be to incorporate some of the younger players into the game. Freshmen midfielders Nazy Kerr, Kelsey Schreiner and Jaclyn Lyons have already seen action in the team's victory against Holy Cross, along with junior attacker Julie Pasquantonio and Kaytlin McCormick. The duo combined for two goals each, with McCormick having two assists and Pasquantonio one. Lyons also scored two goals in her first collegiate game.

"We don't really view them as freshman," Venechanos said. "We don't view our seniors as seniors, but we view each player as players, so it doesn't surprise me that they've been able to step up in game situations like that."

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu

Rams host UMass in crucial rematch

M. HOOPS from page 8

be true to myself. The good thing is he's been playing better defense."

Though URI boasts significant offensive balance with seven players averaging at least seven points per game, Daniels is clearly the team's primary offensive weapon.

The battle in the front court will be one of the game's most important matchups. Senior Dante Milligan played arguably his best game of the season Sunday against Saint Louis with a career-high 21 points. But much of his scoring game in the second half after the Billikens shifted to a guard-dominated lineup.

It remains to be seen if Milligan can have the same production against URI, especially with the A-10's second-leading rebounder in junior Kahiem Seawright. In their first meeting, Milligan played 10 minutes before fouling out while the Seawright-Daniels combination yielded 29 rebounds.

Milligan will need to avoid collecting early fouls, since he will be the Minutemen's best low-post option on both ends of the court. Reserve center Luke Bonner played one minute against Saint Louis and was ineffective in the first meeting with URI (four fouls, two rebounds, zero points).

The Maroon and White's only other viable option at center is junior Tony Gaffney. However, even Gaffney, a natural power forward, is playing out of position at center and will be at a size disadvantage (20-30 pounds) against URI.

As sophomore shooting guard Ricky Harris continues to fight through an offensive slump, forwards Gary Forbes and Etienne Brower will continue to be asked to carry the scoring load if URI controls the front court.

Defensively, Milligan's ability to hold his own in the paint will be crucial. If Forbes and Brower have to cheat toward the low post and leave their men open on the wings, it could mean too many 3-point opportunities for two of the A-10's best shooters.

Senior Parfait Bitee leads the league in 3-point percentage, while junior shooting guard Jimmy Baron ranks among the A-10's best in 3-pointers per game (3.19).

Regardless of what happens with the Minutemen's perimeter defense in tonight's game, Lowe acknowledges that fatigue cannot be an excuse.

"There's no time to get tired, it's crunch time," Lowe said. "Everyone throughout the whole country is tired. If you think about being tired, then you will be tired. You just have to fight through it."

Michael King can be reached at mking@student.umass.edu

Rappe making waves in pool

R.J. Rappe, a kinesiology major, has become an unofficial member of the sports medicine department.

RAPPE from page 8

The original reason that Rappe came up with these protocols was for a final project in his internship. He has an entire list of exercises for each muscle group that is geared towards gentle to fast rehabilitation. Now that his internship is completed, Rappe is an unofficial member of the UMass Sports Medicine Department.

Due to the broad base of athletes that he works with, Rappe needs to be well versed in the type of movements that athletes need to be able to make for a specific sport.

"You want to mould that injury and train it and work it to be able to return to their peak of physical fitness where they will be able to do the dynamic movements that they need to," Rappe says. "You can't just have them run in the pool, or have them try and play a receiver and run a route. They might not be able to make a cut like that. The pressure on their injury could blow that away."

Rappe understands what kinds of dynamic movements that they need to do and he tries to apply that in the water. Another one of the aspects of training that he applies to rehabilitation is plyometrics.

This part of the rehab is important because speed and quickness are two different things. Athletes are expected to make fluid movements to keep with the rapid transition of the game. On many occasions, an athlete coming off of an injury can play the game, but not as quickly as the rest of their teammates.

With Rappe working on plyometrics and other ways to improve the fluidity of their movements, athletes have a much shorter recovery time than usual.

Many injuries occur because the athlete is moving awkwardly at a very high rate of speed and so, Rappe generally works with lower body injuries.

The timetable for which Rappe works with each athlete depends upon the type and extent of each injury. It also depends upon how much rehabilitation that the athlete undergoes before they are referred to physical therapy in the pool. In many cases, the athlete typically works with Rappe for a day or two a week for a few weeks.

Also, it's the decision of the player and team trainer on whether or not the player will need additional rehabilitation after working in the pool with Rappe.

The interns are the students who learn from the trainers. Rappe, in a sense, works alongside the trainers. It's almost as if he's the aquatic division of the sports medicine department.

Although he doesn't take full responsibility for the renewed health of the athletes that he's worked with, Rappe takes joy in knowing that his efforts have helped someone.

"I don't know that it's necessarily me that has [returned them to the field] indefinitely," Rappe said. "I'm glad to hear that they're playing again. I like to think that maybe I helped with that."

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu

Taglit-Birthright Israel provides free, ten-day trips to Israel for Jewish young adults ages 18 to 26. Register now at
WWW.BIRTHRIGHTISRAEL.COM

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
Insurance Replacement Rates
FREE PICK-UP
POTTER'S AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates
Potter's Collision Repair
Collision Repair & Glass Replacement
at North Amherst Motors
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.potterauto.com
(One mile North of UMass - on bus route)

BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL - W. SPFLD
Special Student Rate
Local-National Placement
Includes Certification
1-800-357-3210
BostonBartender.com

Attention First-Year Students:
TIME'S ALMOST UP!
Have you completed MyStudentBody? It's easy, interesting ... and required for all first-year students. To avoid a registration hold, you must take and pass the course no later than Monday, February 25th. For instructions, go to:
www.umass.edu/uhs/cadap/msb/
Center for Alcohol and other Drug Abuse Prevention

Lincoln Real Estate
25 N. Pleasant St • 413-253-7879 • www.amherstlincolnrealty.com
PROVIDING THE BEST OFF CAMPUS LIVING EXPERIENCE
24 HOUR MAINTENANCE
SAFE APARTMENTS
FRIENDLY STAFF
TWO GREAT LOCATIONS:
AMHERST CENTER AND HOBART LANE
WE START SHOWING APARTMENTS FEB. 6TH FROM 11:30AM – 4:30PM M-F

YES COMPUTERS
Apple Specialist
Your local Apple-authorized sales and service center.
Conveniently located in downtown Northampton.
A Big Deal for a Little Laptop
The ASUS Eee PC
Present this coupon for $50 OFF Any Asus Eee PC
expires 3/07/08
$395!
●Ultraportable: 7 inches and 2 pounds.
●Over 40 built-in programs, including a full office suite.
●Rugged, shock-resistant design.
●Simple, intuitive, Linux-based operating system.
●Built-in wireless Internet.
Yes Computers | 38 Pleasant St | 413-585-0007

NOW OPEN at Spare Time Northampton
City Sports Grille
The Area's Premier Sports Bar
⇒ 7' HD Projection Screen TV
⇒ Over 10 Flat Screen TV's
⇒ FREE Peanuts & Wing Specials
⇒ Home of the $10 - 80 oz Beer Tower
⇒ $1.75 PBR Specials & Give-aways
⇒ Watch all the March Madness games
⇒ Free Poker ~ Mondays & Tuesdays at 7pm
⇒ Register to win Celtic tickets
Entertainment Every Friday & Saturday
City Sports Grille
Located at Spare Time Northampton
525 Pleasant St 584-4830

Squares of confusion.

			3			8	1
	9					7
2	8	4				3
8	4		9			5	2
				3
	3	9			5		6	7
		8				6	7	9
		7					3
	6	3			7

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

ACROSS
1 Finger-thrower's call
6 Falls back
10 Vault
14 "West Side Story" heroine
15 Not common
16 Action break
17 Prodded
18 College of presidents?
20 Brain, spinal cord, etc.
22 Worthy of the greatest honor
23 Sound of locked brakes
27 Rapping Doctor
28 Also
29 No-seats-available letters
30 Liverpudlians of notes
35 Roker and Michaels
36 ___ Cruz, CA
38 In that place
39 Marking device
41 Damp
43 Jug handles
44 Last
46 Gathers leaves
48 Acquired
49 Marine facilities
51 Dept. phone number
52 Caps ending?
53 Thirsty
54 Most tangy
56 Obstruction of a blood vessel
61 Paulo
62 Sickened
64 Single
68 Yawn-inducing
69 "Finding ___"
70 Group of trees
71 Missile garage
72 Pollution problem
73 Tunes

DOWN
1 Cassowary cousin
2 Alt. spelling
3 Work unit
4 Sister's daughter
5 Sorrow
6 Afore
7 Redhead Lucille
8 Stomach
9 Out of danger
10 ___ gin fizz
11 Mystique
12 Level
13 Glamour rival
19 Special tidbit
21 Shoo!
23 Shepherds' crooks
24 Highland breed
25 Actress Soto
26 Code of trust
31 Definite article
32 Baseball grouping
33 Flynn and others
34 Last part of a sonnet
37 Aunt in Alcatraz
40 Guy's date
42 Lone Star State
45 Soup scoop
47 "The Blue Danube" composer
50 Benben and Boitano
55 Kemo Sabe's friend
56 Extremes
57 Hawaiian island
58 Male moose
59 Norway's capital
60 Brief note
63 Family pet
65 Paid
66 H.S. subject
67 Lic. to pull teeth

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

amherst cinema
Fri, Feb 22 - Thu, Feb 28
There Will Be Blood 2:30 6:00 9:15
THE DIVING BELL AND THE BUTTERFLY 12:00 9:30
The SAVAGES 1:45 4:15 7:00 9:45
JUNO 12:30 2:45 5:00 7:15 Wed 2/27 12:30 2:45 7:30
AMONGST WHITE CLOUDS Wed 2/27 5:00pm
28 Amity St. (413) 253-2547
Downtown Amherst www.amherstcinema.org

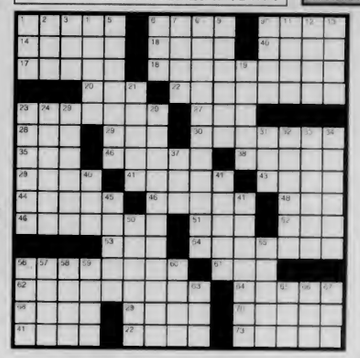
PLEASANT STREET THEATER
Fri, Feb 22 - Thu, Feb 28
persepolis 2:15 4:45 7:15 9:45
PLUS 12:00 pm Sat & Sun & 10:00 am Wed
The Kite Runner 1:15 7:00
PLUS 10:15 am Wed. Feb 27
No Country 4:00 9:30
27 Pleasant St. www.pleasantstheater.org
Downtown Northampton (413) 584-5848

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"I'd like to wear a rainbow every day, and tell the world that everything is OK. But I'll try to carry off a little darkness on my back. Until things are brighter, I'm the Man in Black."

-Johnny Cash

ECOLOGY By Jen Fill



IN THE NOT TO DISTANT FUTURE... By Dan Lucey

LABRAT By Richard Martelly

All praise SP, it is the day of his birth.

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
The increase in the amount of potholes on campus is a direct result of the proliferation of disingenuous treasure maps.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Assign names of colors to your friends and knock off a bank. Shenanigans, amputation and box office success will ensue.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Meat is murder. Delicious, delicious murder.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
The only cup of success that you will drink from is the toilet.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Start showing up to job interviews in overalls. Nothing says "I'm a hard worker" like a one piece denim smock.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
You are not the eggman; you are not the walrus. Coo-coo-ca-SHUT UP!

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Your living space is in violation of three health codes. Clean your room to open up your floor as well as your creativity.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
The flying V is in you (see xiphoid process). Use it to defeat your enemies on and off the ice.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
You are in the midst of a great scandal. The answers you seek regarding a solution can be found in Bill Clinton's autobiography.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Your voice is a combination of Johnny Cash and Darth Vader. You've got more bass than a fish monger.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
There is a lioness in your midst. The question is, can you feel the love tonight?

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Be sagelike and wise as the almighty llama, don't get caught up in immature drama.

TRON HORSE ENTERTAINMENT GROUP PRESENTS
N★E★R★D
SATURDAY, MARCH 1 - 8:30 PM
DOORS OPEN 7:30 PM/BALLROOM
Pearl Street Nightclub
10 PEARL ST • NORTHAMPTON, MA
TO PURCHASE TICKETS OR FOR MORE INFO VISIT OUR WEBSITE OR CALL:
WWW.IHEG.COM • 413-586-8686

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Montreal Weekend
From $99 Complete. Best Hotels. Best Prices. montrealexpress.net 781-979-9001

APT. FOR RENT

Studio, 1,2,3,4 bedrooms available Going Fast, Still guaranteeing for Fall Semester ALL UTILITIES INCLUDED! Call ASAP 413-256-0741

2 Bedroom apartments in Sunderland HEAT, HOT WATER, CABLE and INTERNET INCLUDED! Call ASAP 413-665--3856

Center of Town 1,2,3 bedrooms. NOW SHOWING for June and September. NO FEES. Schedule a showing 253-7879 view apts. at www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

EMPLOYMENT

TEXTBOOK BUYBACK STAFF NEEDED FOR $15/HR
Online textbook company needs 20 college students to staff textbook buyback events at local private high schools in May and June. 10-20 hrs/wk with flex. hrs to fit your sched. Email resume to winnie.imperio@varsity-books.com

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

Put Up Posters! Through summer, car, sell, commitment needed. Up tp $12/hr w/bonus. 20 hrs between Mon-Wed, excellent communicator, fast-paced, punctual, resume and formal cover letter to postering@artspromo.org Hiring ASAP

EMPLOYMENT

French speakers! Rent us your ears! $12/hr for participating in listening experiments. Contact the phonetics lab. phonetics_lab.linguist.umass.edu 545-6837

Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

A GREAT JOB! Spend your summer in a lakefront cabin in Maine. If you're looking to spend this summer outdoors, have fun while you work, and make lifelong friends, then look no further. Camp Mataponi, a residential girls camp in Maine, has female/male summertime openings for Land Sports, Waterfront (small crafts, skiing, life guarding, WSI, boat drivers), Ropes Course, Tennis, H.B. Riding, Arts &

EMPLOYMENT

Crafts, Theater, Cooking, Gymnastics, Dance, Videography, Group Leaders & more. Top salaries plus room/board & travel provided. Call us today toll free at 1-888-684-2267 or apply online at www.campmataponi.com.

SERVICES

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthright.org.

Concerned About Your Eating?
Do you eat too little? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic, 577-5101

SERVICES

TAPESTRY HEALTH providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling &rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable, Safe. 413-548-9992. 27 Pray St. Amherst. www.tapestryhealth.org

TRAVEL

WHAT ARE YOU DOING FOR SPRING BREAK?
Want a cooler Spring Break than the typical Cancun? Travel to Amsterdam, Paris, Italy, or Prague and get a FREE Ipod Shuffle and $100 off! Contact your Contiki Umass Reps at pbordona@student.umass.edu or cromano@student.umass.edu or go to the STA Office for more info! Be a traveler not a tourist!!

TRAVEL

Spring Break 08. Hot Deals. Hot Destinations. Hot Parties. Ask About Group Deals and FREE TRIPS 1-800-426-7710 www.sunsplashtours.com

Montreal Weekend
From $99 Complete. Best Hotels. Best Prices. montrealexpress.net 781-979-9001

Save a Spruce

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 21, 2007 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Rappe helps out in pool

Senior diver works to rehab injured athletes

BY MIKE GILLMEISTER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

R.J. Rappe may actually spend more time in water than he does on dry land.

The senior captain on the Massachusetts diving team trains almost everyday, but his time in the pool is not always spent training.

Rappe works for the school's sports medicine department, helping athletes rehabilitate their injuries enough to get them back to playing shape.

Water training allows the body to perform exercise it normally can't on land during the early stages of an injury. This is where Rappe comes into play.

Rappe takes athletes into the Joseph R. Rogers Jr. pool at Boyden Gym and helps them perform exercises that the body can handle easier when in water. For instance, if a football player injures his leg, it is easier for him to make cuts and exercise that leg with the resistance and cushion that the water provides.

"I just want to provide them with something that's going to be a benefit to their injury and help them out in some way," Rappe says.

Rappe works with athletes on several types of exercises, including range of motion, strength and agility. He also helps them maintain their stamina by doing cardiovascular work, ensuring that they will be in shape enough to practice once their injuries heal.

Rappe started working with the sports medicine department through volunteer work. The department was looking for people who were familiar with the pool and could work with athletes.

A kinesiology major, Rappe was getting valuable work experience and soon earned an internship with the sports medicine department. He started working on more in-depth matters. Through the internship, Rappe developed a protocol for rehabilitating many different injuries.

Rappe's ideas were put forth and worked well. Now, he has a good amount of responsibility with the department. He also has a lot of freedom as well. Now, coaches come to him specifically and tell him what they want done for the athlete, and Rappe comes up with a personalized workout regimen for that athlete.

See RAPPE on page 6

COURTESY OF UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

UMass diver R.J. Rappe is accomplished in the pool, but he also helps other athletes get back on the field by working with the sports medicine department.

Minutewomen fall to Dukes in Pittsburgh

BY MIKE CONNORS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts women's basketball team continued to lose ground in the Atlantic 10 conference last night, dropping a 61-54 road game at Duquesne.

Neither team shot particularly well. UMass (11-15, 3-8 A-10) shot 33.3 percent while the Dukes shot 36 percent. However, Duquesne's (12-14, 3-8 A-10) nine 3-pointers and 12 made free throws allowed them to overcome the poor shooting night and secure the victory.

Duquense	61
UMass	54

UMass will return to the Mullins Center for a 2 p.m. game against Dayton this Saturday.

With the loss, the Minutewomen are now tied for second-to-last in the conference, ahead of winless Fordham. The top 12 teams qualify for the A-10 Tournament, and the Minutewomen are currently in danger of missing the cut.

Pam Rosanio scored a game-high 22 points on 8-of-17 shooting and also recorded eight rebounds in the loss.

The Minutewomen also received a significant contribution from point guard Sakera Young. The junior corralled a career-high 12 rebounds while also scoring nine points and assisting on six baskets.

Senior forward Kate Mills turned in a disappointing performance with 11 points, nearly seven points below her season average. She also had two rebounds; compared to the seven she averaged entering the game.

Similar to Mills, Duquesne's

See W. HOOPS on page 6

Sakera Young had a game-high 12 rebounds in the loss to Duquesne to go with nine points and six assists.

Typadis and Co. take on Terapins

BY DAVID BRINCH
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts women's lacrosse team ended its 2007 season with disappointment, but with UMass coach Alexis Venechanos now in her second year at the helm, expectations for this talented team are growing.

A large freshman class has replenished the roster and given Venechanos hope of returning to the Atlantic 10 Tournament in 2008.

"Having a bigger team, you get worried that it might be harder for a team to gel, but the team has been meshing defensively [and] also on the attacking end," Venechanos said.

UMass returns 10 starters this season, most notably senior captain Kathleen Typadis, who last season was named to the Atlantic 10 All-Conference First Team, leading the team with a school-record 52 goals and 60 total points.

Defensively, all four starting defenders from 2007 have returned, including sophomore Ashley King, junior Jackie Rosenzweig and senior Julie Papaleo.

"They have been doing a good job of mentoring the younger kids and keeping everybody on the same page," Venechanos said. "[They are] definitely helping out our goalies, and making sure they have the confidence they need to mesh on the defensive end."

The Minutewomen had some key losses to the offense, including midfielders Krisiina Twichell and Samantha Sepulveda. Twichell led the team in assists in 2007, while Sepulveda was named to the A-10 All Conference second team last year.

With starting goalkeeper Lauren McCarthy graduating last year, Venechanos has not decided on a permanent replacement in net.

"Whoever has been playing well in practice is probably the one who will be playing," Venechanos said. "Our goalie situation is very competitive and I think it is going to be like that the whole season."

Venechanos began her second year as head coach with a victory, defeating Holy Cross, 9-5, at McGuirk Stadium on Tuesday afternoon, the team's first victory against the Crusaders in two years.

UMass opens the season with a four-game home stand that includes games against Harvard, No. 3 Maryland and No. 18 Boston University.

"This is a huge challenge for our team and for our program," Venechanos said.

Last year, the Minutewomen upset the 16th-ranked Terriers, 13-11, snapping BU's 22-game home

See W. LAX on page 6

KRISTIAN CARDOZA/COLLEGIAN

Kathleen Typadis led the Minutewomen last season with 52 goals, the most in school history.

UMass has rematch with URI

BY MICHAEL KING
COLLEGIAN STAFF

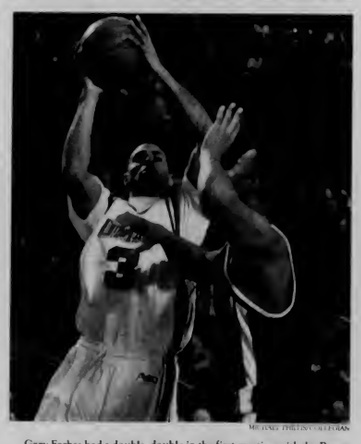
The last time these two teams met, the Massachusetts men's basketball team was coming off its worst offensive output of the season. But the Minutemen upset Rhode Island two weeks ago at the Mullins Center in one of their best all-around efforts.

This time around the matchup follows a win for UMass. But as a part of its inconsistent season, the Minutemen have lost two-of-three since last defeating the Rams. And tonight's game won't be any easier, even though URI has lost two-straight to Atlantic 10 opponents.

A victory would be the Minutemen's first season sweep of Rhode Island since 2005, in a series where the home team has one the past five meetings. The game also carries much weight in the postseason aspirations of both teams.

"They have a group of guys who have played together for a long period of time," UMass coach Travis Ford said. "They are right there to get an at-large bid into the NCAA tournament, so you know they are going to be playing inspired basketball. They are a really good basketball team that plays very, very well at home."

Though his team outlasted the Rams at home, Ford knows that his task will be more difficult this time at the Ryan Center.



"It's a game tape I've watched many times," Ford said. "You try to project things they might do and change," Ford said. "There are certainly some things that we need to do better this time around."

Two weeks ago, senior forward Gary Forbes and the UMass defense held senior forward Will Daniels in check during the first half, as the Rams' leading scorer converted one field goal attempt. However, Daniels torched the Minutemen for 15 points in the second. In fact, the senior scored URI's final nine points and nearly single-handedly mustered a comeback during the final three minutes.

The Minutemen will need a strong 40-minute defensive effort from Forbes – something that Ford has tried to instill in his captain all season.

"It's been a case this year where I didn't think we could win without Gary Forbes on the court," Ford said. "I've allowed him to get away with things that he otherwise wouldn't be able to get away with. At this point in time, he knows that if he doesn't play defense, he's not playing – I have to

See M. HOOPS on page 6

MICHAEL PHILLIPS/COLLEGIAN

Gary Forbes had a double-double in the first meeting with the Rams, scoring 26 points and grabbing 13 rebounds.

UM in Calif. for Palm Springs Classic

BY JEREMY RICE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Two weeks after opening the season in sunny Boca Raton, Fla., the Massachusetts softball team travels to Cathedral City, Calif., Friday for the Palm Springs Classic.

The Minutewomen (2-3) will face more of some of the toughest competition in the nation as they attempt to build their NCAA tournament resume.

UMass will take on No. 5 UCLA and No. 13 Baylor tomorrow before challenging perennial contender and second-ranked Arizona and Fresno State on Saturday. They will finish up the tourney Sunday with a game against Michigan State at noon.

Two weeks ago at the FAU Kick Off Classic, the Minutewomen lost three straight games by a run each before hitting their stride late in the tournament, defeating South Carolina, 2-0, and host school Florida Atlantic, 5-2.

The pitching has been superb thus far. Both junior Brandice Balschmiter and sophomore Bailey Sanders had little trouble keeping the bats at bay.

Balschmiter went 2-1 with a 0.33 ERA. She already has 23 strikeouts and has walked just one batter.

Sanders has been equally successful in the stat lines but has yet to come up with a win. Her 1.17 ERA is a huge jump from her 2.47 mark last year.

However, it was the offense that struggled early on, producing just three runs for the Sanders in her two starts against Maryland and South Florida.

"I felt fabulous about our pitching," UMass coach Elaine Sortino said. "I thought we took decent care of the ball, and I thought that our hitting needed to be more timely. We need a stronger presence at the plate."

As a team, the Minutewomen have just a .214 batting average, but are holding opponents to a .147 clip. The challenge for UMass is putting together a string of hits, rather than scattering them through the game.

Sophomore first baseman Sarah Reeves has been a bright spot offensively, going 7-for-14 at the plate with three doubles. Right fielder Samantha Salato is also starting strong, batting .313 with a double and a triple.

Reeves replaces the graduated Amanda Morin, who was one of the team's most reliable defensive players and their lead-off hitter. Centerfielder Candice Molinari also departed by way of graduation. Junior Davina Hernandez has occupied her spot most of the time so far.

"I think our depth is really strong this year," Sortino said. "We've got multiple players that can fill any position."

The other task for the Minutewomen will be taking better care of the ball. They committed eight errors in their first five games, while their opponents committed just three. Of the eight runs allowed by UMass, four were unearned.

UMass received two votes in the most recent ESPN.com/USA Softball Top 25 poll. With games against three ranked teams and two more who are consistent contenders, the Minutewomen have ample opportunity to break into the Top 25.

The Minutewomen play their first home game of the season March 26 with a double-header against Dartmouth.

Jeremy Rice can be reached at jeremyr@student.umass.edu.

COLLEGIAN
WEEKEND EDITION

FRI H:30 | SAT H:28 | SUN H:33 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 22, 2008

Unrest at the Union

BY NICK BUSH
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The University of Massachusetts Republican Club held a rally on the front steps of the Student Union yesterday, in response to what the club has called a "pornographic" brochure posted outside the Radical Student Union's (RSU) office.

The poster, a cartoon intended to promote safe sex, depicts two men engaging in sexual relations in an illustration.

The speech was interrupted on numerous occasions by counter-demonstrators, who at various points yelled out criticisms in response to the statements by the Republican Club president Brad DeFlumeri.

Of the 75-100 people in attendance, many appeared to react negatively to the Republican Club's speakers.

In his speech, DeFlumeri said he received "numerous complaints" about the "unambiguous sexual activity" in the posters.

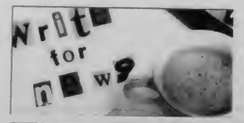
"These disturbing pictures of male genitalia represent sexual harassment," said DeFlumeri. "The Radical Student Union is hiding behind

See REPUBLICAN CLUB RALLY on page 3

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 89

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Exter
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Tim McCall
COMICS EDITOR Adam Szajgin
EDITORIAL EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Rice
FEATURES EDITOR Dave Humphreys
PHOTO EDITOR Michael Phillis
WEB EDITOR James Hale
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Szymczak
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Marsea Whooten
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Stephanie McPherson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ryan McAskill
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Skye McIntyre
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Garber
ASSISTANT NEWS Michael King
ASSISTANT NEWS Kate Olesin
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Seabury
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Connors
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Meloni
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenzweike
ASSISTANT PHOTO Brian Tedder
ARTS WEB EDITOR Michelle Abbasciano
EDITORIAL WEB EDITOR Leif Walcutt
NEWS WEB EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS WEB EDITOR Steve Games



THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY OWNED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS ADAM LINE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE DAILY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL 5455545 BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Stephanie McPherson

COPY EDITOR
Domenic Poli

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Michael Sarkes

Gates Cambridge award given to UM English major

By Katherine Neubert
Collegian Staff

Senior Benjamin Clemenzi-Allen, a Belchertown native and English major, is the first University of Massachusetts student to be awarded the Gates Cambridge Scholarship, which funds one year of graduate study at the University of Cambridge in England.

Forty-six U.S. students have been selected to receive a Gates Cambridge Scholarship.

"I applied because I have a growing interest in British higher education," said Clemenzi-Allen. "There are a number of scholars at Cambridge University that I want to work with, and under the guidance of Dr. Susan Whitbourne at the OSNA [Office of National Scholarship Advisement] office, I began putting out applications to various overseas scholarship funds. This one seemed to suit me best."

Clemenzi-Allen, a member of Commonwealth College, transferred to UMass after receiving his Associate's Degree from Northern Essex Community College, where he originally fell in love with experimental poetry. He submitted his application for the scholarship early last semester.

The project Clemenzi-Allen proposed will take two early 20th-century poets, Gertrude Stein and Ezra Pound, and examine their theories and manners of linguistic representation. He is interested in how poets' notions of representation mirror historical occurrences or social developments. He enrolled in the Master of Philosophy (or MPhil) in American Literature in the program.

"Earning this award, I hope, will encourage other UMass students and community college graduates to apply for prestigious awards, so I am grateful to be a part of something potentially positive for other students," Clemenzi-Allen said.

Not only is the application challenging, according to Clemenzi-Allen, but if a student is then selected for an interview, they are flown to Annapolis, Md., for a night and are interviewed for 20-25 minutes by a committee.

"It's pretty intense, but I had a lot of help from both current and former UMass faculty members, especially Dr. Ruth Jennison – who is great – and Dr. David Swain as well as help from the ONSA office and Dr. Susan Whitbourne," said Clemenzi-Allen.

His graduate research has had to do with 20th-century poetry from either the English or Russian traditions. He has studied and theorized on the connections between American Language poetry and Russian Formalism, focusing on Lyn Hejinian and Viktor Shklovsky. In addition, he has also studied Erza Pound in relation to World War I, some key concepts of structuralism and Mayakovsky's Bolshevik-Futurist aesthetic. Through Commonwealth College, he has had the opportunity to conduct a number of independent studies, including his thesis.

The Bill & Melinda Gates Foundation of Seattle, Wash., announced a donation to the University of Cambridge of $210 million to establish the Gates Cambridge Trust in October 2000.

This support creates an international scholarship program geared toward those who do not live in the United Kingdom.

Katherine Neubert can be reached at kneubert@student.umass.edu.

Student receives fellowship

By Adam Coulter
Collegian Correspondent

There is a scholarship opportunity at the University of Massachusetts, providing an exciting prospect for students of American history at the doctoral and post-doctoral level, as well as independent scholars.

The 2008 Gilder Lehrman Institute of American History Research Fellowship has been awarded to David Lucander, a UMass doctoral candidate.

The scholarship is a fellowship that will allow David to conduct research for his dissertation "It is a New Kind of Militancy: The March on Washington Movement, 1940-1946" at the Schomburg Center for Research in Black Culture in New York City.

The Gilder Lehrman Institute awards short-term fellowships to students and independent scholars to work in five archives in New York, with the Schomburg Center being one of them.

"The institute will look at the individual applicant's topics of research and try to match them with the best collections of relevance at the five archives," said Gilder Lehrman spokesmwoman Sarah Bowman.

The Institute also looks for an interesting theme that will address an intriguing era in American History, according to Bowman.

Lucander's topic, which occurred during World War II, deals with African-Americans who were fighting racism.

One of the main goals of the movement was to improve the organizational methods of the African-American fight for liberation and equal rights, according to a keynote address by A. Philip Randolph to The Policy Conference of the M.O.W.M. in 1942.

The Gilder Lehrman Institute of American History was founded in 1994, and basically works to promote the study and love of American history.

The Institute has helped create history-centered schools as well. According to statistics on their Web site, www.gilderlehrman.org, history oriented schools have been successful in improving academic performance and have increased the number of high school seniors going to college.

"It's the approach that these schools take in teaching history that accounts for the success, and they help kids develop critical thinking skills through time tested curriculum and topics," said Bowman.

Lucander graduated summa cum laude from Westfield State College with a Bachelors of Arts in history and earned his Masters of Arts in Afro-American studies at UMass in 2006.

He has been awarded other honors, such as the James Z. Naurison Scholarship. Lucander is one of 26 recipients to receive the Gilder Lehrman Fellowship.

Adam Coulter can be reached at apcoulte@student.umass.edu

USM degrees evaluated

By Elizabeth Hawley
Collegian Staff

The University of Southern Maine announced recently that 26 degree programs would be evaluated in the coming months, with some programs suspending admission in July.

In an open letter to the USM community on Feb. 8, interim President Joseph S. Wood announced the decision, which includes both graduate and undergraduate majors.

The programs will be required to submit new plans to encourage enrollment in the majors and increase graduation rates by April 1.

By July 1, enrollment will be suspended for programs with plans the provost deems unsatisfactory.

"We're taking this action because it is our firm belief… that any prudently managed university should … evaluate its academic offerings to ensure that we are responsive to the needs of our students and the community at large," Wood said in the letter, posted on the school's Web site.

"It's an evaluation … that clearly was prompted by our budget situation," said Robert Caswell, executive director of public affairs at the University.

USM faces a large deficit. Caswell added that the evaluation process was something he believed every school should do, to make sure academic programs meet students' needs.

The programs on the list, including physics, chemistry and other sciences, as well as women's studies and a number of "self-designed" majors, are "not what you would call in-demand programs" according to Caswell.

In 2007, 65 students graduated from the 26 programs.

If any program on the list should be cut, tenured faculty within that program would not lose their jobs, according to Caswell. Current students in the programs would be able to complete their degrees if enrollment was suspended.

"I think [the evaluation will] help us focus resources on programs where there is clear demand," said Caswell.

Caswell said the announcement has generated "a lot of concern and questions," though he doesn't feel that the news has been fully developed yet.

"I am mad and sad that the university I entered isn't the same as the university I'm leaving," said senior Lauren Allen, a member of the school senate at a recent senate meeting, according to the Free Press, the USM student newspaper.

"Something that gets people really angry gets people really involved," said fellow senior senator Jenn Cote. "I hope this leads to people getting angry about cuts in programs that people are passionate about."

"The largest major is undeclared," said Cote. "My first rebel reaction is to ask students to join the majors on the list."

USM currently has 110 academic programs for 10,400 students. No programs will be suspended until after the plans have been reviewed.

Elizabeth Hawley can be reached at ehawley@student.umass.edu.

Club holds 'decency' rally

REPUBLICAN CLUB RALLY from page 1

the promotion of safe sex to push forward its own agenda."

Counter-demonstrators walked through the crowd as DeFlumeri spoke, holding up pictures of DeFlumeri's "gynecologist" Halloween costume, as well as distributing copies of news stories documenting recent sexual harassment allegations against the president.

At one point a couple of students threw condoms at the stage, provoking DeFlumeri to motion to the police officers present to act, which they declined to do.

"Keep your pornography out of our

BRIAN TEDDER/COLLEGIAN

Republican Club President Brad DeFlumeri gave a speech at yesterday's rally.

Student Union," said Republican Club speaker Alana Goodman, echoing the sentiments of DeFlumeri.

"Like Whitey Bulger, the RSU is using intimidation," said speaker Ed Cutting at the rally. "There is no difference being gay in 1958 and being in the Republican Club in 2008."

"I had to come. I feel like Brad has very little credibility right now," said UMass student Allison Marshall. "The Republican Club has been derecognized by the [Massachusetts Alliance of College Republicans]... Last time I checked, the RSU is an actual, legitimate club. They should post what they want on their walls. College campuses should be about embracing free speech."

According to the RSU, the issue with the posters is free speech, and the group has refused to remove them. Instead, the club has reacted by posting even more copies of the controversial brochure on their walls.

"We are trying to promote open sexual identities," said Nathan Lane, a member of the RSU. "This is [DeFlumeri] trying to take away attention from his own problems."

According to a press release from the administration Thursday, the University has "directed that the brochure in question be removed."

"The brochure depicts sexual acts in a graphic manner, and it may be offensive to people who encounter it," said UMass spokesman Ed Blaguszewski in the press release. "The brochure, which promotes safe sex, can be viewed inside the office and distributed from there."

BRIAN TEDDER/COLLEGIAN

Students gathered to watch the rally outside the Student Union held by the Republican Club yesterday afternoon.

DeFlumeri said when interviewed following the rally that he expects the posters to come down by 5 p.m. Friday, citing sources in the administration.

"It's a clear-cut free speech issue," said RSU member Alex Peterkin to the Collegian on Wednesday. "We're not taking the posters down."

Nick Bush can be reached at nbush@student.umass.edu.

Potholes cause woes

By Joshua Waldvogel
Collegian Staff

Potholes are developing all over the University of Massachusetts campus and the Physical Plant employees are working hard to keep the roads safe.

Last Friday, 25 tons of cold-patch – a stone and oil mix – was purchased by the UMass Physical Plant. Cold-patch is second as an effective pavement repair to bitumen commonly known as "heat-patch."

Heat-patch is the blacktop pavement we see around campus and is bought locally by UMass. Heat-patch doesn't start being produced until late March so UMass will have to wait for the potholes to be repaired until then.

"Cold-patch is a temporary solution and several crews are tending to the potholes everyday," said UMass Assistant Director of Buildings and Grounds Services Pam Monn. "Five-thousand dollars, not including labor wages, have been spent on this temporary upkeep of the grounds."

According to Physical Plant director Patrick Daly, cracks in the pavement must be tended to quickly or they will fill with water.

Massachusetts experiences lots of cold weather, causing the water to freeze and expand. The expansion of the ice causes the cracks to form into a hole. Due to the recent rain and snowfall, this process occurs frequently, causing potholes to grow and sprout up on campus.

"None of the potholes on campus are dangerous" Monn said. "On a yearly average there are about two to three complaints concerning blown tires and this year is no different than the last."

However, UMass students disagree with Monn's assessment of the potholes on campus.

"My axel broke last semester because of the potholes on campus and I had to buy a new one which cost me four hundred bucks," said UMass senior Dominique Batiste.

Students who ride bikes on campus are also affected by the potholes.

"I ride my bike everywhere on campus and have to constantly dodge potholes," said senior Karl Salomon. "Cars are also dodging potholes, which makes riding my bike even more dangerous because now not only do I have to dodge potholes I have to dodge cars which are dodging potholes."

"The long-term solution to potholes is new pavement and no town has the money to do that, let alone UMass," said Daly.

"I couldn't believe the potholes on Commonwealth Avenue when driving here this morning, I wasn't even able to drive in the far right lane," said Amherst resident Dade Singapuri.

UMass will be repaving as much as of the campus as possible this summer under Daly's management. Outside contractors will be hired to complete the job of repaving the Sylvan Residential Area down to East Pleasant Street along with repaving of Commonwealth Avenue up to Holdsworth Way.

JOSHUA WALDVOGEL/COLLEGIAN

UMass recently purchased 25 tons of cold-patch as a temporary fix for the problem potholes present on several campus roads.

In addition to the $135,000 being put into campus roads, an additional $113,000 will be spent on the walkways and driveways surrounding the Furcolo building on campus.

"Between the end of February and the beginning of March, go anywhere in New England and potholes will be a problem," Daly said.

If you encounter a pothole, you may report it to Physical Plant at 413-545-6402 and a grounds crew will be sent to the site for repair.

Joshua Waldvogel can be reached at jwaldvog@student.umass.edu.

EDITORIAL OPINION

FAFSA hell

Hannah Nelson

Mud puddles and bitter cold: it's that season again. No, not cold and flu season, but financial aid season, complete with PIN, Social Security, and IRS form numbers. FAFSA - it is probably the scariest acronym on the face of the planet, though FICAH is quite possibly the most hated.

College students and their parents shudder at the thought of visiting the FAFSA site. If you are wondering at this point what on earth has made me so bitter toward the Free Application for Federal Student Aid, then I must first take you back one year.

We thought it would be fine if my mom didn't have her taxes done, we would call the helpline when we needed to and everything would be fine.

> Missed deadlines are of course the de facto cardinal sin of FAFSA.

Two weeks later and a godsend of a last-minute accountant meeting for those taxes to be done after all, my FAFSA forms were finally on their way through cyberspace to nameless people who would hold my future in their hands.

Melodramatic personal anecdotes aside, there are worse ways last year could have ended. My story is nothing in the shadow of some that have floated my way.

The horror stories run rampant, from the girl whose parents filed late and had to opt for a private loan company to the guy who had to move back home to attend community college.

Missed deadlines are of course the de facto cardinal sin of FAFSA (and column writing for that matter). The bottom line here is to get it in on time; the sooner you do, chances are greater you will receive more aid.

But sometimes life has a way of throwing curveballs. There is the story of Student A who had to take out ridiculously high interest private loans, the sort that will follow you to your grave.

Student loans are the one thing it is near impossible to file bankruptcy on. This one unlucky soul had to find out the hard way. Student A's parents filed her application late and there was hardly any aid left at that point.

Student B ran out of grants in his last semester and dropped out, just for one semester or two to earn some cash. Before he knew it he was earning minimum wage that had to go toward his living expenses, then the loan companies started dropping by for tea.

The lesson of the story is simple, getting to the end result, however, is not. I have since learned from my own horror story that consisted of those two weeks of after-school FAFSA hell.

I believe the problem to lay with high school seniors who are seasoned veterans of the college application by the time spring rolls around, and they think FAFSA will be a piece of cake after personal statements galore. But not so, naive soon to be freshman, it isn't your fault of course. This time one year ago someone not so unlike yourself was a little too optimistic about the FAFSA process, and now she is giving you a warning.

So how did I fare this year, you ask? One hour on President's Day. One hour was all it took to go from start to finish. Lesson learned. I suppose it really is true that some things can only be learned from experience. It was true in my case, but it doesn't have to be the same for you.

This year, my mom and I were prepared. Once all the W-2 forms are received, make that appointment to have your taxes done immediately — some accountants are already close to fully booked. Then, pin number and 1040, 1040A or 1040 EZ form in hand (I swear they used 'EZ' as some sort of joke).

Let's not forget the most rewarding part of the process. Besides the grants soon to be coming my way (fingers crossed), there are only 365 days until I have to look at the application again.

Now is the tedious wait for the financial award — praying, crossing your fingers and doing obscure good luck rituals that you're going to get something decent in return for the stress.

Are you scared yet? Well that's what FAFSA does, it scares you you-know-what-less. I can't help but envision faceless stiff-collared men in black suits sitting around in some secluded and dimly lit board room debating my financial award eligibility like it's a game of monopoly.

"What do you think Mr. Y?"

"Well Mr. Z, if only student X had filed one week earlier…"

Now that I've thoroughly demonized the hand that feeds me, I can say that I certainly do not have a grudge against FAFSA the organization. It's the confusion and fear that gets tacked onto the whole process, the process itself being the evil entity in question.

If I've somehow managed to instill a real FAFSA phobia in you, then you can always pay your tax person to do your FAFSA for you, but you wouldn't really want to entrust someone else with your future, would you?

Hannah Nelson is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at hnelson@student.umass.edu.

A violent epidemic

Eli Gottlieb

Everyone's been talking about violence on college campuses recently. We've had one racially motivated assault, a fight amongst lacrosse players, and then the Northern Illinois State shooting happened.

We all, of course, feel very sad for the victims, even though some of us think a guy being charged with assault with intent to murder is somehow a victim. The "Daily Collegian" has run front page stories on student safety and every community on campus has held its own workshops on the issue.

But rarely is the question asked: are our children fighting? No, seriously, I mean that. Is our campus actually unsafe? I don't have the answers, but in light of the recent violent incidents I'd like to try to ask a few relevant questions.

Of course, by pure numbers our campus becomes less safe whenever another violent crime occurs, simply because the number of per capita violent crimes goes up. But does this increase the actual likelihood that a randomly chosen UMass student will become involved in a violent incident?

After all, in the population at large, most violent crimes are committed by people who know the victim personally. One could hypothesize that knowing a violent person predisposes one to victimhood rather than simply living on a "violent" campus.

Violence could happen in, say, Southwest for the same reason parties do: with enough people in one place certain things start to happen in large numbers, even if their rate proportional to the population remains low.

Perhaps Southwest's or Central's reputation for parties causes a selection effect in which wilder people deliberately choose to live in Southwest/Central in order to participate in the community culture they've heard about. Then wilder people in fun act like wilder people in combat.

Or do violent incidents have a correlation with sports? Arrests were made the night of the Super Bowl, and two of our recent perpetrators came from the lacrosse team.

Sports seem to arouse in people, especially Red Sox fans, a kind of tribal rivalry I haven't seen since the Israelites vowed to blot out the memory of a hated enemy tribe (whose name I refuse to print since I'm a son of Israel myself) from history forever.

In fact, whether I wake up alive tomorrow after publishing this piece will serve as a neat experiment in the violent tendencies of sports players and fans (don't tase me, bro).

I have observed that alcohol seems to lead to violence. Half the time the Buzzkill Unit has busted a shindig I've been at, it's been because a couple of morons started a fight about something.

Actually, here I can offer some advice. People if you are an angry drunk, don't drink. Seriously. I don't understand why anyone would make themselves into a violent moron who gets themselves into the police logs and ruins their friends' fun.

> After all, in the population at large, most violent crimes are committed by people who know the victim personally.

Finally, some people seem to think that because one incident was apparently racially motivated, there are racial issues to confront. Are there? I don't know, but I think someone ought to ask the ALANA Caucus about it, since they sponsored a recent campus-wide forum on violence.

If we at UMass-Amherst – the most supposedly liberal, let's-all-hug, dirty-hippy place I've ever been – have a race relations problem, then I feel very, very worried.

Perhaps white supremacist athletes just randomly assault people in Southwest while drunk. Maybe our University campus is simply becoming more violent for no apparent reason except the horrible, evil people living there.

I'm going to start watching my back in case one of those guys jumps out at me while I'm walking to class from Orchard Hill. No, really. I'm super serious. You'd have to be some kind of idiot to think I was being even the slightest bit sarcastic.

Eli Gottlieb is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at egottlie@student.umass.edu.

Give speed dating a chance

Katherine Marr

There are ups and downs to attending a large university. Con: you can cross paths with people who have definite potential to be your next boyfriend/girlfriend, only to never see them a second time. Pro: when you meet that boy/girl who mistakenly senses a mutual chemistry, you don't even have to purposefully avoid them, simply because you'll never run into them again. But since we're amidst the remnants of Valentine's Day, we'll focus on actually wanting a relationship.

How do you go about meeting that someone? Of course, there are parties and classes, or as I recently discovered, Five College speed dating. Which of these have the most merit for a UMass student?

If you are of the partying, bar-hopping sort, you're golden. Every Friday and Saturday (and increasingly Thursday) night, you'll meet a new batch of people.

But if you don't see beer pong and clubbing as synonymous with "fun," your number of opportunities has been slashed in half. Meeting new people and establishing relationships is no easy feat, especially when you are a serious student at a city-like university.

If studying is more up your alley, you'll be frequenting lecture halls and the library much more than frat houses. But is the lecture hall really the optimal place for seeking new social connections?

Prior to class, most students, if not completely immersed in their iPods, are studying for a quiz, finishing their homework or using the few minutes to catch up on sleep.

Plus, showcasing your wit and charm to make an impression on the strangers around you during lecture is not likely to float well with the professor. Most likely, the person who jumps at the opportunity to talk during class is probably not the fellow studious type that you are seeking.

Just your luck, that chatterbox may have "randomly decided to show up today because it occurred to me this morning that we haven't had an exam in a while, so I was afraid that it might be today or something," which remarkably, I have heard more than once. There have been countless times that have I seen somebody once in a lecture hall, and never again.

If you decide to bite the bullet and go to a party in hopes of meeting someone, chances are that you will meet someone who is there because they actually find it fun. A couple consisting of a hardcore partier and a person who suffered through a party just to meet someone are going to have some compatibility challenges in the future.

So, if the lecture hall is turning up nobody and the UMass party scene does nothing for you, maybe it occurs to you that you need another strategy for meeting people. But when speed dating, online dating sites, such as eHarmony or Match.com or even the "old school" personal ads in the newspaper come to mind, there is always a certain stigma.

For starters, the stereotype is that these services are not for young, hip college students, but rather a desperate last-ditch attempt at companionship for middle-aged people. Or they are for average-looking, unsuccessful, socially inept individuals who can only score a date by portraying themselves as beauty queens or, "Extremely handsome and outgoing SWM…"

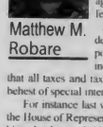
> These unconventional methods of dating – from speed dating to Match.com – have merit.

It doesn't help that these unorthodox methods are overwhelmingly mocked in the movies. The attractive, likeable woman somehow gets roped into speed dating by her quirky best friend or tries online dating on a whim.

She just so happens to meet a man, whom by some twist of fate, was also only trying eHarmony on a dare or as a joke. The scenario evolves into a romantic comedy over the humorously ridiculous notion of two normal people meeting over speed dating or via Match.com.

Despite all the ridicule of online dating sites, Facebook, purportedly accepted by most college students, can serve nearly the same purpose. Consider "Emily" and "Dan." Dan "friended" Emily after glimpsing her picture on another friend's Facebook page.

He skimmed her profile and was immediately drawn to her fun-loving interests (the beach, kayaking, Starbucks) and her attractive pictures, and wrote on her Wall for a date.



Half a year later, they just celebrated their sixth-month anniversary with a bouquet of roses, box of chocolates and outrageously-priced dinner. Point: it can work, probably even more so when it's not an out-of-the-blue date request which I've heard some people refer to as "Facebook stalking."

These unconventional methods of dating from speed dating to Match.com have merit. For one, you don't waste precious time primping for and flirting with people who have nothing in common with you, or already have a significant other or zero-interest in a relationship at all.

Instead, you can straight-forwardly present your demeanor and interests to be matched or match yourself to someone compatible. On a campus of over 15,000 students, it may be a good solution when you can't necessarily guarantee running into the same person twice before graduation.

Katherine Marr is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at kmarr@student.umass.edu.

Misguided government tax spending

Matthew M. Robare

Have you ever gotten the feeling after spending a lot of money that you could have spent it better somewhere else? Or maybe you could have saved it and gotten something more expensive later?

I get that feeling every time I read about more spending by any government or government agency – local, state, or federal – that exceeds a few thousand dollars.

Any more spending than that and I start wondering if the methods employed by major corporations to evade taxes can be adopted by individuals. Nine times out of 10 I guarantee you that all taxes and tax exemptions are, like regulations, done at the behest of special interests.

For instance last week Gov. Deval Patrick introduced a bill into the House of Representatives seeking $500 million over 10 years for biotechnology subsidies.

According to a Masslive.com article, at the same time he announced $12 million for biotech grants immediately out of the Massachusetts Life Sciences Center. Now I heartily agree with Calvin Coolidge that "the business of America is business," but quite frankly I don't like it when my money (well, not my money because I'm from Vermont) that I worked hard for is taken – stolen – from me and given to some corporation (or anyone else, for that matter).

I don't like it because I still adhere to the morality taught in preschool – stealing is bad, hurting other people is bad, etc. And it's not only that so many supposedly upstanding people of the community have discarded these morals wholesale (i.e. politicians imposing taxes to fight wars) but also because it's bad for the economy as a whole.

Sure jobs will be created for the people with university degrees and the trickle-down effect will take its course (whoever would have thought that a Democratic governor of Massachusetts would practice Reaganomics?), but government spending is bad for the economy for a different reason. French economist Frederic Bastiat first articulated this Broken Window Fallacy in the 19th century.

Imagine a shop window being broken. At first everyone is worried – is the shopkeeper all right, was anything stolen, will we have to go to a different shop while the window is being repaired, etc?

But as the window is repaired they come to the conclusion that the act of vandalism was, in fact, a good thing because the shopkeeper had to pay the glazier to repair the window and the glazier then spent money around town, buying whatever he needed.

Now the reason that this is called a fallacy is because no new wealth was created, wealth was actually destroyed. In Bastiet's "That Which is Seen and That Which is Not Seen" he said, "Society loses the value of things uselessly destroyed."

> Nine times out of 10 I guarantee you that all taxes and tax exemptions are, like regulations, done at the behest of special interests.

To understand this, imagine what the shopkeeper could have done if the window had not been broken. He could have spent the money to replace something no longer usable (like a worn pair of shoes) or bought something completely new.

Either way, value would be gained because something new would be produced instead of something senselessly destroyed rebuilt.

The reason I bring up the Broken Window Fallacy is because government spending has the same effect on the economy as a window-breaking vandal. Since we're dealing with Massachusetts here, I'll ignore Federal and local taxes.

Suppose you make the per capita personal income in Massachusetts, $42,102. With a flat income tax of 5.3 percent, that means that $2,231.41 is taken from you by the Commonwealth, in addition to 5 percent of whatever you might purchase excluding groceries, periodicals and clothing under $150.

Some may argue that taxes pay for some good things, but that ignores the power of the unrestricted free market to provide goods and services cheaply and efficiently. This is a power that is outside the scope of the present column. Those interested in pursuing such arguments I refer to www.mises.org and the Austrian Study Guide.

But I digress. Like the shopkeeper, if you did not have to fork over the $2,231.41-plus, you could have spent it on other things that would have added value to the economy. Instead that value is lost to you and given to whichever group of lobbyists can donate the most to this year's re-election campaigns or deliver the largest voter block.

As I said before, biotech subsidies will create jobs and help the economy of Massachusetts. But as I hope you can now see, those jobs will cost a half-billion dollars that would have improved your standard of living, and made all our lives, not just those with post-graduate degrees in biology, better.

Matthew M. Robare is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mrobare@student.umass.edu.

Glitz, glamour and glory at the Oscars

The story of one UMass alumna's star-filled journey to the red carpet

BY HEATHER WAXMAN
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Ever daydream what it would be like to strut down the red carpet at an event like the Oscars?

For one University of Massachusetts alumna, the dream turned into a reality. Amber Reed, a 2003 graduate, received her degree in communication. Following graduation, she moved on to work in both public relations and marketing, eventually landing a public relations job at Magic, the largest fashion trade show in the world.

While working at Magic, Reed met a woman who works very closely with the Oscars. After being offered a chance to help conduct the press guide for the Oscars, Reed was one her way to Hollywood.

"It's a big undertaking," she said. "There are a lot of really strict rules to abide by. We've had a few meetings and I'm sure we'll have more [but] they're showing us how it's going to work operationally and what our job entails."

Reed also said that, despite the sparse amount of time to prepare for the event, nerves have barely seemed to faze her.

As with all red carpet events, there will be many members of the press, all with different credentials. Reed will be one of the people to lead the press around and show them areas where they can and cannot go. Everyone must be escorted to know what they are supposed to be doing, where they are supposed to be and, most importantly, to follow the show's rules, both on the red carpet and behind the scenes.

Currently in Las Vegas wrapping up the Magic showcase, Reed is anxious to move on to the adventure awaiting her in California.

"I'm really excited to meet some celebrities and there are some great movies being nominated this year," she said, although she doesn't think she will have a chance to watch too much of the televised portion of the event.

Since press will be everywhere throughout the night, Reed will constantly be on the go, directing them every which way.

Because she is working the event, Reed chose to go with comfort over quality when selecting her attire.

"I got a dress from a friend and it's very flowy, which is a good choice because I am going to constantly be running around," she said. "I found this gown that I loved for $1100 but then I decided 'no.' I'm just working the Oscars!"

As for the glamorous after parties, she said she will certainly going to try to get into them.

"Since I'm in Vegas, I don't have an idea of what is going on out there. In California, it's completely different. They have some really nice clubs out there."

Reed also said that a familiar cliché does hold true on the west coast. "East coast is definitely more focused on career and education. West coast is very different. They care about who you know and what you do."

Although the Academy Awards can't hurt, it is with her work in publicity where she may gain the most celebrity contacts. Representing Mayhem, a former contestant on NBC's "American Gladiators," Reed has been invited to a number of A-list parties, including two at the Playboy mansion, where she meets many celebrities.

"I've met lots of celebrities so far, but Jamie Lee Pressley has by far been my favorite. She was so sweet and down-to-earth. We had a great time chatting," she said.

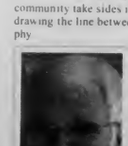
According to Reed, the key to maintaining success in West Coast business is to be in constant contact with people that can get you further and to make friends with as many other people as possible.

Reed's most recent project is her own small public relations company, Adrenaline PR, which she started about a year ago.

"My friends give me a hard time because I can get in basically wherever I want to get in," she said. "So, I started branching out on the side and it eventually fell into place. I have to get a business license first but I need to research that more. Right now, I'm dabbling in it and trying to be smart about the cost of insurance and all that stuff people don't think about."

By making different connections, both personal and professional, Reed said she has taken advantage of every opportunity that has come her way. "If you get caught up in [the lifestyle] and know the right people, it can be glamorous."

Heather Waxman can be reached at hwaxman@student.umass.edu.



COURTESY PHOTO

Reed will guide the press at the 80th Annual Academy Awards, held Sunday in Hollywood.

Campus Perspectives - UMass Debates: Porn or Art?

With recent controversy surrounding the Radical Student Union's safe sex posters, members of the University of Massachusetts community take sides in the age-old debate, drawing the line between art and pornography.

"There's a legal difference that says pornography is used for sexual excitement and titillation... If you want to puff something up, it's art. If you want to put it down, you call it pornography."
- Walter Denny, Art History Department Faculty

"Porn is bad because it's become a part of everyday pop culture... it makes people feel they have to be all sexual and perfect."
- Cara Hutchinson, '09, Communication and Journalism majors

If it has different aspects of the human body... it should be art. Porn... is marketing of the human body."
- Emerson Marting, '11, Biology major

"In my opinion, pornography is imagery that contains obscene or profane content... it also contains exploitation."
- Perry Irwin, Communication teaching assistant

It depends on the primary purpose... art has artistic merit, pornography is just to titillate."
- Derek Newhall, '08, Philosophy and Computer Science majors

"If it's tastefully done, then it's not [porn]... there's a clear [artistic] distinction between Playboy and Penthouse."
- Adrienne Benn, '08, Journalism major

"Pornography is an art. I think pornography can be a form of art, in its own way."
- Nicole Zelingher, '08, Psychology

80th Annual Academy Awards Run-Down

BY SHAYNA MURPHY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The strike is over. Long live the Oscars. This upcoming Sunday, threat of protest abated, the ceremony can go on as if the whole, scary ordeal had never happened. In the spirit of fearlessness, here are some predictions about the evening's potential wins, losses and gross upsets.

BEST PICTURE

"No Country for Old Men" has had a lock on this category since fall. It may not be epic, but it is masterful, showcasing the Coen Brothers in their finest elements. While "Atonement" delves decently into the realm of sprawling, period romances, "Juno" seems to be somewhere in Oscar limbo. With the potential to pull an upset over "No Country" and "There Will Be Blood" on account of its clever script and spunky heroine, it could just as easily be doomed to an obscure fate in the Best Original Screenplay race. Then, lest we forget, there is the underrated "Michael Clayton" to consider. The chances of the film commanding the top prize of the night may be slight, but in truth, it is an honor just to be nominated.

BEST ACTOR

Winner: Daniel Day-Lewis; "There Will Be Blood" — There's just no stopping this juggernaut from the SAG Awards to the Golden Globes, and all the way down to the Austin Film Critics Association, Day-Lewis has squashed the competition in his role as an evil oil tycoon bent on total world domination. Rest assured, he's bound to ride the gravy train straight through to the win.

Johnny Depp; "Sweeney Todd" — Depp deserves props for venturing into unknown territory with Tim Burton's screen adaptation of "Sweeney Todd." Not traditionally inclined to sing and dance on screen, he holds his own with aplomb, without altering too much of his own style. Still, it's hard to deny the whole production, including Depp's performance, errs a bit on the hammy side. In all likelihood, it's going to take more to knock Daniel Day-Lewis off his Oscar trail than the demon barber Fleet Street has to offer.

Tommy Lee Jones; "In the Valley of Elah" — The inclusion of Jones in the category caps off a great year for the veteran actor, but he's dealt a great disservice for not being nominated for "No Country for Old Men." As Best Actor, his performance as a grieving father fades in the presence of flashier company.

Dark Horse: Viggo Mortensen; "Eastern Promises" — The chameleon capabilities of Viggo Mortensen have never been more spot-on than they are here, in his turn as a thug in the seedy Russian mafia underworld. Brutal and brooding, the intensity of his performance bookmarks an otherwise forgettable picture. Despite the strengths of the performance, the category seems deadlocked in Day-Lewis' favor. Still, there ought to be a special Oscar asterisk for a guy who spends the final 20 minutes of a film entirely in the buff.

BEST ACTRESS

Winner: Julie Christie; "Away From Her" — With a career spanning over four decades, the veteran actress strikes emotional resonance as a patient suffering the effects of Alzheimer's disease. Heavily favored from the outset for this devastating turn, she stands in the competition as a force to be reckoned with.

Laura Linney; "The Savages" — Eternally underrated, effortlessly good; Linney's proven ability to excel within any given cast ensemble goes unmatched. She's in her element here, playing a wannabe playwright with some serious daddy issues. Yet the same quality which makes Linney stalwartly good in any given cast also damns her to no uncertain Oscar anonymity. She'll have her year soon enough, but not with a role this understated.

Ellen Page; "Juno" — As the lead in Juno, Ellen Page displays more of the precociousness first spied in 2005's "Hard Candy." Yet she's still a novice as far as the Academy is con-

COURTESY ABOUT.COM

On Sunday night, the Kodak Theatre will be flooded with the brightest stars in Hollywood.

See OSCARS on page 8

BY KEVIN KOCZWARA
COLLEGIAN STAFF

This Sunday, all of Hollywood will be out to celebrate that great art that is film making. With a year full of Westerns and quirkily humored films, it's tough to say who will be awarded that little gold man. Nevertheless, there are a few front runners. Here a few predictions as to the outcome of the Oscars.

BEST PICTURE

Winner: "No Country for Old Men"

"There Will Be Blood" is the other deserving movie in this category due to its great acting, unique story line and strong metaphors. While the funny, fun and wholesome "Juno" may be a crowd favorite, it isn't the best of the bunch. "Atonement" simply doesn't belong in this category; it isn't on the same playing field as the others. "Michael Clayton" has little chance to win, but is deserving of the nomination because it takes a worn-out, John Grisham-style story and breathes new life into the genre.

BEST ACTOR

Winner: Daniel Day-Lewis "There Will be Blood" — His performance is comparable to Orson Welles' in "Citizen Kane" and Robert DeNiro as Jake La Motta in "Raging Bull." Day-Lewis will surely walk away with this award, and deservingly so.

Johnny Depp "Sweeny Todd" — Depp is the only reason to watch the snore-inducing movie because of his immense capacity to sing and act. But, by the time he reaches his full potential, it is too late to save the movie.

George Clooney "Michael Clayton" — Better than "Syriana," it is possibly his best performance to date. Still, Clooney comes up short, and an Oscar win is unlikely. He is simply not the best in this category, especially considering his competitors.

Viggo Mortensen "Eastern Promises" — Mortensen has the best chance at upsetting Day-Lewis because of his naked fight scene in the shower where he kicks some serious tail. Otherwise, Mortensen is the background figure and shadow of "Eastern Promises," hurting his chances of upsetting Day-Lewis, star of "There Will Be Blood."

Tommy Lee Jones "In the Valley of Ellah" — The movie wasn't strong enough as a whole for Jones to win. It certainly wasn't his best performance either, which arguably came instead in "No Country for Old Men." Jones has won an Oscar previously, so he is ideally out of the race. He is great in the film and the only real reason to rent or watch the movie.

BEST ACTRESS

COURTESY ABOUT.COM

The 80th Annual Academy Awards ceremony will be held this Sunday evening.

Winner: Julie Christie "Away From Her" — She has won most major accolades for her acting and this year. This category isn't as strong as it has been in the past due to an abundance of male-centric movies. She does, however, play a strong part in a deeply passionate movie.

Marion Cotillard "La Môme" — Cotillard gives her heart and soul to this performance. Though unfair, she is much like Audrey Tautou in "Amelie," unknown and unlikely to win because the movie is in French rather than English. Very rarely does the Academy vote for a foreign language acting performance to win an Oscar, regardless of how deserving it is.

Laura Linney "The Savages" — Linney carries the movie and overshadows acting great Phillip Seymour-Hoffman. She does so by garnering audience appeal. She has a chance at upsetting Christie seeing as this is her third Oscar nomination.

Cate Blanchett "Elizabeth: The Golden Age" — This is a surprising nomination at best. Blanchett was nominated for the same role previously, and lost then. The outcome this time around is not likely to be much different; her performance feels textbook.

Ellen Page "Juno" — Page is smart, witty, cynical and pessimistic but all with a good heart. She stands a good chance at

See PREDICTIONS on page 8

Glitz, glamour and glory at the Oscars

The story of one UMass alumna's star-filled journey to the red carpet

By Heather Waxman
Collegian Correspondent

Ever daydream what it would be like to strut down the red carpet at an event like the Oscars?

For one University of Massachusetts alumna, the dream turned into a reality. Amber Reed, a 2003 graduate, received her degree in communication. Following graduation, she moved on to work in both public relations and marketing, eventually landing a public relations job at Magic, the largest fashion trade show in the world.

While working at Magic, Reed met a woman who works very closely with the Oscars. After being offered a chance to help conduct the press guide for the Oscars, Reed was one her way to Hollywood.

"It's a big undertaking," she said. "There are a lot of really strict rules to abide by. We've had a few meetings and I'm sure we'll have more [but] they're showing us how it's going to work operationally and what our job entails."

Reed also said that, despite the sparse amount of time to prepare for the event, nerves have barely seemed to faze her.

As with all red carpet events, there will be many members of the press, all with different credentials. Reed will be one of the people to lead the press around and show them areas where they can and cannot go. Everyone must be escorted to know what they are supposed to be doing, where they are supposed to be and, most importantly, to follow the show's rules, both on the red carpet and behind the scenes.

Currently in Las Vegas wrapping up the Magic showcase, Reed is anxious to move on to the adventure awaiting her in California.

"I'm really excited to meet some celebrities and there are some great movies being nominated this year," she said, although she doesn't think she will have a chance to watch too much of the televised portion of the event.

Since press will be everywhere throughout the night, Reed will constantly be on the go, directing them every which way.

Because she is working the event, Reed chose to go with comfort over quality when selecting her attire.

"I got a dress from a friend and it's very flowy, which is a good choice because I am going to constantly be running around," she said. "I found this gown that I loved for $1100 but then I decided 'no.' I'm just working the Oscars!"

As for the glamorous after parties, she said she will certainly going to try to get into them.

"Since I'm in Vegas, I don't have an idea of what is going on out there. In California, it's completely different. They have some really, really nice clubs out there."

Reed also said that a familiar cliché does hold true on the west coast. "East coast is definitely more focused on career and education. West coast is very different. They care about who you know and what you do."

Although the Academy Awards can't hurt, it is with her work in publicity where she may gain the most celebrity contacts. Representing Mayhem, a former contestant on NBC's "American Gladiators," Reed has been invited to a number of A-list parties, including two at the Playboy mansion, where she meets many celebrities.

Reed will guide the press at the 80th Annual Academy Awards, held Sunday in Hollywood.

"I've met lots of celebrities so far, but Jamie Lee Pressley has by far been my favorite. She was so sweet and down-to-earth. We had a great time chatting," she said.

According to Reed, the key to maintaining success in West Coast business is to be in constant contact with people that can get you further and to make friends with as many other people as possible.

Reed's most recent project is her own small public relations company, Adrenaline PR, which she started about a year ago.

"My friends give me a hard time because I can get in basically wherever I want to get in," she said. "So, I started branching out on the side and it eventually fell into place. I have to get a business license first but I need to research that more. Right now, I'm dabbling in it and trying to be smart about the cost of insurance and all that stuff people don't think about."

By making different connections, both personal and professional, Reed said she has taken advantage of every opportunity that has come her way. "If you get caught up in [the lifestyle] and know the right people, it can be glamorous."

Heather Waxman can be reached at hwaxman@student.umass.edu.

Campus Perspectives - UMass Debates: Porn or Art?

With recent controversy surrounding the Radical Student Union's safe sex posters, members of the University of Massachusetts community take sides in the age-old debate, drawing the line between art and pornography.

"There's a legal difference that says pornography is used for sexual excitement and titillation... If you want to puff something up, it's art. If you want to put it down, you call it pornography."
- Walter Denny, Art History Department Faculty.

"Porn is bad because it's become a part of everyday pop culture... it makes people feel they have to be all sexual and perfect."
- Cara Hutchinson, '09, Communication and Journalism majors

If it has different aspects of the human body... it should be art. Porn... is marketing of the human body."
- Emerson Marting, '11, Biology major

"In my opinion, pornography is imagery that contains obscene or profane content... it also contains exploitation."
- Perry Irwin, Communication teaching assistant

It depends on the primary purpose... art has artistic merit, pornography is just to titillate."
- Derek Newhall, '08, Philosophy and Computer Science majors

"If it's tastefully done, then it's not [porn]... there's a clear [artistic] distinction between Playboy and Penthouse."
- Adrienne Benn, '08, Journalism major

"Pornography is an art. I think pornography can be a form of art, in its own way."
- Nicole Zelingher, '08, Psychology

80th Annual Academy Awards Run-Down

By Shayna Murphy
Collegian Staff

The strike is over. Long live the Oscars. This upcoming Sunday, threat of protest abated, the ceremony can go on as if the whole, scary ordeal had never happened. In the spirit of fearlessness, here are some predictions about the evening's potential wins, losses and gross upsets.

Best Picture

"No Country for Old Men" has had a lock on this category since fall. It may not be epic, but it is masterful, showcasing the Coen Brothers in their finest elements. While "Atonement" delves decently into the realm of sprawling, period romances, "Juno" seems to be somewhere in Oscar limbo. With the potential to pull an upset over "No Country" and "There Will Be Blood" on account of its clever script and spunky heroine, it could just as easily be doomed to an obscure fate in the Best Original Screenplay race. Then, lest we forget, there is the underrated "Michael Clayton" to consider. The chances of the film commanding the top prize of the night may be slight, but in truth, it is an honor just to be nominated.

Best Actor

Winner: Daniel Day-Lewis; "There Will Be Blood" — There's just no stopping this juggernaut from the SAG Awards to the Golden Globes, and all the way down to the Austin Film Critics Association, Day-Lewis has squashed the competition in his role as an evil oil tycoon bent on total world domination. Rest assured, he's bound to ride the gravy train straight through to the win.

Johnny Depp; "Sweeney Todd" — Depp deserves props for venturing into unknown territory with Tim Burton's screen adaptation of "Sweeney Todd." Not traditionally inclined to sing and dance on screen, he holds his own with aplomb, without altering too much of his own style. Still, it's hard to deny the whole production, including Depp's performance, errs a bit on the hammy side. In all likelihood, it's going to take more to knock Daniel Day-Lewis off his Oscar trail than the demon barber Fleet Street has to offer.

Tommy Lee Jones; "In the Valley of Elah" — The inclusion of Jones in the category caps off a great year for the veteran actor, but he's dealt a great disservice for not being nominated for "No Country for Old Men." As Best Actor, his performance as a grieving father fades in the presence of flashier company.

Dark Horse: Viggo Mortensen; "Eastern Promises" — The chameleon capabilities of Viggo Mortensen have never been more spot-on than they are here, in his turn as a thug in the seedy Russian mafia underworld. Brutal and brooding, the intensity of his performance bookmarks an otherwise forgettable picture. Despite the strengths of the performance, the category seems deadlocked in Day-Lewis' favor. Still, there ought to be a special Oscar asterisk for a guy who spends the final 20 minutes of a film entirely in the buff.

On Sunday night, the Kodak Theatre will be flooded with the brightest stars in Hollywood.

Best Actress

Winner: Julie Christie; "Away From Her" — With a career spanning over four decades, the veteran actress strikes emotional resonance as a patient suffering the effects of Alzheimer's disease. Heavily favored from the outset for this devastating turn, she stands in the competition as a force to be reckoned with.

Laura Linney; "The Savages" — Eternally underrated, effortlessly good, Linney's proven ability to excel within any given cast ensemble goes unmatched. She's in her element here, playing a wannabe playwright with some serious daddy issues. Yet the same quality which makes Linney stalwartly good in any given cast also damns her to no uncertain Oscar anonymity. She'll have her year soon enough, but not with a role this understated.

Ellen Page; "Juno" — As the lead in Juno, Ellen Page displays more of the precociousness first spied in 2005's "Hard Candy." Yet she's still a novice as far as the Academy is con-

See OSCARS on page 8

By Kevin Koczwara
Collegian Staff

This Sunday, all of Hollywood will be out to celebrate that great art that is film making. With a year full of Westerns and quirkily humored films, it's tough to say who will be awarded that little gold man. Nevertheless, there are a few front runners. Here a few predictions as to the outcome of the Oscars.

Best Picture

Winner: "No Country for Old Men" — "There Will Be Blood" is the other deserving movie in this category due to its great acting, unique story line and strong metaphors. While the funny, fun and wholesome "Juno" may be a crowd favorite, it isn't the best of the bunch. "Atonement" simply doesn't belong in this category; it isn't on the same playing field as the others. "Michael Clayton" has little chance to win, but is deserving of the nomination because it takes a worn-out, John Grisham-style story and breathes new life into the genre.

Best Actor

Winner: Daniel Day-Lewis "There Will be Blood" — His performance is comparable to Orson Welles' in "Citizen Kane" and Robert DeNiro as Jake La Motta in "Raging Bull." Day-Lewis will surely walk away with this award, and deservingly so.

Johnny Depp "Sweeny Todd" — Depp is the only reason to watch the snore-inducing movie because of his immense capacity to sing and act. But, by the time he reaches his full potential, it is too late to save the movie.

George Clooney "Michael Clayton" — Better than "Syriana," it is possibly his best performance to date. Still, Clooney comes up short, and an Oscar win is unlikely. He is simply not the best in this category, especially considering his competitors.

Viggo Mortensen "Eastern Promises" — Mortensen has the best chance at upsetting Day-Lewis because of his naked fight scene in the shower where he kicks some serious tail. Otherwise, Mortensen is the background figure and shadow of "Eastern Promises," hurting his chances of upsetting Day-Lewis, star of "There Will Be Blood."

Tommy Lee Jones "In the Valley of Ellah" — The movie wasn't strong enough as a whole for Jones to win. It certainly wasn't his best performance either, which arguably came instead in "No Country for Old Men." Jones has won an Oscar previously, so he is ideally out of the race. He is great in the film and the only real reason to rent or watch the movie.

Best Actress

The 80th Annual Academy Awards ceremony will be held this Sunday evening.

Winner: Julie Christie "Away From Her" — She has won most major accolades for her acting and this year. This category isn't as strong as it has been in the past due to an abundance of male centric movies. She does, however, play a strong part in a deeply passionate movie.

Marion Cotillard "La Môme" — Cotillard gives her heart and soul to this performance. Though unfair, she is much like Audrey Tautou in "Amelie," unknown and unlikely to win because the movie is in French rather than English. Very rarely does the Academy vote for a foreign language acting performance to win an Oscar, regardless of how deserving it is.

Laura Linney "The Savages" — Linney carries the movie and overshadows acting great Phillip Seymour-Hoffman. She does so by garnering audience appeal. She has a chance at upsetting Christie seeing as this is her third Oscar nomination.

Cate Blanchett "Elizabeth: The Golden Age" — This is a surprising nomination at best. Blanchett was nominated for the same role previously, and lost then. The outcome this time around is not likely to be much different; her performance feels textbook.

Ellen Page "Juno" — Page is smart, witty, cynical and pessimistic but all with a good heart. She stands a good chance at

See PREDICTIONS on page 8

Collegian movie buffs predict Sunday's Oscar outcomes

OSCARS from page 7

cerned, and while it has a history of rewarding first-timers and youngsters (remember Tatum O'Neil, anyone?), the competition may prove a little too steep this year for her to slip away with a win.

Dark Horse. Cate Blanchett; "Elizabeth: The Golden Age" — As Elizabeth I, Blanchett pulls in the mother of all performances. Famously robbed by Gwyneth Paltrow back in 1999 for the same role, voters might be inclined to hand it to her simply out of repentance. Yet it's her gender-bending turn in "I'm Not There" that really has Hollywood buzzing. If Oscar treats with her at all this year, that'll be the role that does it.

Julie Christie earned herself an Oscar nod in the film "Away From Her."

BEST ORIGINAL SCREENPLAY

"Juno"; Diablo Cody — Diablo Cody's slick coming of age comedy has been gathering hearts and praise since its premier at Sundance over a year ago. And as the category where indie crossover films typically go to die, "Juno" feels like a probable shoo-in for the win, especially if it misses out on Best Picture. Still, some voters may see it as a script that places bite over substance.

"Lars and the Real Girl"; Nancy Oliver — A quirky premise — a sweet natured loner falls for a sex doll, and a charismatic cast melds together for this optimistic yarn about the nature of love. Punctuated with humor and generosity of spirit, it's not difficult to fall under the script's charm, but if anything quirky wins out in this category, the chances are it'll be "Juno."

"Michael Clayton"; Tony Gilroy — Tony Gilroy's intricately woven legal thriller maintains tension and urgency throughout, for great effect. Scripts like this are part of a dying breed, and it would be a crying shame if "Michael Clayton" went entirely overlooked on Oscar night.

"Ratatouille"; Brad Bird — In a summer of lackluster releases, Brad Bird's comedy about an aspirant rat-chef rose to the head of the class as one of the best films of the season. But in such a competitive pool, Bird's script could easily fall to the wayside.

"The Savages"; Tamara Jenkins — The angst of degenerating elders isn't typically the stuff great comedies are made of, but Tamara Jenkins is able to bring humor — and pathos — to a head in her sophomore outing as a screenwriter.

Shayna Murphy can be reached at skmurphy@student.umass.edu

PREDICTIONS from page 7

upsetting Christie. Her push toward a win is assisted by strong box office performance and crowd favoritism.

BEST ORIGINAL SCREENPLAY

Winner: Diablo Cody "Juno" — Though the script could be viewed as clichéd, it is also witty, fast paced, and has good twist that keeps the audience on its feet. It is a light-hearted film in a dark year in movies. It is also one of the few nods that have a female lead and more than one woman on the screen at a time.

Tamara Jenkins "The Savages" — Jenkins hits the nail on the head with a sibling relationship that is in constant jeopardy due to dealing with the hardships of a parent on the brink of death. Though it is often depressing, the movie is somewhat comedic, bringing the audience back to life.

Nancy Oliver "Lars and the Real Girl" — The movie relies on its awkward scenario to humor and is a coming-of-age tale about someone who was supposed to have come of age a while ago. It's a quirky script that definitely has potential to win the category because of its warm ending and unique perspective on growing up.

Tony Gilroy "Michael Clayton" — This was not one of the more unique scripts this year. It is a lawyer drama with the basic conventions of a modern script, but gets a lot of help from the actors and the direction.

Brad Bird, Jan Pinkava, Jim Capobianco "Ratatouille" — This movie about the power of art, focusing on a rat/chef is unique, original and heartwarming for the whole family. It has a great chance of upsetting Diablo Cody's "Juno."

Kevin Koczwara can be reached at kkoczwara@student.umass.edu.

Ryan Gosling stars in this off-beat comedy as a man who loves a blow-up doll.

Take out a classifieds ad

THE DAILY COLLEGIAN

now offers free online classifieds for students at

WWW.UMASSLIST.COM

- More complete, local and relevant category listings than any and all competitor web sites combined
- Users can setup daily e-mail updates for relevant listings. No more searching for apartments, now they come to you.
- Post unlimited online listings
- Little to no spam

By listing on this site you are supporting your local college newspaper, The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

WRITE FOR ARTS!

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Professors set to perform

Mix of old, new sure to entertain

CAROL LAWLESS
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Professors Astrid Schween and Nadine Shank will be performing in the Faculty-Cello Recital at the Bezanson Recital Hall, located in the east side of the Fine Arts Center, Tuesday, Feb. 26 at 8 p.m.

Schween will play cello while Shank performs on piano. The collaboration's repertoire will include Sonata, Op. 40 by Dmitry Shostakovich and Sonata, Op. 5, No. 2 in G Minor by Beethoven, along with other surprise pieces.

Marilyn Kushick, the director of publicity and fundraising for the music and dance department of the University of Massachusetts Amherst, believes this performance by "very strong, talented artists with the finest credentials" will be a crowd-pleasing event. Both musicians have been thoughtful about how to design their recital in order to make it interesting to the audience, which will include their students. Kushick noted that the artists purposely chose one contemporary artist, Shostakovich, and one more classical artist, Beethoven. Kushick also said both of the main pieces are considered to be "important and major works of the cello-piano repertoire."

Since they were young, both women have been trained extensively in music by prestigious instructors. Their talents have led them to perform and travel around the world. Both colleagues have performed together in the past.

Appointed in 1980, Shank currently teaches piano and is the director of the Collaborative Piano Program at the University of Massachusetts Amherst. She is also an orchestral pianist with the Springfield Symphony Orchestra. She attended the Oberlin Conservatory and Indiana University. She has performed in both solo and chamber performances in England, Germany, and Holland and is featured in such recordings as "Nadine Shank Performs Sonata 2," by Yusef Lateef, "American Jewish Art Songs," a CD with the West Point Military Band, and various "Play-Along" CDs.

Schween has been a visiting assistant professor of cello at UMass since 2004. She has been a member of the Lark String Quartet, which is in-residence in Amherst, since 1989. She is a graduate from the Juilliard School and has performed in such regions as Europe, Australia, Canada, Mexico, New Zealand and Japan. She has also performed at Carnegie Hall, Wigmore Hall, Lincoln Center, and the Beethoven Festival in Moscow.

Sonata, Op. 40 was written by Shostakovich especially for both cello and piano in the late 1950s. He was a Russian composer during the Soviet period. Beethoven wrote Sonata, Op. 5 and No. 2 in G Minor in 1796 in Berlin when he was visiting King of Prussia Fredrich Wilhelm II, therefore dedicating it to him.

Tickets, available at the Fine Arts Center Box Office, are $3 for UMass students, senior citizens and other students, $5 for children under 18 and $10 for the general public. The event is expected to last one hour, 45 minutes.

Carol Lawless can be reached at clawless@student.umass.edu

UMass professors Astrid Schween (above) and Nadine Shank (below) will showcase their musical talents on Tuesday at the FAC.

Band mixes music, politics

Music makers send message

BY SHELBY LANDECK
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

During a time filled with decisions about the future of our country, Charlie Stokes, former lead singer of the band Dispatch, performs with his politically charged trio State Radio this Friday at the Pearl Street Night Club.

State Radio's music provides upfront social commentary through its own mixture of aggressive punk and reggae. With their unique sound, the Boston-based trio has managed to gain a cult following without the help of radio exposure or a major record label.

Following the disbanding of Dispatch, Stokes recruited guitarist Pete Halby, bassist Chuck Fay and drummer Mike Greenfield to complete State Radio's lineup. They recorded their first LP "Flag of the Shiners" in 2002. After a short break in 2003 to allow Stokes to recover from throat surgery, the band got back to work in 2004 as a trio and released their second LP, "Simmer Kane." Their full-length debut, "Us Against the Crown," followed in February 2006. "Year of the Crow," the band's newest release, was recorded in 2007 at Peter Gabriel's Real World studios in Wiltshire, England and was produced by Tchad Blake (Gabriel, Pearl Jam, Soul Coughing, the Bad Plus).

State Radio's political ideology and Stokes experience living in Zimbabwe for a year at the age of 18, is what defines the band. "Guantanamo," off of the latest album, takes aim at the current administration. "All hail the line of crooked white chiefs Whose father stole the bones from an Indian grave." In "Sudan," Stokes shows his feelings of hopelessness for his inability to make a difference, as he sings, "But if I had an arsenal and if it was 10 feet tall Then I would put an end to it all."

Despite a strong following, the band's last two albums lack real musical focus. "Black Cab Motorcade," off of the band's first full-length album, calls for comparisons to Sublime. The slightly more aggressive follow up, "Year of the Crow" (2007), is more reminiscent of Rage Against the Machine. Both disks switch between hard in your face attempts at displaying their political angst and more melodic jam-band apathy. Songs like "Guantanamo" and "Gang of Thieves" pull their inspiration from the world of fast punk, while more Dispatch-influenced attempts such as "Fight no More," display apathy that doesn't match the rest of the call to arms of "Year of the Crow."

Mass. based band brings their unique sound to Pearl Street tonight.

The band's show in Northampton tonight is just one of the over 40 stops it they make between now and July. Pearl Street Night Club may be a relatively small venue, but State Radio is no stranger to large audiences. On March 8, they head to the Tangerado Music Festival in Big Cypress, Florida. In July, they will perform at the popular Bonnaroo Music and Art Festival.

Fans looking to relive their love for Dispatch may be disappointed. Stokes' new project is purely political and includes none of the relaxing feel-good melodies that Dispatch became popular for. However, if you are looking for some inspiration in dealing with the politics and election heavy age that is sure to bombard you in the coming months, State Radio's show tonight may be just what you're looking for.

Doors open at 8:30 p.m. and tickets for the show are $15 in advance, $18 at the door.

Shelby Landeck can be reached at slandeck@student.umass.edu.

Butterfly
Chinese & Japanese Restaurant
WWW.BUTTERFLYHADLEY.COM
Vegetarian Menu Available • Enjoy drinks at the full bar!
(413) 585-8989
Free Delivery Hadley (Min. $15.00) Out of Town (Min. $20.00)
Mon. – Thurs: 11:30am – 10:00pm | Fri. & Sat.: 11:30am – 11:00pm
Sunday: 12:00noon – 10:00pm
48 Russell St (Rt. 9) Hadley, MA 01035

Attention First-Year Students:
TIME'S ALMOST UP!
Have you completed MyStudentBody?
It's easy, interesting ... and required for all first-year students. To avoid a registration hold, you must take and pass the course no later than Monday, February 25th.
For instructions, go to:
www.umass.edu/uhs/cadap/msb/
Center for Alcohol and other Drug Abuse Prevention

UMass quintet takes act to Northampton's Iron Horse

By Ian Nelson
Collegian Staff

Rudy Brown, a jazz fusion band composed of five like-minded UMass music department members, will bring their sound to the Iron Horse tonight. The group evolved over the span of a few years from a jam band/jazz trio into a dense, eclectic quintet.

Bassist Dave Gagnon and guitarist Dan Thomas, who share vocals, began playing as a trio with a different drummer back in September 2001. After a few years, the three desired an increased complexity to their sound and added Dan Kent on keyboards. In the summer of 2006, the band added classical and jazz violinist Eve Boltax to the mix, completing steps to filling out the band's sound.

At their most extreme, Rudy Brown produces a sound reminiscent of Mike Patton's Mr. Bungle meets John McLaughlin's Mahavishnu Orchestra. Current drummer Paul Zilioli, who has been with the band since last September, said the new keyboard and violin textures "add more colors to the palette," allowing for a more vast array of sounds, influences and ideas.

Though most of the band grew up on classic rock staples like Pink Floyd, they have collectively eased into more jazz-oriented listening as they have grown. Current inspiration comes from everywhere, from beat-driven house to Cream to Frank Zappa arrangements to Weather Report's fusion from the 70s, along with jazz greats Chick Corea, Bill Evans, and Elvin Jones.

Classic jazz influences mesh smoothly with the raucous spastic funk of Mr. Bungle to create a very dark, viscous solution. The only element missing is a possible horn section, which was, in fact, arranged for one of their songs "Amniocentesis," and performed at last year's Extravaganja, an annual event sponsored by the Cannabis Reform Coalition.

The songs still hold up very well without the brass, using keys and violin accents to form the song's "warped swing circus funk," as it is described by the band. The quintet performs at local venues in Northampton, Worcester and Palmer as often as they can, usually two or three times a month, and is beginning to branch out into Vermont and Connecticut.

The group's performances are largely composed of original works, with some Zappa, Beatles, and Weather Report numbers thrown in, just to name a few. The band is also at work on a rendition of the Inspector Gadget theme song "Go Gadget Go." Their sound is continually evolving, and has become more solid since their last and only recording took place in the summer of 2006. Those songs, with their old drummer, are available to stream from their MySpace page and are available on CD at their shows.

Tonight's show begins at 10 p.m. at the Iron Horse in Northampton. Tickets and additional information about the second band, The Bomb Squad, are available through the venue's Web site, www.iheg.com. It is encouraged to purchase a ticket from the band themselves via e-mail at djthomas@student.umass.edu. Tickets are $10 in advance and $13 at the door.

Ian Nelson can be reached at inelson@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY MYSPACE.COM

Though they usually frequent the club scene around Amherst, University of Massachusetts quintet Rudy Brown hope to be just as successful in front of a Northampton audience.

YES COMPUTERS

Apple Specialist

In downtown Northampton!

Now featuring the ASUS Eee PC

The Pioneer Valley's premier Apple- and Asus-authorized dealer.

- Ultraportable: 7 inches and 2 pounds.
- Over 40 built-in programs, including a full office suite.
- Rugged, shock-resistant design.
- Simple, intuitive, Linux-based operating system.
- Built-in wireless Internet.

Present this coupon for $50 off any Asus Eee PC!

expires 3/1/08

$395!

Yes Computers | 38 Pleasant St, Northampton, MA | 413-585-0007

FOUR Seasons

WINE • LIQUOR • CIGARS

WINE SALE 10% OFF 6 BOTTLES* OF WINE EVERYDAY!! MIX & MATCH *REGULAR PRICED 750 ML BOTTLES OF VARIETAL WINES

We have ICE LUGES!!!

CIGAR SALE!!! -15% off Premium Cigars

Now carrying PIPES!!! -And pipe tobacco & supplies!!!

Jose Cuervo Platino Tequila 750 ml $49.99	Jim Beam Bourbon 1.75 liter $20.99	Bacardi –All Flavors 1.0 Liter $17.99
Glenmorangie Madiera Wood Finish 750 ml $49.99	Jose Cuervo Flavored Tequila* 1.0 liter $20.99 *Citrico, Tropico, Oranjo	Jagermeister 750 ml $17.99
10 Cane Rum 750 ml $26.99	Meyer's Platinum Rum 1.75 liter $19.99	Absolut New Orleans Vodka 750 ml $16.99
Grey Goose Vodka 750 ml $26.99	Pinnacle Vodka 1.75 liter $19.99	Sobieski Polish Vodka 1.75 liter $16.99
Jameson Irish Whiskey 750 ml $22.99	Godiva Liqueur 750 ml $18.99	Captain Morgan Parrot Bay Rum* 1.0 liter $16.99 *Including Coconut, Mango, Pineapple, Passion Fruit
Smirnoff Vodka 80° 1.75 liter $21.99	Feckin Irish Whiskey 750 ml $17.99
	Ruskova Vodka 1.75 liter $17.99

Sale 2/14-2/21 333 Russell St., Rte. 9, Hadley, MA

584-8174 • Mon.-Sat. 9AM-11PM • Sun. Noon-11PM

EISAC regionals up next

Small brothers lead UMass to Vt.

By David Brinch
Collegian Staff

Members of the Massachusetts ski teams travel to Middlebury, Vt., this afternoon to compete in the Eastern Intercollegiate Skiing Association Conference Regional championships.

"Middlebury is an honor for the guys from our league into the Middlebury Carnival race," said UMass coach Skip Fox.

Both teams sit in third place in the McConnell Division.

"It's kind of a reward. It means that they all made the top 15 individually in the McConnell Division. We are going up against the best collegiate skiers in the nation," Fox added.

Senior Eliza Hawkins, freshman Jamie Taloumis and sophomore Emily Shilletto will represent the Minutewomen while senior Jason Small and sophomores Andrew Hawes, Matt Small and Ian Hohmeister will represent the Minutemen.

If any individual in this group places in the top 12 of today's Slalom, they will gain an invitation to the NCAA Finals held in Bozeman, Mt., from March 5-8, hosted by Montana State.

"Anybody that scores in the top 12 today gets invited to the NCAAs," Fox said. "The past couple years we haven't had anyone do that. It hurts and helps our team. It helps in that UMass gets recognized at the national level, but they will not be able to ski in the USCSA championships, because the dates conflict."

The team will then travel to Waterville Valley, N.H., to compete in the Eastern Collegiate Skiing Conference Regional Championships on Feb. 23 and 24.

After wrapping up its regular season Feb. 12 at the Boston College Carnival, the team hopes to make a playoff push this weekend.

"I hope the whole team has some good runs this weekend," Fox said. "It's a changed format, in which we go from scoring five skiers to scoring three skiers, so consistency is very important. Obviously, you have to have a 60 percent finish rate out of your five skiers, so it is important for everybody to do well."

Hawkins and Taloumis have been the face of the Minutewomen, consistently finishing in the top five in the Slalom and Giant Slalom events. Hawkins is going into her final postseason races, while Taloumis is finishing up her first season. Hawkins has impressed throughout her career, and Fox believes that Taloumis can fill that role when Hawkins graduates in May.

"I think that's a definite possibility. I think Jamie can take a leadership role," Fox said. "The real test is this weekend. I'm looking for good things to happen this weekend."

The Minutemen have relied on Hawes and Small, who both finished in the top 10 at the Boston Carnival.

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu.

Taloumis emerges on slopes

Freshman excels in rookie season

By Scott Feldman
Collegian Staff

For many people, making the transition from high school to college can be a harrowing experience. Flying down a snow-covered mountain at over 50 miles per hour can also be nerve-wracking event.

But for Jamie Taloumis, freshman on the Massachusetts women's ski team, the change hasn't been a problem. In her first season she has established herself as one of the best skiers on the team. Taloumis looks poised to lead the Minutewomen for years to come if she can keep up the pace.

In her first year as a Minutewoman, Taloumis has proven herself as one of the top skiers in the MacConnell Division. She has competed in 10 races this season and only once has she failed to finish. When she did finish, she was practically a lock to earn points, finishing in the top 10 eight times.

It is her ability to consistently score points for the team that has UMass coach Skip Fox so pleased with her performance this year.

"Jamie has been a great addition to the team. She has been a 'steady Eddie' all year," said Fox. "With that kind of consistency she has definitely been worth her weight in gold."

Taloumis has an exceptionally smooth fluid style on the slopes, possessing the ability to always ski in control, while maintaining a high speed.

"She doesn't overpower the course, she works with what the course gives her," said UMass men's team captain James Green.

"She is very graceful but not in a flaky kind of way, but it's graceful in a very strong and skilled way," added Minutewoman captain Emily Shilletto.

Her teammates were impressed with how polished Taloumis was when she first joined the team and how it was so easy for her to adjust to the collegiate level.

"She is an amazing skier, she already knows what to do, we've helped her out a bit with the adjustments to college and team carnivals," said Green. "But she's just a naturally great skier."

"She was pretty much a rock star already," said Shilletto. "As far as actual performing, it'd be nice to say 'Yeah, we were great mentors,' but she's got a solid head on her shoulders."

Taloumis came to UMass with an incredible amount of experience. She has been skiing since she was 2-years-old and racing since she was seven. Before she enrolled in UMass, Taloumis competed in races in Colorado, Iceland, Austria, Chile, France and Germany.

She attended a ski racing academy in her hometown of Chicopee from seventh grade to the end of high school but doesn't consider herself any better than any of her teammates.

"I was mediocre in high school," said Taloumis. "Things didn't really start to click until senior year."

Taloumis mentioned her increased freedom as one reason her performance has been much better in college.

"I have more time to do stuff and a lot more freedom in regards to skiing and being able to decide my schedule," Taloumis said.

In addition to being one of the top performers on the hill, she has also become one of the most popular skiers on the team. Everyone describes her as having a very dry sense of humor and being among the best at keeping the team loose.

"She is definitely the funniest girl on the team and she is very good at picking you up after a bad run. She's quick to make you smile," said Shilletto.

Fox portrays her as someone who cracks a lot of jokes, but also someone who can lead by example.

The Minutewomen finished in third place overall this year in what Fox has described as one of the toughest divisions in collegiate skiing. But, the season isn't quite over. This weekend Taloumis will compete in both the Eastern Collegiate Ski Conference regionals and the individual races at the Middlebury Carnival. The team looks for big things from her in both events, and in future seasons to come.

After performing so well so early in her career, Taloumis will face high expectations for the rest of her college career, but everyone agrees they won't be too much of a task for her.

"She's a great girl who has brought a lot to the team and I think she has an amazing four years ahead of her," said Shilletto

Scott Feldman can be reached at sfeldman@student.umass.edu

It's GOOD to Be YOU! Events

EATING DISORDERS AWARENESS WEEK

"THIN"
Wednesday, Feb. 20, 5 – 7:30 p.m.
Campus Center, Room 917
Join the Women's Health Project to watch and talk about this HBO documentary, which tells the stories of four women being treated for eating disorders.

WEIGH YOUR SELF-ESTEEM
Monday, Feb. 25, 5:30 – 7 p.m.
Berkshire Dining Commons
Stop by our table for fun, interactive information on self-esteem, body image and eating disorders.

ANDREA'S VOICE
Monday, Feb. 25, 6 p.m.,
Franklin Patterson, Hampshire College
Tom and Doris Smeltzer share their journey through their daughter Andrea's eating disorder in this unique presentation.

HEALTHY EATING WORKSHOP
Tuesday, Feb. 26, 5 – 6 p.m.
Room 302, University Health Services
Hands-on activities and helpful information to get you thinking about what you're eating!

"SMASHING THE BEAUTY BOX"
Wednesday, Feb. 27, 7 – 8:30 p.m.
Malcolm X Cultural Center,
Berkshire Dining Commons
Author Rosie Molinary redefines beauty in this empowering presentation.

Sponsored by the Bilingual Collegiate Program; Everywoman's Center Counseling Services; Health Education at University Health Services; the Josephine White Eagle Cultural Center; the Malcolm X Cultural Center; and the Women of Color Leadership Network.

UMassAmherst

Make or break weekend for Mass Attack

Key series for UMass in Orono

By Jeremy Rice
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts hockey team has a chance to secure its postseason future this weekend with two games at Maine, who sit behind the Minutemen for the final spot in the Hockey East Tournament.

UMass (11-11-6, 6-10-5 Hockey East) has struggled since the New Year, but is 2-2 in its last four and needs to turn around its season in one of the toughest places to play in Hockey East.

Maine (8-17-3, 4-14-3 Hockey East) has lost its last seven games and has not had the season most expected. Senior goaltender Ben Bishop has still played well for the Black Bears, but the team has plummeted through the standings after making the Frozen Four last year and holding the No. 1 ranking during several points in the season.

For the Minutemen, this will be their longest road trip outside of the team's trip to Tampa, Fla., for the Lightning College Hockey Classic. That trip, however, netted UMass its first tournament championship and two victories over Top 10 teams, the thread by which its NCAA at-large bid hopes dangle.

"It's usually a good thing because the team gets to be together," UMass coach Don Cahoon said of the road trip. "Having a couple of meals and an overnight, or a couple of overnights in this case, it's usually good to get the team on the same page."

Maine is six points behind the Minutemen for the eighth and final playoff seed and would need a sweep to have any chance of catching the Maroon and White in the final two weeks of the regular season.

A win-hungry team playing a two-game home stand leaves little to be desired for the visiting squad, but Cahoon said he's seen a turnaround in his players in recent weeks, even though the wins are coming only slightly easier.

"I think we've actually played pretty well for a few weeks now," Cahoon said. "Obviously we've had a variety of results, which is bottom-line. But at the same time, that Northeastern game Friday night [a 2-1 loss] was a real good effort, and it stung not to come out of there with something."

Doing the little things better was Cahoon's solution to the team's scoring woes, and Saturday night in a 3-1 win over the Huskies, that theory appeared to hold true.

All three goals were the result of crisp passing, taking care of the puck and an acute awareness of where the other four skaters were on the ice.

However, the Minutemen still struggled to maintain possession of the puck, particularly in the third period and found clean entry into the offensive zone especially difficult.

"We focus on certain drills that we do and identifying certain things that they can do to extend the offense and sustain the forecheck to create more opportunities," Cahoon said. "I look at the team right now, and I say that we're practicing pretty well. We're getting good efforts in practice, and I like to think that good hockey is going to be the end result."

Ortiz back on ice

One noticeable absence on the ice Saturday was sophomore forward Will Ortiz. The left winger played in the loss Friday night and was called for a slashing penalty with 52 seconds remaining in regulation.

"He's ready to play this weekend, and I fully expect he'll be part of the weekend story, for sure," Cahoon said.

With freshmen Chase Langeraap and Michael Lecomte already not in the game, Ortiz' absence was made all the more noticeable. UMass had four freshman forwards in the game, three of which do not see regular ice time (leading scorer James Marcou was the other).

Jeremy Rice can be reached at jeremyr@student.umass.edu.

BRIAN TIEDEMANN/COLLEGIAN

Sophomore defenseman Justin Braun and the Minutemen head to Orono, Maine, this weekend for a pair of games with the Black Bears.

Domino's Pizza
AMHERST / HADLEY
413-256-8911
Rt 9 Across From Stop & Shop
Store Hours:
Open 11am-4am Thurs.-Sat.
11am -3am Sun.-Wed
Mt. Holyoke Location: 593-9500
GREAT ONLINE COUPONS
WWW.DOMINOS.COM
FREE BREADSTICKS
MONDAY, TUESDAY, WEDNESDAY
BUY ANY MEDIUM OR LARGE PIZZA AT MENU PRICE
GET ANY ORDER OF BREADSTICKS FREE
NOT GOOD WITH ANY OTHER SPECIALS
EXPIRES 5/26/08
LARGE UNLIMITED TOPPING PIZZA $10.99
NO DOUBLE TOPPINGS
EXPIRES 5/26/08
ANY LARGE SALAD
ANY BREADSTICKS
ANY 20 OZ DRINK
ONLY $7.99
1 PERSONAL PAN PIZZA
WITH 2 TOPPINGS +
10 WINGS OR KICKERS
ONLY $9.99
WE ACCEPT OCMP
Find Out More About autismspeaks.org

CINEMARK
The Best Seat In Town
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
367 Russell St. 413-587-4233
Schedule for Friday 2/22/2008 thru Thurs. 2/28/2008
Purchase Tickets @cinemark.com

Be Kind Rewind (PG-13)* 1:55 4:55 7:45 10:25
Charlie Bartlett (R)* 1:15 4:20 7:40 10:00
Vantage Point (PG-13)* 1:25 4:15 7:00 9:50
Definitely, Maybe (PG-13)* 1:20 4:00 7:35 10:15
Jumper (PG-13)* 1:00 4:05 7:10 9:35
Step Up 2 The Streets (PG-13)* 1:50 4:45 7:30 9:55
The Spiderwick Chronicles (PG)* 1:40 4:30 6:55 9:25
Fool's Gold (PG-13) 1:35 4:40 7:25 10:05
27 Dresses (PG-13) 1:10 4:10 7:05 9:45
Atonement (R) 1:30 4:25 7:20 10:10
The Eye (PG-13) 4:35 10:20
National Treasure: The Book Of Secrets (PG) 1:05 7:15
The Bucket List (PG-13) 1:45 4:30 7:35 10:00

NO PASSES NO SUPERSAVORS
TICKETS AND INFO AVAILABLE AT CINEMARK.COM

Lowe, Brower lead UMass to win in key A-10 showdown

Ford praises duo after victory in R.I.

By Eli Rosenwaike
Collegian Staff

KINGSTON, R.I. — Etienne Brower scored a career-high 26 points last night, keeping Massachusetts in the game against Rhode Island while teammates Ricky Harris and Gary Forbes struggled.

But it was the last five of those points — in a two-second span and on a single possession — in the game's final minute that propelled the Minutemen to an important victory over the Rams, 98-91, last night at the Ryan Center.

The victory gave UMass (17-9, 6-6 Atlantic 10) a season-series sweep of URI, but, more importantly for the Minutemen, puts them right back into the discussion for an at-large bid into the NCAA Tournament. The Rams have dropped four of their last five games, including two to UMass.

UMass	98
URI	91

With UMass up just one point with 1:14 left to play, Brower stole the ball away from URI's Kahiem Seawright and was fouled on a breakaway lay-up attempt. The shot missed, but an intentional foul was called, giving the Minutemen two foul shots and the ball back.

Brower took care of both ends for his team, converting both free throws and hitting a game-changing 3-point shot just after the in-bounds pass — giving UMass a 92-86 lead with 1:11 left.

UMass coach Travis Ford wasn't pleased with the decision by Brower to take the shot — rather than run out some clock — but loved the result.

"It's not necessarily the shot you want to take when the time is on your side and the score is on your side, but he's playing phenomenal basketball right now and if anybody is going to shoot it, I'd like for it to be him," Ford said after the game.

"Coach Ford said, 'no, no, no, no!' I don't know, I just shot it and it went in, so I guess I made the right play," Brower said, laughing.

Seemingly everything Brower did in the game was the right thing, as the senior forward hit 8-of-10 shots and five of his seven 3-point field goal attempts. He also grabbed a game-high eight rebounds.

Rhode Island (20-7, 6-6 A-10) never got within five points after Brower's 3-pointer. Will Daniels missed a free throw attempt, which would have cut the lead to four and all three Rams 3-point attempts afterward missed — with the final two failing to hit the rim.

"I thought it was a hard-fought battle, but we just turned the ball over too many times — at crucial times," URI coach Jim Baron said.

Much like the previous meeting between the teams on Feb. 14 in Amherst, Brower and Chris Lowe (21 points and 10 assists) helped lead the Minutemen to narrow victories despite the shooting struggles from Harris and Forbes.

The UMass duo combined to hit 9-of-34 shots, including 2-of-11 from the perimeter. Both players scored in double figures, however, with Forbes scoring 26 and Harris 14.

Lowe was efficient in both ways on offense, driving to the hoop for easy baskets when it was available and passing to the open teammate when it was called for. It was the third straight game for Lowe with 10-plus assists.

Both teams had four players reach double figures in scoring, but three of them for UMass scored over 20. Daniels (25 points) was the only such player for the Rams.

Eli Rosenwaike can be reached at erosenw@dailycollegian.com.

By Michael King
Collegian Staff

KINGSTON, R.I. — Entering last night's matchup with Rhode Island, the Massachusetts men's basketball boasted two of the Atlantic 10's top scorers. In the end, senior forward Gary Forbes and sophomore shooting guard Ricky Harris nearly matched their combined scoring averages.

However, it was the production of senior forward Etienne Brower and junior point guard Chris Lowe that made the difference in the Minutemen's 98-91 win over Rhode Island.

In the first meeting with Rhode Island two weeks earlier, Brower registered a career-high 17 rebounds, while Lowe scored 23 points.

But last night, Brower boosted the Maroon and White with his offense and Lowe with court vision and passing ability. Brower's 26 points marked another career high.

It became evident by the end of the first half why Brower had logged a team-high 18 minutes during the period. While playing the entire second half, none of his accomplishments were more important than the intentional foul he drew during the final two minutes. The senior forced a backcourt steal and converted both free-throw attempts.

With the Minutemen controlling the ball, Brower sank a 3-pointer from the right corner immediately off the inbound pass. The basket all but sealed the victory for UMass.

"It was not necessarily the shot you want to take when the clock and score are both on your side," UMass coach Travis Ford said. "He's playing phenomenal basketball right now and if anybody's going to shoot, I would like it to be him. But it's not the shot you want when you have a whole shot clock left for you."

Meanwhile, Lowe's ability to run the UMass offense was his most valuable contribution, even though the junior scored 21 points. Last night's win was Lowe's third consecutive game with at least 10 assists.

His unique ability to get his teammates involved while having the confidence to take an important shot made the point guard's presence felt all over the court — especially with the game on the line.

After URI executed a 6-0 run to retake the lead from the Minutemen with fewer than three minutes remaining, Lowe calmly regrouped his teammates while cautiously bringing the ball over half court and calling the team's next play.

Several seconds later the ball went out of play, triggering an official stoppage. Out of the timeout, Lowe ran free of his defender and cut toward the basket, receiving the ball for an easy two points.

Lowe too forced a steal during the final two minutes. The junior tipped the ball away from Ram point guard Parfait Bitee and the resulting UMass possession allowed the Minutemen to permanently retake the lead.

Unlike the team's two leading scorers, Brower and Lowe scored their points while missing only five baskets. In contrast, Forbes and Harris took a cumulative 34 shots and made eight fewer field goals.

There was a time during the season when Brower's poor shooting performances were killing the team. Against Vanderbilt in January, Brower shot 2-of-15 from the field. Since turning the corner offensively near the beginning of the Atlantic 10 schedule, Brower has evolved into an important scorer for the Minutemen. His 80 percent field goal percentage is a far cry from a few months earlier.

Junior Chris Lowe scored 21 points and had 10 assists in UMass's 98-91 win at URI.

Both players' exceptional performances in each victory over the Rams drew praise from Rhode Island coach Jim Baron after Thursday's game.

"I thought Brower stepped up and made some great shots — he's an excellent player," Baron said. "He's made himself into a very good player, he's very intense and really aggressive. Lowe can really take it off the dribble and just makes good decisions."

Michael King can be reached at mking@student.umass.edu

"SMASHING THE BEAUTY BOX"
with
ROSIE MOLINARY
Author, Hijas Americanas: Beauty, Body Image and Growing Up Latina

SPONSORED BY:
Bilingual Collegiate Program
Everywoman's Center
Counseling Services
Josephine White Eagle Cultural Center
Malcolm X Cultural Center
University Health Services – Health Education
Women of Color Leadership Network

An enlightening, empowering presentation about beauty, body image and breaking free!

Wednesday, Feb. 27, 2008
7 – 8:30 p.m.
Malcolm X Cultural Center, Berkshire DC
FREE ADMISSION
UMASS AMHERST

Comix

"I MAY NOT AGREE WITH YOUR OPINION, BUT I WILL SMACK YOU IN THE FACE IF YOU OPEN YOUR MOUTH AGAIN"

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

APT. FOR RENT

Montreal Weekend From $99 Complete. Best Hotels. Best Prices. montrealexpress.net 781-979-9001

EMPLOYMENT

Studio 1,2,3,4 bedrooms available Going Fast, Still guaranteeing for Fall Semester ALL UTILITIES INCLUDED! Call ASAP 413-256-0741

Hobart Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, phone (internet access), in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for June and September. NO FEES. 253-7879 www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Free Ride to Church & back in Dwight Chapel Van. Be at Haigis Mall @ 10:00am or Converse Hall @ 10:20am Sundays. www.dwightchapel.org See you there!

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520

Who said there is no such things as a free lunch? Small roominghouse near UMASS looking for meal clean-up help, in exchange for free home-cooked lunch. Call Bobby 413-549-5159

Put up Posters! Through summer, car, sell, commitment needed. Up to $12/hr w/bonus. 20 hrs between Mon-Wed, excellent communicator, fast-paced, punctual, resume and formal cover letter to postering@artspromo.org. Hiring ASAP.

French speakers! Rent us your ears! $12/hr for participating in listening experiments. Contact the phonetics lab. phonetics_lab.linguist.umass.edu 545-6837

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

SERVICES

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthright.org.

APT. FOR RENT

Concerned About Your Eating? Do you eat too little? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic, 577-5101

TAPESTRY HEALTH providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling &rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable, Safe. 413-548-9992. 27 Pray St. Amherst. www.tapestry-health.org

SERVICES

What are you doing for Spring Break? Want a cooler Spring Break than the typical Cancun? Travel to Amsterdam, Paris, Italy, or Prague and get a FREE Ipod shuffle and $100 off! Contact your Contiki Umass Reps at cbordona@student.umass.edu or cromano@student.umass.edu or go to the STA Office for more info! Be a traveler not a tourist!!

Montreal Weekend From $99 Complete. Best Hotels. Best Prices. montrealexpress.net 781-979-9001

ACROSS
1 Maxwell or Lanchester
5 Exploits
9 Leather band
14 Like a drum head
15 Church part
16 Clan
17 Provo's place
18 Tilled soil
19 Like some cereals
20 Dedicate
22 Convicted criminals' desires
24 Foes
26 Actual
27 All over
29 Go-betweens
33 Circle part
36 Spooky
38 Wipe out
39 Entrance
41 French writer
43 Cinch
44 Ed who played Lou Grant
46 Flat-top hills
48 Impressive skill
49 In tatters
51 Monica of tennis
53 Shoshones
55 Ocean motion with the wind
59 Type of phone
63 Inflationary shape
64 Indian, for one
65 Smile expansively
67 Unconscious state
68 Seething
69 Zhivago's beloved
70 Windsor, e.g.
71 Heated in the microwave
72 Utopia
73 "Auld Lang ___"

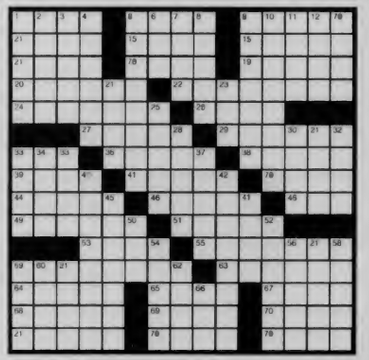
DOWN
1 Musical study
2 Make tardy
3 Debonair
4 Receiving callers
5 Ignored
6 ___ Paulo
7 Of all time
8 Passover feast
9 Computer capacity
10 Movie promos
11 Actress Moreno
12 First victim
13 Writing implements
21 Fork part
23 Afternoon affair
25 Medicinal fluid
28 Ten-cent pieces
30 Wendy's dog
31 Romanov title
32 Calendar abbr
33 Hebrew month
34 Santa ___, CA
35 Veil
37 Stand for Grandma Moses
40 Adjust to specifications
42 Vendor
45 Fixed, as a piano
47 Doze
50 Dolores ___ Rio
52 Adheres
54 Weaselike mammal
56 Intriguing incongruity
57 Friend of Pythias
58 Make merry
59 Nickel or dime
60 Hose hue
61 Plumber's pursuit
62 Enjoy a novel
66 Will be, now

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Still looking for the PERFECT summer job?

We CAN help!



Grotonwood and Oceanwood two Christina summer camps looking for qualified college students to be a part of a life-changing ministry this summer.

SPECIAL NEEDS UNIT LEADER - The perfect position for a Special Education major that wants to gain more experience working with special needs adults, and develop their leadership skills. Summer salary of $3,100 + room/board.

COUNSELORS - This is an awesome opportunity to make a difference in the lives of kids this summer. Challenge the campers to grow while developing your leadership and teaching skills. Summer salary of $2800+ room/board.

For more information and an application, go to our website: www.grotonwood.org and look under the "Summer staff" tab.

Grotonwood- Oceanwood
167 Prescott St
Groton MA 01450
978-448-5763
office@grotonwood.org

Continuing & Professional Education
UMassAmherstOutreach

Summer Session 2008

No Matter where you are...

Session I: June 2 - July 10
Session II: July 14 - Aug 20

Online Gen Ed's Small Classes Great Faculty

PLAN AHEAD!
UMassULearn.net

Corny on the Cob By John Costello and Amanda Graetsch

This is the doodle box.

Submit your doodles to comics@dailycollegian.com

In my free time, I like to do a little math.

								3
4				6		1		7
	7	2			4		8
	4	7						2
1			5		6			9
9						7	6
	3		1			2	7
7		8		3				5
2

Horoscopes

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
From the desk of D. Trump: The comb-over will do wonderful things for you this weekend as it has always done for me.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Your academic advisor knows nothing. Seek guidance under Grandma Willow.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Make a quick buck by selling one of your kindeys on the blackmarket. Everybody loves an organ donor.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
News of improper nasal extraction techniques travels fast. Even if you're just scratching an itch, grab a tissue.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
You can't have chemistry without chemicals; that's the reason why people drink too much at parties.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
If your conversations weren't so boring, people wouldn't want to vomit when you SCREAM INTO YOUR CELL PHONE!

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Stroll into the party like your name is El Nino then start singing songs by the legendary band Sum 41.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
You can't just throw your problems on other people's shoulders, you must place them in a sneaky and gentle manner.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Your coworkers are very stressed. Help ease their troubles by rendering them unconcious with chloroform.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Unlike superglue, tape is a fun and reversible way to seal someone's eyelids shut.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Draw upon the dancing montage in "Dirty Dancing" to find your plan for the weekend. Dancing on a felled tree, perhaps?

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
NOSE HAIR ALERT! NOSE HAIR ALERT!

Retro Geek By Steven Dickenson and Todd Clark

Quote of the Weekend

"No computer, no gadget, no trickery. I am an animal, it is a plant. I will beat the weed!"

— Matthew McConaughey

Caption Contest

Winning Caption Submitted by: Emily Chang

Next week's contest will start on Monday.
See the picture and submit captions at www.dailycollegian.com/caption

Hm, so if I combine this muffin with my DC hot cocoa and mix them in the correct proportions...maybe then I'll be able to play this sax in tune.

Illustre By Heather Mays

SPORTS WEEKEND

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 22, 2008 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

INSIDE: MASS ATTACK DROP PAIR TO BLACK BEARS | PAGE 8

THE MASSACHUSETTS
DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

PARTLY CLOUDY : HI: 43 LO: 28 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM MONDAY, FEBRUARY 25, 2008

IVAW starts local chapter

BY LUCAS CORREIA
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The activist organization Iraq Veterans Against the War recently formed a chapter in Amherst.

IVAW is a national organization made up of Iraq veterans and active soldiers from all military branches who have served the United States military since September 11, 2001.

The organization was founded in July 2004 in Boston at the annual convention of Veterans for Peace (VFP) and has since established a purpose to allow veterans as well as active servicemen and women against the war to speak out. It currently has over 800 members in 48 states, Washington D.C., Canada and many bases overseas.

IVAW's executive director, who is a former Sergeant in the Colorado Army National Guard, said in a statement, "Our members are speaking out because we were there. We saw with our own eyes what this occupation really looks like. It is our duty to bring an end to a war that has cost our generation so much."

Amherst chapter Treasurer Mike Van Valkenburg explained in an e-mail, "The Amherst chapter of IVAW was founded on January 28, 2008 by local veterans who decided to come together to follow our consciences by publicly acknowledging the impact of the occupations in Iraq and Afghanistan."

IVAW was founded on the principle that soldiers have the right to refuse a war they consider to be illegal.

"All in service to this country swear an oath to protect and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, both foreign and domestic," states IVAW's Web site. "However, they are prosecuted if they object to serve in a war they see as illegal under our Constitution."

Van Valkenburg said, "When a war is Illegal that means that orders to fight in support of it are also

See IVAW on page 2

Weekend power outage

CAITLIN KORANDA/COLLEGIAN

Students talk to Max Detmer from Webster who was stuck in an elevator for over 20 minutes in complete darkness during the power outage on Saturday.

Students and state react to violent acts

BY KATIE HUSTON
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The University of Massachusetts campus has been thrust into the spotlight – and it's not a rosy glow.

On Feb. 1, an alleged attack by several lacrosse players sent three men to Cooley Dickinson Hospital. On Feb. 2, a student was charged with an attempted rape and murder in a dorm room in Southwest residential area. And a double stabbing with racial overtones took place in a nearby dorm just one day later.

A front-page Boston Globe article on Thursday, Feb. 21 highlighted the "grim police blotter" over the past three weeks, bringing national attention to the issue.

However, some students don't feel that the recent string of violent incidents paints an accurate picture of the University climate.

"From my personal experience, I've never felt scared. I've walked around campus at midnight before," said Dhara Marek, a senior and a resident assistant in Southwest. "I would say UMass is a safe campus and that security and police do a good job of making students feel comfortable."

Still, incidents like this make her "a little nervous."

"These incidents happening together in a very close time is definitely scary," she said.

Freshman Yair Schatz, who lives in Van Meter dorm in Central residential area, said he's not worried.

"I don't feel unsafe on campus. Generally UMass is very safe," he said. "I think the incidents have been chance occurrences. I hope that it won't happen again."

Senior Eric Lamy, who lived in Southwest for two years, also said he felt safe when he lived on campus.

"I never felt unsafe," he said. "That's true whether I was at parties in Southwest or whether I was walking at two in the morning to my car and back."

Violence at a large school is inevitable, he said, but hardly representative.

"I think what's happening recently is that it's coming to the public consciousness a lot more," he said. "The fact that there were multiple instances in such a short period of time made it seem as though this is the general state on campus, rather than the exception to what is otherwise a pretty safe atmosphere."

This isn't the first time campus violence has come under scrutiny. In a 2005 ABC Primetime report, among the nation's large universities, UMass Amherst was named the campus with the highest rate of violent crime, a claim the administration vigorously refuted.

And post-sporting event riots, with a record of turning ugly, have also drawn media attention. A December 2006 riot, after UMass lost the Division I-AA championship game, caused an estimated $100,000 in damage.

With the renewed focus on violence, some students fear that the

See VIOLENCE on page 2

Study says adolescents at a higher risk for cigarette addiction

BY BEN WILLIAMS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A recent report in The Journal of Family Practice said that college students could be at a greater risk of being addicted to cigarettes than they know.

According to the New York Times, the report, by Dr. Joseph R. DiFranza, from the University of Massachusetts Medical School in Worcester said that while adults often feel the need to smoke 45 minutes to an hour after a cigarette, adolescents can often go far longer between cigarettes, but that doesn't mean they are any less addicted.

"We have long assumed that kids got addicted because they were smoking 5-10 cigarettes a day, now we know that they risk addiction after trying a cigarette just once," Dr. DiFranza told the Times.

This addiction, or "loss of autonomy," has been tested a number of times, including three New Zealand studies with over 25,000 adolescent smokers, in which it was found that 25 to 30 percent who had smoked for the first time in the previous month already had some loss of autonomy, according to the article.

The Times reports that Robin Mermelstiend, director of the Center for Health Behavior Research at the University of Illinois said that while DiFranza's message was important "the vast majority of teenagers who try one or two cigarettes don't go on to become smokers."

"The key point really is that genetically the brain activity some people are predisposed to become addicted," said Wilmore Webley, assistant professor of microbiology at UMass, who's used DiFranza's research in class to teach students about smoking. "The article said if you enjoy your first cigarette your likelihood to be addicted is much higher than someone who is not happy with it. The type of people who initially get that high could very well get addicted that first cigarette."

Webley said there are a lot of social smokers, those who usually just smoke occasionally in social situations like parties, at UMass, and the trend is no different with them.

"At UMass one of the most interesting things is that people who report they are social smokers, say 'I can stop anytime, I just smoke on the weekend at parties.' Something interesting is when I polled them; people who thought they were social smokers had a very difficult time quitting. That suggests that people think they're addicted and just didn't realize."

Senior Chris Sullivan, a 22-year-old psychology major at UMass said a lot of why people start smoking in college can be related to alcohol.

He said he's a social smoker and "it's also a college thing, there's a validation of a lifestyle in college that includes drinking, and also smoking for some. The funny thing is everyone says 'it's not going to happen to me.'"

"I think there's something about smoking that almost every smoker would agree," said Sullivan. "You don't really want to smoke, the second you realize you want to smoke, you realize you don't because you know what the stigma is and you know what that means for your life."

Webley and DiFranza both emphasized that getting less kids to smoke has a lot to do with getting information out to them.

"Coupled with increasing vigilance about younger kids getting cigarettes and increasing price, people need to give them a straight up talk about what you're really doing because if you never start smoking, you never have to worry about quitting," said Webley. "Any time you can get someone who is a smoker stop and think about it, any day you can make some one stop think 'should I be smoking?' is a success ... that is a day we win."

Ben Williams can be reached at bwilliam@student.umass.edu

UMass defeats Hofstra, 8-4, in season opener

BY JOE MELONI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Senior Fred Federico's third-quarter goal made it perfectly clear that, despite the current controversy surrounding the No. 20 Massachusetts men's lacrosse team, the 2008 season opener belonged to the Minutemen.

Frederico's score followed two quick goals from Hofstra's Kevin Ford to cut UMass's lead to 5-3 and bring the Pride (0-1, 0-1 ECAC) back into the game.

Junior goalkeeper Doc Schneider made 18 saves, and junior attack Tim Balise scored four goals as the Minutemen (1-0, 1-0 ECAC) defeated No. 15 Hofstra, 8-4, Saturday afternoon at Garber Field.

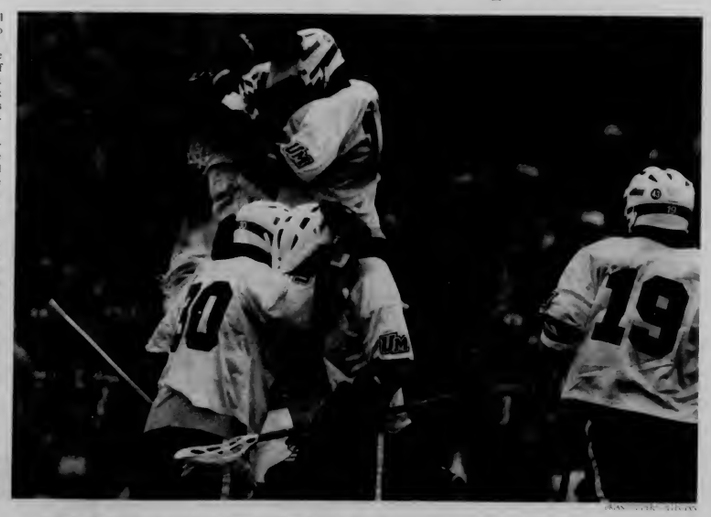
"Every win is a big win. We scratched out a win today. Against the teams that we play, they are all big wins," UMass coach Greg Cannella said.

"I'm pleased with our effort. We had real good focus throughout the first half. I thought we got a little out of control there in the second half. Maybe we were a little tired, I'm not sure. But we're doing our best."

Neither team dominated possession in the first half, but the Minutemen were more successful in creating scoring chances. The game's first goal, a turnaround shot over the shoulder of Hofstra goalkeeper Danny Orlando from Balise, was born from the aggressive play of sophomore Bobby Hayes.

Hayes scooped up a loose ball and quickly found Balise alone to the right of Orlando.

Another turnover led to the second UMass goal, the first of freshman Peter McNichols' career. McNichols and Ryan Hantverk were featured heavily in the UMass offensive rotation in their first-career games.



"These guys have been in practice for five months now with the fall into the spring," Cannella said of his freshmen. "We knew Pete McNichols, Zach Rogers and Ryan Hantverk could play. Whether they were going to be tentative or nervous, who knows?"

The success of the young players aside, their inexperience allowed the Pride back into the game once the second half began. The Minutemen turned the ball over nine times in the third quarter, and careless passing caused most of the mishaps.

Hofstra took advantage of the possessions at 9:18 of the third when Ford took a pass from Michael Colleluori to the right of Schneider. He quickly circled the goal and fired a shot over Schneider's left shoulder.

Sixty-two seconds later, with the Minutemen down a man as a result of a brutal Stephen Zorkers cross-check, Ford struck again. This time a shot from the top of the restraining box found its way through a throng of players stationed in front of the

See M. LACROSSE on page 6

Tim Balise (right) looks on while his teammates celebrate a goal in Saturday's season-opening victory, 8-4, over No. 15 Hofstra in Amherst. Balise led the way with four goals, helping coach Greg Cannella and the Minutemen forget about the recent controversy surrounding the team.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 90

113 Campus Center, University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Exter
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Tim McCall
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Ryan McAskill
COMICS EDITOR Adam Seagin
EDITORIAL EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Rice
FEATURES EDITOR Dave Humphreys
PHOTO EDITOR Michael Phillis
WEB EDITOR James Hale
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Svenicak
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Marsea Whooten
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Stephanie McPherson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Skye McIntyre
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Garber
ASSISTANT NEWS Michael King
ASSISTANT NEWS Kate Olesin
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Seabury
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Connors
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Meloni
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenwaike
ASSISTANT PHOTO Brian Tedder
ARTS WEB EDITOR Michelle Abbasciano
EDITORIAL WEB EDITOR Lori Walcutt
NEWS WEB EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS WEB EDITOR Steve Gaines

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE ACADEMIC YEAR EXCEPT DURING VACATIONS AND EXAMINATION PERIODS. THE COLLEGIAN IS AN INDEPENDENT NEWSPAPER OPERATED BY STUDENTS AT THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS AMHERST. THE OPINIONS EXPRESSED ON THE EDITORIAL PAGE ARE THOSE OF THE COLLEGIAN'S BOARD OF EDITORS OR THE WRITER. THE COLLEGIAN IS A MEMBER OF THE ASSOCIATED COLLEGIATE PRESS AND THE NEW ENGLAND NEWSPAPER ASSOCIATION. THE COLLEGIAN IS PRINTED IN SPRINGFIELD, MASSACHUSETTS AND DISTRIBUTED IN AMHERST AND THE SURROUNDING COMMUNITIES.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Will McGuinness

COPY EDITOR
Nichole Amaral

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

Vets against war organization to speak in D.C. this March illegal, and it is our assertion as an organization that soldiers and Marines have a right to refuse serving in support of the war in Iraq due to its illegality."

IVAW from page 1

The organization calls for immediate withdrawal of troops from Iraq and reparations for damages inflicted on the nation and full benefits (including adequate physical and mental health care) for returning servicemen and women.

The next step IVAW is taking to broadcast its message is an event called Winter Soldier: Iraq and Afghanistan. Through this gathering, soldiers will give first hand accounts of their experiences during the War on Terror.

The event is inspired by the political movement Winter Soldier, which took place in 1971. In this case, veterans of the Vietnam War voiced similar concerns.

"Once again, we are fighting for the soul of our country. We will demonstrate our patriotism by speaking out with honor and integrity instead of blindly following failed policy. Winter Soldier is a difficult but essential service to our country," says the organization's Web site.

The event will take place in Washington, D.C. from Thursday March 13 to Sunday March 16.

Veterans opposed to the war site the effect it is having on the economy, the global image of the U.S. and the concern that American troops are not stopping terrorism. The organization also claims on their Web site "the Iraq war is based on lies and deception."

"Our military is being exhausted by repeated deployments, involuntary extensions, and activations of the Reserve and National Guard," states IVAW's Web site.

According to the site, programs such as Stop-Loss and the Individual Ready Reserve (IRR) are forcing soldiers to commit to multiple tours of duty overseas. The site states that 25 percent of U.S. soldiers in Iraq are serving at least their third tour of duty, 50 percent are serving their second tour and the remaining 25 percent are serving their first.

The New York Times reported that Stop-Loss has been used to extend the tours of over 45,000 soldiers. The policy was originally initiated on September 14, 2001 by President Bush in an effort to prevent terrorist attacks from a "continuing and immediate threat." The policy has been questioned by members of the military since 2004.

The IRR recalls veterans and reserve military personnel to active duty after they have adjusted to a civilian lifestyle. The policy functions as part of the Presidential Reserve Callup Authority, which is a provision of public law. This provision allows the president of the U.S. to activate no more than 200,000 soldiers. The IRR consists of 30,000 of these soldiers; the rest are recalled through the Selected Reserve.

"These institutions exist and continue to be enforced due to a lack of pressure put on the politicians," said Van Valkenburg.

Lucas Correia can be reached at ljcorrei@student.umass.edu.

Campus incidents may change image recent incidents reflect poorly on the University.

VIOLENCE from page 1

"This is just a blow to the reputation that we've worked so hard to improve over the years," said freshman Matt Stranberg.

"Even if people view it as a high standard of education, the violence gives off a notion that it's unorganized and poorly run, so the violence illegitimates its prestige among other universities."

Freshman Elizabeth Maynard thinks some students might think twice about attending.

"If kids are coming here on tours and it [violence] is always on the front page of the Collegian that lacrosse players are arrested, that wouldn't make me want to come here," she said.

However, although Lamy also thinks the incidents "reflect poorly on the school," he doubts there has been any change in the number of people who plan to attend.

"I don't think that because we were written down as being this violent campus that people suddenly stopped applying to UMass," he said. "[Violence] is on an individual basis – it has nothing to do with the culture of the school."

It's important to prevent more violence, students say, but Lamy does not think increased police presence is the answer.

"We could be out there spending all of the campus police's time trying to pat down everyone who goes into a dorm room, or trying to install metal detectors," he said. "But just trying to make it appear more safe is not going to do enough, in my estimation, to stop anyone who has the mind to commit a violent act."

Tony Udell, a STPEC major who lives off-campus, said perhaps more public forums, like the one held last week by the Student Government Association and the Office of ALANA Affairs, will help.

"It's better that you overanalyze the incidents than not," he said. "Clearly there is a coarsening trend that we'll have to come to grips with at some point. Maybe more public forums are the answer."

Michael King contributed reporting to this article.

Katie Huston can be reached at managingeditor.a.dailycollegian.com.

Ralph Nader announces run for presidency

BY HOPE YEN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Ralph Nader on Sunday announced a fresh bid for the White House, criticizing the top contenders as too close to big business and dismissing the possibility that his third-party candidacy could tip the election to Republicans.

The longtime consumer advocate is still loathed by many Democrats who accuse him of costing Al Gore the 2000 election.

Nader said most people are disenchanted with the Democratic and Republican parties due to a prolonged Iraq war and a shaky economy. He also blamed tax and other corporate-friendly policies under the Bush administration that he said have left many lower- and middle-class people in debt.

"You take that framework of people feeling locked out, shut out, marginalized, disrespected," he said. "You go from Iraq, to Palestine-Israel, from Enron to Wall Street, from Katrina to the bungling of the Bush administration, to the complicity of the Democrats in not stopping him on the war, stopping him on the tax cuts."

Nader, who turns 74 later this week, announced his candidacy on NBC's "Meet the Press."

In a later interview with The Associated Press, he rejected the notion of himself as a spoiler candidate, saying the electorate will not vote for a "pro-war John McCain." He also predicted his campaign would do better than in 2004, when he won just 0.3 percent of the vote as an independent.

"This time we're ready for them," said Nader of the Democratic Party lawsuits that kept him off the ballot in some states.

Democratic candidates Barack Obama and Hillary Rodham Clinton quickly sought to portray Nader's announcement as having little impact.

"Obviously, it's not helpful to whomever our Democratic nominee is. But it's a free country," said Clinton, who called Nader's announcement a "passing fancy."

Obama dismissed Nader as a perennial presidential campaigner. "He thought that there was no difference between Al Gore and George Bush, and eight years later I think people realize that Ralph did not know what he was talking about," Obama added.

Republican Mike Huckabee welcomed Nader into the race.

"I think it always would probably pull votes away from the Democrats, not the Republicans," the former Arkansas governor said on CNN.

Nader said Obama's and Clinton's lukewarm response was not surprising given that both political parties typically treat third-party candidates as "second-class citizens." Nader said he will decide in the coming days whether to run as an independent, Green Party candidate or in some other third party.

Pointing a finger at Republicans, he described McCain as a candidate for "perpetual war" and said he welcomed the support of Republican conservatives "who don't like the war in Iraq, who don't like taxpayer dollars wasted, and who don't like the Patriot Act and who treasure their rights of privacy."

"If the Democrats can't landslide the Republicans this year, they ought to just wrap up," Nader added.

Join a company where you'll have the flexibility to reach your goals.

Whatever your career goals, you'll find a path that helps you reach them at Ernst & Young. We've created a flexible work environment that provides opportunities for managing your personal and professional growth and success.

Visit us at ey.com/us/careers and our Facebook.com group.

FORTUNE 100 BEST COMPANIES TO WORK FOR 2008

Assurance • Tax • Transactions • Advisory

ERNST & YOUNG
Quality In Everything We Do

© 2008 ERNST & YOUNG LLP

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
EDITORIAL OPINION
"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself"
- Sir Salman Rushdie
MONDAY, FEBRUARY 25, 2008 EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Required class: Islam 101

Sada Farah

There's been a lot of talk about Muslims and Islam in the media lately, with the reprinting of the Danish cartoons. We can debate what the newspaper's intentions were, but for whatever reasons the newspaper decided to reprint the cartoon, one thing is clear and that is those cartoons were not only offensive to radical or fundamental Muslims but also to the moderate Muslim majority.

Now what does that mean? We will now go into what I like to call Islam 101. This is very necessary considering the shortage of maps in the U.S. and the fact that mostly people do not even know basic facts about non-Western peoples and countries. In the same way that Africa is not a country but rather a continent of 53 countries of people who do not speak African but instead over 2,000 different languages. The Muslim world is not homogeneous. Muslims do not all live in the Middle East, and all Middle Easterners are not Muslims and Arab. This is just the basics, not including economic, social, linguistic and cultural differences in the "Muslim World."

Now when you think "Muslim," what image pops into your head? I can't assume what you're thinking, but the images shown by the media revolve around turbans, camels, violent mobs, bombs and terrorists. Now let's use some real facts to be able to envision the real Muslim world. One-fifth of the world population shares Islam as an ethical tradition, and Muslims are the majority in 57 nations. The world's largest Muslim population resides in Indonesia with over 200 million. Bangladesh, Pakistan and India account for another 400 million Muslims. Over 100 million Muslims live in Turkey and the Turkic Central Asian republics, well over 100 million Muslims are Chinese and Sub-Saharan Africa accounts for several-hundred million Muslims. Over 50 countries of the world have Muslim majority populations. And nearly one-third of the world's Muslims live as minorities, for instance in Europe, North America and Latin America. It is important to note that the world's fastest growing Muslim populations are found in Europe and the United States where they are the second or third largest religious communities.

Islam is first and foremost a religion based on monotheism. It is a part of the Abrahamic tradition along with Judaism and Christianity. Its prophets are the same as those of its monotheistic counterparts, as are its basic teachings and values. But Islam as a religion is organized primarily on the basis of law. Like Judaism, it places more emphasis on practice than on doctrine. Interestingly, in fact, Jews and Muslims observe very similar laws concerning diet, cleanliness or purity and marriage, among other things.

However, Islamic law is also diverse. Muslims are also extremely diverse in terms of culture and ethnicity. Arab, Persian, Turkish, Indian, Chinese, African, European, Euro-American, Latino, African-American are all highly distinct cultures. What is more, no individual culture is monolithic. Every cultural family manifests differences between urban and rural societies, for instance, and between wealthy and poor, and educated and uneducated. Take the case of Pakistan. The country has nearly 150-million people, representing several distinct ethnicities and languages, two-thirds of whom are illiterate and the majority of whom live in rural conditions, many at the level of bare subsistence. Yet Pakistan has also produced one of the Muslim world's three female prime ministers alongside Turkey, Bangladesh and Indonesia.

Muslims do not all live in the Middle East, and all Middle Easterners are not Muslims and Arab.

Perhaps nowhere is the diversity of Islam more evident than in the United States. The first mosque in America was built in Maine in 1919 by Eastern European Muslims, and since that time the population of Muslims has increased steadily. Part of the increase of Muslim population results from immigration; American Muslims come from around the globe and therefore include Sunnis, Shias and Sufis. But the American Muslim population also includes many converts from the Euro-American, Latin American and African-American populations. Within the African-American Muslim population, as well, there is unique diversity. The vast majority of African-American Muslims follow mainstream Sunni teachings and practice. A minority, however, are members of a uniquely American approach to Islam that are represented by the Nation of Islam. The Nation of Islam offers its followers a view of humanity and divinity that is rejected by most Muslims due to its apparent lack of egalitarianism and monotheism.

Perhaps more significant than all the ethnic, cultural, legal and sectarian diversity within Islam, however, is its ideological diversity. Like all religious communities, Islam encompasses people whose views range from extremely traditional to fundamentalist to mystical to highly progressive. While all Americans know there are Muslims who rationalize their terrorism through religion, few are aware that the vast majority of Muslims utterly condemn terrorism. There are Muslims who condemn homosexuality, and there are Muslim gay-rights activists. There are Muslims who condemn family planning and those who support it. In short, as in any international religious community with multiple millions of adherents, there is little upon which all Muslims agree beyond the most basic tenet of faith: "There is no god but God, and Muhammad is the messenger of God."

Taking all of these facts into account, it is clear that the media has been misrepresenting Islam. If Indonesia, a country in Southeast Asia, holds the largest Muslim population of any country, why is it that we almost never hear about Indonesia in the news when Islam and Muslims are being discussed? Why is it that we hear all this talk about the incompatibility of Islam with democracy but never hear about the democratically elected female leader of Indonesia, Megawati Sukarnoputri, or Turkey which is seen as the most "Western" nation in the Muslim world?

Even Pakistan, which is seen as radical and fundamentalist, elected Benazir Bhutto multiple times as Prime Minister. Could it be because that is not what the typical ethnocentric image of a Muslim, as backwards, camel-riding and female-oppressing, is? The Arab world is not synonymous with the Muslim World, even though that is what we see in the media. If anything, the media is doing a disservice to the world, creating more alienation and animosity in the third world by depicting Muslim people, their cultures and religions in a way that is simply inaccurate, simplistic and sometimes, as was the case with the Danish cartoons, completely offensive.

Sada Farah is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at sfarah@student.umass.edu.

When conservation takes too much energy

Ted Rogers

You know that sticky, soy based stuff they put all over the walkways before it snows here? There's nothing on it at the school's Web site, but I'm pretty sure it's put down so people don't slip. On one hand, I think it's kind of cool that they're using something that's natural and is biodegradable. On the other hand, it smells like old, funky teriyaki sauce and is terrible at actually working.

They put the stuff down right before the last couple of snowstorms we've had. After a few inches of snow, it's like no one even bothered to put it down at all. Like I said, it's good that the stuff is biodegradable and okay for the planet. That conflicts heavily, however, with my desire not to break some bone in my butt.

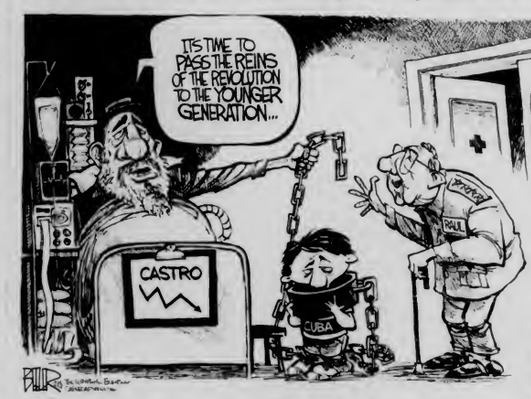
I really like this planet. I like penguins, icecaps and people who like me for liking them. I will admit, though, that sometimes those man-made chemicals really do work better. I live on Orchard hill; and although I know the environment appreciates not getting salted, I could have used it. I think it's kind of funny that something that is better for the environment doesn't actually work all that well for the people in it. I don't think it's so funny when I realize these same green yet trouble-some things come up on the national scale.

The gas alternative, ethanol, is a perfect example of that. Everyone promotes corn-based ethanol for a variety of reasons. Environmentalists like it because it burns cleaner and does some carbon-scrubbing in the growing process of production. Agribusiness likes it because it means growing even larger amounts of tasteless corn for even more profits.

I think it's kind of funny that something that is better for the environment doesn't actually work all that well for the people in it.

The government likes it because Agribusiness likes it and because ethanol would help to ease our dependence on foreign oil. Here's the thing: as a green fuel, corn-based ethanol is sorely lacking.

Although anybody will tell you that ethanol burns cleaner and reduces greenhouse gasses, there are a couple facts that no one really pays attention to. First, ethanol is actually worse for the environment than gasoline, in terms of carbon dioxide output. Growing corn does take some carbon out of the atmosphere, but the distillation processes and transport of the finished product actually outweighs burning plain gas. It's also a bad thing that big Agribusinesses would run the production. After driving small American farmers out of business, big agriculture companies took to planting one crop over vast expanses of land. This not only leeches the soil, but it also destroys natural habitats in the process.



There's a human cost to all this too. The Swiss-based World Conservation Union estimates that you could take the same amount of corn used to fill up an SUV's tank with ethanol and use it to feed someone for a year. Brazil, the world's leader in ethanol production, needs to use more land to feed its habit. Fabio Feldmen, a Brazilian environmentalist, said "the cane plantations are the size of European states," referring to sugarcane, the ethanol crop of choice in Brazil. I'm not saying we shouldn't try to find a more reliable and greener fuel than gas, but maybe we shouldn't be so quick to jump on the ethanol handwagon.

Another example of green technology gone sour that hits closer to home is the Cape Wind project. There is major talk of putting up many large windmills out on Nantucket sound. According to people who like the project, Cape Wind would reduce Cape Cod's dependence on conventional dirty power. In addition to these perks, the wind turbines wouldn't cause major environmental impact and would block Nantucket millionaires' expensive view of the sound. There is a downside, though. The wind farm would only generate a fraction of the energy required for the Cape. The rest would still come from regular power plants.

My problem with this is that I don't think we should settle for a fraction of the power being green. Wind power, unlike ethanol, is a silver bullet against global warming and the like. There are no emissions of any sort, and few downsides to the environment. My question is, why don't we try to think bigger? If we can find a way to devote a fraction of total energy costs to green energy, why not go for the whole thing? I'm sure if a little more research was put into it, the wind farm could generate enough energy for even more of the Cape. This stands as an example of half-assing a project that could have turned into a great whole-assed way of living.

It's great that more and more people are being less wasteful of the only Earth we have. Now the only thing left to do is to be a little smarter about it.

Ted Rogers is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at twrogers@student.umass.edu.

How can we afford this fast-paced lifestyle?

Solmaaz Yazdiha

We live in a non-stop nation. It is mapped in gridlock with schedules and deadlines, appointments and never-ending responsibilities that dictate every second of our short lives. Every day, we face a flood of American consumer culture: lights, cameras and action in climax. The average Joe is exposed to 3,000 advertisements a day. Whether we boat or float this flood, we are inevitably cast away, the shoreline nowhere in sight.

The question arises: Can living such a fast-paced life be healthful? When bombarded with relentless propaganda, is there any escape to think straight? With our days devoted to wakeup, class, class, eat, work, gym, eat, sleep – are we making the most of the gifts we've been given? Are we living, or are we simply alive? Don't get me wrong: of course sh*t gets done, but ultimately, isn't all that's done – just sh*t?

Good ol' Merriam-Webster defines "flood" as "a rising and overflowing," "an overwhelming quantity of volume," but this is no ordinary flood. The flood our society rests on is one with the power to numb our senses and dull our nerves, strip us of our energy and plunder any passion we might have had. All hail consumerism. We live in a one-man world: "Me."

People are willing to complain and demand but never to act, never to go out of their way to get what they want. This can translate into something as monumental as protesting war or something as simple as decrying four straight nights of sushi at the dining commons. In the bubble of higher education, our generation feels as though it's at the tip of the Taser.

Life gives us that time in limbo to remind us why we are what we are: the most advanced creatures on Earth, the most apt to feel and ponder.

In reality, most of us are making out, making food or making drunken mistakes. Sure, throughout the school week we're denouncing racism, demanding rights to gay marriage or drawing up the next big revolution, but it's all just lip service.

How many people can you accuse of being all talk? It's a tricky equation because when you point your finger, the other three are always directed right back at you. If stuck in a flood that does nothing but numb, do we drown?

It's simple – keep your head above water. In other words, knowing what you're up against is vital. The world is at a tilt and with no actual relation; the media is too, putting a spin on everything they toss up, causing us to look at things the way they hope and scheme we will.

American culture revolves around high-demand, wanting-new-this and needing newer-that. As soon as you've got the latest model, you're a proud owner of yesterday's product. And it's not just the media. Collective society has branded a big fat stamp of approval on the way a well-behaved intellectual should live their life. It involves school, work and a ton of money. Any life led that strays from this norm is one in vain. Is that not a bit ridiculous?

Even for those angsty with ambition, who have grown to love their daily schedules and treasure their to-do lists, is time needed to stop and breathe? How else can you know where you're going if you're unaware of what you're passing through, where you've been, what direction you're headed in?

Of course there are those moments in life when the world naturally slows down, like in the event of a really, really good kiss – the kind you kind of sink into, like a pair of slippers you've broken in to feel just right. Life gives us that time in limbo to remind us why we are what we are: the most advanced creatures on Earth, the most apt to feel and ponder.

Sometimes moving fast is a good thing. If we didn't treasure the art of the speedy, food would be cold, planes would delay and a lot of people would be unnaturally pissed off.

The point is to keep your feet on the ground amidst the flood of neon and subliminal messages and to take most everything at face value. I have a brain as does every one of you reading this, and where mine is wrinkled yours may not be; where yours is telling you that you're tired, mine might be wondering what I'll have for dinner.

There's no reason for the flood to numb us all to feel alike. Rather than sacrificing quality for speed, making actual change in real time seems a much more favorable fate. In a world more booming, more productive and more overwhelming than ever, taking it slow has never felt better.

Solmaaz Yazdiha is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at syazdiha@student.umass.edu.

DAILY COLLEGIAN READER POLL

The United Student Action Coalition will rally tomorrow in continuing support of demands made during last year's student strike. Where do you stand?

☐ With 'em.
☐ Against 'em.
☐ Far, far away.

Cast your vote online at www.dailycollegian.com!

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, FEBRUARY, 25 2008

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Hampshire College dancers performed this past weekend. Their performance was part of the Winter Dance Concert series.

Hampshire showcases ballet

BY JENNIFER LECLAIR
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Aspirations and dreams derive from a variety of different aspects of life. Such life experiences include relationships. Relationships between people, objects, places and ideas. These provide an outlet for individualism among a joint society.

February 21-23 the visions of ten student choreographers of Hampshire College created pieces for the annual Hampshire College Winter Dance Concert that showcased the concept of relationships through dance. While providing an escape into the transcendental power of dance, the performances showcased the talents of students of the Five College Dance department in a deep look into the tangible and intangible relationships one encounters on life's journeys.

The performance took place at Hampshire College's Studio Dance Theatre. An intimate space provided a greater connection between the audience and the performers, further enhancing the nights' theme of exploration of relationships.

From the opening act to the closing, the performances last weekend created an accurate glimpse into the achievements of the department's dancers. The background set and technology for the show proved to be more advanced than expected in such a small nonprofessional space.

Lighting in such pieces as Noelle Serafino's "Exer(O)cise It!" enhanced the overall dance experience and instigated a specific reaction from the audience. Her look into the superstitions of everyday life proved that a superstition truly is simply the repetition of the ordinary. Opening with incessant shaking of separate body parts and hitting the floor transitioned into repetitious choreography under the guidance of Stevie Wonder and his song "Superstition," Noelle Serafino successfully expressed Twyla Tharp's notion that "...a superstition is nothing more than a ritual repeated religiously."

The largest group of dancers performed choreography for "The Femmeopticon" by Lydia Broussard. The freeform choreography was a retelling of the relationships between girls. Most specifically, an expression of female bullying and its causes. The first song "A Cause Des Garcons" ("Because of Boys") a French song by Yelle set the backdrop for the many ways in which girls interact with each other around boys. Ending with the song "Satisfaction" the piece showed just that – the satisfaction a girl receives from winning the fight. Lydia Broussard's response to several sociological studies on female bullying provided a comedic opening for the night – from falling off a chair to the typical 'sprinkler' dance move.

Like the tug of the accompanying string instrumental music, Chani Bockwinkel and Nicole Loeffler-Gladstone's "Tug" illustrated the relationship between two opposing forces. This piece was the most technical dance performance of the night, and in being so it translated the great talent of two aspiring dancers and their relationships with dance. White versus black, short versus tall, one person versus another; all were elements of the performance accomplishing the tug theme traversing relationships.

"It seems that the concept of 'relation' to another person, an environment, or an idea is a fairly simple concept for new choreographers to work with. My piece is most certainly about a relationship between two people, but after all the rehearsal time I still couldn't tell you what the relationship is, exactly. As for the other choreographers and their work, it appears to me that almost all the pieces deal with some form of personal inter intraaction," said Nicole Loeffler-Gladstone about her choreography and theme of the show. Loeffler-Gladstone is a first-year student at Hampshire College hoping to pursue a form environmental science and public policy but all the while furthering her relationship with dance.

"Between Each Breadth is a Silent Scream" by Kyla Ferguson took a movement as simple as the itzy-bitzy spider and incorporated it into a series of growth and regression. Ending with heaving breathing and a silent scream, the choreographer literally showed the pain that intertwines with what keeps something living – the relationship between an object and life itself.

Although the concept of relationship through dancing seems to be relatively easy to understand, during these performances the audience members had to relinquish any expectations they may have had in attending a dance performance. The performance as a whole was more about the choreography than the technical aspect of different dance forms. Some pieces did not even involve what one may characterize as dance. Instead, the dancing showcased at the concert was a collection of different movements that showcased a particular theme.

Hampshire College was alive with talent this past weekend. A talent that shows the relationship that each choreographer has with dance, which in turn inspires the audience to follow the dreams provided and induced by relationships.

Opening night for the performers made long rehearsal hours and tired mornings worth the suffering. While the dress rehearsal Wednesday night showed a combination of nerves and unprepared dances, Thursday night confirmed the talents hidden behind the previous night's shakes. Regarding her personal performance Thursday Loeffler-Gladstone said, "I reached a point about mid-way through the piece where I finally realized that it was possible to live the relationship that we were having on stage, instead of simply acting it. It was truly a transcendental moment for me as dancer, and I hope that it signals a new level of performance and honesty that I will be able to achieve."

The Five College Dance Department is a collaboration of the five area colleges that works as one department "unifying its educational mission to include a well-balanced curriculum emphasizing a broad integration of technical, creative, historical and analytical aspects of dance and a wide variety of philosophical approaches to teaching."

Jennifer Leclair can be reached at jleclair@student.umass.edu

Despite snow, show goes on

BY MATTHEW SOLOMON
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Retrospectively, the Scene Friday night at the Calvin Theater in Northampton was straight out of the "Chronicles of Narnia." Outside it was a beautiful winter wonderland. Yet indoors, fans of Keller Williams and the WMD's took shelter from the cold and celebrated the gifts of life and music.

The small yet lively crowd that made the snowy trek out to Northampton received a priceless treat. They have improved drastically since their summer touring schedule, which included the Bonnaroo Music Festival. They've all grown immensely close as musicians and seemed to be having a ball sharing their gifts with each other and their fans. They were all grinning in pleasure throughout the night and this was contagious as the crowd seemed to catch on from the very beginning.

The setting inside the Calvin was calm and peaceful like a blend of mango, chamomile and strawberry tea. There were some beautifully tinted curtains in the background that changed from green to purple and all the other colors of the rainbow. The high definition television screen behind the band went back and forth from showing the musicians to old-time movie footage of wackiness that only Keller and his crew could think of. The movies included dancers doey-doeing, square-dancing, twirling, waltzing and some incredible Frisbee tricks done by the mysterious Keller Williams Frisbee team.

Keller and the WMD's proved to many dedicated fans that this new all-star group is no joke. They pleasantly blended a mix of original material with covers such as The Beatles "Dig a Pony" and Tom Petty's "Last Dance with MaryJane" which went into "Breakdown" and back into "Last Dance." This Petty cover has been done in the past by Keller and the Keels (Keller's bluegrass project), but they put a rocking new twist on it that had fans singing along and getting down and dirty to the uncontrollably groovy beats. The band also played a couple of Grateful Dead tunes, one of which declaring that "The Women are Smarter." Maybe so yet Keller Williams and the WMD's are undoubtedly an ensemble of amazingly smart men.

"Above the Thunder" was one of the first songs played. This tune included lyrical skill, fantastical imagery and soothing rhythms that reached out and touched hearts in all directions. A Yonder Mountain String Band cover was also performed. This song was coincidently about thunder as well; yet, it had a completely different feel to it. It started off as a reworked, foot-stomping rock song and transitioned smoothly into a country, bluegrassy type tune sounding more like the original as they broke it down. This song in particular made the crowd hoot and holler uncontrollably as if we were at a 1950's town fair in rural Kentucky.

The song "Doobie in a Pocket" was a fan favorite as Keller declared that he had a doobie in his pocket, a doobie in his suitcase and a doobie pretty much everywhere else. In "People Watchin" Keller wanted to know if you would "let me be your dog, and you could be my master" and the answer was a loud and unanimous, "hell yea!"

What makes Keller such a great musician and poet is that he can sing about the most ridiculous topics imaginable and somehow still make them sound blissful. Example, the song "Kidney in a Cooler" tells a story about Cheyenne, Wyoming. This song is about the perpendicularity of Middle America, a double decker double wide and as the songs states in its title, a "Kidney in a Cooler" that must be delivered pronto.

The exact meaning of this song is ambiguous and confusing at times, yet it somehow doesn't matter. It's got soul, and that's all that really counts in the end. In the words of John Popper of the Blues Travelers, "It doesn't matter what I say. So long as I sing with inflection. That makes you feel that I'll convey."

The show ended with an encore that included all four musicians sharing the drum set in order to create some vibrantly funky rhythmic beats. The drummer Jeff Sipe held down the bass drum while the others each took on their own section of the kit. Keller took the most original approach to this drum piece, filling in the empty space with intricately woven and thoughtfully paced bangs on the Toms.

Matthew Solomon can be reached at msolomon@student.umass.edu.

Grammy winner to perform in Noho

COURTESY JOHN CRUZ

John Cruz returned to Hawaii after 12 years in the Northeast. Cruz recorded his latest album at Jackson Browne's studio.

BY SHELBY LANDECK
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Grammy award winning artist and University of Massachusetts Alumna John Cruz is to perform Tuesday night at the Iron Horse in Northampton.

Cruz is currently on tour to promote his second album, "One of These Days," which was released last September. Debuting at #1 on the Borders Hawaiian Top 10, "One of These Days" is already a local hit.

Born in Hawaii, Cruz moved to the Northeast in 1983 where he spent 12 years developing his style as a performer. Cruz has fond memories of a place that helped bring out a more creative side of him.

"When I lived here, I had access to so many performers and was exposed to so many different styles of music – jazz, folk, funk, rock, everything. The scene in Hawaii is limited, so I was a kid in a candy store. There were no musical boundaries here, so I could explore whatever I wanted without having to think about expectations people at home might have had of me as a Hawaiian musician," explained Cruz.

Majoring in performing arts at UMass, Cruz became involved with acting and dancing. He believes that his experience in theater helped him deal with the culture shock of coming from Hawaii.

"There was a sense of community, and it gave me a sense of family, both creatively and personally," he said.

As a member of the New World Theater, he played the lead role in "The Dance and the Railroad," by Tony Award winning Broadway playwright David Henery Hwang.

After returning to Hawaii in 1995, Cruz gained a fan base by playing bass in his brother's band, the Ka'au Crater Boys. When his first album, Acoustic Soul, was released, it quickly became a hit.

Self-produced and released on Cruz's own label, Liilikoi Records, Acoustic Soul sold about 100,000 copies in Hawaii alone. The singles "Shine On," "Sitting in Limbo" and "Island Style" can still be heard throughout the island in hotels, airports and commercials.

Acoustic Soul also earned Cruz two Na Hoku Hanohano Awards in 1997, one for Contemporary Album of the Year and one for Most Promising Artist.

Cruz's success continued in 2005 when the compilation album, Slack Key Guitar Volume 2, featuring Cruz's song "Jo Bo's Night" won the first Grammy ever awarded for Hawaiian music.

Recorded in Los Angles at good friend Jackson Browne's studio, the self-produced album, One of These Days, was recorded entirely on analog tape, opposed to digitally, to capture the tone Cruz was seeking. The result is an album that combines warm melodies with passionate, soulful vocals.

Cruz's music gained him fans in the music industry as well. Trey Anastasio, former front man for Phish, invited Cruz to co-write a song called "A Case of Ice and Snow," which was released on Anastasio's solo album, Bar 17. In the winter of 2007, Cruz was alongside Robert Plant and Allison Krauss on the WMVY radio compilation Fresh Produce Volume 4 with his single "Missing You."

Jack Johnson, also a friend and fan of Cruz's music, recently invited Cruz to be involved in an interview and photo shoot with him and Rolling Stone Magazine, which will appear in an upcoming issue.

Kelly Slater, world champion surfer, is also a fan and featured three of Cruz's songs on his 2006 DVD, "Letting Go." Slater also invited Cruz to play at the Quicksilver Pro surf contest in Hossegor, France, and his MTV special, "The Kelly Slater Celebrity Surf Invitational 2006."

While he won't have much time to reminisce about his college years which he claims were, "an inspired time," where him and his friends, "were all writing songs, drinking cappuccinos at Bonducci's and smoking imports," Cruz looks forward to being reunited with old friends on stage and playing a venue which holds a special place in his heart.

"The Iron Horse is a great club and has always been a musical mecca for singer songwriters. I actually helped to renovate it when I lived here in the '80s, so there is a personal connection as well."

Doors open at 7 p.m. Tuesday. Tickets for the show are $12.50 in advance and $15 at the door.

Shelby Landeck can be reached at slandeck@student.umass.edu

Designers release spring fashion lines

BY EMMA LIPVERGREN
COLLEGIAN COLUMNIST

With the closing of Fashion Weeks from New York to Hong Kong in late January and early February, a note of panic may have set in among the fashion conscious. It's not even March, and the Fall/Winter 2008 collections have already graced the runways, draped over lanky and moody mannequins.

So what to do? Keep the trends in mind, but don't forget the Spring/Summer 2008 looks that hit the style scene in October, which in the fashion industry seems like a millennium.

The spring collections saw some definite nods to the 1970s: flared hemlines, high waists and disco chic were everywhere. Giorgio Armani embraced his inner flower child when he sent his models down the catwalk swathed in macramé, floor-dusting skirts and enough fringe to put Woodstock to shame.

At Prada, silk bell-bottoms swung on the legs of a few girls, while others wore pajama-like silk tunics and cropped trousers covered in dreamy drawings of fairies and nymph-like creatures. The flowy, dreamy atmosphere created by Prada was a far cry from the more severe silhouettes and toxic color palette of last fall.

Domenico Dolce and Stefano Gabbana turned back time to 1979 at D&G, and not only because the models sauntered down the runway to Michael Jackson's "Don't Stop 'Til You Get Enough." Siri Tollerod opened the show wearing a ruffled, A-line mini dress with gold detail, and it didn't stop there. Belted waists, denim flares and vests, and (naturally) fringe, were ubiquitous in D&G's Spring 2008 show. Donna Karan must have had the soundtrack to "Saturday Night Fever" on in the background when designing her collection for DKNY. As a matter of fact, the soundtrack for the show consisted of Feist's cover of the Bee Gee's "Inside and Out." Floppy hats and a crisp white tuxedo were the most obvious inspirations.

On the other end of the style spectrum, trends for Spring 2008 also moved toward the tennis courts. In a more literal translation, models at Chanel slung racquets over their shoulders with one hand and held tennis balls monogrammed with the house's interlocked C's in the other. Clothing consisted of knit and ribbed sweaters in primary colors.

The sisters Mulleavy at Rodarte also drew inspiration from the courts for their spring collection, but their girl was more of spectator than a player; and large, wide-brimmed hats and sunburst-pleated skirts graced the catwalk. At Lacoste, of course, sporty styles come with the territory, and probably the only sportswear one would actually want to play tennis in. Modest but sporty dresses, visors and the signature polo were practical, yet worthy of being given their own trend.

Michael Kors, the king of American sportswear, never fails to live up to his title. Spring '08 was no different. Drawing from the women of the late '70s and early '80s, Kors commented, "There was something about those women; they were very sexy but sporty at the same time."

Summertime and the Hamptons are brought to mind when looking at the cardigans, khakis and sporty dresses that Kors's models wore.

If sports and disco aren't enough to satiate the trend-crazy, transparency has also rocked the runways for the spring. "Underwear as outerwear" has become one of the mantras of the season, and Marc Jacobs, despite his two-hour delay and 11 p.m. show start, sent out a quirky collection of 'there but not there' pieces. Fabrics were sheer (or sometimes completely transparent), hinting at a glimpse of underwear beneath, and some trompe l'oeil pieces gave the illusion of bras and panties over clothing.

Perhaps the most deliberate tribute to the body's form was in Maison Martin Margiela's pieces. Skintight bandeau dress in nude tones clung to the torsos of blindfolded models, giving an intimate look to the face and more focus on the body's shape. Black strips of fabric across the bust and at hemlines created the illusion of revealing tube tops and scandalous bottoms but with all the modesty of a mini dress.

At Jil Sander, fabrics were of soft and floaty chiffon, in some cases leaving little to be desired beneath them. Many of the girls wore completely sheer pieces of chiffon over chic pantsuits or skirts, like a see-through cocoon while others simply wore colorful pieces of the fabrics as a top.

Spring/Summer 2008 was one of the most innovative seasons yet, and many designers dared to push the limits of what is considered ordinary. While runway looks can be extremely difficult to carry off in the real world, it's important to remember that the runway is fantasy, and looks can be translated but not necessarily taken literally. There aren't many people who can walk through the streets in a sheer top, or draped from head to toe in fringe, but hey, more power to them if they can.

In the meantime, for those who don't feel gutsy enough to rock a white three-piece suit on the street, let high fashion serve as an inspirational guideline for new trends.

Emma Lipvergren can be reached at elipvergr@student.umass.edu.

Donna Jean to perform at Iron Horse

BY CODY KALTER
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

In eight years with the Grateful Dead, Donna Jean Godchaux laid her vocal imprint on classic albums like "Steal Your Face," "Terrapin Station" and "Shakedown Street." Her melodic harmonizing helped form popular Dead songs into the way they will be remembered forever. Godchaux then worked with The Other Ones and The Dead, two bands that gathered the former members of the Grateful Dead after the death of Jerry Garcia.

Godchaux's current collaboration, Donna Jean and the Tricksters, have been together since 1996. For over a decade, they have won the hearts of the jam community by playing covers of the Grateful Dead, Bob Dylan and Neil Young with their own songs which range in style from jazz to bluegrass.

During the past year, Donna Jean and The Tricksters have teamed up to form a group that brings new life to the jam band scene, while shining light on the Dead legacy. With the recent release of their debut album in January, the band is preparing for a six-week tour on which they will perform new original songs.

The new self-titled album has 12 tracks written by Godchaux and the other band members. Bassist Klyph Black, guitarist Tom Circosta, drummer and percussionist Dave Diamond, vocalist Wendy Lanter, guitarist Jeff Mattson and keyboardist Mookie Siegel help meld the music of the album together. When listening to the album, one gets an eclectic taste of jazz, blues, bluegrass and fun jams. It's a "very fruitful time," Donna Jean said about performing with the Tricksters. We are a "perfect fit... (The Tricksters) play the songs exactly as I heard them," she said.

Making the album was "possibly one of the smoothest recording processes that I have ever worked on," she said. "We recorded 16 tracks in six days." The other four songs will be released on the next album, currently underway.

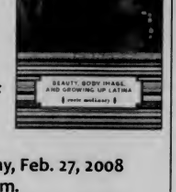
Don't think, however, that the band is another carbon copy of the Grateful Dead. With catchy licks, quirky lyrics and fantastic improvisations, songs like "A Prisoner in His Place," "Shelter," "All I Gotta Say" and "No Better Way" produce a certain originality that can only be explained as Donna Jean & the Tricksters. "The songs played themselves... We played, (listened) and said, that's good," said Godchaux. Between Godchaux's beatific vocals, Mattson's incendiary guitar licks, Siegel's bluesy key playing and the rest of the band's strong efforts, they produce a sound that is smooth and undeniably genre-bending. –

On Monday, Feb. 25, Donna Jean & the Tricksters will bring their sweet sounds to the Iron Horse in Northampton. "The Tricksters have a lot of range... [and are quite] acquainted with improvisation," Godchaux said.

Their live performances used to focus mostly on different Dead covers but the group will now be performing with a new sound. Comparing the experience of playing with The Dead or The Other Ones with The Tricksters is difficult for Godchaux. "I love anytime playing with my brothers," she said of Mickey Hart, Phil Lesh, Bob Weir and Bill Kreutzmann, all former members of the Grateful Dead.

"We put our heart into this band," Godchaux said.

Donna Jean performed with the Grateful Dead in the 1970s. She has released a new album of original material with her latest band.



Being the lead of the band is "a lot more fun and responsibility," she said, comparing her involvement with the Dead and the Tricksters. When asked how the band managed to merge so many different genres of music together, Godchaux replied, "Everything we've ever listened to (was) put into the mix."

With the recent release of their debut album, and the start of a U.S. tour, Donna Jean & the Tricksters are excited to start playing shows and giving jam fans and Deadheads new songs to dance to. The talent and excitement the Tricksters have will surely show when they visit the Iron Horse on Monday. The Tricksters also plan on frequenting music festivals this summer.

The show starts at 8:30 p.m. Tickets are on sale for $12.50 in advance and $15 at the door.

Cody Kalter can be reached at ckalter@student.umass.edu.

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
Insurance Replacement Rates FREE PICK-UP
POTTER'S AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates
Potter's Collision Repair
Collision Repair & Glass Replacement
at North Amherst Motors
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.pottersauto.com
(One mile North of UMass - on bus route)

"SMASHING THE BEAUTY BOX"
with
ROSIE MOLINARY
Author, Hijas Americanas: Beauty, Body Image and Growing Up Latina

An enlightening, empowering presentation about beauty, body image and breaking free!
Wednesday, Feb. 27, 2008
7 – 8:30 p.m.
Malcolm X Cultural Center, Berkshire DC
FREE ADMISSION
SPONSORED BY:
Bilingual Collegiate Program
Everywoman's Center
Counseling Services
Josephine White Eagle Cultural Center
Malcolm X Cultural Center
University Health Services – Health Education
Women of Color Leadership Network
UMASS AMHERST

liesel™
Meet your new study partner.

This is Liesel™.
She can help you create audio notes of your study material in an easy to use format– then transfer them to your MP3 player.
Take them with you. Share them with others. Whenever you want. It's that simple.
7 DAY FREE TRIAL JUST REGISTER studywithliesel.com
Study and note-taking software from LISTEN STUDY LEARN
© Copyright 2008 LateralStudyLearn, LLC

No. 3 Maryland drop UMass

Hat trick for McCormick not enough against Terrapins

By Mike Gillmeister
Collegian Staff

A three-goal effort from junior attack Kaytlin McCormick wasn't enough to lift the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team past No. 3 Maryland on Saturday, as the Minutewomen fell, 18-7, at McGuirk Stadium.

UMass coach Alexis Venechanos, who graduated from Maryland, saw four Terrapin players score three or more goals against her team in the loss. Maryland out-shot the Minutewomen, 40-to-15.

The starting midfielders for the Terrapins fueled the attack for Maryland (1-0).

The Minutewomen (1-1) couldn't find an answer for the offensive clinic that Maryland midfielder Kelly Kasper put on all game. Kasper notched seven points on six goals and one assist.

Maryland	18
UMass	7

Sophomore midfielder Caitlyn McFadden and senior midfielder Dana Dobbie had the second-highest point totals for Maryland, as each player had five points. Dobbie and McFadden scored the first and second goals of the game, respectively.

Merritt Cosgrove broke Maryland's string of goals late in the first half, as the sophomore midfielder for the Minutewomen scored the team's first goal of the game.

The Terrapins then scored three straight goals. Midway through the first half, Kasper scored her first two goals of the game.

Senior attack Kathleen Typadis broke Maryland's streak of three-straight goals with a goal of her own to make the score 5-2. Typadis was limited to just one point in the game on four shots (two on goal). The key contributor for the Minutewomen was McCormick. Of her seven shots, six were on-goal.

Other than McCormick, the Minutewomen spread the ball around well. Four other Minutewomen found the back of the net on the day, including Typadis. Typadis' score extended her streak to 43 straight games with a goal.

McFadden was a ball-hawk for Maryland, leading the team in ground balls with four. She also penetrated the defense very well, having eight shots-on-goal.

The first half came to a close but not before the Terrapins notched two more goals, making the score 7-2.

Less than a minute into the second half, Maryland struck again. Roughly two minutes into the quarter, the Maroon and White answered back, as junior attack Julie Pasquantonio found the back of the net, making the score 8-3.

McFadden and Dobbie then concluded each of their two-goal performances; first McFadden scored unassisted and then Dobbie scored off of the feed from Kasper.

The Maryland defense stifled the Minutewomen. The Terrapins forced double-digit turnovers in both periods of play.

The Minutewomen also gave up 10 free-position shots, three of which led to goals in the second half.

Although UMass spread the ball around to the open player, its two assists, compared to Maryland's eight, let the Terrapins go after individual players on the offensive side of the ball.

In comparison to its win over Holy Cross this past Tuesday, the Minutewomen committed 10 more turnovers against Maryland.

On the defensive side of the ball, the lopsided margin in shots taken showed the ease with which Maryland picked apart the UMass defense. Against the Crusaders, the Minutewomen allowed just 12.

After the two teams traded scores twice more, Maryland scored five unanswered goals to seal the victory.

Next, the Minutewomen will host No. 18 Boston University on Wednesday.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillme@student.umass.edu.

Senior midfielder Jeannette Villapiano and the Minutewomen followed their season-opening victory over Holy Cross with an 18-7 loss against No. 3 Maryland. UMass was outshot by the Terrapins, 40-15.

Balise nets 4 goals in season-opener

M. LACROSSE from page 1

goal and past Schneider.

The Hofstra bench erupted as Ford and his teammates celebrated on the field. The momentum quickly shifted to favor the Pride, but junior Joe Reale's win on the following faceoff halted the Hofstra run. The teams traded possessions until Federico's goal, at 4:22 of the period, permanently squashed the confidence of the Pride. Reale won 10-of-16 faceoffs on the afternoon and also assisted on UMass's final goal.

After winning the faceoff cleanly, he raced down field and found Balise who beat Orlando seven seconds after Hantverk scored to swell UMass's lead to 7-3.

"[Reale] started off 1-for-3, but he's a pretty good athlete. He didn't win the draw cleanly a couple of times, but he won it as an athlete getting the groundball," Cannella said. "We have a lot of faith in Joe, so we stuck with him. But Bobby Hayes, Nick Glasser and Stephen Zorker are all ready."

The Pride maintained possession for most of the fourth quarter, outshooting the Minutemen 14-4. But Schneider kept the Minutemen alive with seven saves in the period. With 4:45 left in the game, the Pride peppered Schneider with four shots in one minute but couldn't beat the net minder.

"We're going to need that from Doc. His performance, 12 saves in the second half, was exactly what we needed," Cannella said. "We turned the ball over so many times that we needed to lean on our defense and Doc."

Game notes

Senior captain Rory Pedrick missed the season opener with an undisclosed injury. Cannella gave no timetable for his return ... Redshirt junior attack Evan Blum and sophomore Christian Hain both left the field with apparent arm injuries during the game. Although both returned to the lineup ... Senior Brian Danvers led the Minutemen with five groundballs. Overall, UMass narrowly edged the Pride in groundballs at 29-27.

Joe Meloni can be reached at joe.meloni@gmail.com

Freshman Peter McNichols and the Minutemen started their season off well, defeating No. 15 Hofstra, 8-4, Saturday afternoon at home.

Bench plays key role in win

M. BASKETBALL from page 8

tion from its bench, the coach rested several key starters for extended periods. Players like Forbes and point guard Chris Lowe, who routinely sit for only a few minutes per game, logged 29 and 33 minutes, respectively.

"I thought the bench was the best it's been all year long in terms of production. It gave us a huge boost," Ford said.

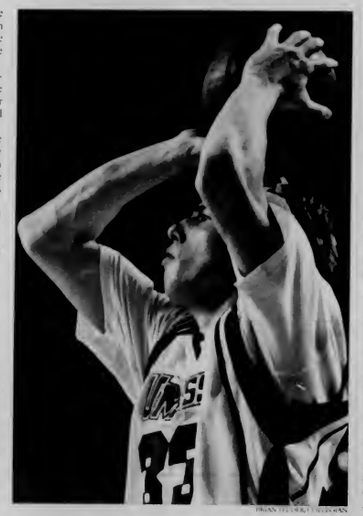
Freshman forward Matt Glass led the UMass reserves with a career-high 14 points. He shot 4-of-6 from beyond the arc, with three coming in the second half. As the St. Bonaventure zone defense collapsed on UMass's proven scorers, the Minutemen kicked the ball out to a wide-open Glass on the wing during several possessions.

Inconsistent play continued for sophomore shooting guard Ricky Harris. He drew the ire of Ford and sat on the bench for much of the first half. Yet Harris made several critical baskets in the second half to spur a UMass scoring streak.

"I took him out in the beginning of the second half because I didn't feel he was where he needed to be on offense or defense," Ford said. "We had a discussion after he came out of the game, and I think that woke him up a little bit. He made a couple huge baskets for us."

Out of a UMass 30-second timeout, Harris penetrated toward the basket and scored two points to end SBU's 14-3 run. The sophomore then converted 3-point attempts on consecutive possessions to allow the Minutemen to retake control of the game.

Though the first half began sluggishly on offense for both teams, the Minutemen executed a 15-2 run over five minutes to build a 13-point lead by the 10-minute mark.



"We wanted to come out and give ourselves confidence and hopefully take some confidence away from St. Bonaventure," Ford said. "We wanted to jump on them as much as possible with pressure defense."

Meanwhile, Forbes displayed an unyielding determination from beyond the arc that resulted in a 0-for-6 clip until the final two minutes of the first half. The senior then converted two 3-pointers, helping to give the Maroon and White a then game-high 19-point lead at the half.

Game notes

Senior center Dante Milligan logged 29 minutes and collected one foul. Milligan fouled out in 16 minutes of basketball against Rhode Island on Thursday and has fouled out 10 times this season ... Senior forward Etienne Brower, whose 26 points were a significant factor in the team's win over URI, finished with five points on 1-for-6 shooting ... Ford put walk-ons Matt Pennie and Nana Ampin into the game during the final minute ... Attendance improved to 5,998 over the team's last home game, but both student sections were largely empty.

Michael King can be reached at mking@student.umass.edu

Freshman Matt Glass scored a career-high 14 points off the bench yesterday in the 23-point victory over St. Bonaventure.

Mills leads team to Senior Day victory game. Out of the timeout Mills did what she had been doing all season, hitting shots when no one else could. Mills scored the next six points to keep the Minutewomen ahead, 37-23.

W. BASKETBALL from page 8

The Minutewomen went cold from that point, while Dayton started to find its rhythm by going on a 17-11 run to cut the lead to eight at 48-40. Senior forward Pam Rosanio struggled in the second half going 2-of-9 from the field with five points. She finished the game with 11 points and four rebounds.

All season Dacko has said that the Minutewomen are not a good rebounding team; however, on Saturday they showed that they have the ability to be a good rebounding team. The Minutewomen totaled 45 rebounds including 14 on the offensive glass. Dayton had 32 rebounds but only had six offensive boards. Senior forward Alisha Tatham grabbed nine rebounds, Mills had 10 and Wright had seven off the bench.

The Minutewomen held off the Dayton run with defensive pressure. They only allowed six points in the final seven minutes of the game. Mills and Rosanio scored back-to-back baskets to push the lead back to 10.

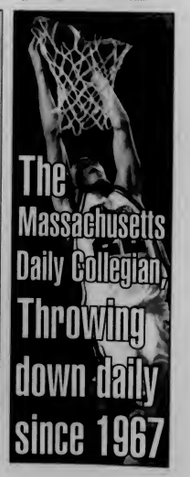
With nine seconds left in the game, Dacko pulled the starters and congratulated all of her seniors on Senior Day.

Game notes

Benton played 23 minutes, scoring thee points after banking a three pointer. This is the first time Benton has played more than five minutes in the last four games due to injuries. She also had four assists with no turnovers ... Wright played 26 minutes and stayed out of foul trouble only picking up two fouls ... The Minutewomen went 2-of-10 on three pointers and the two that went in were bank shots.

Steve Games can be reached at sgames@student.umass.edu.

Attention First-Year Students:



The deadline to pass MyStudentBody is TODAY

To avoid a registration hold, you must take and pass the course by the end of the day. For instructions, go to:

www.umass.edu/uhs/cadap/msb/

Center for Alcohol and other Drug Abuse Prevention

Domino's Pizza
AMHERST / HADLEY
413-256-8911
Rt 9 Across From Stop & Shop
Store Hours:
Open 11am-4am Thurs.-Sat.
11am -3am Sun.-Wed
Mt. Holyoke Location: 593-9500
GREAT ONLINE COUPONS
WWW.DOMINOS.COM
FREE BREADSTICKS — MONDAY, TUESDAY, WEDNESDAY — BUY ANY MEDIUM OR LARGE PIZZA AT MENU PRICE — GET ANY ORDER OF BREADSTICKS FREE
LARGE UNLIMITED TOPPING PIZZA $10.99 — NO DOUBLE TOPPINGS
ANY LARGE SALAD — ANY BREADSTICKS — ANY 20 OZ DRINK — ONLY $7.99
1 PERSONAL PAN PIZZA WITH 2 TOPPINGS + 10 WINGS OR KICKERS ONLY $9.99
WE ACCEPT OCMP
Find Out More About autismspeaks.org

Arigato II ありと Hibachi Steak & Seafood
15% off with Student ID
(except Friday & Saturdays)
Sushi · Full Bar · Cocktails
Parking Garage · Amherst · Pleasant St · Arigato · Arigato II · Main St · Town Hall
Reservations Suggested
413.253.0707

Hurts so good.

6				5		7
1			6	3	2
		8	5		1
	8		7	3
7						2
		4	1			6
		9		8		2
	6	1	3
		7				8
8						5

ACROSS
1 Prose romances
6 Hanker for
11 Golf score
14 Of the Vatican
15 Post-game summary
16 The Greatest
17 Gaze and gaze
18 Amusing tales
19 Can in London
20 Hanoi holiday
22 Acts as a go-between
24 Splits apart or sticks together
28 Crisp cracker
29 Kind of community service
31 Destiny
32 Final degree
33 Great Lakes locks
34 Shot from cover
38 Actress Davis
41 Go one better than
43 Frightening
44 Napping
46 Her fashions
48 Nol of Cambodia
49 Jackie's second
50 Calgary
53 Basements
57 Mates
58 Sim of "The Ruling Class"
60 Start of a dey?
61 Playing piece
62 Scheduled next
64 Thong
68 JFK data
69 German river
70 Cloth connections
71 Luau garland
72 ___ Cruz, CA
73 Standing
DOWN
1 All-purpose MDs
2 Chow down
3 Mineral spring
4 Sauce for fish
5 Record holder?
6 Shout
7 Paper quantity
8 Farm measure
9 Defacers
10 Greek letters
11 Singer Page
12 Little green man, e.g.
13 Dishwasher cycle
21 Afternoon parties
23 "Toys in the ___"
24 Latin-American dance
25 Instruments for minstrels
26 Singer Merman
27 Glasgow man
30 Mobsters
35 Blanches
36 Eat away at 37 Force units
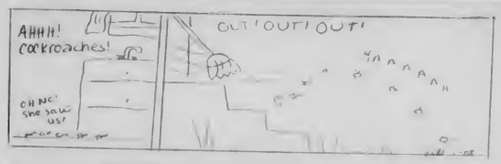
39 Schon and Helfi
40 Aquarium adjuncts
42 Cooking containers
45 Feared fish
47 Drains
51 Fluffy dessert
52 Football team member
53 Sahara mount
54 Gladden
55 Veranda
56 Nonviolent protest
59 Wild speech
63 Shooter pellet
65 ___ Down Chong
66 Gremlin maker
67 Coastal hrs

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Sophie Sudoku!



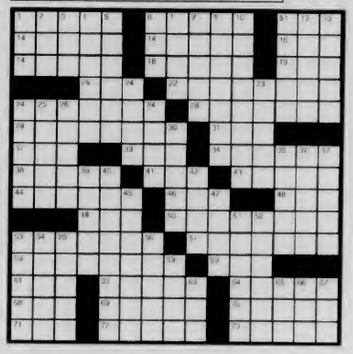
Not really her name, but with skillz like these it should be.

Quote of the Day

"It's my responsibility as a singer-songwriter to report the news."

-John "Cougar" Mellencamp

Ecology By Jen Fill



Wondermark By David Malki

Labrat By Richard Martelly

Continuing & Professional Education
UMassAmherstOutreach
Summer Session 2008
No Matter where you are...
Session I June 2 - July 10
Session II July 14 - Aug 20
Online Gen Ed's
Small Classes
Great Faculty
PLAN AHEAD!
UMassULearn.net

Horoscopes

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Like Peter Pan when he slices the coconut that Rufio throws at him, you are now prepared for any challenges you may face.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Start doing facial calisthenics such as eyebrow lifts and lip quivers to prevent early onset droopy face.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
It is still too early to start your garden. Have patience, and your cucumbers will flourish.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Letting a girl write her phone number with permanent marker across a very large portion of your body was a poor decision.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
People will never take you seriously if you continue to wear such silly hats.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Be a hero, and avoid stir fry. Mother Corn cries when you eat her babies.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
You don't need to speak a foreign lanugage. You speak smile, and that's a universal language.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
You're headed down the same road as D. Hasselhoff: worldwide success followed by drunken cheeseburger failure.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Your incredible discomfort is the result of having put your underpants on backwards this morning. Let's hope it's not a thong.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Maybe if you drop the bad attitude your horoscopes will start to look a little more cheery.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
You're more confused about your job in life than The Cougar. Ref. Quote of the Day.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Bake up a batch of delicious brownies, and give them to a starving emo kid.

Don't fight it, you know you want it...

comics@dailycollegian.com

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Announcements

Montreal Weekend
From $99 Complete. Best Hotels. Best Prices.
montrealexpress.net
781-979-9001

Apt for Rent

Studio, 1,2,3,4 bedrooms available Going Fast, Still guaranteeing for Fall Semester ALL UTILITIES INCLUDED! Call ASAP 413-256-0741

Center of Town 1,2,3 bedrooms. NOW SHOWING for June and September. NO FEES. Schedule a showing 253-7879 view apts. at www.amherst-lincolnrealty.com

Employment

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided.
1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

French speakers! Rent us your ears! $12/hr for participating in listening experiments. Contact the phonetics lab.
phonetics_lab.linguist.umass.edu 545-6837

Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

Employment

A GREAT JOB! Spend your summer in a lake-front cabin in Maine. If you're looking to spend this summer outdoors, have fun while you work, and make lifelong friends, then look no further. Camp Mataponi, a residential girls camp in Maine, has female/male summertime openings for Land Sports, Waterfront (small crafts, skiing, life guarding, WSI, boat drivers), Ropes Course, Tennis, H.B. Riding, Arts & Crafts, Theater, Cooking, Gymnastics, Dance, Videography, Group Leaders & more. Top salaries plus room/board & travel provided. Call us today toll free at 1-888-684-2267 or apply online at www.campmataponi.com.

Services

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthright.org.

Concerned About Your Eating?
Do you eat too little? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic, 577-5101

Services

TAPESTRY HEALTH providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling &rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable. Safe. 413-548-9992. 27 Pray St. Amherst. www.tapestryhealth.org

Travel

Montreal Weekend
From $99 Complete. Best Hotels. Best Prices.
montrealexpress.net
781-979-9001

Travel

Spring Break in Rome Florence, Venice Italy
Heading to Italy this spring?
Visit www.prestotours.com for Expert Touring Advice. VIP Walking Tours of the Vatican City, Colosseum and more. No Lines. Elite Enlgish Speaking Tour Guides. Small Groups. Student Discounts. Low Price. Online Booking.
info@prestotours.com
617-642-7082

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 25, 2008 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UMass hits wall against Maine

Late comeback falls just short in OT loss

By Joe Meloni
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts hockey team's three-goal, third period comeback became a mere afterthought for the Minutemen when a questionable non-call led to Wes Clark's second goal of the game with 1:40 left in overtime Sunday afternoon.

Maine defeated the Minutemen, 5-4, after leading 4-1 entering the third period. The Black Bears also defeated UMass, 3-2, Saturday night.

A Maine player cleared the puck through the neutral zone and through the UMass zone. As the puck approached the goal line, UMass captain Mike Kostka slowed in anticipation of the icing call. The icing, however, was waived off, and Billy Ryan collected the puck in the corner and centered to Wes Clark who flipped it up and over sophomore goaltender Dan Meyers who replaced Paul Dainton after the second period.

Maine	5
UMass	4
Maine	3
UMass	2

UMass coach Don Cahoon immediately left his perch behind the bench to question the decision of the official.

The result, however, remained the same and the Minutemen failed to separate themselves from the Black Bears (10-18-3, 6-14-3 Hockey East) and Merrimack in the race for the final playoff spot in next month's Hockey East Tournament. The Minutemen (11-13-6, 6-12-5 Hockey East) currently occupy the eighth spot in the conference standings. But after the weekend sweep, UMass is two points clear of Maine.

The UMass comeback began when P.J. Fenton scored his second goal of the weekend early in the third period. Alex Berry soon followed with his sixth goal of the season. A shot from James Marcou deflected back into the slot where Berry collected the puck, dragged it around a sprawled Ben Bishop and flipped it into an open net.

Kostka tied the game at 4-4 with a slap shot from the mid point with fewer than four minutes remaining in regulation.

Despite the three-goal deficit entering the period, the Minutemen controlled play for most of the game. The Black Bears, however, took advantage of the opportunities presented to them and got some help from Bishop along the way.

Clark and freshman Andrew Sweetland scored goals on breakaways in the second period while Bishop made 18 saves to uphold the Maine lead.

The Black Bears put together a comeback of their own on Saturday night. After Fenton scored 37 seconds into the third period giving UMass a 2-1 lead, Maine took over.

Freshman Keith Ossiti scored his third goal of the season – second against UMass – at 13:50 to tie the score. Fewer than three minutes later, Matt Duffy put the Black Bears ahead, 3-2, with his sixth goal of the season.

For the second consecutive weekend, a penalty in the late moments of the game, with the Minutemen trailing by a single goal, forced the Minutemen to kill a penalty while trying to tie the game. Sophomore Martin Nolet committed a boarding minor at 18:32 of the period to essentially seal the win for Maine.

The Minutemen have another chance to secure a playoff spot next weekend when they take on Boston University in a home-and-home series.

Joe Meloni can be reached at joe.meloni@gmail.com

BRIAN TEDESCO/COLLEGIAN

Chris Davis had two assists and one goal this weekend against Maine, but the Minutemen dropped both contests to the Black Bears. UMass scored three goals yesterday in the third period to tie the game but lost in overtime.

Glass, UM dominate SBU

Freshman scores career-high 14 points in blowout victory

By Michael King
Collegian Staff

For the first time since the start of its conference schedule, the Massachusetts men's basketball team played a game where it soundly defeated an opponent and the outcome was not in doubt late in the second half.

UMass beat St. Bonaventure, 79-56, Sunday afternoon at the Mullins Center. The Minutemen have now won three-straight games and visit Richmond (14-11, 7-5 Atlantic 10) this weekend.

UMass	79
SBU	56

Though Sunday's win was the team's second-highest margin of victory this season, the contest was far from decided midway through the second period. UMass (18-9, 7-6 A-10) built a 19-point lead at the half but allowed SBU (7-19, 1-11 A-10) to get back into the game with a 14-3 run over the first six minutes. The Bonnies cut the UMass lead to six points over that stretch.

"St. Bonaventure came out in the second half and slowed us down with a good zone defense," Ford said. "Watching tape, I thought the key to beating St. Bonaventure was to not allow them to make [3-pointers] because they rely on that quite a bit."

The Bonnies hit a trio of 3-pointers over that stretch, including one from guard Zarryon Ferrell, one of the Atlantic 10's leading 3-point scorers.

The UMass defense adjusted to take the 3-point shot away from SBU, forcing the Bonnies to take the ball inside. Low-post scoring threat Michael Lee had limited success in the interior with 15 points.

Meanwhile, senior forward Gary Forbes was dominant on the glass with 16 rebounds. The captain also scored 18 points as a part of his double-double.

Ford acknowledged after the game that fatigue has become an issue for many of his players. Since the team received a strong produc-

See M. BASKETBALL on page 6

JOSH REYNOLDS/COLLEGIAN

UMass captain Gary Forbes attempted 10 3-pointers last night but made just two. The Minutemen still had no trouble defeating SBU.

Softball drops three games in tournament

By Steve Games
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts softball team went 2-3 in five games at the Palm Spring Classic over the weekend in Cathedral City, Calif. Next week UMass will be in Columbus, Ga., for the NFCA Leadoff Classic.

Against Michigan State (4-5) yesterday, junior pitcher Brandice Balschmiter went seven innings, allowing one run on six hits, while striking out 10 and walking none. UMass improved its mark to 4-6, with a 5-1 win over the Spartans.

The game was scoreless through the first two innings, and in the top of the third UMass played small ball to get its first run. Sophomore shortstop Whitney Williams doubled to left center to start the inning. After a sacrifice by third baseman Whitney Mollica advanced Williams to third, sophomore Carly Normandin doubled to score Williams for the first run.

Balschmiter only made one mistake on the day during the bottom of the fourth when senior catcher Caitlin Mahoney homered to tie the game at 1-1.

The UMass bats broke the game open in the fifth and sixth innings as it scored three runs. In the fifth, senior second baseman Stacy Cullington hit a run-scoring double, and in the sixth inning, Mollica hit a two-run homer with two outs. In the seventh inning, Samantha Salato provided some insurance as she homered to left center.

On Saturday, UMass scored three runs in the fourth inning to sneak by Fresno State, 4-3. With the Minutemen trailing 1-0, senior outfielder Lauren Proctor reached on a fielder's choice and knocked in sophomore catcher Jessica Serio. With runners on second and third and one out, freshman designated hitter Audrey Boutin singled to center to score two more runs.

Sophomore pitcher Bailey Sanders went six innings, giving up four hits, three runs (two earned) and striking out one. Balschmiter came on in relief during the seventh to pick up her first save of the season.

In the first game of the double-header on Saturday, the Minutemen played 13 innings against Arizona State, losing 4-2. It was a duel between two of the top pitchers in the country with Balschmiter and Arizona pitcher Taryn Mowatt. Both pitchers went 12 scoreless innings. The Wildcats broke the game open with a four-run 13th. With a Wildcat runner on third and one out, Mollica committed an error on a hard grounder to third. The Wildcats took the 1-0 lead and continued to pile on as they hit back-to-back singles. With the bases loaded, pinch hitter Victoria Kemp doubled, and all three runners scored.

In the bottom of the inning, UMass scored two runs but could not complete the comeback.

On Friday, UMass dropped both games in the doubleheader, first to UCLA, 4-2, and then to Baylor, 6-4. UMass committed three errors against UCLA; Balschmiter went six innings while giving up eight hits and two earned runs. Against Baylor, Sanders struggled only pitching two and two-thirds innings, giving up seven hits and five runs.

Steve Games can be reached at sgames@student.umass.edu.

MICHAEL PHILLIS/COLLEGIAN

Junior pitcher Brandice Balschmiter has appeared in six games this season for the Minutemen and has all but one of four UMass wins.

Minutewomen upset DU on Senior Day

Mills, Rosanio lead team to win over Flyers to end skid

By Steve Games
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's basketball team snapped its four-game losing streak, defeating Dayton, 56-46, Saturday afternoon at the Mullins Center. With two games remaining in the regular season, the Minutewomen keep their hopes of making the Atlantic 10 Tournament alive.

Senior forward Kate Mills continues to carry UMass (12-15, 4-8 A-10) as she posted a double-double with 23 points – on 9-of-14 shooting – and 10 rebounds. The Minutewomen stand tied for the last spot in the A-10 tournament with La Salle; however, the Minutewomen hold the tiebreaker because they defeated La Salle back on Feb. 6, 66-63.

UMass	56
Dayton	46

"Kate's been so hottled up and frustrated with her play and performance thinking she's carrying the weight of the team," UMass coach Marnie Dacko said. "She went out and really had an outstanding game."

Dacko was impressed by her scoring but also her rebounding and ability to block shots. Mills finished with a game-high five blocks.

UMass started the game slow as Dayton (21-7, 7-4 A-10) pushed out to a 5-0 lead. But after Dacko inserted sophomore point guard Kim Benton and freshman forward Teya Wright, the Minutewomen went on a 12-0 run.

The Minutewomen had trouble containing senior guard Karah Cloxton in the first half as she scored 10 points including two three-point baskets. The Minutewomen, however, held Dayton to 27.6 percent shooting in the first half and closed the half on a 17-7 run. Dayton tried to double team Mills early in the first half, and it was successful until her teammates helped her out. The Minutewomen had nine points off the bench in the first half from Benton (3), Wright (4) and junior forward Stefanie Gerardot (2).

"The kids on the perimeter have to knock down open shots," Dacko said. "We have opportunities to knock down open shots and we put a couple new wrinkles our offense and we got some open looks."

With the Minutewomen leading 33-21, both teams started the second half sloppily. Coach Dacko called a 30-second timeout and placed Benton and Wright in the

See W. BASKETBALL on page 6

JOSH REYNOLDS/COLLEGIAN

Whitney McDonald was one of four Minutewomen to be honored on Saturday for Senior Day prior to the game against Dayton. UMass pulled off the upset against the Flyers, keeping their A-10 Tournament hopes alive.

INSIDE: MINUTEMEN SWIM TO A-10 CHAMPIONSHIP | PAGE 10

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

WINTRY MIX : HI: 38 LO: 32 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 26, 2008

RSU defies University ruling

By Derrick Perkins
Collegian Staff

A single safe-sex brochure depicting two men engaging in sexual relations remains posted in the Student Union following a University directive to remove the posters last week.

University officials removed the posters from the office window of the Radical Student Union last Friday, according to Alex Peterkin, a member of the campus organization.

RSU members reposted a copy of the brochure in the upper right corner of their office window today.

"The administration wants us to take them down," he said. "We're going to continue educating about safe sex, minority identities and homophobia on campus."

According to University spokesman Ed Blaguszewski, the RSU office is University property and the administration has the right in "specific and very limited cases" to remove objects deemed inappropriate.

"We thought that was the appropriate thing to do," Blaguszewski said. "They occupy the office though it is University property. The University can take the material down if the organization decides not to comply with what the University decided."

University of Massachusetts Republican Club President Brad DeFlumeri – who led the campaign to have the posters removed – said he expected the group to lose face penalties if they continued to defy the University decision.

"I expect them to be evicted from their office and derecognized as an RSO and to lose funding for defying a direct order from the University administration," DeFlumeri said. "I expect it to be down for good by Friday."

DeFlumeri organized a "rally for public decency" on the steps of the Student Union last Friday calling on the RSU to take the brochures down. The rally came a day after the University handed down the decision removing the flyers.

According to DeFlumeri, if the posters remain posted beyond Friday, the Republican Club would hold another rally highlighting the controversy surrounding the brochure, which DeFlumeri calls "pornographic."

"They don't own the office, the school does," said DeFlumeri. "They have no right to defy the University which has asked them to take the posters down."

Blaguszewski said that while the administration did not want an intrusive presence in the day-to-day operation of the RSU, the University had the ability to "apply community standards as [the University] deems appropriate."

"We have one flyer up right now and we're going to leave that one up," said Peterkin. "We're just going to continue doing what we're doing."

Derrick Perkins can be reached at dperkins@student.umass.edu.

MICHAEL PHILLIS/COLLEGIAN

University officials removed brochures depicting safe sex between two men after ruling the material inappropriate for public display.

ALEXIS GRAVES/COLLEGIAN

Members of the Radical Student Union reposted a copy of the flyer today following last week's removal of the brochures.

Nat'l rise in drug use among women echoed on campus

By Sruthi Valluri
Collegian Staff

A recent national survey showed that female drug use, alcohol consumption and smoking are on the rise. At a time when overall numbers for teenage drug and alcohol abuse are declining, women are catching up to, and in some cases, outpacing, men in almost all areas.

This is a surprising trend, according to the health care officials, because traditionally, women have been more conservative in using drugs, alcohol or smoking. The news has health care officials worried and wondering why girls have begun to close the gap.

But the survey does not necessarily prove that more women are experimenting with alcohol and drugs, only that there are more women admitting to having done so.

At the University of Massachusetts, the same trends are emerging. Dr. Jennifer Lexington, a staff psychologist at Mental Health Services, said that over the past few years, there have been more women coming forward and admitting substance abuse.

First reported in the Washington Post, the survey was interpreted as a sign that women were experimenting with freedom that had previously been granted only to men.

"I think that it's oversimplified," said Dr. Harry Rockland-Miller, director of Mental Health Services and clinical psychologist at the University. However, he does think that there is some merit to the argument.

He pointed to other areas in public health where women were going against conventional trends, such as suicide. Traditionally, men were thought to attempt suicide more violently using guns, while women were thought to use more passive methods like pills.

Recent research, however, shows otherwise. More and more, Rockland-Miller said, arguments that typecast genders are becoming obsolete.

Diane Fedorchak, project director of BASICS, an alcohol screening and intervention program on campus, pointed out that the alcohol industry also plays a key role. In recent years, the industry has begun to target a new demographic that was traditionally ignored: collegeaged students. Alcoholic beverages, especially flavored vodka drinks, are being tailored to instill brand loyalty in young females.

"I think we have to look at the context that women grow up in," said Fedorchak. "What are our billboards saying? What are TV commercials selling? This all adds up."

Societal expectations are also shifting greatly.

"The idea that 'women don't fight, women don't do drugs' used to be accepted a while ago. That kind of a stigma is not true anymore," said Lexington.

One student on campus, who admitted to using drugs, says that in her hometown, it was not acceptable for women to do drugs.

"On campus, though, it's an even playing field," she said.

Another female student who admitted to recently overcoming an alcohol abuse problem, feels differently. She found that there was no stigma attached to being a female.

"Alcohol and college go hand in hand these days," she said. "And it doesn't matter if you're a boy or a girl."

Regardless of why more women are consuming alcohol and drugs, health services on campus is getting ready to address the issue. Last year, Mental Health Services convened a group specifically designed to help females with substance abuse problems. Although the group is not in session this year, the problem is still a priority.

Fedorchak is also heading a renewed effort to address these issues on campus. Every year, health education takes surveys of students and uses the surveys as a benchmark for progress to be made. These allow BASICS and other programs on campus to set the tone for conversations with students.

"It's less of a female problem or a male problem anymore," said Lexington. "It's just a problem that affects people. Hopefully we can address the need as it arises."

Sruthi Valluri can be reached at valluri@student.umass.edu.

A national trend indicates that female druge abuse is on the rise.

Climate of change at UMass

By Ben Williams
Collegian Staff

Assistant professor Erin Baker recently won $430,000 to spend over the next five years to find out how to inform policy members about environmental change.

"The overall purpose of my research is to inform climate-related energy technology, primarily at the national government level," said Baker. "This is a two-step process. First, we analyze energy technologies, and then we communicate that analysis."

Baker, an assistant professor in mechanical and industrial engineering, has spent the last two years working on a project for the Department of Energy trying to find out how much it would cost and how long it would take to produce changes in energy technologies.

"When it comes to climate change, our country has really been rolling the dice," she said.

Her research is aimed at making the decisions of our policy makers more informed and towards actually improvement in energy technology.

She's spent time with over 30 engineers and scientists asking them how much money would be needed and how long it would take for possible breakthroughs in seven major energy technologies, such as solar, nuclear and biofuels.

The information she's gathered is now being put into mathematical models to find out more exact cost-benefit ratios.

Baker says the models are very similar to the ones pharmaceutical companies use to determine which drug research to fund, "but instead of maximizing profits, we will maximize the social benefit of energy technologies by minimizing the cost of research and development investment, the cost of emissions reduction and the damage from climate change," she said.

Doing much of the work with the solar model is undergraduate student Ashley Lewis.

"I have a great interest in the environment and developing the use of alternative energy to reduce greenhouse gas emissions and climate change," said Lewis in a statement. "Climate change economics allows me to take my strengths in industrial engineering and use them to research and learn about a topic that is personally important and interesting to me beyond being a student."

Baker says they may do research on more types of energy technology, but part of the research will require determining how valuable that information would be.

The second part of Baker's mission will be to develop a way to get this information to people who can make a difference, primarily congressional members who are making the decisions about energy policy.

"We are looking at something called Interactive Simulation, a fairly simple computer program that will have our uncertainty data built into it and will visually represent the future impact of different technology portfolios," said Baker.

Baker said that the software could be given to whomever needs it, and she is also considering working with the Hitchcock Center for the Environment, possibly putting a program online that the public could use.

"You could say, 'What if you invest this much in solar and this much in biofuel, what would the future impact be?'" she said.

Baker says the next two to three years will be spent putting the data she's gathered into mathematical models and analyzing the results, and that five years from now, they should have a working decision tool.

Ben Williams can be reached at bwilliam@student.umass.edu

Shelters seek new volunteers

By Kristen Healy
Collegian Staff

The Horizons for Homeless Children organization is looking for 30 volunteers to play and interact with homeless children in various shelters throughout Western Massachusetts.

The group is a non-profit organization that aims to make programs and services available to homeless children throughout Massachusetts. The organization is trying to recruit new volunteers to participate in their many volunteer opportunities.

Their mission is to improve the lives of the thousands of children who experience homelessness in Massachusetts "with the nurturing, stimulation and opportunities for early education and play that all children need to learn and grow in healthy ways," according to their mission statement.

Most of the work the organization is involved in helping and working with children who live in domestic and family violence shelters. Since they have locations all throughout Massachusetts, they provide opportunities for volunteers to work with children in their own neighborhoods or cities.

Currently, Horizons for Homeless Children is looking for volunteers in the Western Massachusetts area to interact with children living in 17 family, teen parent and domestic violence shelters.

They require a commitment of two hours a week for six months, and both evening and daytime shifts are available in order to accommodate volunteers' schedules.

Training sessions will be held Monday, March 24, and Tuesday, March 25, for Playspaces and shelters in Springfield, Holyoke, Adams, Northampton, Orange/Athol, Greenfield and Pittsfield.

To get more information or to register for training, contact Brigid Williams at (413) 532-0526 or bwilliams@horizonsforhomelesschildren.org.

Kristen Healy can be reached at khealy@student.umass.edu.

NSF awards professor $300k to research gravitational waves

Cadonati to analyze data with scientists from across the globe

By Alyssa Montalbano
Collegian Staff

A first-year professor at the University of Massachusetts recently received a $300,000 grant from the National Science Foundation.

Physicist Laura Cadonati, honored by the three-year grant, will further her research on gravitational waves over 90 years after Albert Einstein proposed the General Theory of Relativity that predicted the existence of gravitational waves.

Beginning her college career in Italy, Cadonati later attended graduate school at Princeton University and continued her education by attending the Massachusetts Institution of Technology for her postdoctoral research.

"In high school, I liked math and science. The more I studied it in college, the more I liked it," said Cadonati.

Graduate students Satya Ray Pitambar Mohapatra and Marcelo Dias are helping Cadonati with the research.

"Working with Laura is fun," said Mohapatra. "She has always been there to explain things and many times walk me through new methods of analysis and understanding concepts."

The grant was applied for in September 2006. With the grant money, Cadonati hopes to buy equipment to help with research and to hire students to help her with the research as well.

Cadonati is part of a research group of 580 scientists from various universities across the United States. Along with researchers from the United States, there are also 11 foreign countries involved in the research.

Researchers from similar projects such as the Virgo project, a Franco-Italian collaboration, GEO, a British-German collaboration, and TAMA, a Japanese project, are also involved. Research labs are being used in Europe and India as well.

Cadonati will analyze data that is collected by the Laser Interferometer Gravitational Wave Observatory (LIGO), which is located in Washington and Louisiana.

"Being in this collaboration has given me the opportunity to see how scientific research is done as an international community and how science progresses as the result of human endeavor," said Mohapatra. "This exposure to an international community doing scientific research is very rich in sociological and cultural experience for me."

Dias is also excited to be participating in this research.

"I'll be contributing to an important branch of the modern physics, General Relativity, which will explain many questions in astronomy and show another way to look at the universe through gravitational waves," said Dias.

The LIGO is funded by the National Science Foundation and was formed by the researchers at the California Institute of Technology and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. The observatory has the ability to measure small changes in space caused by the passing of gravitational waves.

Each week, Cadonati, Mohapatra and Dias meet and update each other on the latest developments, as well as go over literature that pertains to the field. Teleconferences also take place weekly between universities from Europe, India and the United States.

Cadonati, as well as other members of the LIGO Scientific Collaboration, are analyzing a two-year data collection run that the LIGO observatory has finished. UMass will specifically focus on the discovery of two black holes and bursts of gravitational waves.

"Hopefully this research will be a confirmation of Einstein's Theory of Relativity, help us see what is inside of black holes, and to learn new physics," said Cadonati.

Alyssa Montalbano can be reached amontalb@student.umass.edu.

ALEXIS GRAVES/COLLEGIAN

Cadonati will examine data recorded at the LIGO observatory.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 91
113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Ester
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Tim McCall
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Ryan McAskill
COPIES EDITOR Adam Staggin
EDITORIAL EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Rice
FEATURES EDITOR Dave Humphreys
PHOTO EDITOR Michael Phillis
WEB EDITOR James Hale
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Szymczak
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Maeve Whooten
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Stephanie McPherson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Skye McIntyre
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Garber
ASSISTANT NEWS Michael King
ASSISTANT NEWS Kate Olesin
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Seabury
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Connors
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Meloni
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenzweike
ASSISTANT PHOTO Brian Tedder
ARTS WEB EDITOR Michelle Abbasciano
EDITORIAL WEB EDITOR Leif Walcutt
NEWS WEB EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS WEB EDITOR Steve Games

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS ACRE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Meghan Murphy

COPY EDITOR
Kirsten Swenson

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Michael Sarkes

Across the Nation News Wire Around the World

UI frat criticized for theme party

By Paolo Cisneros
Daily Illini (U. Illinois)

(U-WIRE) CHAMPAIGN, Ill. — Theme parties are nothing new to the Triangle Fraternity at the University of Illinois. The house hosts one every semester, but it was not until the most recent party on Feb. 2 that allegations of racism came into play.

While residents of the third and fourth floors chose 1970s and "Nightmare on Elm Street" themes, respectively, students living on the second floor chose to model their space after the city of Compton, Calif.

"This particular incident was reported by a student who was friends with members of the Triangle Fraternity," said Kaamilyah Abdullah-Span, assistant dean of students for Student Affairs and director of the University's tolerance program. It was then that the University's bias incident investigation team set to work gathering information and assessing the situation.

Photographs of students with 40-ounce liquor containers and gold chains aiming guns at other partygoers surfaced on Facebook in the days following the event.

"We had a number of complaints after those photos got out, and right now we're in the process of responding to those complaints," said Triangle Fraternity President David Muccigrosso, junior in LAS.

Muccigrosso was quick to point out that despite the props used by some of the partygoers, no ethnic groups were specifically targeted through the use of makeup. The decision to model the floor after Compton came about as the result of many residents' affinity for hip-hop culture, he said.

Anna Gonzalez, associate vice chancellor and director for Intercultural Relations, said her role in the ongoing investigation was to make the students involved aware of the implications their actions have on other members of the University campus.

Her office is one of several investigating the party.

Members of the Triangle Fraternity, she said, will undergo extended diversity training.

She added that their reaction toward the training has been positive.

"I can safely say that the [Triangle Fraternity] has come forward and wants to learn from their mistake," she said. "They want to engage in learning about the issue at hand."

Racially themed parties have taken place on campus before, which is why Gonzalez said she believes they are an institutional problem rather than isolated incidences.

"Conversations about this issue need to happen," she said. "These parties have existed for a long time."

Muccigrosso said he disagrees with the accusation that the party was racist, saying one race cannot claim ownership of an entire city.

"We felt it was racially neutral," he said. "I can understand why some people might be upset. I don't necessarily share their viewpoint, but I respect it."

Community members should try to learn more about the Triangle Fraternity and its values before they begin to judge, Muccigrosso added.

"I think we deserve the chance for people to see that this was done in jest and not to target anyone," he said. "That's the difference between this and the 'Tacos and Tequila' party."

Other members of the University community, however, feel the fraternity crossed the line by hosting the party.

"Many members of the community felt like this was a mockery of that city's culture," Abdullah-Span said. "For students who don't come from that type of situation, to portray themselves in such a way is stereotyping."

Muccigrosso said the Triangle Fraternity counts 33 students as members. One is black and no Latinos are represented.

The fraternity recently sent letters of apology to the University's minority student associations, he added.

The investigation into the party is ongoing. Whether the fraternity will be sanctioned remains to be seen.

COURTESY BRITANNICA.COM

UI's Triangle Fraternity Compton-themed party sparked a campus controversy after drawing fire for stereotyping.

Machines might replace lab animals

By Andrew Cross
The Daily Vidette
(Illinois State U.)

(U-WIRE) NORMAL, Ill. — Scientists from the National Institutes of Health are currently examining the potential of robots as replacements for rodents in laboratory settings.

The NIH is partnering with the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, as well as the National Toxicology Program and National Institute of Environmental Health Sciences in an effort to quickly process chemical tests, as well as reduce harm to animals.

"The power of the collaboration is bringing together new strategies and technologies to address important needs in toxicology," said Dr. Samuel Wilson of the National Institute of Environmental Health Services.

The United States government's National Toxicology Program has tested about 2,500 chemicals in animals over the last 30 years. Experts believe new methods could scan the same number of chemicals in a single day.

"Already we are seeing dramatic progress," said Dr. Elias Zerhouni, director of the National Institute of Environmental Health Services.

The researchers plan to mix chemicals with human cells and use machines that can pick up on abnormal changes to the cells.

"Making use of this information ... will lead to a new toxicology paradigm that will transform toxicology and toxicity testing and provide a path towards better protection of public health as it relates to chemicals in the environment," Wilson said.

Pharmaceutical companies, who run tests to look for positive reactions in cells, already use the same types of machines around the world.

"[This program] has the potential to revolutionize the way that toxic chemicals are identified," said project researcher Dr. Francis Collins.

"Historically such toxicity has often been determined by injecting chemicals into laboratory animals," Collins added.

Collins also noted that the use of animals, particularly rodents, in toxicology tests is often expensive and time consuming.

"It doesn't always predict which chemicals would be harmful to humans. The correlation is not as precise as we would like," Collins said.

The scientists are also quick to point out that while the use of machines appears to be an effective alternative to the use of lab rodents, testing on animals will probably continue to some degree.

"You cannot abandon animal testing overnight," Zerhouni said.

COURTESY LIVESCIENCE.COM

The EPA and NIH are cooperating with other national groups to remove animals from labratory tests.

Every New Graduate nurse hired between now and September 1, 2008 receives an iPod touch.

- Academic Medical Center
- Student loan forgiveness of up to $10,000
- Graduate Nurse Residency Program

life works here.

DARTMOUTH-HITCHCOCK MEDICAL CENTER
Lebanon New Hampshire

www.newgradnursing.com

Break in case of emergency: seeds protected in Arctic vault

Frozen storage 'nuclear proof'

By Doug Mellgren
Associated Press

It's been dubbed a Noah's Ark for plant life and built to withstand an earthquake or a nuclear attack.

Dug deep into the permafrost of a remote Arctic mountain, the "doomsday" vault is designed by Norway to protect the world's seeds from global catastrophe.

The Svalbard Global Seed Vault, a backup to the world's 1,400 other seed banks, was to be officially inaugurated in a ceremony Tuesday on the northern rim of civilization attended by about 150 guests from 33 countries.

The frozen vault has the capacity to store 4.5 million seed samples from around the globe, shielding them from climate change, war, natural disasters and other threats.

"There are not many countries in the world they could have pulled this off," said Cary Fowler, executive director of the Global Crop Diversity Trust, a partner in the project.

Norway's government owns the vault in Svalbard, a frigid archipelago 620 miles from the North Pole. The Nordic country paid $9.1 million for construction, which took less than a year. Other countries can deposit seeds for free and reserve the right to withdraw them upon need.

The operation is financed by the Global Crop Diversity Trust, which was founded by the U.N. Food and Agriculture Organization and Biodiversity International, a Rome-based research group.

European Commission President Jose Manuel Barroso, 2004 Nobel Peace Prize winner Wangari Maathai of Kenya, a Crop Diversity Trust board member, and Norwegian Prime Minister Jens Stoltenberg planned to attend the opening ceremony 425 feet deep inside Platåberget mountain.

It was about 5 degrees outside as reporters were allowed in Monday for a sneak peek. But it was colder inside. Giant air conditioning units have chilled the vault to just below zero, a temperature at which experts say many seeds could survive for 1,000 years.

Inside the concrete entrance, decorated for the opening with an ice sculpture of a polar bear, a roughly 400-foot-long tunnel of steel and concrete leads to three separate 32-by-88-foot chambers where the seeds will be stored.

COURTESY ABCNEWS.COM

Built to withstand climate change, nuclear war or natural disasters, the Arctic seed bank has become the world's "doomsday" vault.

The first 600 boxes with 12 tons of seeds already have arrived from 20 seed banks around the world, Norwegian Agriculture Minister Terje Riis-Johansen said. The first 75 boxes were to be carried into the vault by guests as part of the opening ceremony.

The seeds are packed in silvery foil packets – as many as 500 in each sample – and will be placed on blue and orange metal shelves inside the vault. Each chamber can hold 1.5 million packets holding all types of crop seeds, from carrots to wheat.

Construction leader Magnus Bredeli-Tveiten said the vault has been designed to withstand earthquakes – successfully tested by a 6.2-magnitude temblor off Svalbard last week – and even a direct nuclear strike.

And even if power fails and cuts off the air conditioning, the permafrost insulating the vault would help keep the seeds "cold for 200 years even in the worst-case climate scenario," Fowler said.

He expects the vault's life span to rival that of Egypt's ancient pyramids.

"So much of the value of Svalbard is that it is so far away from the dangers" that affect many other parts of the globe, Fowler said. The archipelago is about 300 miles north of the Norwegian mainland.

Other seed banks are in less protected areas. War wiped out seed banks in Iraq and Afghanistan, and one in the Philippines was flooded after a typhoon in 2006.

Fowler called the vault an insurance policy against the unthinkable. "It's like you get in your car in the morning and drive to the office. You don't expect to get into a car accident, but you buy insurance anyway."

The vault is protected by armed guards, but their rifles aren't meant only to discourage uninvited humans from coming too close.

"My job is to keep away people who aren't supposed to be here – and guard against polar bears," vault worker Jimmy Olsen said, was standing outside the entrance with a rifle slung on his shoulder. There are an estimated 3,000 polar bears on the islands.

Norway has received praise from around the world for building the seed bank. FAO Director-General Jacques Diouf on Monday called it "one of the most innovative and impressive acts in the service of humanity."

Across the Nation News Wire Around the World

YouTube.com lost temporarily after Pakistan blocks Web site

By Peter Svensson
Associated Press

Most of the world's Internet users lost access to YouTube for several hours Sunday after an attempt by Pakistan's government to block access domestically affected other countries.

The outage highlighted yet another of the Internet's vulnerabilities, coming less than a month after broken fiber-optic cables in the Mediterranean took Egypt off line and caused communications problems from the Middle East to India.

An Internet expert explained that Sunday's problems arose when a Pakistani telecommunications company accidentally identified itself to Internet computers as the world's fastest route to YouTube. But instead of serving up videos of skateboarding dogs, it sent the traffic into oblivion.

On Friday, the Pakistan Telecommunication Authority ordered 70 Internet service providers to block access to YouTube.com, because of anti-Islamic movies on the video-sharing site, which is owned by Google Inc.

The authority did not specify what the offensive material was, but a PTA official said the ban concerned a trailer for an upcoming film by Dutch lawmaker Geert Wilders, who has said he plans to release a movie portraying Islam as fascist and prone to inciting violence against women and homosexuals.

The block was intended to cover only Pakistan, but extended to about two-thirds of the global Internet population, starting at 1:47 p.m. EST Sunday, according to Renesys Corp., a Manchester, N.H., firm that keeps track of the pathways of the Internet for telecommunications companies and other clients.

The greatest effect was in Asia, were the outage lasted for up to two hours, Renesys said.

YouTube confirmed the outage on Monday, saying it was caused by a network in Pakistan.

"We are investigating and working with others in the Internet community to prevent this from happening again," YouTube said in an e-mailed statement.

A YouTube spokeswoman did not immediately respond to an e-mailed question on whether the clips that offended Pakistan's government had been removed. Several clips with interviews of Wilders were still up on the site Monday afternoon.

Two apparent errors allowed the outage to propagate beyond Pakistan, according to Todd Underwood, vice president and general manager of Internet community services at Renesys.

Pakistan Telecom established a route that directed requests for YouTube videos from local Internet subscribers to a "black hole," where the data was discarded, according to Renesys. Pakistan Telecom's mistake was that it then published that route to its international data carrier, PCCW Ltd. of Hong Kong, Underwood said.

The second mistake was that PCCW accepted that route, Underwood said. It started directing requests from its customers for YouTube data to Pakistan. And since PCCW is one of the world's 20 largest data carriers, its routing table was passed along to other large carriers without any attempt at verification.

COURTESY YOUTUBE.COM

A move by Pakistan's government to ban the Web site left Internet users across the world in the dark.

"Once a pretty big network gets an error like that, it propagates to most or all of the Internet very quickly," Underwood said. As he put it, Pakistan Telecom was impersonating YouTube to much of the world.

Pakistan Telecom and the Pakistan Telecommunications Authority were unavailable for comment on Monday night local time. Rex Stover, vice president of enterprise sales for PCCW Global in Herndon, Va., said the company is still trying to figure out what happened and why.

John Palfrey, executive director for the Berkman Center for Internet & Society at Harvard Law School, said that while all the facts in the case are not yet known, it appeared that the repercussions were due to Pakistan taking a relatively heavy-handed approach in trying to censor YouTube.

"It points in many respects to the difficulty, if not the folly, in Internet filtering at the state level," he said.

Misrouting occurs every year or so among the world's Internet carriers, usually as a result of typos or other errors, Underwood said. In a more severe example, a Turkish telecom provider in 2004 started advertising that it was the best route to all of the Internet, causing widespread outages for many Web sites over several hours.

"Nobody ran any viruses or worms or malicious code. This is just the way the Internet works. And it's not very secure or reliable," Underwood said, adding that there is no real solution to the problem on the table.

While most route hijacking is unintentional, some Yahoo! networks were apparently taken over a few years ago to distribute spam.

"To be honest, there's not a single thing preventing this from happening to E-Trade, or Bank of America, or the FBI, or the White House, or the Clinton campaign," Underwood said. "I think it's a useful moment for people to decide just how important it is that we fix problems like this."

Uggs draw Princeton protest

By Rachel Dunn
The Daily Princetonian (Princeton)

(U-WIRE) PRINCETON, N.J. — Defying February's climatic dictates, students lay in the newly fallen snow on the Frist Campus Center's North Front Lawn on Friday afternoon, feigning death, wearing coats covered with fake blood and sporting signs that read, "What if you were killed for your coat?"

The protest, based on a campaign started by People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals (PETA) and organized by the Princeton University Animal Welfare Society (PAWS), was designed to raise awareness of animals' suffering as part of the fashion fur industry. The protest focused on Ugg boots, which are made from sheepskin and are popular among college-age women.

In addition to Uggs, which are openly noted as derived from animals, fur marked as fake may not actually be, PAWS vice president Alex Barnard '09 explained, adding that clothing imported from China is often unregulated, and recent studies indicate that cat and dog fur may be mislabeled as "faux fur."

Princeton protestors wore coats covered in fake blood last Friday to raise awareness of animal suffering in the production of Ugg boots.

PAWS hopes to address these issues and change people's perceptions of fashion through the protest.

"We want people to realize that fur, whether it is fake or real, is just ugly, and there's no reason to wear it at all," PAWS president Jenny Palmer '09 said.

Princeton is an ideal place for the protest because of fur's association with social status, Barnard said. "There is a lot of wealth here," he explained. "There are people who wear animal products here because they can afford them."

While PAWS members see demonstrations such as last Friday's as pivotal to awakening activism on campus, some students see the protests as unnecessarily graphic.

Aly Lopez-Aguar '09 noted that while she agrees with PAWS' mission to decrease the use of fur in fashion, the use of fake blood was "excessive," she said. "If somebody sees something that graphic, they're going to be turned off of the issue itself," she explained.

Palmer, however, defended the use of provocative images.

"There's always a risk [of offending people]," she said. "Sometimes there's a lot of apathy; we need to have these shocking images to force people to recognize that the clothes they choose to wear have an impact on animals' lives."

Public protests reach a wider audience than the speakers, educational programs and other events that PAWS sponsors, Palmer explained. Protests like the one at Frist aim to alert the public to see the controversy over fur as a "wider issue," she said.

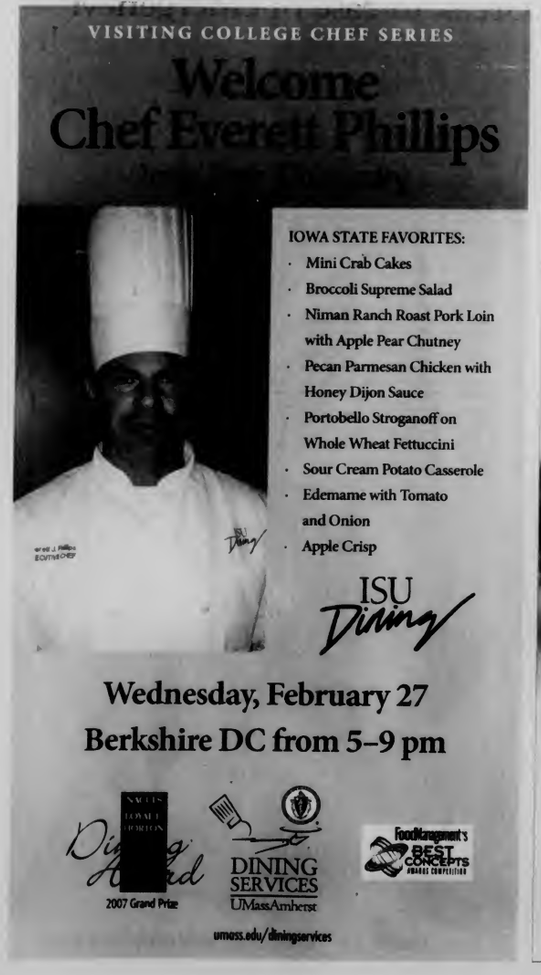
While such demonstrations are perfectly within PAWS' right to free speech, the graphic nature of the protest might give a negative impression to prospective students and people trying to get a sense of the University, Haley Thompson '11 said.

"There are a lot of people [who saw the demonstration] who aren't students here, and they might find it offensive," Thompson explained.

For Thompson, though, wearing Uggs remains a personal decision, much like being a vegetarian.

"You do the same thing when you sit down and eat a hamburger," Thompson noted. "I don't feel like it's all that different, and I'm not a vegetarian."

Seeing the demonstration did not change her mind, she added. "I'm still going to wear my Uggs."



There should be limits, however, to personal choice, Palmer said.

"We appreciate the right of people to make their own choices up to the point where it affects others," she said.

Because animals may be crammed into cruel slaughterhouses and gassed, decapitated or electrocuted, however, individuals must be especially conscious of the implications of their clothing decisions, Palmer said.

"People don't have the right to cause that kind of pain, even if they choose to," she explained.

Barnard said he hopes, however, that the event caused people to reflect on their fashion choices. "If just a few people are affected by it, it's a success," he said. "Just a few people can make a difference."

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 26, 2008

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
- Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Norms at UMass

Devon Courtney

Are you able to have fun without alcohol? Do you have four or fewer drinks when you "party?"

If the answer to either of those questions is "yes," then you just might be a puppet of UMass's social norms campaign. Nice job, you sheep.

The random sampling of UMass students who were asked these questions over the past year were e-mailed surveys about their personal habits.

When asked in the survey how many drinks these students typically had, many of them responded as if they were using jackhammers on their keyboard's number pads. It's funny to imagine what those survey results currently imply.

If one in 10 UMass students "know how to have fun without alcohol," then that means that 2,500 to 3,000 students right here on campus are raging alcoholics. Chances are, you know between one and 10 people who can't function without a helping hand from Jack Daniels or Jim Beam. That's impressive.

As a side note, those nine out of 10 students who "know how to have fun without alcohol" probably often choose not to. But you wouldn't ever see that on the side of a bus.

If three out of four UMass students have four drinks or fewer when they party, that means that roughly 7,000 students on our campus are binge drinkers by UMass's own definition.

These facts are presented in such a way that we can't mathematically ascertain the true implications before the bus that they're printed on drives away. Health services at UMass is trying to make it seem like we drink a whole lot less than we actually do.

Also, we should define "party." A party, according to the statistical dictionary located in my imagination, is a "gathering of people who enjoy massive ingestion of alcohol."

I wouldn't dare vouch for myself, but to my understanding, four drinks are enough to get the average person pretty sloshed. Coincidentally, UMass defines binge drinking as more than four drinks per female and five drinks per male. I suppose the social norms here at UMass are convenient yet misleading, given the very definition of binge drinking.

On the other hand, how many of the people who receive these e-mail surveys actually respond truthfully? Do you know anybody who has checked their inbox and said, "Goodness, UMass is really counting on me to help change the tides of student residential life. I'd better be completely honest."

Chances are, you know between one and 10 people who can't function without a helping hand from Jack Daniels or Jim Beam.

I can almost guarantee that that number is not as great as the number of students who click the attractive little "delete" button.

In fact, a friend of mine informed me that a friend of his was photographed for a UMass social norms campaign poster.

"He wasn't too happy about that," he recollected.

Is there anything wrong with having fun while drinking? Now, I never passed the bar, but the last time I checked, drinking wasn't illegal.

As I understand it, the social norms campaign was designed for students' parents. Students have heard of alcohol, students drink, and students do stupid things every day with or without the influence of a magical beverage. They usually do them under the negligent purse strings of Mr. and Mrs. UMass parents.

If you attend UMass, you should experience a "party" at least once. Whether or not you are comfortable with ingesting a completely legal beverage that has the power to baffle your consciousness is ultimately your decision, and purportedly not at the mercy of a passing bus message.

Then, when students start getting out of line, we have the God-sent BASICS program to teach them about what students are doing to themselves when they drink alcohol.

When students are not assimilating the social norms information (which, according to the Web site, is written passively to avoid "scare tactics" and making people "feel bad"), we charge them money and try to take a more direct approach towards chastising the individual students.

Getting written up and forcibly sent to the BASICS program sounds like a huge scare tactic to me – and they don't bother to give you a choice in the matter.

So what is it that the social norms messages aim to do? As well as I can reason it, the messages are the first-level attempt at squashing out the drinking culture, with a level of innocence that reminds you of Full House.

The next tactic corrals you into a program that puts an instructor in front of you to tell you how harmful your personal drinking is. After that, further offences can lead to more BASICS meetings, which cost more money, and in extreme cases, eviction from University housing.

So, if drinking isn't illegal and students plan on doing it anyway, why go through all of this trouble to stamp it out? It would make sense to ascertain that it's all about the Benjamins.

Lower drinking stats make the UMass look like a much safer place, regardless of what the pesky and unsightly "truth" is. Don't try to cover it up, you administration cronies.

Remember – we got the facts from you.

Devon Courtney is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at dcourtne@student.umass.edu

HEY, DO YOU HAVE AN AGENDA?

PUSH IT HERE

Send all correspondence to editorial@dailycollegian.com

A Nile spectacle

GLOBAL PERSPECTIVES

Greg Collins

Imagine traveling in a private boat with your friends down the most famous river in the world, absorbing the bright skyline, tranquil waves and overall picturesque scenery of Cairo at night.

This dream transformed into reality for me this past Thursday, when 100 or so American University of Cairo students attended a Nile River boat party hosted by an Egyptian friend.

After I expressed interest in the party last week, somehow I became responsible for inviting students, obtaining their contact information, and collecting the £50 required for the cover charge.

Keeping track of at least 50 different names, phone numbers and payments proved to be a difficult task in the two days leading up to the party.

There were numerous problems, most self-inflicted, on the night of the event.

I dealt with people who said they paid but did not have tickets, people who neither paid nor possessed tickets, and people who had tickets but did not pay.

In any event, everyone who desired to attend the party was able to get on the boat. And for all of the issues leading up to the party, helping to coordinate the event was definitely worth the effort.

For almost four hours, we sailed up and down the Nile River, the gentle waves providing a cushion for the boat's electric atmosphere. The dazzling Cairo skyline surrounded us as we danced to American hip-hop music (which, by the way, is substantially better than Egyptian techno).

In a country supposedly hostile to non-Arabs, this party, attended by whites, blacks, Jews, Arabs, Egyptians, Europeans and Asians, exemplified how people spanning different ethnicities, faiths and races can have fun together regardless of genetic or religious backgrounds.

While this party was the social event of the week, the most powerful political event occurred the day before on the AUC campus. A Palestinian advocacy student group hosted a sit-in to protest what they considered to be an unwarranted Israeli siege on Palestinians in the Gaza Strip.

Most recently, a Palestinian terrorist was killed by Israeli forces, and previously, Israel had restricted supplies and electricity to Gazans after an increase in Palestinian-fired rocket attacks on Israel.

Even after talking with the president of the Palestinian group about the demonstration, I felt that the premise for the sit-in was severely misguided.

A person or a sovereign nation has the right to defend itself with force if necessary. Because Israel suspected that the recent Palestinian who died was planting a bomb near the Gaza-Israel border, it was well within their responsibilities as a sovereign nation to target someone who was intent on killing Israelis.

If an Arab nation had acted similarly in similar circumstances, then this response would also have been completely justified.

A person or a sovereign nation has the right to defend itself with force if necessary.

Unfortunately, Palestinian leadership, primarily in the Gaza Strip, is dominated by terrorists who claim to represent the interests of the Palestinian people. If they truly were committed to alleviating the destitute socio-economic conditions of Gazans and the residents of the West Bank, then they would immediately put down their arms.

This way, Israel would not threaten or follow through with the prevention of food, supplies and electricity reaching the Palestinians, who deserve a government run by people not devoted to carrying out a personal grudge against another ethnic group.

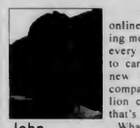
Rather, they deserve to be governed by leaders who will act in a way that provides the best conditions for Palestinians to rise out of poverty, one of many important goals for the Palestinian people.

The first step to create this environment is for Palestinian terrorists to lay down their weapons. Therefore, elaborate schemes to exchange "land for peace" sound pleasant in theory, but has serious shortcomings in reality if terrorism continues to be employed.

Undoubtedly, this simple principle would apply to Israel if Israel targeted innocent civilians as frequently as Hamas does.

While American perceptions of Arab society are often wrong, I have learned here that one perception rings true unequivocally – Egyptians do not like Israel, and Arabs do not like Israel. In particular, they do not like Israeli Jews or Zionists in general. Whether these sentiments are justified or not is up for debate.

A large reason surrounding why Israel is perceived in such a poor light is because of the incredibly twisted reporting of Middle Eastern politics from prominent news publications here, such as the newspaper Al-Ahram.



For instance, Israel and America are continually criticized for waging what media outlets here consider to be a war on all Muslims and Arabs.

Of course, this biased journalism may reflect President Mubarak's state control of news conduits.

Regardless, no state control could have restricted the amount of joy I and countless other AUC students experienced on the Nile boat party. Feel free to attend the next one at the end of this semester.

Greg Collins is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at gcollins@student.umass.edu.

Nothing is sacred online

John Gruenenfelder

Security and privacy, online or off, are becoming more and more important every day. Few people seem to care, though, until some new story appears where company X has lost two million customer records. And that's relatively benign.

What happens if instead your bank has an intrusion, or a social Web site you visit (Facebook or MySpace, for example) lets loose with user information?

Up until the presidency of George W. Bush, most U.S. citizens were exceptionally weary of their government knowing too much about the people. At the same time, little care is given to what information people choose to share with the companies they do business with.

In Europe, however, the situation is somewhat reversed. In general, countries in the European Union have strong privacy protections written into law, but the government tends to know much more about the people. Since we do not have similar privacy laws here, it falls upon the individual to take more responsibility for their privacy.

The best thing to do is to simply stop giving away so much information. Students are bombarded with this sort of thing all the time on campus.

When you fill out that credit card form to get a free shirt, even if you don't get the card, the company still has your information. And if you look closely at that form, the amount of personal details they ask for is quite extreme.

For example, nearly all forms ask for your Social Security number. Because these are unique, companies can use Social Security numbers to very easily combine the information you've just provided them with what they know about you from other sources.

But you don't need to, and indeed shouldn't, give it to them. By law, it is illegal for them to require the number, though they can still ask.

Years ago, when Radio Shack was still a real store, they would ask every customer for name, address and phone information. Very few people would decline, making a three-person line nearly 15 minutes to get through.

Today, this torch has been passed to the likes of Best Buy, where the next words after hello are, "May I have your phone number?" Most customers that I've seen proceed to rattle it off without even a pause.

Remember that it is your information, and you don't need to give it away.

The online world is no better. Many Web sites will ask you to register first. Often, the information collected is little more than your name and e-mail address, but computers are very good at collating information.

At first, this all seems relatively benign, but remember that this information isn't just stuffed into some computer in a basement. It is sold and shared to whomever they wish. Web sites will typically have privacy statements, but a blanket clause is almost always present that allows sharing with parent companies and subsidiaries.

Some of the worst privacy invaders are credit reporting agencies, such as the big three – Equifax, Experian and TransUnion. By gathering and collating data from a wide range of sources, these agencies have a substantial file on nearly everybody in the country who has every used a bank or a credit card. And when they get something wrong, it is very hard to make it right again.

Local and regional companies also have surprisingly large databases of customer information. An Associated Press story recently detailed a worker snooping into the customer database at WE Energies in Wisconsin.

According to the article, this database includes "credit and banking information, payment histories, Social Security numbers, addresses, phone numbers and energy usage." And, for some reason, it contained income and medical information for some customers.

The company fired or disciplined some employees when the snooping occurred, but the real question is for what possible reason would the company amass so much information in the first place? There is no need for the power company to know my Social Security number or income, and certainly no reason for them to have any of my medical history.

It's not time to break out the tin foil hats, but when a regional power company is allowed to know so much about you for no reason, then it is time to worry.

Even if there were laws to prevent either the gathering or the using of such information, there are so many of these large databases that it would be hard to monitor but a few of them.

Remember that it is your information, and you don't need to give it away. If some random store you visit asks for your address, don't just blindly give it. Think about whether you really want that catalog.

Unless you are doing something related to taxes or health care, there is almost never a good reason to give out your Social Security number. That number alone provides almost instant access to troves of information about you.

John Gruenenfelder is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at jgruenen@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 26, 2008

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Vocals power new CD

Commercial success comes with latest album from Feist

BY JOE STAHL
COLLEGIAN STAFF

With the acclaim that Feist's first album, "Let It Die," brought in, the indie crowd started to take her credentials seriously. Now, this humbly-bred Calgary punk-rocker is a four-time Grammy nominee.

Feist has been on the indie scene for years, contributing vocals to various art-rockers, including Broken Social Scene, Kings of Convenience and a few others that got her to where she is now, musically.

Feist's 2007 release, "The Reminder," is far less smooth lounge-sounding, but it still lingers. On many tracks, she traded in her blissful woodwinds for guitars. Of course, she called on Mocky (her long time collaborator) for some extra assistance that has always worked well. Mocky hardly offers any inspirations of his usual lush bossa nova or the electronic sound he offered Feist on "Open Season." It is possible to make the connection to the earlier roots of bossa nova from the prevalent guitar.

Even though "The Reminder" is filled with catchy melodies and simple balladry, Feist still gives the notion that it was all DIY because of its ambience and impromptu vocalizations (i.e. "Sea Lion Woman" and "Honey Honey"). The instrumentals are bare and backing, which allows Feist to use her undeniably beautiful voice to warm them.

The work here is a bit more subtle and tranquil through the help of cellos and harps. The end result of the record is comparable to a sound belonging to Azure Ray or even the Carpenters.

At one point in the 32 year old's life, Feist put her music career to a halt due to voice complications. During this two-year struggle, she turned to sad girls PJ Harvey and Portishead who in turn, became huge inspirations for the singer-songwriter.

As a solo project, Feist does not hold back her songwriting now that she has the authority to do what she wants. All of the 13 tracks are at least co-written by Feist. Help was offered by some of her friends who also laid down back-up vocals on a number of the songs.

Guest vocals especially shine through of the emotionally-charged track, "How My Heart Behaves." Dirk Glambek Bose, who is most known for being a part of Kings of Convenience, successfully beats up the down tempo track with his rustic and deep voice. To summarize the overall lyricism, they are confessional, highly wishful and youthful. The duet ballad provides sensitive, confessional lyrics – "The rain, the rain, making me cry."

While Feist is reopening her wounds, she shows how literate she can be on the hand-clap tune "Past in Present" – "The Scarlet Letter isn't black, gotta know

See FEIST on page 6

"THE REMINDER"

FEIST

INTERSCOPE RECORDS

3/5

The song "1 2 3 4" of her latest album "The Reminder" has skyrocketed Feist up the charts. Aside from the colorful video, the song has been featured in the iPod Nano ad and was performed at this year's Grammy awards.

80th Oscar Awards offer humor, but little surprise

The Coen Brothers were big winners on Oscar night as their latest movie "No Country for Old Men" captured a total of four statues, including Best Picture, Best Director and Best Supporting Actor.

Stewart hosts 'make-up sex' between writers and producers

BY CHRISTINA FONG

It was a big night for little movies. The 80th Annual Oscar Awards commenced on Sunday night, ready to hand out those little gold statuettes.

It opened with host Jon Stewart spouting jokes about the writers' strike, the primary race between Obama and Clinton, and of course the lucky nominees of the night. In regards to the writer's strike he opened by recapping the strike and talking about the relationship between the writers and the producers, adding, "I might welcome to the make-up sex."

There was a fresh infusion of new actors and actresses vying for the awards battling several Oscar veteran who have monopolized the acting nominations in the past. The major nominations that people are usually more interested in were filled with a combination of familiar faces such as Cate Blanchett ("I'm Not Here," "Elizabeth: The Golden Age") and Johnny Depp ("Sweeney Todd"), and some unfamiliar faces, namely Amy Ryan ("Gone Baby Gone") and Javier Bardem ("No Country for Old Men").

There were few surprises throughout the night, and many popular predictions were played out. Javier Bardem won Best Supporting Actor for his portrayal of the sociopathic killer Anton Chigurh. He ended his acceptance speech passionately, saying, "Esto es para España. Y esto es para todos vosotros." ("This is for Spain. And this is for all you.")

As the merciless oil prospector Daniel Plainview, Daniel-Day Lewis ("There Will Be Blood") won Best Actor. This was his second career win, as he picked up his first Best Actor Oscar for his role in "My Left Foot." Bardem and Lewis were the big favorites for their sinister portrayals.

Marion Cotillard ("La Vie en Rose") won Best Actress, beating out Julie Christie ("Away From Her"). Cotillard gave a truly transformative performance as French singer Edith Piaf.

Tilda Swinton ("Michael Clayton") was the big surprise winner of the night, winning Best Supporting Actress for the role of the uncompromising attorney Karen Crowder. Most bets were placed on Cate Blanchett or Amy Ryan. Cotillard and Swinton were both first-time Oscar nominees.

"No Country for Old Men" took Best Adapted Screenplay

See OSCARS on page 6

Multiple ways to veiw murder

BY FRANK GODINHO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It seems that movies based on the assassination of a president have become a staple in the genre of political thrillers.

From last year's "Shooter," to the controversial film "Death of a President," to "In the Line of Fire," and even on the small screen with the weekly television series "24," there's no denying our fascination with how we might imagine ourselves coping with the death of our commander in chief.

With "Vantage Point," the latest film to tackle an exhausted subject matter, the question is whether or not the film has what it takes to stand out in an already crowded marketplace.

Taking a rather unique approach, "Vantage Point" combines the assassination theme with post-9/11 global terrorism. From the Secret Service to an innocent tourist bystander, we see an assassination attempt on the president from eight different points of view.

The unique element of "Vantage Point" is its ability to examine the same 23 minutes of chaos in such distinctive ways. The film analyzes all pieces of the jigsaw puzzle one at a time and illustrates how each piece offers an added dimension of suspense.

Don't be discouraged when you see the film rewind over and over again. With each retelling, the viewer gets closer to understanding the big picture as a whole, and each additional angle delves further beneath the surfaces than the one preceding it.

The narrative of the president's assassination begins with world leaders gathering in Spain for a groundbreaking summit against terrorism, and the president of the United States (William Hurt) is about to speak at a midday rally.

See VANTAGE POINT on page 7

"VANTAGE POINT"

STARRING: DENNIS QUAID, MATTHEW FOX AND FOREST WHITAKER

B –

The topic of presidential assassinations has been an increasingly popular one in Hollywood for the past few years. The new thriller "Vantage Point" takes a unique twist on the idea but showing the same 23 minutes from the view point of several people.

NCAA '08 doesn't make the big dance

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

New Jersey Institute of Technology ended its season at 0-29 a few days ago, registering the worst record of any team in Division I college basketball history.

And yet, I'm left wondering if its play on the court may still be better than the gameplay in NCAA March Madness 2008 for Xbox 360.

While that may be a bit of a stretch, I would advise EA Sports to enlist some help making next year's game better because, quite simply, this year's version isn't very good.

The guys at N.J.I.T. may even be able to help. Considering their play on the court, I wouldn't ask them to do motion capture, but considering they go to a technological school, they could probably make a better game than EA Sports did this time around.

The major problem here is that the casual fan will be largely upset with the gameplay and graphics, while the hardcore college hoops gamer will be frustrated with the lack of authenticity to the game (not to mention the aforementioned gameplay and graphics).

The casual fan could probably care less that some players shoot with their wrong hand, and that others have the wrong skin color in the game. But most people that will purchase this game aren't casual fans. The hardcore college hoops fans are going to be angry when they see a player like Massachusetts left-handed point guard Chris Lowe shoot with his right hand. That shouldn't happen.

Other things that shouldn't happen: impossible-to-miss free throws, jump shots that many times go in no matter when – or if – you release your shot, terrible camera angles, almost automatic defensive rebounds, the fact that almost every player runs entirely too slowly and a loading screen that constantly pops up during gameplay after fouls, free throws, made baskets, etc.

I assure you that NCAA March Madness '08 isn't all bad; it's just that the bad greatly overshadows the good. I like how all the teams and arenas are included, I like the commentary with Dick Vitale and Brad Nessler and I particularly enjoy the ESPN integration.

While EA Sports shot up an airball with the gameplay, the Dynasty Mode is a slam dunk. It definitely has its flaws with difficult to navigate menus and a complex recruiting system, but it just takes a little getting used to.

Plenty of interesting storylines play out while you try to guide your team to the Big Dance. Before the season begins, you can make alterations to the schedule, re-name the players on your team, and recruit the stars of the future to your program.

During the season, you have to constantly recruit players, build fan support and even suspend players who violate team rules or fall behind in academics. It's also fun to check out the Top 25 polls, or ESPN's "Bracketology."

See NCAA on page 7

"NCAA MARCH MADNESS 08"

EA SPORTS

XBOX 360

2.5/5

Sibling of cabbage tasty and good for business

Vegetable offers healthy treat while helping local economy

By Andrea Murray
Collegian Correspondent

A man in a suit and tie stands at the counter of Earthfoods Café, and hands his large Tupperware container over the counter.

He asks only for a large serving of kale.

Kale? That dark green, leafy, sometimes tough relative of the cabbage family?

No, kale may not be the most respected vegetable on the planet, but at the University of Massachusetts and other places, it's becoming increasingly popular. A large serving of kale that takes up half of a plate only costs $1.50 at Earthfoods, and the café serves about 200 pounds of it each week. The health benefits pile up as big as the heaping servings there.

Kale is not a familiar vegetable to most, but it's easy to grow and support locally in New England. Kale is gaining a following among those concerned with the health of the planet and themselves.

Kale is a leafy green that descends from wild cabbage. It has been around for nearly 2,000 years. The Greeks and pre-Catholic Romans grew several varieties of kale. It comes from the vegetable family Brassica, which includes its better-known siblings cabbage, cauliflower and Brussel sprouts.

"People are really jazzed about local food," says Emily French, a BDIC major focusing on agriculture.

French, in collaboration with Adam Dole, has helped to run the organic kale farm, Common Wealth, on UMass property in South Deerfield. She estimates that in the fall, they collected between 120 and 250 pounds of kale per week to supply Earthfoods with local produce for as long as they could. Things went so well this past fall with Earthfoods that French's project is expanding this spring to provide onions, carrots, lettuce, beets, garlic and leeks. French admits to becoming a bit spoiled as a result.

"I don't really eat a lot of kale in the spring because now I've had really good local kale," says French.

Kale is a native vegetable to northern Europe and the British Isles, and has been an important vegetable to the British and Scots in the present and past. When World War II began, the "Dig for Victory" campaign was launched in Britain. Citizens were encouraged to plant essential crops in their gardens to provide their own food. Kale was chosen as one of the essential vegetables for this campaign because of its impressive nutritional value that complemented meager rations. After the war, kale faded into the diets of yesteryear.

Kale is considered to be one of the most highly nutritious vegetables because of its high vitamin content of A, B6, B1, B, C and E. It's a good source of iron, manganese, fiber, copper, folic acid, calcium and antioxidants. Kale has also been shown to have high levels of phytonutrients, which are natural chemicals in produce that may fight cancer. Kale has also been said to be a tumor deterrent. It has no cholesterol and a cup of the cooked greens only has 36 calories.

"It is extremely rich in iron and vitamins, it's beautiful to look at and I really love the taste of it," says Adam Dunetz of the Green Bean restaurant in Northampton.

Dunetz and his partner in life as well as business, Liz Karney, own the Green Bean restaurant, a two-month old breakfast and lunch cafe. Karney is a former UMass Earthfoods team member and she and Dunetz continue to share their love of kale at their budding business. One of the few, possibly only restaurants in the area with kale on their menu, Dunetz says that it has been a big surprise sensation among customers.

"Green Eggs is probably our best selling dish in the whole restaurant. We sell more kale than probably anything else on the menu," Dunetz confessed.

The name "Green Eggs" may not sound appetizing, but it certainly grabs attention. On the Green Bean menu, "Green Eggs and..." is a breakfast dish that consists of a choice of breakfast meat that accompanies three eggs, kale or collard greens, a spot of garlic, and a pinch of salt all blended together then scrambled in a pan and topped with Vermont cheddar cheese.

"I put it [kale] on [the menu] because how could Liz and I not?" Dunetz asked. "We eat so much kale in our own lives. It was sort of an experiment, and as it turns out, people are ravenous for kale."

Dunetz was also quick to cite the benefits of buying local. When the kale is bought locally it helps to support local farmers and the local economy. Besides, freshly picked kale tastes a lot better than kale that has been sitting in a box for a week.

"I can say that about nine months out of the year we're going to be able to buy it locally," Dunetz says.

Unless you've tried kale at Earthfoods, the only other place you may have seen it was garnishing your plate at restaurants. Ornamental pink, purple and white kale is nice to look at, but is not as tasty as the leafy varieties.

The wide variety of kale makes for an interesting array of uses. Popular ways to prepare kale include raw and washed, steamed, blanched or sautéed. Certain types of kale like Tuscan kale are better suited for salads. Red Dino and curly kales are better as a side dish prepared to your liking. Kale can be used in soups, pasta tosses, salads or just alone. Cooked kale is great with balsamic vinegar and oil, tahini sauce or any preferred dressing.

So c'mon, what have you got to lose? Give kale a chance.

Andrea Murray can be reached at skmurray@student.umass.edu

Kale, a leafy vegetable in the cabbage family, has become a popular snack item at Earthfoods as well as several local restaurants and cafes. Local farmer are even supplying fresh Kale to these dining establishments as the popularity of the green treat grows.

Academy recognizes 80 years

OSCARS from page 5

while "Juno" took Best Original Screenplay.

"Juno" writer Diablo Cody, who worked as an exotic dancer before becoming a screenwriter, accepted the Oscar in tears, saying, "I want to thank my family for loving me exactly the way I am."

This was her first screenplay and first Oscar.

Joel and Ethan Cohen took home Best Director for their dark yet masterful direction of "No Country for Old Men." The Cohen brothers had previously won an Oscar for Best Original Screenplay for "Fargo." As everyone predicted, the film was also the night's grand-prize winner, picking up Best Picture. The film dominated the night with a total of four Oscars.

The Pixar-Disney film, "Ratatouille" won Best Animated Film. It was a tale about a rat named Remy whose only dream was to cook good food. He finds himself doing just that in a famed Parisian restaurant. Brad Bird has previously won two Oscars for Pixar's "The Incredibles."

The Oscars added a few changes here and there, as they do every year. Each category of the night was introduced with a montage of the past category's winner. Unfortunately, the only interesting montages were the back-ups meant to be used in the event the writer's strike was still on.

Stewart was eager to unveil the "Salute to Binoculars and Periscopes," as well as "Bad Dreams – An Oscar Salute."

Jon Stewart also felt compelled to throw in a new category this year — Best Baby. With pregnant actresses Jessica Alba, Cate Blanchett and Nicole Kidman nominated, the award undoubtedly went to Angelina Jolie.

Christina Fong can be reached at cfong@student.umass.edu

Marion Cotillard won for Best Actress at the Oscars for her portrayal of French singer Edith Piaf in "La Vie en Rose."

'1 2 3 4' helps grab Grammy nod

FEIST from page 5

who's got your back."

She throws her ego out the window in order to reach complete serenity (for herself and the listeners). She effortlessly achieves this through the projection of her impeccably gentle and therapeutic voice.

Feist was at her most natural and peaceful recording in Paris and the Canary Islands in pajamas. Because of the peaceful environment around her while recording "The Reminder," the production of the album did not take much time. The easiness of the making reflects the soft-edged indie pop.

Looking back, "1001" was Feist's breakout year. It was her fantastically adorable hit, "1 2 3 4," written by New Buffalo's Sally Seltmann and Feist herself, that gained her worldwide attention. With the help of Apple putting the "1 2 3 4" video in their commercial to promote the third generation iPod Nano, she entered herself into the mainstream, which expanded and diversified her fan base.

Feist told BBC News, "I felt a definite shift (after the advert came out); it seemed to peak a lot of curiosity which luckily led back to an album and video I believe in. It just shows you the power of that kind of thing, as opposed to some preconceived marketing ploy."

Not unexpectedly after the release of the commercial, "1 2 3 4" exploded onto the iTunes Top Songs chart, and it also hit No. 4 on Nielsen SoundScan's digital songs list.

The video, directed by Patrick Daughters, brought in four-dozen shimmering, multi-colored dancers to make playful geometric shapes, and surround Feist as she danced unprofessionally. If you look back at Feist's video archive, dance is a staple in her collection.

Surprisingly enough, the Apple Nano commercial is not the first commercial Feist has had the chance to be affiliated with. Before the release of "The Reminder" when Feist was still under the radar, McDonalds offered the singer a generous $1 million deal to buy the rights to the bouncy number "Mushaboom" in a commercial. Feist declined the offer. However, the song is used in a Lacoste perfume commercial in France.

Because of her breakout hit, Feist scored herself the recognition from the boys and girls of the 2008 Grammy Awards, receiving nominations in big categories like Best Pop Vocal Album and Best New Artist.

Also, the Grammys deemed it appropriate for Feist to perform her chart-topper "1 2 3 4" live. Feist's ability to have a lucrative career minus the common pitfalls of becoming a "sell-out" is a challenge that should be commended. Hopefully, Feist can continue to make smart decisions and stay on a path of honesty and integrity.

Joe Stahl can be reached at jstahl@student.umass.edu

The success of "The Reminder" is largely due to the hit single "1 2 3 4." The album was recently recognized with Grammy nominations for Best Pop Vocal Album and Best New Artist.

"SMASHING THE BEAUTY BOX"
with
ROSIE MOLINARY
Author, Hijas Americanas: Beauty, Body Image and Growing Up Latina

An enlightening, empowering presentation about beauty, body image and breaking free!

Wednesday, Feb. 27, 2008
7 – 8:30 p.m.
Malcolm X Cultural Center, Berkshire DC
FREE ADMISSION

SPONSORED BY:
Bilingual Collegiate Program
Everywoman's Center
Counseling Services
Josephine White Eagle Cultural Center
Malcolm X Cultural Center
University Health Services – Health Education
Women of Color Leadership Network
UMASS AMHERST

Submit your beer related questions to arts@dailycollegian.com, so the Beer Dudes can answer your brew-related queries in the new Beer Dude podcast

ESPN help fails NCAA

NCAA from page 5

to see if your team looks NCAA Tournament-bound and have potentials in the Player of the Year race.

The game even has an NCAA Selection Show hosted by Vitale and Nessler, which builds the excitement on whether or not your team made it into the Big Dance. But the NCAA Tournament is a bit disappointing. The excitement in the arena isn't nearly what it should be and the games are played on generic courts and not in real venues.

The offseason is busy, too, as players graduate and declare for the NBA Draft early. Players can also transfer out of your school. It's a difficult process to maintain your talent level, particularly if you don't run a powerhouse program like Duke or North Carolina. But when you bring in that five-star recruit to a school like UMass, it's that much more rewarding.

Going back to the gameplay itself, one thing I really like is the new and improved low-post play. In previous versions of the game, that was one of the major problems, but not here. The big men can really dominate a game now in the blocks, using a host of moves to control the interior.

In-game features like "team intensity control," and "impact moment control" are nice ideas to get the crowd and your star players more involved, but in the end it really has little effect on the game and can be tedious. However, with the team intensity meter and "player composure," your star players are more apt to take over games and hit that clutch shot for you as the clock winds down.

The graphics aren't terrible, but they are disappointing. The camera angles have the players so far away, and in many ways it looks like a regular Xbox game. The crowd looks awful, but the venues look pretty nice.

I have to give some credit to the online play. You can play a ranked or unranked match against anyone with the headset to talk some trash, or you can even join a league if you want to play in an organized setting over a longer period of time.

I guess the thing that just bothers me the most is that EA Sports did such a good job with NBA Live 2008, but dropped the ball on NCAA March Madness. At times when I was playing NCAA, I would just ask myself out loud, "How did the same company make this game and NBA Live?"

I would suggest that you buy this game if the only thing you care about is Dynasty Mode. If you're looking for a basketball game with good gameplay, look elsewhere.

And if you're a star high school basketball player, don't go to the New Jersey Institute of Technology.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@dailycollegian.com

College hoop die-hards will be disappointed in the latest installment of "NCAA March Madness '08" because small mistakes in the player physical appearance, like UMass player Chris Lowe shooting with the wrong hand.

Assassination thriller

The multiple time jumps used in the new political thriller "Vantage Point" could have been disastrous, but the excitement of the action scenes and car chases make up for a shaky plot.

VANTAGE POINT from page 5

Our first vantage point can be seen through the eyes of the media via a cable news network producer (Sigourney Weaver). This aspect is particularly intriguing as it shows how the media struggles to maintain composure during a time of mayhem. In journalism, it's the reporter's job to relay the facts to the public and abstain from showing emotion, however difficult that may be.

When the viewer least expects it, the film makes an abrupt stop, like a commercial break at the most suspenseful moment in an episode of "24." A clock appears and the film literally rewinds back to the beginning of the story.

Following the rewind-effect instead of focusing on Weaver's character, the film centers on two Secret Service agents, Taylor (Matthew Fox) and Barnes (Dennis Quaid). The viewer sees more of Barnes' vantage point, whom the film identifies as a secret agent on edge and on the brink of paranoia after having taken a bullet for the president just six months prior.

With every retelling, the film rewinds and starts over again, giving a new perspective each time. When it comes to American tourist Howard Lewis (Forest Whitaker), the story becomes one that the audience can relate to. After all, seeing the events take place through the eyes of an innocent bystander is easier to interpret than through the eyes of a Secret Service agent, a terrorist or the U.S. president.

Whitaker's portrays Lewis as a sympathetic and compassionate man. As the story continues to unravel, he takes on the role of a hero as he risks his own life to protect a Spanish mother and her little girl despite all the turmoil.

One thing worth noting is "Vantage Point's" blatant rip-off of the film "Crash." Whitaker's save and rescue mission of the little Spanish girl delivers the exact same sentiment of "Crash's" invisible cloak scene with the young Hispanic girl.

The side stories of Weaver's and Whitaker's characters make it confusing for the viewer to put all the pieces together.

As the film progresses, major twists in the plot occur that make the remainder of the film very interesting. Eventually, even though the puzzle isn't 100 percent complete, the audience is able to see what the final picture is before it's over.

"Vantage Point," which takes a risk in its rewind concept, delivers an entertaining drama. The action sequences and car chase scenes are comparable to that of "The Bourne Ultimatum."

Despite lacking in the screenwriting department with some cringe-worthy dialogue "Vantage Point" delivers a satisfactory addition to the growing genre of political thrillers involving the assassination of a president.

Frank Godinho can be reached at fgodinho@student.umass.edu

UNITED STUDENT ACTION
"From the folks who brought you the UMass Strike"

RALLY TUESDAY
AT NOON
(2/26)
& STRIKE UPDATE
AT THE
STUDENT UNION BALLROOM

Since the two-day strike last November, a 10-student committee has been meeting with the administration for weekly negotiation meetings. Things look promising -- if we keep the pressure on. Join us for the rally today!

A brief update: after the strike, students submitted a 10-page proposal to the administration that provided detailed requests for the four strike demands:

1) Accessibility & Affordability
2) Funding & Accountability for Outreach & Diversity
3) End to all Unwarranted Police Patrols & an Accountable UMPD
4) Reverse Mandatory First-Year Only Housing & Return Campus Center Student Union to Student Control

Through January & February, students and administrators have been exchanging proposals. On Friday, 2/29, the administration will provide us with their final offer.

On March 5th and 6th –as part of the SGA & GSS elections—YOU will have the opportunity to VOTE on the administration's proposal:

- Do you think the administration has fairly responded to these demands?
- Should we take further action to pressure the administration to do more to make UMass more AFFORDABLE, DIVERSE and RESPECTFUL of students?

So far, we've negotiated for:
- Community-Police advisory board
- Random Police patrols out of dorm hallways
- Student control over the Student Union & Campus Center through the CCSU Committee
- Reduced charges for Student Union/Campus Center space and equipment for RSOs & GSOs
- Commitment to apply to Upward Bound & other outreach TRIO programs

...and outside of negotiations, the strike helped push out the much-disliked Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs, Mike Gargano.

However, the administration has stalled on the following demands...
- Lowering fees
- Funding for graduate diversity
- Funding for undergrad support services
- Rescinding mandatory first-year only housing
- ...and several others...

Minutemen continue domination of A-10

M. SWIMMING from page 10

place. Their combined efforts earned another 31 points for the Minutemen. Since his 15th-place finish at A-10s last year, Willbrant has emerged as one of Yarworth's best young stroke swimmers.

Willbrant also swam the lead leg for the third-place finishing UMass 200-yard medley relay team.

A fourth-place finish for Butler is nothing to look down upon. Butler is one of Yarworth's most promising young swimmers and with senior captain Zack Priest leaving after this season, there will be an open spot that Butler could step into.

The butterfly and breaststroke were more successful swims for the Maroon and White.

In the 200-yard butterfly, Berthaume captured the second gold medal for the Minutemen with a time of one minute, 51 seconds. The gold brings a close to Berthaume's turnaround season. He overcame shoulder injuries and with extensive training under Yarworth, is becoming a force in the 200 fly.

Redshirt senior Derek Castellana finished third behind Berthaume in the 200 fly.

"What a way to finish his career," Yarworth said of Castellana. "He's never been on the podium before, and what a superb way to do it."

Sophomore Tim Smith finished seventh in the 200 fly, earning 12 points for the Minutemen.

Freshman Brian Schmidt finished fourth in the 200-yard breaststroke, trailing La Salle's Chris Tiano by less than a second. Schmidt's finish put 14 additional points on the board for UMass. Senior captain John Weaver finished 10th in the event, earning seven points.

Sophomore Juan Moliere earned the final individual medal for the Minutemen. Moliere took the bronze medal in the 100-yard freestyle. He worked particularly hard during the offseason to prepare for the A-10s and his work on his breathing played an important role in his gaining the bronze for UMass.

Moliere also swam the anchor leg of the 400-yard freestyle relay team, which earned the bronze medal.

The Minutemen will compete next at the Eastern Collegiate Athletic Association Championship meet next weekend in Pittsburgh, Pa.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu.

Atlantic 10 Swimming & Diving Championships

Men's Individual Champions

1-Meter Diving
R.J. Rappe

3-Meter Diving
R.J. Rappe

400-Yard Medley Relay
Andrew Willbrant
Brian Schmidt
Nate Bromage
Juan Moliere

50-Yard Freestyle
Juan Moliere

100-Yard Backstroke
Andrew Willbrant

1,650-Yard Freestyle
Justin Brooks

Women's Individual Champions

1-Meter Diving
Karen Upperco

3-Meter Diving
Ann Fogerty

Christa Narus broke the UMass school record in the 200-yard butterfly. The junior from Stony Brook, N.Y., surpassed the old record, which she already held, by three seconds.

CAL BITTEST/UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Diving team receives high recognition

W. SWIMMING from page 10

our anchor, being the person we go to," said Newcomb.

Sophomore Kathryne Chalikis also had a great weekend. In three races, she had her three best times of the season. Newcomb noticed that she has become more confident, has a better technique and is at the top her game.

"[Freshman Jessica Staroselec] really stepped up and showed what she can do for us for her next three years," said Newcomb.

This meet showed that Chalikis and Staroselec will be a very integral part of the team in their years to come.

Christa Narus also turned in a successful wekeend. The junior broke her own school record in the 200-yard butterly, shattering her previous record by three seconds.

The divers were also successful at the A-10s. In the 1-meter board, UMass took home the gold, silver and bronze. Junior Karen Upperco finished first, freshman Anne Fogerty took second and junior Sarah Horstmann placed third.

Fogerty and Upperco both broke the A-10 record for the 3-meter board. Fogerty took the gold medal, Upperco took the silver, and Horstmann finished in fourth place.

Upperco was also named the A-10's Most Outstanding Diver. UMass men's and women's diving coach Mandy Hixon also received an award. She was named Diving Coach of the Year for both men's and women's diving.

"Diving was exceptional," Newcomb said.

Upperco and Fogerty will continue their season at a "zone meet." This is when all the divers that qualify for nationals go to a zone meet before hand. This gives them a chance at the NCAAs, according to Newcomb.

"Most of the swimmers are satisfied and ready to take time off. We have been pushing them hard; they need a little time off and it's well-deserved," he said.

Melissa Turtinen can be reached at mturtine@student.umass.edu.

Team effort results in success

SKIING from page 10

coach Skip Fox said.

Of course, a first-place finish requires a total team effort, and Small certainly had plenty of backup. His younger brother Matt finished 10th in the slalom and ninth in the giant slalom, and men's captain Hawes earned fifth in the slalom and ninth in the giant slalom. Hohmeister added a sixth-place finish in the giant slalom and was 10th overall for the weekend.

Competing on the women's side were team captains Ashley Hawes and Emily Shilletto, senior Eliza Hawkins, sophomore Heidi Skinner and freshman Jaime Taloumis.

The Minutewomen also claimed a successful weekend at the ECSC regionals. They finished third in the slalom and second in the giant slalom for a second-place finish overall behind Colby-Sawyer.

Similar to the men's team, a senior member of the women's team stepped up big for the UMass and took top individual honors. Hawkins had a terrific performance in one of the final collegiate races of her life, earning third in the slalom and second in the giant slalom.

Emily Shilletto displayed consistent excellence earning fifth in the slalom and fourth in the giant slalom.

"Emily had a real good weekend, and it's been a long time coming for her to reach her potential, so that was really nice to see," Fox said of the sophomore co-captain.

Finishing behind Hawkins and Shilletto, Hawes placed 11th in the slalom, while Skinner and Taloumis failed to place amongst the top skiers.

Both teams worked well together – if one skier did not manage to finish, every teammate understood that they had to pick up the slack. It was that ability that left Fox feeling proud of his teams.

"For the first time this year, they skied as a team, and that's why we're in the position that we're in," Fox said. "The first day, one man and one woman went down, and the rest of the team stepped up. It was a great overall team effort."

The season isn't quite over yet, as the team has to prepare for nationals, but Fox considered this past weekend a resounding success.

"We did great, both teams are going to nationals, you know you can't really ask for more than that," Fox said.

Scott Feldman can be reached at sfeldman@student.umass.edu.

Sampson must help with NCAA probe

By Michael Marot
Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Former Indiana coach Kelvin Sampson's separation agreement with the university will not be finalized until March 17.

Sampson signed the deal Friday, but university spokesman Larry MacIntyre said Monday the Hoosiers ex-coach has 21 days to revoke the deal that includes provisions which prevent Sampson from suing the university.

The agreement, which was obtained through a Freedom of Information request, also requires Sampson to continue cooperating with the NCAA investigation and bars him from interfering with any team activities.

"Sampson shall not interfere in any way with the activities of the men's basketball team and shall not discourage the current members from cooperating with the transition to a new head coach, from remaining active members of the team, and from playing to their full potential in all competition events," the agreement states.

Sampson took a $750,000 buyout Friday in return for his immediate resignation after the NCAA accused him of five major rules violations.

The university also included a clause saying that the deal does not, in any way, indicate Sampson believed he had any legitimate legal claims against the school.

Indiana has until May 8 to respond to the NCAA charges and is scheduled to appear before the infractions committee June 14 in Seattle. A decision is expected within 30 days of the hearing, where Sampson has said he looks forward to defending himself. The university could also ask the infractions committee to move the hearing up to April although there is no guarantee the request would be granted.

Sampson took the Indiana job in March 2006 and two months later was penalized by the NCAA for making 577 impermissible phone calls between 2000 and 2004 when he was coaching Oklahoma.

The second wave of charges emerged in October when a university investigation found Sampson and his staff made more than 100 impermissible calls while still under recruiting restrictions and that Sampson participated in at least 10 three-way calls, another violation of the NCAA's punishment.

Athletic director Rick Greenspan called the violations secondary, imposing a one-year extension of the NCAA's recruiting restrictions and pulling a $500,000 raise. The Hoosiers also took away one scholarship for the 2008-09 season.

However, an NCAA report released Feb. 13 by Indiana claimed Sampson provided false and misleading information to investigators from both the university and the NCAA, failed to meet the "generally recognized high standard of honesty" expected in college sports and failed to promote an atmosphere of compliance within the program.

Sampson has denied intentionally providing investigators with false information, and the university's deal says he is expected to cooperate with the adjudication process.

"Sampson shall fully cooperate with the NCAA process with regard to any NCAA investigation, proceeding or hearing, relating to or indirectly arising out of Sampson's activities as the head men's basketball coach of Indiana University's men's intercollegiate basketball team or the operations or activities of Indiana University's men's intercollegiate basketball team or any coaches or staff members during the period of April 20, 2006 and including the effective date."

Following the NCAA report, university president Michael McRobbie announced IU would take a second look at the charges, setting a Friday deadline for Greenspan to make his recommendation.

Before the recommendation was announced, the two sides negotiated a settlement and Indiana named Dan Dakich, who played and coached under Bob Knight, interim coach for the rest of this season. Dakich won his first game Saturday at Northwestern to keep the Hoosiers in position to contend for their first outright Big Ten title since 1993.

Auto Express is your one stop for
MASS STATE INSPECTIONS
with extended hours for your convinence!
Monday, Wednesday & Friday 8 am to 6pm
Tuesday & Thursday 8am to 7pm
Saturday 8 am to 5 pm
Sunday 10 am to 4pm
Axels • Brakes • Batteries • Mufflers • Tune-Ups • Full Service Oil Changes
118 South East St. Amherst, MA 01002
413-253-0056
Bring this coupon in to donate 5% of your purchase to the Center for Popular Economics

Domino's Pizza
AMHERST / HADLEY
413-256-8911
Rt 9 Across From Stop & Shop
Store Hours:
Open 11am-4am Thurs.-Sat.
11am -3am Sun.-Wed
Mt. Holyoke Location: 593-9800
GREAT ONLINE COUPONS
WWW.DOMINOS.COM
FREE BREADSTICKS MONDAY, TUESDAY, WEDNESDAY
BUY ANY MEDIUM OR LARGE PIZZA AT MENU PRICE
GET ANY ORDER OF BREADSTICKS FREE
LARGE UNLIMITED TOPPING PIZZA $10.99
NO DOUBLE TOPPINGS
ANY LARGE SALAD
ANY BREADSTICKS
ANY 20 OZ DRINK
ONLY $7.99
1 PERSONAL PAN PIZZA
WITH 2 TOPPINGS +
10 WINGS OR KICKERS
ONLY $9.99
WE ACCEPT OCMP
Find Out More About

WE DEMAND YOUR SUBMISSION.
comics@dailycollegian.com

Sudoku is sadistic.

		8			9	5		3
	6							1
3			5					6
			9		4		1
	8	5				3	9
	1		2		5
8					6			2
1							7
7		3	1			6

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

ACROSS
1 About, with date
6 Ooze
10 Kelly or Disney
14 Writer Asimov
15 Catherine Henry VIII's sixth
16 Miscellany
17 Opera director
19 Elbow-wrist connection
20 Periods
21 Trumpet's kin
23 Scheduled explosion
27 Exhibit ants in the pants
28 Manipulator
29 Body of water
31 Head-to-head tests
32 Grips firmly
35 Shut-eye
37 Writer Kesey
38 Alike
40 Chinese Charman
43 Yielded
44 Casual top
46 Louisiana backwater
49 Of recent origin
51 Against: pref.
52 Alters, as a bill
54 Mild, gentle quality
57 Shrimp, squid, etc.
59 Marsh grass
60 Otherwise
61 Difference of opinion
66 Parks oneself
67 Continuous dull pain
68 Hot, spicy drink
69 Soviet news agcy.
70 Observed
71 Derisive

DOWN
1 Li x II
2 Belief syst.
3 Knock
4 Vocations
5 Sour, formerly
6 Bursts of energy
7 Corn serving
8 Newsman Severed
9 Trial print
10 Overwrought
11 Assert without proof
12 Door frame part
13 Browns bread
18 ___ Paulo, Brazil
22 Unrelated bill attachments
23 Friar of Sherwood
24 Capri or Man
25 Nasty
26 Moreover 30 Everything
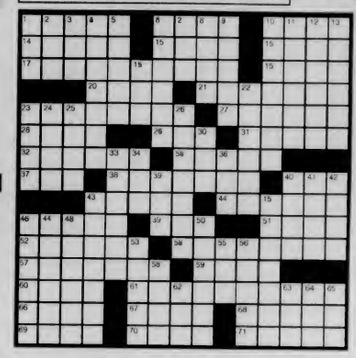
33 Phony
34 Comic Caesar
36 Have a meal
39 Fellows
40 Collect ore
41 Part of B.A.
42 Elevator man?
43 Own up
45 Active involvement
46 Most contemptible
47 Aviator Earhart
48 Leavening agents
50 Go downhill
53 Soft drinks
55 Service charge
56 Camp shelters
58 Cut into small cubes
62 That woman
63 Dictator Amin
64 Peculiar
65 Comic Lours



Caption Contest!

Submit captions and see the picture in color at:
www.dailycollegian.com/caption
The winner will be granted diplomatic immunity.

Quote of the Day

"I care less if I can't be part of your scene because I am the scene. I am everything that is."
-Kid Rock acting modest

Submit your comics!
comics@dailycollegian.com

Submit your classifieds!
(413) 545-3500

Ecology By Jen Fill

Paul By Billy O'Keefe

Labrat By Richard Martelly

Horoscopes

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
If you were a ravioli, you'd be filled with love and served with a creamy lobster sauce.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
At this very moment, someone is whispering your name because they like the way it sounds.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Stop snuggling on the Campus Center couches. They just cleaned those!

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
It's not enough to simply wear socks and a loincloth. You must also wear a top hat and fake eyelashes.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
You are sending mixed messages. You must decide between Morse code and smoke signals and maintain consistency.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Consider the implications of this excerpt: "Denver, the last dinosaur, he's our friend and whole lot more."

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Clint Eastwood once used his long, bony fingers to break a monkey's neck after it had touched him inappropriately.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Start hunting bald eagles. Nothing says power like an eagle on a platter.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Sometimes peanut M&M's love each other so much that they stick together. Take note, stick like candy coating to the one you love.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Stop engaging in petty quarrells with your roommate. Assert your dominance and lay the smackdown!

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Sell advertising space on your body. Charge the highest rates for the forehead and buttcheeks.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Based on your long history of promiscuity, you do not belong in the British Virgin Isles.

Good for lunch,
Great at dinner,
Even on the can,
Comics is a winner.

comics@dailycollegian.com

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Announcements

Montreal Weekend
From $99 Complete.
Best Hotels.
Best Prices.
montrealexpress.net
781-979-9001

Apt. for Rent

Hobart Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement Cable, phone (internet access), in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for June and September. No FEES. 253-7879 www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

Apt. for Rent

Studio, 1,2,3,4 bedrooms available Going Fast, Still guaranteeing for Fall Semester ALL UTILITIES INCLUDED! Call ASAP 413-256-0741

Employment

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

Employment

TEXTBOOK BUYBACK STAFF NEEDED FOR$15/HR
Online textbook company needs 20 college students to staff textbook buyback events at local private high schools in May and June. 10-30 hrs/wk with flex hrs to fit your sched. Email resume to winnie.imperio@varsitybooks.com

A GREAT JOB! Spend your summer in a lakefront cabin in Maine. If you're looking to spend this summer outdoors, have fun while you work, and make lifelong friends, then look no further. Camp Mataponi, a residential girls camp in Maine, has female/male summertime openings for Land Sports, Waterfront (small crafts, skiing, life guarding, WSI, boat drivers), Ropes Course, Tennis, H.B. Riding, Arts & Crafts, Theater, Cooking, Gymnastics, Dance, Videography, Group Leaders & more. Top salaries plus room/board & travel provided. Call us today toll free at 1-888-684-2267 or apply online at www.campmataponi.com.

Services

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthright.org.

Concerned About Your Eating?
Do you eat too little? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic, 577-5101

TAPESTRY HEALTH providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling &rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential. Affordable. Safe. 413-548-9992. 27 Pray St. Amherst. www.tapestryhealth.org

Travel

Montreal Weekend
From $99 Complete.
Best Hotels.
Best Prices.
montrealexpress.net
781-979-9001

Spring Break 08 Hot Deals. Hot Destinations. Hot Parties. Ask About Group Deals and FREE TRIPS. 1-800-426-7710 www.sunplashtours.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 26, 2008 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

A-10 champions again

COURTESY ATLANTIC 10

R.J. Rappe jumps into the pool with diving coach Mandy Hixon. Rappe, a senior captain, gave the Minutemen 20 points in the finals and was named Most Outstanding Diver in the Atlantic 10 Championships, while Hixon was honored as Diving Coach of the Year.

Rappe excels, is honored as Most Outstanding Diver

BY MIKE GILLMEISTER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

For the seventh time in eight seasons, the Massachusetts men's swimming and diving teams are Atlantic 10 Champions.

The Minutemen finished with 791.5 points, thanks to two gold medals and three bronze medals.

Second place Saint Bonaventure was 224 points behind UMass, who never relinquished the lead. After day one of the meet, the Minutemen led by 31 points and kept moving further away from the opposition.

Senior captain R.J. Rappe was named Most Outstanding Diver for his efforts. Rappe's score of 635.90 in the finals gave the Minutemen 20 points.

Along with Rappe, freshman Adam Duffield earned a place on the podium, taking third in the 1-meter dive. Freshman John Clark and sophomore Byron Johnson took fifth and seventh place in the event, earning 14 and 12 points, respectively.

Rappe and Johnson also scored points for UMass by going one-two in the 3-meter dive, totaling a combined 37 points.

UMass coach Russ Yarworth applauded diving coach Mandy Hixon for constructing one of the best men's diving teams in the conference.

"Mandy did a great job of putting together a diving program," Yarworth said. "Last year, we only had R.J., and this year all of the other kids placed in the top 10. It can only be attributed to Mandy's hard work."

In the 1,650-yard freestyle event, sophomore Justin Brooks won the gold medal for the second year in a row. Junior Brad Sloan padded UMass's lead by winning bronze in the event. Brooks beat last year's time by 10 seconds. Brooks blew past one of the top swimmers in the A-10, Fordham sophomore Ryan Coombs, who finished in fourth place.

Sloan moved up two places from last year's results.

The 1,650 isn't an event that occurs often, it usually only takes place in conference or invite meets.

Sophomore Andrew Willbrant swam to a third-place finish in the 200-yard backstroke. Behind Willbrant was freshman standout Max Butler, in fourth

See M. SWIMMING on page 8

COURTESY ATLANTIC 10

UMass coach Russ Yarworth is flanked by Evan Swisher (left) and Isaac Ebert (right). Yarworth is in his 29th season as head coach of the Minutemen and has enjoyed recent success, winning the A-10 Championship seven times in the past eight years.

Volpe, UMass finish fourth in conference

Minutewomen just beat out Rams to avenge earlier loss

BY MELISSA TURTINEN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts women's swimming and diving team placed fourth overall in the Atlantic 10 Championships this past week.

The Minutewomen were in close competition with Fordham throughout the week, but in the final day of competition they squeaked by, earning 420.5 total points, 6.5 points ahead of Fordham.

UMass coach Bob Newcomb considered beating Fordham a great accomplishment for the Minutewomen because they lost to them in a dual meet earlier in the season.

Richmond won the A-10 Championship for the seventh consecutive year with 690.5 points. Xavier finished second overall (488 points) and Duquesne was close behind in third (470 points).

"[I am] extremely happy, I think we had an absolutely fabulous meet," Newcomb said. "Everyone swam the way they can swim."

The Minutewomen finished the first day in sixth place. The races were considerably faster than they were in years prior, according to Newcomb. The first night, he instructed his team to concentrate on what they were doing, to stay within their own lanes and not worry about what other swimmers around them were doing. He said that after they concentrated on that, they began to swim better.

UMass kept moving up and down on the leader board throughout the weekend, but with support from the team, they were able to nudge out Fordham and take fourth place.

"It's a team sport. They were all cheering for each other and keeping each other motivated," Newcomb said.

There were 53 different races in the meet; 83 percent of the swimmers gave their best swims of the season and 75 percent had career-best swims, according to Newcomb.

Newcomb said the swimmers really stepped up, including senior Allison Volpe. She swam in three races and participated in four relays. Her individual races were career-bests. In the 100 freestyle, Volpe swam nearly a second faster than her previous best time.

"In the relays, we put her at the end, we knew we would get a full performance out of her, being

See W. SWIMMING on page 8

COURTESY ATLANTIC 10

Senior Allison Upperco was named the A-10's Most Outstanding Diver and won the silver medal in the 3-meter board.

Maroon and White finish first, second in ECSC regionals

Small brothers lead men's team while Hawkins and Shiletto pace women's side

BY SCOTT FELDMAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It hasn't been the easiest season for the Massachusetts men's and women's skiing team, but last weekend, during one of the biggest meets of the year, the Minutemen and Minutewomen had outstanding performances at the Eastern Collegiate Ski Conference regional championships in Waterville Valley, N.H.

Both teams will compete in the USCSA Nationals at Sunday River, Maine this weekend.

The Minutemen earned a first-place finish in the slalom Saturday and a second-place finish in the giant slalom, which was good enough for first place overall. With the victory, the Minutemen are now the Eastern Conference regional champions of the United States Collegiate Ski Association.

The regional championship pits the top skiers from each college against each other, and the team with the most combined points earns the title. This year, the Minutemen were represented by senior Jason Small, sophomores Andrew Hawes, Adam Pogorzelski, Matthew Small and Ian Hohmeister.

The Minutemen were led by Jason Small, who finished second in the slalom, then followed it up the next day by claiming first place in the giant slalom and earning first place overall as an individual.

"Jason getting second on Saturday and first on Sunday, that was obviously a fantastic weekend for him," UMass head

See SKIING on page 8

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Jason Small enjoyed a successful weekend at the ECSC regional championships, finishing first in the giant slalom and second in the slalom. The senior's younger brother, Matt, finished ninth in the giant slalom and 10th in the slalom for the Minutemen.

INSIDE: MEDESKI, MARTIN AND WOOD TO PLAY CALVIN | PAGE 5

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

CLOUDY/SNOW : HI: 28 LO: 18 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 27, 2008

Facebook archives user data

BY SRUTHI VALLURI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Many college students have a love-hate relationship with Facebook: it wastes time, but is almost impossible to do without. What most don't know, however, is that this relationship lasts a lifetime. No account, even after deletion, is fully defunct. Pictures, videos, email addresses, phone numbers, wall posts and nearly everything else are archived by Facebook.

This is not the only time Facebook has pushed the boundaries of user privacy. The Beacon Advertising Feature, a program that publicized user activity on outside Web sites, recently stirred an online revolt. Within days of its debut, nearly 50,000 Facebook users signed a petition on MoveOn.org protesting its use.

Even more troubling than Beacon, a lifelong commitment to Facebook has gotten only minimal notice. A Facebook group called "How to Permanently Delete Your Facebook Account" has only

See FACEBOOK on page 3

Strike held after demands not met

USAC rallies, struggle remains with admins.

BY WILL MCGUINNESS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Mollie Murnane and other protesters stood outside the Whitmore Administration Building yesterday to speak out to University administrators after demands were not met since the November strikes.

Approximately 90 students gathered as the United Student Action Coalition (USAC) rallied in support of its negotiating team. The crowd gained volume and numbers as the rally continued and voiced its concern that the administration has not done enough to meet the coalition's original demands, which sparked the Nov. 15 and 16 strike and forced the Whitmore Administration building to close for the strike's first afternoon.

Following the strike, USAC members presented the administration with a packet that outlined their demands for diversity funding and outreach programs, a rollback of student fees, student control over student space and against police presence in student dormitories.

USAC member Ruth Thompson, a consistent presence at the negotiating table, described the November strike as a historic event of which those involved should be proud. She said the fact that students were afforded the opportunity to approach key administrators in the areas of University finance, student life and law enforcement was unprecedented.

But Thompson said the negotiations were not as easy as they were historic.

"[The process] was somewhat frustrating because they'd tell us one thing then on paper they'd tell us something different."

She said the group was effective in changing the policies of the University. Of Massachusetts Police

See STRIKE on page 3

COURTESY OF KATELYN HAGGERTY

A sign warning students and faculty of asbestos was hung in the area of the leak in the Fine Arts Center.

Pipe bursts in FAC Saturday

BY BEN WILLIAMS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

At the beginning of the semester, all music majors attended a meeting where they were told about a very small possibility of the water pipes in the Fine Arts Center bursting. That small possibility became a serious reality this past weekend.

"I was in [room] 157 practicing and the campus had a power outage," said Greg Tufts, a sophomore music major. "So everything went dark and emergency lights went on so I just kept practicing, sitting there playing piano, and I heard something burst and water came monsooning from the end of the room. It was 200 degree water, so I left the room, and the room filled up, within 10 minutes it was seeping down the hallway and it was a sauna in there, eventually they got it turned off and they brought janitors and dehumidifiers and cleaned it up."

Tufts followed the advice given by the faculty at the beginning of the semester and called the police. "They sent people over from the physical plant," said Tufts.

"The problem is of course that the system has been problematic for years, which is why they're trying to fix it now," said Chris Thornley, director of admissions and facilities for the Department of Music and Dance. "I am not sure why the pipes actually went, but we are in the midst of a renovation of the HVAC system at the Fine Arts Center, there was work done in January, and the whole project is an extensive project, which will involve closing the department this summer, and music staff will be in trailers. The student floors wont be gutted but stripped fairly well, all new pipes and ventilation."

"We are very lucky that this building is open and allows our students to practice on the weekends. Had this not been discovered until Monday morning, damage to instruments and equipment could have been extensive," said Thornley.

That's just what a number of students who have their instruments in the lockers next to room 157 were worried about.

"There was water all down the hallway where everyone keeps their instruments, potential to destroy all of them if it seeped into the lockers," said sophomore music major Katelyn Haggerty. "All of the people that practice in FAC are really upset."

"Today, there was an asbestos warning sign on the door of the room that had the leak," she said. "A few men were cleaning it out, and then the sign was removed after a few hours. Everyone is kind of freaked out because everyone was there try-

See LEAK on page 3

New bill to help University

BY AMARA ANOSIKE
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

The Massachusetts House, in partnership with Governor Deval Patrick, proposed a $1 billion dollar life sciences bill, some of which plans to support the University of Massachusetts.

The bill was proposed on Feb. 14 and seeks to distribute this money over a 10-year period toward scientific and biotechnical advancement in the Commonwealth. House speaker Salvatore F. DiMasi announced the bill that would strongly support UMass by providing $200 million for campus facilities.

The proposed legislation contains $90 million in projected capital spending for UMass Medical School's planned research center in Amherst, $11.4 million for UMass Dartmouth's technology and manufacturing center and $5.7 million for a stem cell bank and registry at UMass Medical School. $30 million dollars in graduate-level scholarship money will also be provided by the bill.

"Certainly the bill still has to go through the legislative process in terms of getting passed by the house, then senate, and finally signed by Governor Patrick," said University president's office spokesperson Robert P. Connolly. "After that it would be hard to say I think once passed in law, scholarship money should be readily available. Of course nothing would change overnight."

Because this bill looks to relieve UMass of capital spending by focusing on infrastructure, this could possibly alleviate a fraction of tuition fees.

"I think that the bill will not affect me personally," said UMass student and athlete Stephanie Aguiguo. "However, the research center will generate jobs and advances that will help Massachusetts as a whole."

House leaders have not said how many jobs the legislation would potentially create, though Patrick has estimated that it would approximately bring 250,000 jobs.

Amara Anosike can be reached at aganosik@student.umass.edu.

UM moves past controversy, toward strong season

BY JOE MELONI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The No. 16 Massachusetts men's lacrosse team's 8-4 win over Hofstra in Saturday's season opener was more than just another victory.

In a preseason tarnished by controversy, the win was the return to normalcy that UMass coach Greg Cannella and his team so anxiously anticipated. After the win, Cannella mentioned the pride he took in his team's effort – and rightfully so.

The Minutemen (1-0), depleted by both suspension and injury, defeated one of their biggest rivals in dominant fashion and, in doing so, made a statement to the other 57 teams in Division I lacrosse that the Minutemen plan to be playing well into May.

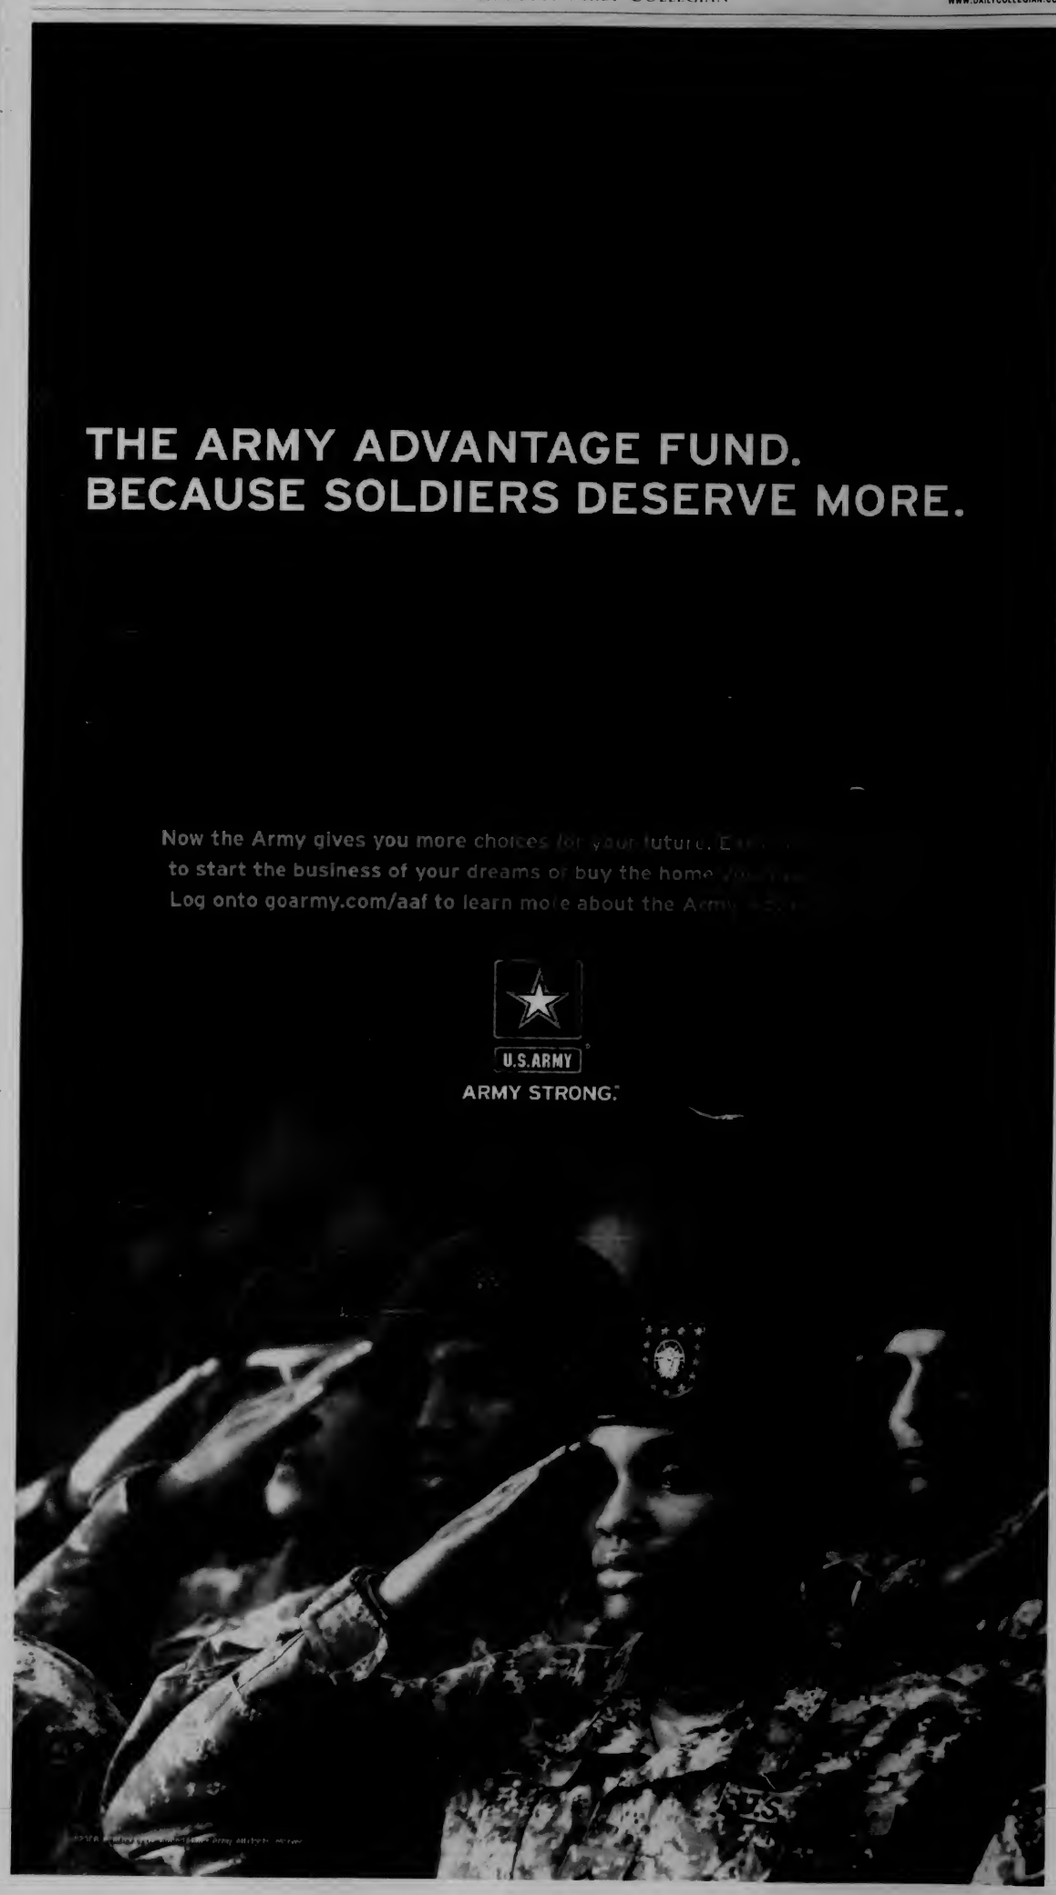
While pleased, Cannella is anything but satisfied with Saturday's performance. The Minutemen struggled to control the ball at times, and relied too heavily on their defensive core.

"We turned the ball over 24 times, and we really need to improve on that," he said. "In our first scrimmage, against Army, we had 24 turnovers, and it was a scrimmage that we lost. Fortunately, on Saturday, our defense and our goalie bailed us out."

Junior Tim Balise, sophomore Bobby Hayes and redshirt junior Evan Blum served as the primary options for the Minutemen on offense while several underclassmen rotated in and out of the lineup throughout the game. Cannella didn't notice an exact cause of UMass's problems with possession, but a lack of chemistry and experience can hurt any team.

As the season moves on, and the UMass offense gains comfort within its system, these early games will be invaluable. However, there isn't much time for these

See M. LACROSSE on page 7



MASS. DAILY COLLEGIAN

Junior Tim Balise (19) celebrates a goal with a teammate during Saturday's win in the season-opener against Hofstra. UMass coach Greg Cannella was pleased with the victory but believes the Minutemen must be better to have a successful 2008 campaign.

THE ARMY ADVANTAGE FUND.
BECAUSE SOLDIERS DESERVE MORE.

Now the Army gives you more choices for your future. E to start the business of your dreams or buy the home
Log onto goarmy.com/aaf to learn more about the Army

U.S.ARMY
ARMY STRONG.

Deletion of entire Facebook profile harder than expected

FACEBOOK from page 1

11,482 members, comprised mostly of college students who plan to someday outgrow Facebook.

"I had some pretty embarrassing pictures up," said one senior who wished to remain anonymous. He was not very worried about it until a friend pointed out that Facebook might jeopardize his chances for a good internship.

"I deleted my account for a while but when I went back, it was all still there," he said. It took him nearly a month to contact and convince all his friends to remove tags, or pictures, of him.

Under the contract that users agreed to – without ever reading in most cases – this is not a breach of privacy. Upon creating an account, users give an "irrevocable, perpetual, non-exclusive, transferable, fully paid, worldwide license" to all user content. This content, Facebook claims in the same sentence, is for their use, either to distribute, publicly display or reformat. What's more, Facebook can give these same rights over to another institution.

Amy Sezak, a spokeswoman for Facebook, told the New York Times that it is a convenient way for Facebook expatriates to return to their online niches exactly as they had left them.

Users who wish to completely delete all online information about themselves can do so, but only line-by-line. Once all pictures, messages and personal information have been deleted manually, users can then "request their account to be deleted and their e-mail will be completely erased from the database," said Sezak. Wall posts, however, remain in archives even if the user ID is no longer available.

Although users can delete their accounts, Facebook still has an alarming amount of control and rights over user content. New companies are now offering their services to clean up online reputations. Companies like Reputation Defender of Menlo Park, California strike deals with MySpace and Facebook to pull down any information about their clients.

The growing concern and media attention has prompted Facebook to take action. Two weeks ago, the Web site announced that users who want to delete accounts can do so by contacting the company directly by e-mail. The Web site also changed its help pages, adding the question "How do I delete my account?" It also added a form to fill out at the bottom of the page.

The solution Facebook offered was far from perfect. Within a week, users noticed that deletion was still just as cumbersome and unreliable. The form that Facebook introduced had technical problems and made it difficult for some users to entirely delete their account.

Some users were unable to delete their account completely. In some cases, users received an e-mail confirming account deletion even though parts of their profiles were still online.

Despite privacy concerns, Facebook's appeal remains strong, attracting celebrities and politicians alike. But even celebrities are finding trouble deleting accounts. Early in February, The Sun reported that Bill Gates decided to leave Facebook. He, like many others, ran into some difficulty removing his account completely.

Sruthi Valluri can be reached at valluri@student.umass.edu

Group voices its concern on campus

STRIKE from page 1

Department. Though administrators from within the department said publically that its officers do not perform unwarranted searches of rooms and do not make a practice of patrolling residence halls, Thompson said students now have a greater voice in how the department works through student participation on a newly-created board that oversees police conduct.

USAC member Heather McCormack said the purpose of the grievance was not to remove police from dorms. In light of the recent violent crimes reported on campus, McCormack stressed to students that the USAC's aim was to protect students' rights when dealing with police officers rather than removing police from public dormitory areas, a presence she said comforts some.

Thompson added negotiations involving student fees went less smoothly, that the administration replied simply that there was little money to work with. Thompson said this response was expected as the University's Board of Trustees deals with tuition.

The beginning of the negotiation process went slowly and resulted in the USAC's releasing a statement on the meetings that were, until Jan. 17, deemed ineffective.

"We unanimously feel that we are essentially and continuously having a one-sided discussion with members of the administration," reads a report issued on that day.

Since then, meetings between the two groups worked toward compromise. An official response to the demands from the administration was slated for release on Friday, Feb. 22, but was pushed back one week to this Friday. Once released, students will have the opportunity to vote on the results.

According to the negotiations' ground rules, "Before agreeing to a final report, the student representatives will convene a student-wide forum to discuss any proposals contained therein." The document continues, "The student representatives will only agree to the changes proposed by a final report if such a report has been approved by a majority vote of students at this forum."

If rejected, students present at the forum will decide how to continue.

Will McGuinness can be reached at wmcguinn@gmail.com

Leak in FAC causes confusion, damage

LEAK from page 1

ing to get their instruments out and we waded in the water. With asbestos and pipes bursting, we're all fed up."

Patrick J. Callahan, Associate News Editor at the University of Massachusetts, said the asbestos warning was there because there was a small amount of asbestos in the joint compound used to secure the sheetrock ceiling that contaminated the room and was cleaned up on Monday.

He said that once they had fixed the pipe, they changed the locks and secured the room. Because asbestos is only harmful when inhaled, the small amount released was wet, and the room was secured, there was no danger involved.

Grace Welter, freshman music major from Minnesota, was more worried about the steaming hot water. "I have class in there five days a week, if that had happened when we were in there someone could have gotten burned pretty bad," she said.

A few students at the scene, including Tufts, suspected some of the equipment could have been damaged. "[That baby grand] was one of the nicer pianos, about a $20,000 piano ruined," said Tufts.

Jim Cahill said a lot of the pipes and mechanical systems are original to the 30-year-old building, and facilities planning just recently got the money needed for extensive renovations.

"It's good that we have the money," said Cahill. "The Physical Plant maintains the building and they have been struggling to patch it here and patch it there, so it was turned over to us to replace it. Sounds like it just failed because it's old and we didn't get to replace it yet. Work is going on now, and all the more reason to replace the piping."

Ben Williams can be reached at bwilliam@student.umass.edu

Some suspected that FAC equipment, including a baby grand piano worth about $20,000, could have been damaged due to the steaming hot water leak.

Hunters look for Nazi treasure

By Jochen Wiesigel
Associated Press

German treasure hunters began digging Tuesday for what they say may be plunder buried by the Nazis in a man-made cavern near the Czech border.

The area's mayor, Hans-Peter Haustein, and a man who believes he found the coordinates for the buried booty in a notebook among his deceased father's belongings, maintain that a scan of the spot has revealed that a large quantity of metal is about 20 meters below the surface.

They believe it to be either gold or silver, based on the scan with a sophisticated metal detector.

A drilling company began boring pilot holes at one-yard intervals, trying to find the entrance of the cavern, about 100 yards from the Czech border in the eastern German state of Saxony. Once it is found, the searchers are to snake a camera down into the enclosure to determine exactly what they have found.

"It can't be iron," Haustein said as work progressed at the site. "The computer readout clearly indicates gold."

By late afternoon, however, the most excitement for a crowd of onlookers from the tiny settlement was a short-lived geyser of water that shot up as one of the holes was drilled.

Haustein – an amateur treasure hunter who is also a member of Germany's parliament for the opposition Free Democratic Party – said the process could take several days.

Haustein has been working with Christian Hanisch, who found the notebook in the belongings of his father, a former Luftwaffe radio operator who died last year.

Haustein said last week that he was convinced they had found the storied Amber Room treasure but later acknowledged that, while there could be "cultural treasures" in the cavern, such as paintings or amber paneling, they are not things that show up with a metal detector.

The Amber Room – named for magnificent wall panels of golden-brown amber – was stolen by the Nazis from a palace outside St. Petersburg during World War II and has never been recovered in its entirety.

Physicians study marijuana, aim for further med. research

By Julia Harte
Daily Pennsylvanian (U. Penn)

(U-WIRE) PHILADELPHIA — The second largest group of physicians in the United States sees evidence that marijuana can relieve severe pain and supports its medicinal use, according to a recently-issued position paper.

This paper from the Philadelphia-based American College of Physicians urges the federal government to acknowledge and sanction research into the plant's medicinal uses.

The federal government currently classifies marijuana as a drug with "no currently accepted medical use in treatment in the United States, and a lack of accepted safety for use of the drug or other substance under medical supervision," according to the Office of National Drug Control Policy's Web site.

But a 1999 Institute of Medicine study – conducted at the ONDCP's behest – found that "scientific studies support medical use of marijuana for treatment in the United States."

The ACP paper "builds very substantially on that report," said ACP President David Dale. "We're just supporting good science."

In light of marijuana's scientifically demonstrated therapeutic properties, the ACP paper urges the government to reclassify the plant.

Bruce Mirken, spokesman for the Marijuana Policy Project, lauded the ACP.

"They are pointing out some very important problems with government policy that have long needed to be pointed out," he said. "The federal government has essentially been lying to us."

Twelve states already allow marijuana to be used medicinally, and the ACP paper further advocates that the federal government not penalize physicians who prescribe medical marijuana – or patients who use it – as their state permits.

Many potential medicinal uses of cannabinoids, the chemical compounds that make up marijuana, may be yet undiscovered, according to the ACP paper. However, the authors say, research is often hampered by the federal government's refusal to acknowledge the medicinal properties of marijuana.

"Drug discovery is a very important part of modern society," Dale said.

Mirken agreed and added that scientists have already deemed marijuana a safe and effective pain reliever.

"So the ACP is asking the 21st-century questions, while our government is stuck in 1937," he said.

The ACP paper also calls for more research into the best dosage and mode of ingesting the herb, "for conditions where the efficacy of marijuana has been established."

Those conditions include loss of appetite, nausea, convulsions and extreme nerve pain – the kind suffered by victims of AIDS and multiple sclerosis.

According to Mirken, nerve pain is particularly resistant to the existing legal pain relievers. Those options "don't work for everybody, and they don't work for every condition," he said.

The ONDCP, which has been critical of the ACP paper, did not return repeated calls for comment for this article.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 92

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Nicholas Belanger
Managing Editor Katie Huston
Business Manager Dan Exter
Production Manager Chris Martin
Night Supervisor Meghan Murphy
Advertising Manager Alex Bender
Advertising Production Katherine Shea
Arts & Living Editor Tim McCall
Arts & Living Editor Ryan McAskill
Copy Editor Adam Stagin
Editorial Editor S.P. Sullivan
News Editor Derrick Perkins
Sports Editor Jeremy Rice
Features Editor Dave Humphreys
Photo Editor Michael Phillis
Web Editor James Hale
Asst. Business Manager Eric Stromczak
Assistant Advertising Marsea Whooten
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Asst. Arts & Living Stephanie McPherson
Asst. Arts & Living Skye McIntyre
Asst. Editorial James Mathews
Asst. Editorial Malissa Garber
Assistant News Michael King
Assistant News Kate Olevin
Assistant News Holly Seabury
Assistant Sports Mike Connors
Assistant Sports Joe Meloni
Assistant Sports Eli Rosenwaike
Assistant Photo Brian Tedder
Arts Web Editor Michelle Abbasciano
Editorial Web Editor Leif Walcutt
News Web Editor Nick Bush
Sports Web Editor Steve Games

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been recognized since January 1994 for covering issues and information. Call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Production Crew
On staff today

Night Editor
Stephanie McPherson

Copy Editor
Greg McCarthy

Production Supervisor
Michael Sarkes

Blueberry Week
February 23–29
All DCs

- Baked Chicken with Blueberry Chutney
- Roast Loin of Pork with Blueberry Sauce
- Grilled Chicken Salad & Blueberries
- Blueberry Smoothies
- Blueberry Health Bar
- And More...

Visit the "Blueberry Booth" at Worcester DC
★ ★ ★
Enter to win a jar of Dark Chocolate Covered Blueberries

Blueberries are ranked #1 in Antioxidants and are high in Vitamin C and Fiber

Dining Around
2007 Grand Prize

DINING SERVICES
UMassAmherst
umass.edu/diningservices

Blueberries
U.S. HIGHBUSH BLUEBERRY COUNCIL

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 27, 2008

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
- Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

We must face Nader again

Dan Nicastro

On Sunday afternoon I went to the Holyoke Mall and ended up being questioned by a man holding a camera and wearing a "22 News" jacket. He was looking to find local reaction to Ralph Nader's entry into the presidential race. He asked if Nader's announcement changed my vote, or if I thought his entrance was anything of actual substance.

Of course it had not changed my vote, I told him. This whole thing, I continued, is Ralph Nader, a once prominent champion of working class rights, destroying whatever is left of his positive public record and tarnishing whatever legacy he once had (for honesty's sake, I'll note that I was not nearly that eloquent). The cameraman thanked me and I walked into Barnes & Noble, leaving my brief shot of stardom behind me. Before the dust settled, however, I started to actually think about what I had said.

I had done exactly what I had been taught was wrong with American politics: without much thought, I dismissed valid policy claims simply because the vehicle for those ideas was Ralph Nader, a third party candidate. Basically, I unwittingly highlighted a problem inherent within modern American politics using less than 35 words: what are we supposed to do about third party candidates and their platforms?

In my own defense, I feel as if I have to mention that my dismissal of third party candidates could not have evolved without some help. We've been conditioned to ignore third parties and their candidates since the two-party system took hold in America. Throughout our history, there have been a few times where they have been able to gain a small political foothold, but on the whole, we like our system the way it is. It's much easier to pick between two highly-visible and transparent options than to wade through a sea of largely unknown, issue-oriented parties.

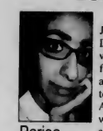
Beyond ignoring these candidates, we've been conditioned to dislike those who try and disrupt the traditional two-party establishment.

Like many other Democrats, I've been taught to resent Ralph Nader. For the last seven years, the Democrats have branded Nader "public enemy number two" because of his hand in electing "public enemy number one" in the 2000 election, and it's not hard to see why.

For the last seven years, the Democrats have branded Nader "public enemy number two" … it's not hard to see why.

In an election which ultimately came down to one state, it's hard not to look past the 537 vote difference between Bush and Gore and see Ralph Nader's 97,488 vote count looming in the distance. The rational political science student part of me understands and accepts the numerous alternate explanations which explain the Gore loss, including voter fraud and Al Gore's inability to carry his home state. The part of me who has lived through the last seven years of the Bush administration feels differently about Nader's doomed run for President.

With that in mind, it is clear Nader is not going to garner a lot of support, but what does that mean for the policy issues he raises? As a person, Ralph Nader may be a bitter egotist who should bow out of the public spotlight. As a candidate, however, he is able to bring up more specific issues the two major parties are largely unwilling (because of the need for large, general support of the American people) to touch during an election.



In his Sunday appearance on "Meet the Press," Nader continually talked about the issues for which he is most known: labor law reform, reduction of bloated military budgets, crack downs on corporate crime and overall support and aid for working class Americans. These are all issues which demand attention and are aimed at increasing livability for a large majority of Americans.

Sometimes there is validity to this neglect. Many third parties have single issue platforms, or have candidates who can best be described as "criminally insane." Still, we are losing a great deal of substance by immediately dismissing the claims of third parties and treating them like political lepers.

Modern campaigns are largely about personality, meaning people like Ralph Nader, who continually lecture and bad mouth American political institutions, will probably never be elected. This does not (in many cases) diminish the issues for which they stand. Many third party candidates run for office not because they believe they will be elected, but because they feel as if they fit outside of the increasingly rigid confines of the two-party system. As Democrats and Republicans move away from the concept of "big tent" party politics, third party candidates may be the best way to infuse meaningful conversation back into American political discourse.

Dan Nicastro is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at dnicastr@student.umass.edu

Israel and Palestine: another step back

Parisa Saranj

My best friend is a Jew. I am a Muslim. Despite all the jokes we make about this forbidden friendship and how we are going to be punished by our Allah and Yahweh, we know that we are taking the same journey to the same summit through different paths. We even get excited over the similarities of our religions, from fasting in Ramadan and Yom Kippur to the importance of pilgrimage to Jerusalem. We rejoice over how many exact same words we find in Arabic, Farsi and Hebrew.

But even then, sometimes I find myself worried about being politically correct around him. I try to not ask too many questions about Israel. I fear our coexistence-based friendship falls into the category of politics. Unconsciously, I dread to say something that would make me a stereotypical Iranian Muslim who abhors Israel. Why is it that I know I am not such a person, yet I am afraid I am going to become one?

Last week, we had a conversation about the states of Palestine and Israel. We peacefully discussed our views, and the next day I came across an article in The New York Times about the cynicism of Arab Leaders regarding the Two-State solution. According to the article, Arab Leaders might reiterate support for the 2002 initiative in which creation of a Palestinian State on the West Bank and Gaza Strip in return for normalization of Israel from 22 members of the League was promised. To the leaders, "it makes no sense to insist on something that Israel is rejecting."

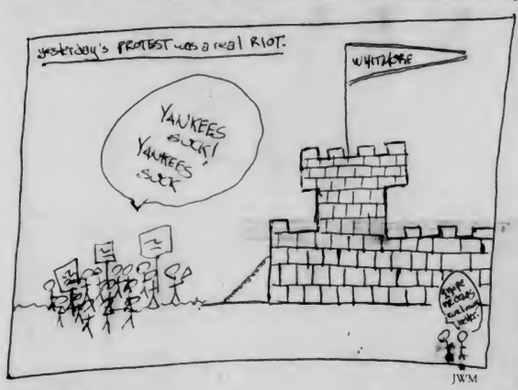
Michael Slackman, New York Times correspondent in Cairo, said Arab leaders were alarmed when thousands of Palestinians crashed through the border between the Gaza Strip and Egypt while masked gunmen blew the seven-mile barrier in January 2008. Over the years, Israeli officials have been suggesting that Egypt take over the administration of Gaza and that Jordan take responsibility for the West Bank. However, according to Slackman, Egypt fears the financial burden and the spread of Islamic extremism promoted by Hamas. Jordan too worries about the expenses and what they call "an existential threat to identity." Wow, how does this make one feel? An editor of a Jordanian newspaper had said, "Jordan is already half Palestinian."

I thought about millions like my friend and I, and how our voices are lost among the political and economical games of the super powers.

No one cares. When I was reading the article, I thought about millions like my friend and I, and how our voices are lost among the political and economical games of the super powers. Even worse than this oppression is how some take advantage of such chaos.

Am I too realistic? I always challenge myself to this question; however, it always comes down to the same notion that I must not doubt my belief of coexistence. There must be a way for peace.

Slackman said it sounds like Israel tends to create a "rump Palestine" that is invisible and dependent. A pan Arab newspaper in London writes, "There is no longer space for two states on the Palestinian land." And some Arab states seem bothered about "having to absorb" people of Palestine. Then, who is going to do something about all these years of disorder, pain and cruelty for both sides?



To me, my friend has an absolute right to a place he can recognize as the birthplace of his faith. He has the right to a home where his people can unite. Also, I have the right to feel humane toward the people who share their faith with me. I have the right to want to see peace for them. To me, every Jewish person has the right to a final peace after years of agonizing mistreatment before, after and even during the Holocaust. At the same time, every Palestinian has a right to the same peace after years of occupation which has led to anything from lack of water and education to danger of bombs and bulldozers running over their houses.

My friend and I both have the right to hold opinions on matters of identity or faith. We both have the right to wish for the existence of a state which represents our beings. But, what is the price? I often sense how we, both as a Jew and a Muslim, are paying a price. Isn't it true that there are still many who think Muslims resent the Jews? Aren't there still groups who accuse many of being anti-Semitic because they stand up for justice?

In America, I found myself among many so different from me regarding race and religion, yet I found them similar regarding the core belief of humanity. A tolerant, respectful life next to those who are different from us is possible.

As well, the article insists on reflecting the truth. It ends with a quote from Egypt's Spokesman for the Ministry of Foreign affairs, who asks whether we should "succumb to the will, the wishes, plans and ideas of those on both sides who are trying to change the reality on the ground and make the two-state solution impossible."

Parisa Saranj is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at psaranj@student.umass.edu.

"The Daily Collegian UMass Yak-Back!"

AIRING DAILY ON UVC-TV 19 AT 1 P.M. AND 5 P.M.

STAY TUNED TO UVC AND THE EDITORIAL/OPINION PAGE

The sin of censorship in the holy land

Bruce Lerner

There is an event that is taking place today, regarding censorship of journalists by the Palestinian Authority. It will be given by an Arab-Israeli journalist named Khaled Abu-Toameh, famous for "uncover[ing] the Hamas staged blackouts of Gaza in which the Palestinian government abused its own people by canceling electricity to Gaza in a 'media ploy' to make Gaza look worse than it actually is," according to a flyer put out by the sponsoring groups.

Apparently, Gaza is not really that bad, and this man was courageous enough to show the world what a true celebration the Palestinian people enjoy there, with their ability to move freely and not be subjected to constant killings, beatings and abductions by the Israeli authorities.

The journalist's apologetic record, as well the true conditions of Gaza – which made half of the population leave the area in a mass exodus even though the media made it out to be "worse than it actually is" – aside, the notion that Palestinian Authority censorship should even be a topic for serious discussion, especially in this country, is laughable. It is quite ironic of the sponsoring groups to bring someone in to speak on the evil Palestinian Authority and its diabolical censorship when it is well known that Israel has always had a powerful censor. Not only this, but Israeli soldiers frequently fire on journalists.

According to a report from Reporters Without Borders, "Al-Aqsa TV cameraman Imad Ghanem was seriously wounded by Israeli soldiers on 5 July as he filmed an army operation near the Gaza Strip's Al-Barij camp. He lost the use of both legs." That is when they are not kidnapping and jailing the offenders without charge. Of course, the victims of these atrocities are often not Jewish, so they are relegated to the racist memory hole.

Within the narrowly-defined bounds of acceptable conversation regarding Israel, the human rights of Arabs does not arise as a possible topic. It is obvious that in America, a Jewish life means much more than a Palestinian life. The media do not cover the Palestinian side of the conflict, except when it is to demonize the Palestinians as terrorists. Anyway, the Palestinian Authority, which was created in 1994, hardly stands a chance of comparing to the level of censorship that Israel excels at. Even John Bolton, not exactly a dove by any standards, said that Israelis can know what it's like to live in North Korea, due to the high level of censorship present in both countries.

It is quite ironic of the sponsoring groups to bring someone in to speak on the evil Palestinian Authority … it is well known that Israel has always had a powerful censor.

Interestingly, it is not considered censorship to physically destroy the mechanisms of delivery of information, things such as offices and journalists. In 2004, in that paradise named the Gaza Strip, Israel fired missiles at a Palestinian media office which housed the BBC, al Jazeera and other local media, in effect destroying the ability to provide information. A very unsophisticated type of censorship, but censorship nonetheless.

Likewise, Israel has been known to detain its citizens for crimes such as "contact with a foreign agent." In one notable case, four Israelis were convicted for the unspeakable act of having a conversation with Palestinians in Rumania. Israeli authorities also fire live ammunition on journalists in order to "disperse" them, although one thinks there may be other motives at play. The list goes on and on.

Furthermore, Israel has a set of laws known as Emergency Regulations which can be used to censor books, although Jewish writers are not as often affected as Palestinian ones. Perhaps the name Mordecai Vanunu also sounds familiar to some, as he was imprisoned under solitary confinement for many years for talking about Israel's nuclear capacities.

The only way one can get away with talking about Palestinian censorship is by narrowing the constraints on what is OK to talk about. As mentioned earlier, Jews are more important than Arabs, therefore it is perfectly fine to bomb their offices, censor their publications and kill or detain their journalists. Without censorship laws, here in the U.S. it is every citizen's responsibility to fight for what is right, even if it is only in words. Unfortunately, many educated people in this country are still trying very hard to take a racist hard-line position and make it seem like the voice of moderation, as is clear with the SAFI, Hasbara Fellowship and Democrat sponsorship of the upcoming event, aptly titled "Forced Bias." Here, the bias is not even forced, as it is in Israel and the Occupied Territories; it is undertaken willingly by educated fools.

Bruce Lerner is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at bylerner@student.umass.edu.

SUBMIT A LETTER OR OPINION

E-mail: editorial@dailycollegian.com

Fax: 413-545-3699

Gargano-gram: Letters to the Editor, 113 Campus Center, Amherst, MA 01003

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 27, 2008

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Jazz fusion and Canadian rap invade NoHo

Medeski, Martin and Wood seek an 'evolution' at Calvin

By Hunter Amabile
Collegian Correspondent

Change is the natural order as avant-garde jazz-fusion trio Medeski, Martin and Wood (MMW) returns to Northampton. The famed instrumental trio made up of John Medeski (keyboards), Billy Martin (drums) and Chris Wood (bass) is coming back to the Pioneer Valley for the first time since their successful run of shows with non-conformist jazz-guitar phenom John Scofield.

Dubbing their new tour "viva la evolution," the trio is bringing an unconventional approach along with an onslaught of unreleased material to the Calvin Theatre Friday, Feb. 29.

The improv-based group from New York City has come a long way since it started touring in a beat up RV in 1993. They've played alongside jam bands like moe., Phish and countless others, yet they continue to defy a specific label.

"People with pop and rock backgrounds consider us jazz, but people into jazz consider us rock," said Medeski, a New England Conservatory grad. "I just try to play like me."

MEDESKI, MARTIN AND WOOD

CALVIN THEATER

FRIDAY, FEB 29

8 P.M.

$25

No matter what style you may consider MMW, the band does not cease to evolve.

Following their January Little Monsters Records release of "Let's Go Everywhere," MMW's first album for kids, they are touring again as the trio, but their philosophy and outlook toward music is in yet another process of metamorphosis.

Instead of touring post-record release, the band took five days to specifically craft new material for the "viva la evolution" tour. The 10-stop tour will take MMW from New Jersey to Vermont, ending in Northampton. The shows will be used by the band to polish its new arsenal of tunes fresher than the Berkshire DC.

Of the new writing and recording process, Medeski said, "We just wrote the basic sketches for the songs and plan to record in a very live style." The band will head into the studio to record the progress of the tour after the Calvin Theatre show.

Medeski, the piano man in charge of all things melodic, said the band is like a canary: a bird who sings one song for a year and changes year after year. The band is adopting this natural process of change and it plans to release three albums in 2008 using this reverse style.

The band draws its influence from all sounds, sights and senses. Medeski said he owes much of his inspiration to impulse and the nature of the world changing around him. From the rhythm of the subway, to the sound of birds, to the colors of a falling sun, nothing is above inspiration. This is the foundation for their tour; they write the music and allow their performances to nurture the tones, as they are inspired by everything from the fans, to the venue, to the seasons. Because of this, the songs from "viva la evolution" will be retired after the tour to make room for new creations on the road.

With the current tour, the trio will pay homage to their developing music. Its very origin means "long live the evolution," and it is a battle cry for change.

The band's impromptu jamming makes every live experience with MMW fresh. Medeski describes the trio's philosophy for writing as "leaving a lot of room for improvisation; set up the structure with specific elements that can be morphed into different music every night."

Knowing the dynamics of the band, by the time they reach Northampton the music will be completely crafted and open to some very experimental improvisation.

The problem: the band could come out with a real dirty, funky sound rooted in hip-hop trance beats, or they could come out with a more psychedelic frame of mind. This often leads to a more experimental MMW that can become very mundane if you're not expecting it. But one thing is true of the band, when it's on, it's on.

This show will give fans the chance to see the band create the sounds that will appear on the new album, whose name will evolve, said Medeski. And with this being the last stop of their tour, they will have to step up their game.

Tickets are going for $25 and you can find out more about the 8 p.m. Feb. 29 show at www.ihcg.com.

Hunter Amabile can be reached at hamabile@student.umass.edu

Medeski, Martin and Wood have a sound that is either rock/pop or jazz, depending on your background. On Friday you can decide when they play the Calvin Theater in Northampton.

Rollie Pemberton, better know by his stage name Cadence Weapon, has been a force on the rap scene ever since he left the journalism profession to focus on music full time in 2005.

Cadence Weapon teams with Born Ruffians at Iron Horse

By Ian Nelson
Collegian Staff

Don your Nike's and classic NBA jerseys, hip hop buffs: Canadian writer/rapper/producer Cadence Weapon brings his clever, conversational rhymes and huge synth-driven beats from the frozen north to the snowy northeast alongside fellow Canadians Born Ruffians for tomorrow night's Iron Horse co-bill.

Cadence Weapon, stage name of former Stylus and Pitchfork Media writer Rollie Pemberton, is a 22-year old, critically-acclaimed, self-produced MC from Edmonton, Alberta, Canada. A natural-born emcee, Pemberton has been rapping since the age of 13. At age 19, after abandoning his journalism career for one in music, he released his underground mix tape "Cadence Weapon is the Black Hand" in 2005. The record included remixes of the Beastie Boys, M.I.A., Death From Above 1979 and even a sample of Falco's 1986 smash "Rock Me Amadeus," receiving overall positive press.

On Nov. 28 of the same year, he released his first proper LP, "Breaking Kayfabe," on Upper Class Recordings in Canada, which included selections from the aforementioned mix tape. The record stood out from 2005's mainstream hip hop due to the clear, conversational delivery and larger than life synth tones. Music review Web site Coke Machine Glow calls "Breaking Kayfabe" an "impossibly accomplished hip hop album," defined by a "dense, paranoid party of seedy beats and shocking cohesion."

Since its release, mainstream hip hop has moved in Cadence's synth-driven direction, though few emcees create such thick atmospherics and couple them up with such memorable hooks. His lyricism is constantly interesting as he recalls detail after detail of his hometown on "Breaking Kayfabe" opener, "Oliver Square." He drops references to drugs, bars and shoes, evidence of his young male status, yet he comes off seasoned, witty and intelligent.

The record earned Cadence a nomination for the first Polaris Music Prize, an award of $20,000 for the Canadian album of the year, though he was runner up to violinist Owen Pallett's Final Fantasy outlet. No hard feelings were felt, and the odd couple even showed interest in each others' work, prompting Cadence to join Pallett on some of his 2007 tour.

Most recently, a couple songs from Cadence Weapon's new record "Afterparty Babies" have been made available through his Myspace page, including the MP3 download of "In Search of the Youth Crew" and the digital single "House Music." The latter possesses an aggressive, club-ready squall of synth squelches and high-frequency scratches, in which Cadence calmly boasts "the club scene loves me," and includes a humorous DJ horror story at the end of the track. His 2008 dates are in support of the March 4 drop of "Afterparty Babies," released in the U.S. on Epitaph records.

Tour mates Born Ruffians have a record out on March 4 as well, their first full-length album, titled "Red, Yellow & Blue," ready for release by Warp Records. The record includes tracks from their 2007 "Hummingbird" E.P. including its raucous title track and "Kurt Vonnegut," a likely tribute to the late, celebrated author. The E.P also features an upbeat cover of "Knife," by Grizzly Bear.

Born Ruffians return to the Iron Horse less than five months after their stop in Northampton last October, opening for Caribou on their entire Canada/U.S. fall tour. The band energetically rocked through songs from their 2006 debut, a self-titled LP, as well as some new material for their short set, easily grabbing the attention of those who showed up before the main act. In addition to Caribou, Born Ruffians have toured with the likes of Peter Bjorn and John and Hot Chip.

The guitar, bass and drums three-piece evokes a charming, young pop sound similar to less flamboyant Of Montreal and less electronic Tokyo Police Club, whom Born Ruffians joined for a few Canadian dates toward the end of this past January. The trio returns to Massachusetts, after about a week's stint in Europe, to kick off their March trek across the States, which includes an appearance at the SXSW festival in Austin, TX.

The all-ages show will begin at 1ft p.m. General admission tickets are available for $9 through the Iron Horse's Web site www.ihcg.com, and are $11 at the door.

Ian Nelson can be reached at inelson@student.umass.edu

CADENCE WEAPON AND BORN RUFFIANS

IRON HORSE

THURSDAY, FEB 28

8 P.M.

$9–$11

Seattle group creates '70s sound

By Joe Stahl
Collegian Staff

After conquering a dream conceivable by all indie music makers, over-night success Grand Archives released a luminescent and harmonic self-titled debut.

Grand Archives is a prime case of instantaneous triumph as the Seattle quintet played its first show and caught the attention of the music moguls over at Sub Pop Records. Next thing you know, Grand Archives is signed to a highly credible label and performing with Modest Mouse at Seattle's historic Paramount Theater.

Front man Mat Brooke is a prominent name in the Seattle music scene. He is respected for his partnership with Seattle's raved about but now deceased band, Carissa's Wierd. He is also known for kick starting Band of Horses' career. Abandoning Band of Horses as it was just heating up, Brooke shifted into a totally different gear and he decided to open a bar called the Redwood.

Brooke managed to juggle a music career along with the opening of the bar in Emerald City. With a new project, Brooke and the rest of the gang that comprises Grand Archives hoped to incorporate sounds of the '70s. The plan was to echo vocally-important bands from the era in music when Bread, Crosby, Stills, Nash and Young and Moody Blues dominated.

Grand Archives started with three friends in September 2006, all of whom once played in a band. Drummer Curtis Hall (The Jeunes), bassist Jeff Montano (The New Mexicans) and guitarist/keyboardist Ron Lewis (Ghost Stories) came to a consensus to make a pop record. Fifth member Thomas Wright shortly hopped onto the bandwagon to complete Grand Archives.

Innately finding its sound, Brooke and the boys ran into difficulty when it came to polishing off a new style. Hopping from studio to studio in Washington State throughout the summer of 2007, the gang dabbled with unorthodox instruments.

Across the 11-track record you will pick up on instruments ranging from the trombone to slide guitars rubbed with violin bows.

Don't let the complexity of the instrumentals scare you off. Grand Archives keeps the origins of classic pop in tact, loading up on tight percussion and hooks weighed down with sho-la-la-las and ba-da-dums. When Brooke and Montano trade off on vocals they sound like a cross breed of Simon and Garfunkel and their inspirations, Crosby, Stills, Nash and Young.

All but one song on "The Grand Archives" are written by Brooke. Lewis contributed his words to the harmonica-heavy track, "A Setting Sun."

Although the main goal of this record was to achieve an accessible '70s pop feel, the band gets a little esoteric on tracks like "George Kaminski," which happens to be inspired by a convict that once owned the largest four-leaf clover collection in the world.

During the making of "The Grand Archives," the quintet from time to time had a willingness to improvise. One track in particular that was improvised, "Breezy No Breezy," came out sounding like underground smooth jazz-fusion with a hint of dub reggae. This instrumental piece, which is less than two minutes, serves as their most imaginative and surprising.

Brooke's falsetto and the violin go together like spaghetti and meatballs on the dreamy song, "Sleepdriving." The anxiety-free song serves as one of their most pleasurable and finely-tuned numbers.

Grand Archives know how to have fun with powerpop on tunes like "The Crime Window," but also put themselves under the blue light on nostalgic numbers like "Index Moon" and "Swan Matches," in which Jenn Ghetto, the other half of Carissa's Weird, contributes backup vocals.

As a newly-formed band, the naiveté Grand Archives does not inhibit its ability to make a decent album. Discordance among its members is hardly traceable when they are all on the same path.

Joe Stahl can be reached at jstahl@student.umass.edu

"GRAND ARCHIVES"

GRAND ARCHIVES

SUB POP RECORDS

3/5

Seattle quintet Grand Archives made a name for themselves in the music scene from the moment they played their first show in 2006.

Ferrell goes 'Semi-Pro'

By Roger Moore
The Orlando Sentinel

Before "the Frat Pack" and $20 million paydays, before "Old School," way before "Saturday Night Live" even, Will Ferrell wanted to be a sportscaster. Then he heard comedy's siren call.

Now, at 40, he's a brand name, branching out from TV to movies and onto the Web (funnyordie.com), a sponsored viral-video venture where, Conde Naste Portfolio wrote, "Hollywood's screwball king" may rewrite "the rules of the entertainment business."

But there are ways Ferrell keeps his foot on the court with sports fans. He does ESPN promos. And he makes a lot of movies about sports.

Ferrell, who took the swish out of figure skating with "Blades of Glory" and let a little of the air out of NASCAR's tires with "Tallageda Nights," revisits the last days of the ABA, the American Basketball Association, in his latest, "Semi-Pro." The league was famed for its red, white and blue basketballs, its showcase dunks and such teams as the Virginia Squires and Kentucky Colonels, playing to arenas so empty you could hear the players cuss each other out from one end of the court to the other.

"Semi-Pro" has Ferrell playing a disco-singing, promotional stunt scheming owner-coach-star of the Flint Tropics, a fictional team in a league that sometimes seemed every bit as far-fetched as the one Ferrell and friends re-create for the movie. We reached Ferrell in Los Angeles.

QUESTION: One aspect of the ABA that you can see making a comeback; the tri-color ball, the tight uniforms, the afros, the Virginia Squires?

ANSWER: Oh, I'm thinking the Virginia Squires. That's just what the NBA needs.

Those tight shorts, the Lakers tried that when they played the Celtics earlier this season in Los Angeles. The Lakers, in an homage to the 1979 championship team, came out in short shorts. Half of the crowd laughed and half cheered. But you could tell the players were really uncomfortable playing in those shorts. They switched at halftime. So unfortunately, the shorts won't be coming back any time soon.

I could kind of see the tri-color basketball making a comeback. I've read that ABA players just hated it, at first. Thought it was a joke. But you can see the rotation of the ball so much better that players fell in love with it. So maybe it'll come back.

Q: Thirty years later, the number of sports fans who even remember the American Basketball Association, much less its reputation, has to be shrinking.

A: Yeah, hard to believe there was a time when the NBA was the clean-cut league, and the ABA was the one where guys looked a little more militant hair, attitudes, all of it.

Our director, Kent Alterman, grew up in San Antonio going to see the (then ABA) Spurs play and was such a rabid heckler that Dave Cowans charged him once, in the stands. We had (ex-NBA star and now TV analyst) Bill Walton come by the set, and he remembered that story! Totally true, our director, who was just "The Kid," would heckle and the stands would be so empty the players would hear it and just freak out.

Q: What is it about scripts set in the '70s that you connect to? What does the decade mean to you?

A: This movie was probably more a product of the fact that the ABA, this cheesy league, was around in the '70s. "Anchorman" was more about the attitudes of the '70s, the fashions, being out of step with today.

The '70s are just intrinsically a funny period. When you look back at photos of the fashions, the hairstyles, the creative facial hair, styles that don't exist anymore, and then you watch anything from movies to old TV shows, the look, the lingo all feel like a foreign time and a foreign place. Who were those people?

Q: When did you realize an afro was your best, most natural look?

A: I had straight hair as a kid, and it just kept getting progressively curlier. I kept trying to part it, all the way up to the eighth grade. After that, I just gave up.

I loved wearing my hair this way for the movie. But what I really loved was the reactions. People would look at me like, I don't know, a crazy person. The hair got a laugh.

People would go, "What's up with your hair?" And now, they go, "Man, where's your afro?"

Q: Your character Jackie Moon's single, "Love Me Sexy," is out in stores, a real '70s disco-soul-makeout music flashback. Ever had a desire to be the new Barry White?

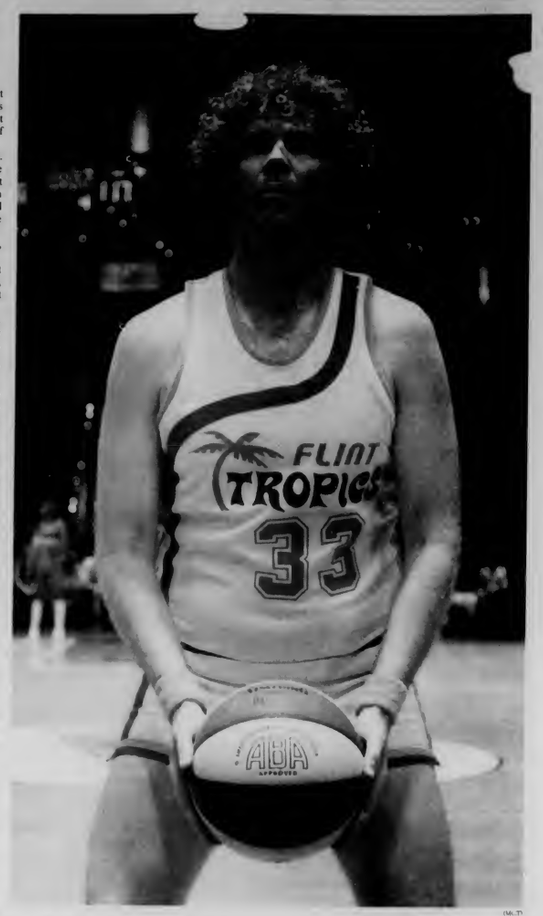
A: That song is Jackie Moon's homage to Barry White-meets-Isaac Hayes. That was fun to do, hit the studio and record that. That was also one of the things that made me laugh really hard when I read the script. "Jackie opens every home game by singing his hit song," subjecting, what, 80 people in the stands to that song? Night after night.

Q: We've seen a lot of Will Ferrell in recent years. In your underwear. But getting naked with the basketball in "Semi-Pro," something you had to be talked into or something you were dying to do?

A: I was talked into it, because I was told there was a guy in the league who did that very pose for a magazine. (Wendell) Ladner, I think he was. He was like, "Mr. Excitement," the good-looking guy in the league. He'd do stuff like comb his hair at halftime and women would just swoon.

He did the pose, stretched out on a bench. Kent the director tells me, "You're just emulating this famous pose." So we did it. Then, much later, I got to see the original photo. Ladner has his shorts on! I got duped. Oh well, too late now!

Q: The other common thread that's running through a lot of your work is this love of taking on and taking down a sport. Is that a way of getting some use out of that sports information degree from Southern Cal, or do you see comedy when you watch a sport on TV or in person?



A: Obviously, there's a lot to comment on in a comedy about NASCAR. The culture, the works. And figure skating was just begging to be made fun of.

But I view this movie more as making fun of this rinky-dink league, the ABA. The sport itself isn't really the target.

There's always stuff in sport that's an easy target.

Q: So I've got to take my daughter to gymnastics. Is that next on your radar, or are you bulking up, getting the tattoos, to take on Ultimate Fighting Challenge?

A: Oh, gymnastics? Never thought of that. Yeah. Totally see that. Thank you!

(MCT)

Jackie Moon (Will Ferrell), the owner, player/coach of the Flint Tropic of the ABA has to get his team into at least fourth place in order to merge with the NBA in the new '70s era comedy "Semi-Pro."

A primer for the incoming digital wave

By Rick Kushman
McClatchy Newspapers

Earlier this week, we covered the 2009 conversion of TV to digital, except for all the really good questions that scores of people have asked since.

I'm going to answer some of them today, but first, a quick reminder of what this is about.

At midnight next Feb. 17, all analog television transmissions will stop, and TV signals will become digital. If you have any kind of digital cable or satellite service, or you get your reception from an antenna but have a digital receiver inside your TV, you won't notice.

If you use an antenna for an analog TV, you will need a converter box. Those run $50 to $70, and government discount coupons worth $40 are available. Each household can get two coupons, but sellers accept only one coupon per converter.

Also, digital transmission is already going on, so you can switch at any time.

After that, it gets a bit more detailed, and I'm going to break down the questions into a few basic categories:

Converter boxes

Every TV in the house needs its own digital connection, either through cable, satellite or a converter.

The boxes are supposed to be very easy to connect, and you shouldn't need to pay for help. The boxes are becoming available at most major electronics retailers.

Cable

If you have cable, you won't have to get a converter or shop for other equipment. But that doesn't mean your cable company won't force a change on you, and if they do, they'll come to you.

If you have digital cable now, nothing more is needed. But, if you have an analog box, or analog cable through a wall connection, it will depend on your company.

Some cable companies will let you keep the analog equipment, and they'll convert the signal for you. But many companies are switching to all-digital because it's better for them, meaning they'll bring you a digital box.

If they do go all-digital, each TV in the house will need its own box.

Will that cost you more? It depends on what level of service you take. The basic analog and digital packages cost the same right now. But let's be realistic: How often do changes not end up costing more?

VCRs

If the VCR just sits there and plays tapes of movies that your kids watch 10 times a week, you don't need to bother with anything.

If you get your TV from an antenna and record with your VCR, you'll need a converter box leading into the VCR, but you shouldn't need another box for your TV, in most cases.

However, if you have separate antenna feeds into your VCR and TV this would mean you can watch one channel and record another — both the TV and VCR will need boxes.

TiVo

If you have TiVo hooked to an analog antenna, it will depend on the age of your box. Many newer TiVos have digital receivers and don't need converter boxes. Check your manual or your supplier.

Portable TVs

Some newer models have digital receivers built in, and the manual should tell you. But many small TVs are still analog, and that means you'll need a converter box.

However, the converters won't have their own power, or run on batteries, so you'll likely only be able to use the little portable if you can plug it, and the box, into an outlet somewhere.

(MCT)

Just under a year from now, on Feb 17, 2009, all analog television signals will be converted to digital. Those with outdated equipment may be left wondering what happened to their sets if they are not prepared.

Take Out a classifieds ad

THE DAILY COLLEGIAN
now offers free online classifieds for students at
WWW.UMASSLIST.COM

- More complete, local and relevant category listings than any and all competitor web sites combined
- Users can setup daily e-mail updates for relevant listings.
- No more searching for apartments, now they come to you.
- Post unlimited online listings
- Little to no spam

By using this site you are supporting your local college newspaper, The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

Submit your beer related questions to arts@dailycollegian.com, so the Beer Dudes can answer your brew-related queries in the new Beer Dude podcast

BRIAN TEDFORD/COLLEGIAN

Senior Fred Federico scored a crucial third-quarter goal for UMass in its season-opening victory against Hofstra Saturday. UMass coach Greg Cannella looks for him to improve on a disappointing junior season.

Minuteman seniors set on-field example players to develop the offensive fluency that became the hallmark of Cannella's teams in years past.

M. LACROSSE from page 1

UMass's next three games all come against capable opponents who have given the Minutemen problems at times. The first five games of the 2008 season come against the same opponents UMass opened with in 2007. The Minutemen began 2007 1-4 — their lone win coming against Harvard.

Saturday, the Minutemen travel to New Haven, Conn., for a match-up with Yale. The Bulldogs defeated UMass, 7-6, last season in Amherst to drop the Minutemen to 0-2 at the time.

"I thought [the young players] handled [the first game] pretty well," Cannella said. "But now you go on the road and you a play a very good team who beat us last year, and it may be a different story. So our preparation has to be the same, and we have to go down there and be mentally tough and strong against somebody else on their field. It's different when we're home."

Cannella understands that his team's best games are in front of them, but he also doesn't expect to win many games scoring in the single digits. Last season, the Minutemen were 5-0 when scoring at least 10 goals.

When UMass's games with Albany, Syracuse and Georgetown come around, it is likely that the Minutemen will need somewhere in the area of 10 goals to earn a victory. Both teams were preseason top 10 teams and contenders for a national championship. The matchup with Georgetown is especially important as it is a conference game for the Minutemen – the Hoyas are the favorite to win the ECAC for the second consecutive season.

With the games against Georgetown and Syracuse both coming on the road, the leadership of the UMass captains – Rory Pedrick, Sean Krygier, Paul Manesis and Brian Danvers – will become especially important. The reliability of junior goalkeeper Doc Schneider is also a key for the Minutemen. Against Hofstra, his career-high 18 saves propelled the Minutemen to victory.

"I think Doc expects himself to play like that every game," Cannella said. "But we can't rely on one group or one unit to carry us through the season."

As one of two senior offensive players still on the roster, Pedrick is the leader of the unit. But he missed the win over Hofstra due to injury and will not play against Yale.

Senior Fred Federico is the lone senior featured in UMass's current offensive rotation. Against Hofstra, his goal midway through the third quarter halted a Hofstra run and effectively sealed the victory for UMass. Coming off a disappointing junior season, he has become the leader by default up front for the Minutemen.

"It was a big goal. For Freddy, it's about consistency. I know he was disappointed in his performance as a junior," Cannella said.

"He's a senior, this is his last shot. There's a sense of urgency for Fred. He's performed very well on the field, and off the field as leader."

Krygier, Manesis and Danvers all play defensive roles for the Minutemen. Along with the other contributors on defense, the Minutemen have a solid core to not only keep balls out of the net, but to act as leaders for the younger players.

"Our captains have been pretty steadfast in what they've said throughout the year," Cannella said. "[College lacrosse] is a hard thing and you have to dedicate yourself whether it's the fall, winter, spring, maintain your conditioning and maintain your health. They've impressed that upon their teammates. They know they need their teammates tremendously, so they've urged and encouraged them as well."

"The motivation for our guys is to work hard and prepare the right way and everything will take care of itself," Cannella said. "When you go out on that field, and if you prepared yourself the right way, and you've prepared yourself mentally, you'll be successful."

Joe Meloni can be reached at joe.meloni@gmail.com.

Goalkeepers battle for time

W. LACROSSE from page 10

won the America East Championship each of the last three years – they need to control the tempo of the game.

UMass coach Alexis Venechanos knows BU will come prepared for the Minutewomen, already knowing what its offense can do to them.

"We're very familiar with each other," Venechanos said. "BU knows what we're going to do, and we know what they're going to do and [we'll have to see] who's going to step up and do it better."

Venechanos constantly preaches the importance of ball possession to her players. She sees possession as one of the keys to victory against BU.

"We're just trying to get into some chemistry at [the attack position]," Venechanos said. "We have some new faces there. We really don't care who scores the goals, we just want our players to score more goals than the other team."

UMass has the potential to be just as quick as BU. The key is to make the Terriers play a slower game than they're accustomed to. Venechanos plans to work with her attacks and focus on tempo this week in practice. She'll work with the three attacks on both holding the ball securely and also spreading it around to find the open shot.

On defense, Venechanos wants to have her defenders understand and react better to the offensive schemes of the other team.

The last time the two teams met, the Terriers were denied by goalkeeper Lauren McCarthy (12 saves).

Redshirt junior Krissy Anderson, freshman Colleen Speth and junior Jamie Whiteway are all vying for the starting position. However, none of the three candidates have had significant playing time. Anderson is a solid choice but is coming off a medical redshirt year, and Speth is another option. The freshman net minder has All-American credentials and tremendous upside.

Whiteway is a very quick and athletic player, which makes her a solid option as well. For now, the position is goalie by committee.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu

BRIAN TEDFORD/COLLEGIAN

Redshirt junior goalkeeper Krissy Anderson allowed 18 goals in UMass's loss to Maryland. She is part of a rotation in goal for the Minutewomen including Colleen Speth and Jamie Whiteway.

UMass to rely on strong defense in '08

Ride, strong defense still Maroon and White's game

By Michael King
Collegian Staff

For the past several decades, Garber Field has hosted teams that excel on defense and in the transition game. The 2008 edition of the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team will be no exception.

Yet it will be the Minuteman attack that largely determines the team's on-field success this season.

If there's one way to mask a weak offense, it's with a strong defense. And the Minutemen boast an experienced defensive unit that may be one of the best ever to call Garber Field home.

Featuring close defenders Sean Krygier and David Von Voigt, who are both third-year starters, the unit played well in Saturday's win over Hofstra while allowing four goals.

"They all play pretty good team defense. It might be a size or a quickness match-up, so there's not one player who will cover the top [offensive opponent] each time," UMass coach Greg Cannella said.

In addition, junior Doc Schneider is one of the nation's top goalkeepers and played that way against Hofstra. Schneider stopped 19 shots, tying his career high.

Transition attack

Expect the Minutemen to take full advantage of all chances to score in transition. Last season, speedy midfielders Brian Jacovina and Brett Garber keyed this part of the offense. With that pair having graduated, senior Fred Federico and junior Evan Blum will play important roles.

Even with a solid defensive unit, Cannella acknowledges that his team will need to increase its offensive output over Saturday's win.

Last season, the Minutemen averaged 8.79 goals per game. But the more telling statistic was that the Maroon and White were 6-1 in games where they scored at least nine goals.

Beyond its transition attack, much of UMass's success will be determined by its ability to score in offensive sets. With attacks Jim Connolly and Christian Haggerty lost to suspension, the scoring burden will fall to Tim Balise.

The junior responded against Hofstra by producing half of his team's offense with four goals.

"We're not telling [Balise] that he has to carry the load," Cannella said. "He let the game come to him [against Hofstra]. The more our players do that, the better off we'll be."

The Minutemen also eagerly await the return of senior midfielder Rory Pedrick, who is currently out with an undisclosed injury.

The ride

Since lacrosse is a possession-based sport, forcing an opponent to commit turnovers is an important key for success. After nearly every failed attempt to score, the Minutemen engage in a system of defense known as the ride.

The strategy is designed to prevent the defense from clearing the ball by aggressively pressuring both the ball carrier and pass recipients up-field. The ride is most effective in settled situations (i.e. after stoppages in play), especially when the opponent must clear the ball the full length of the field.

"You hope that you can ride and continue to put pressure on long-stick defensemen and force them into making bad decisions out there," Cannella said. "The riding game is very important to us; we know we can be successful if we have 30 percent success [with the ride]."

Though effective riding can lead to extra possessions, the technique requires pure hustle. With a limited roster, fatigue may become an issue – especially for the attacking unit.

"Right now we have 12 offensive players, so there are no breaks in practice," Cannella said. "There's less time to stand on the sideline to catch your breath. Conditioning has not changed, but these guys are getting more reps. Hopefully that will keep them in better shape."

But just as creating extra possessions is important, avoiding turnovers is a crucial aspect of the game.

Against Hofstra, the Minutemen committed 24 – a statistic that Cannella wants to be closer to single digits.

"You ride a fine line because you ask your guys to take some chances when they play without any fear," he said. "But with many of the turnovers we had [against Hofstra], we weren't trying to make plays, we were just throwing the play around."

Face-offs

This season, the NCAA instituted a new rule that penalizes a team if any player commits an illegal motion before the whistle. The face-off team of the offending team must clear the field while the opponent gains possession. This can create exploitable matchups, as well as boost transition offenses.

But Cannella acknowledges that the rule won't change how he approaches face-offs in terms of personnel.

"It becomes more of a concern what you do out there – you can't jump the whistle," he said.

Against Hofstra, Cannella [illegible] junior Joe Reale into the face-off role even though sophomore Bobby Hayes returns to the midfield. Hayes maintained primary face-off duties in 2007, winning nearly 51 percent of his draws.

It remains to be seen who will emerge as the top face-off man, though the team may experiment with other players based on [illegible] match-ups.

Man-down unit

Historically, the Minutemen have always boasted one of the best man-down units in collegiate lacrosse. This season penalty-kill success will mostly be attributable to its [illegible] defense, but like the ride, it requires significant effort to exploit properly.

Last season the Maroon and White surrendered 10 extra-man goals in 14 games.

Though the strength of the unit is an obvious asset to the team, Cannella still stresses to his players to [illegible] unnecessary penalties.

"You don't mind the [illegible] where you're physical and [illegible] the field," Cannella said. "The detrimental mistakes that you [illegible]

Michael King can be [illegible] making at student.umass.edu.

Student Government Association DEBATE
2/28 Thursday
7 PM
Cape Cod Lounge
Candidates for University student trustee and
SGA president will be answering questions
COME HAVE YOUR QUESTIONS ANSWERED.

Xavier moves to No. 9 after win over UD

Charlotte coach Lutz breaks school record

By Sam Grossack
Collegian Correspondent

Xavier continues to make a push to prove to people that it is one of the elite teams in the country as it jumped to No. 9 in the newest Associated Press poll.

With the Musketeers 57-51 win at Dayton on Sunday, the team clinched a share of the Atlantic 10 regular season title, a 10-game winning streak, and their first top 10 ranking since 1997.

Dayton kept the game extremely close in the first half, tying the game five times, but never taking the lead. They went into the break down two. In the second half, both teams came out firing, but Xavier stayed hot longer and built a 10-point lead with fewer than 13 minutes left.

Neither team will take the floor again until Saturday, when Xavier hosts George Washington in another tune-up before the A-10 Tournament and Dayton travels to Fordham. This is a must-win game for the Flyers as they currently sit at 12th in the conference, the last seed that qualifies for the tournament.

LUTZ BREAKS RECORD

Charlotte coach Bobby Lutz broke the school's record for all-time victories with 183 as the 49ers beat Saint Louis, 81-64, Saturday. Lutz broke the record of Jeff Mullin, who preceded him in the program as head coach.

The beginning of the game was dominated on the offensive side of the floor. Neither team seemed to miss a shot, combining for 9-of-13 from 3-point range. In the second half the Billikens couldn't keep the pace, and they fell behind by 11 early before a rally to get the game within two. The 49ers responded with a 9-0 run to eventually open up a 17-point lead.

The 49ers were led by An'Juan Wilderness, Charlie Cooley and Michael Gerrity, each of whom scored 14 points. This was only the sixth time this season the 49ers played a game that was decided by fewer than seven points.

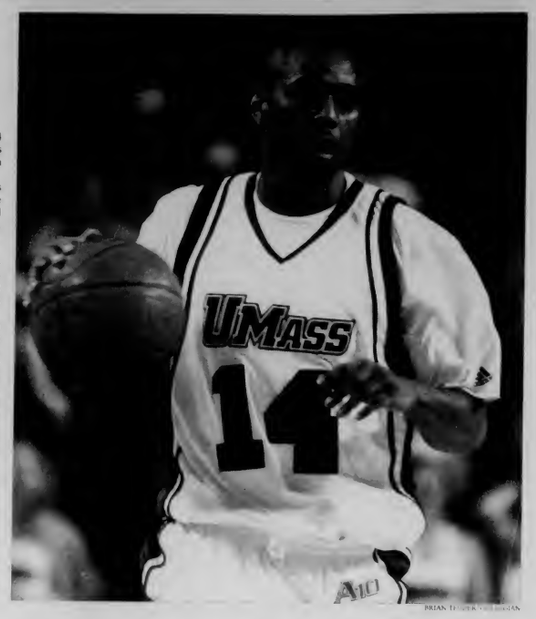
Tommie Liddell III led the Billikens with 18 points in the loss. SLU got little help from anyone else, and the team's 2-for-12 shooting from 3-point range in the second half significantly hurt its chances of making a comeback. They will look to rebound at Saint Joseph's on Thursday.

HARRIS LOOKS TOWARD A-10 RECORD

La Salle's Darnell Harris made a career-high eight 3-pointers in Thursday's overtime win against Dayton, giving him 319 on the season, a school record. Harris sits 12 behind former Massachusetts sharpshooter Monty Mack for the A-10 all time record.

Harris led his team with 26 points, and Rodney Green added 17 as the Explorers came back from a seven-point deficit late to force overtime. In the extra period they didn't defend much better, and the Flyers continued their hot shooting, connecting on 56 percent from the field to take a five-point lead with under a minute to go. Harris made his two biggest shots from behind the line in the last minute, and Yves Mekongo Mbala hit two free throws to make it a three-point lead.

The Explorers are sitting in a three-way tie for third in the conference, with Richmond and Temple, half a game ahead of UMass and a game ahead of Charlotte.



A-10 WEEKLY AWARDS

Each leading their team to two victories this past week, Harris and UMass's Chris Lowe were named the A-10 Players of the Week. This is the first time either player has won the award this season.

Harris led the Explorers to wins against St. Joe's and Dayton. He added 23.5 points per game in the two efforts, shooting 13-of-25 from behind the arc. In addition, he has not turned the ball over in his last 73 minutes played.

Lowe recorded two double-doubles and averaged 17 points and 11.5 rebounds in two games. In his game against SLU, he handed out a career-high 13 assists.

Sam Grossack can be reached at sgrossac@student.umass.edu

BRIAN TUCKER/COLLEGIAN

UMass guard Chris Lowe earned A-10 Co-Player of the Week honors, along with Darnell Harris of La Salle, for his performance in both UMass victories last week.

GW recovers after tough loss to SBU

By Oliver Gasior
Collegian Correspondent

Led by Kimberly Beck, George Washington recovered from a tough loss with two impressive victories over Atlantic 10 opponents this past week.

The Colonials (22-5, 10-2 A-10) defeated Saint Louis (10-17, 5-7 A-10), 82-58, and slipped by Saint Joseph's (14-13, 6-6 A-10) by a margin of eight points.

The Colonials began the week suffering an upset at the hands of St. Bonaventure (18-9, 6-6 A-10), who rattled George Washington out of its No. 1 spot in the conference. Prior to the game, GW had one loss in the Atlantic 10.

Beck was recently named one of 10 finalists for the Nancy Lieberman Award, which is given to the top point guard in the country. She had the honor of being one of the three finalists last year, but fell short.

A-10 DARKHORSE

Although the Bonnies can't gain much ground in the standings with two games remaining in the regular season, they are in contention for an A-10 Tournament bye. Their win over the Colonials, followed by a victory, 64-63, against the Billikens, puts them in contention for a spot in the conference tournament in a close race.

XAVIER KEEPS PACE

With a 10-2 record in the conference, Xavier is tied for the top spot in the A-10. The Musketeers started the week with a big win over Charlotte, continuing to be a force in the conference with Temple and GW.

All three teams are tied with 10-2 records in the A-10 and clinched first-round byes in the conference tournament.

Xavier's win over Charlotte was the first of three wins for the Musketeers this past week. They also defeated La Salle and Fordham.

Xavier freshman center Ta'Shia Phillips earned A-10 Rookie of the Week honors, registering a double-double in both games this past week. She averaged 16 points and 11.5 rebounds in those games. She has now won the award 11 times, and leads the league with 16 double-doubles.

THE 12 SPOT IN THE A-10

Temple (17-11, 10-2 A-10) began the week with a 74-66 win over Duquesne. This puts the Dukes, UMass and La Salle in a three-way tie for the 11th spot in the conference. One of these teams will not advance and will stand alongside Fordham, who lurks at the bottom of the standings with a conference-worst 0-12 record (0-27 overall).

La Salle and Duquesne have a crucial game on Feb. 27 that could decide which team makes it into the tournament.

The recent success for the Explorers (they've won three of their last four games) can largely be attributed to the play from forward Carlene Hightower. Hightower won A-10 Player of the Week honors this past week. She averaged 22.5 points and 11 rebounds. She dominated against Rhode Island, scoring half of La Salle's 64 points in the victory over the Rams.

Oliver Gasior can be reached at ogasior@student.umass.edu.

CHECK OUT
THE DAILY COLLEGIAN
MULTIMEDIA SECTION
www.dailycollegian.com

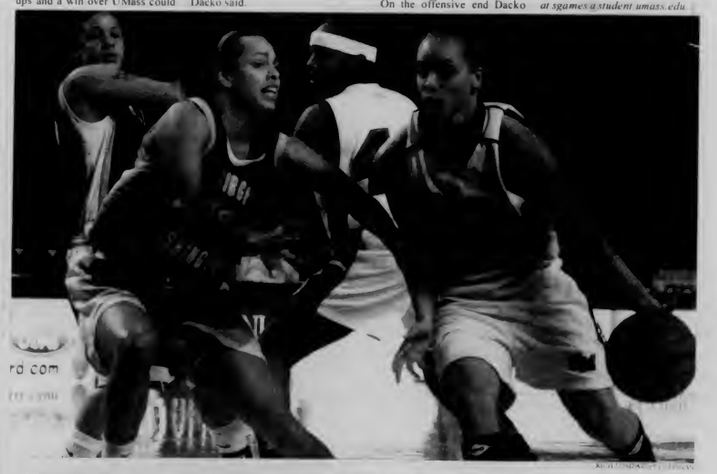
BASKETBALL from page 10

Dacko said.

She told the team the same thing going into the Dayton game and the Minutewomen snapped a four-game losing streak. The Bonnies have not won at UMass since 2004. This season the Minutewomen have been a different team at home with a 10-3 record.

The Bonnies have won three straight A-10 conference matchups and a win over UMass could possibly move them up in the A-10 standings. Leading the Bonnies is sophomore forward Dana Mitchell, who made the A-10 All-Rookie team last season. Mitchell is averaging 19 points per game and is shooting 48 percent from the field. Senior forward Kate Mills will have the job of stopping Mitchell on the defensive end.

"Mitchell does more facing the basket than she did a year ago. She brings the ball up and plays more of a perimeter game," Dacko said.



Junior guard Katelyn Murray is the other leading scorer for St. Bonaventure, averaging 11 points per game. Murray is primarily an outside shooter. She has attempted 108 3-pointers on the season and has hit 38 percent of those shots. Senior forward Alisha Tatham will have the task of stopping Murray.

"Murray puts it in that shooting pocket and she just lets it fly," Dacko said. "She's a very good shooter so we have to respect them."

On the offensive end Dacko said the Bonnies will try to stop the Minutewomen's inside game by collapsing and creating traffic inside. To counter it, Dacko is expecting her shooters to knock down outside shots from the 15-foot range.

"What we're looking to do is to keep the offense spread, keep the middle open and be ready to shoot outside jumpers," Dacko said. "Our biggest key, too, is to see how many offensive boards we can get to get second looks."

Steve Games can be reached at sgames@student.umass.edu.

Sakera and the Minutewomen take on St. Bonaventure tomorrow at the Mullins Center. UMass is 10-3 in 13 games at home this season but have not enjoyed the same success on the road.

Campus to Career
Who's Got Your Number?
Tuesday, March 4, 2008
5:30 p.m. in Memorial Hall
Chances are you don't give everyday check and credit card transactions a second thought—but someone else may!
With just a small amount of personal information, your identity can be stolen and cost you hundreds of dollars and many hours to correct.
Kathryn Bielunis '07 and William Dulchinos of Liberty Mutual will walk you through the steps you must take to protect yourself from identity theft.
FREE ADMISSION • FREE PIZZA • FREE REFRESHMENTS
To register for this FREE event, visit UMassAlumni.com/students
Liberty Mutual
ALUMNI ASSOCIATION
STUDENT ALUMNI ASSOCIATION
Sponsored by the Alumni Association and the Student Alumni Association in partnership with Liberty Mutual.
For more information contact
Wesley J. Dunham '99, assistant director for Student and Alumni Programs at 545-3049 or wdunham@admin.umass.edu

Kent State rises to No. 23 in AP poll

Top 25 from page 10

next month's tournament with four players averaging at least 11 points per game. With a balanced attack on offense, one of its primary threats is Pete Campbell, who shoots over 42 percent from 3-point range.

As for Drake (24-3, 14-2 Missouri Valley Conference), it also dropped in this week's rankings, due to a 72-71 loss to Bradley. Drake fell four spots to No. 20 despite still getting the win over Butler.

Both teams have great records but lack victories against ranked opponents. The victory for Drake is its first win over a ranked team all season. Butler is still without such a win.

Regardless, both teams are in great position to win their conferences. Both teams have two games remaining on their regular season schedule, with Butler holding a two-game lead in the Horizon League and Drake holding a three-game lead in the Missouri Valley Conference.

KENT STATE CLIMBS TO NO. 23

Kent State's first-ever victory over a ranked opponent earned it some national attention.

When the Golden Flashes traveled to St. Mary's this past Saturday, they beat the then-No. 20 Gaels, 65-57. With a stubborn defense, Kent State shut down Saint Mary's star Patty Mills, holding him to 2-of-11 shooting and five points.

Kent State (23-5, 11-2 MAC) still has work to do to close out the season on top in the Mid-American Conference. With three games remaining, the Golden Flashes hold a one-and-a-half game margin over Western Michigan.

Success is common for Kent State, a team that has won at least 20 games in each of the last seven seasons, but it still has not enjoyed success like they are now. With its first win over a ranked opponent in school history, Kent State sits at the No. 23 spot in the AP poll.

Jeff Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@student.umass.edu.

TAKE A PHOTO OF YOURSELF WITH YOUR COMPLETED SUDOKU OR CROSSWORD AND SET YOURSELF AS THE COMICS PAGE!
COMICS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Like a hotpocket but not as tasty...

		1	5				3
		7		6	8		9	4
					2
5		6			7		8
				5
	7		9			3		6
			2
2	5		8	4		1
7					9	8

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

ACROSS
1 Water-storing plants
6 Hence
10 Stately display
14 HOMES part
15 Take ten
16 Declare
17 Like Pisa's tower
18 Large-mouth pitcher
19 Actress Austin
20 Aristocrat
22 English Channel swimmer Gertrude
24 Pesky insect
25 Greated murals
26 Constant
29 Hailey's namesake
30 Legal wrongs
31 Editor's mark
32 Three-way intersection
35 Falco of "The Sopranos"
36 Stairway part
37 Billions of years
38 Chinese pan
39 Tarries
40 Sailing ship
41 Bees' abodes
42 Like some periodicals
43 Kind of nuclear reactor
46 Blue-gray metal
47 Mold again
48 Turning
52 At the summit
53 Actress Moran
55 Leg bone
56 Artifice
57 Boorish
58 Arena happening
59 Require
60 Understands
61 Male and female

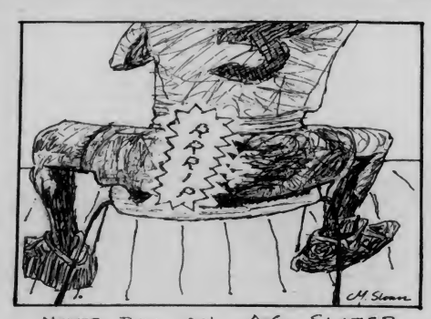
DOWN
1 Sleuth Charlie
2 Suggestive beginning?
3 Baby's bed
4 Highway barrier
5 Means
6 Actor Williams
7 Chopped with an ax
8 Employ
9 Decorative ribbon
10 Proprietary product
11 Out in the open
12 Actress Oberon
13 Snooped
21 Has permission to
23 Menu plan
25 Skin openings
26 Pot meal
27 Commotion
28 Actor Estrada
29 Lawyer's files
31 Apple drink
32 Swiped
33 Organic compound
34 Catch sight of
36 Metal-bolt hammerers
37 Optional
39 Auction actions
40 Legislative bodies
41 Plead
42 Humorist
43 Muscle
44 Do up open laces
45 Eleve's place
48 Sectors
49 Commune
49 Wild goat
50 Baseball team count
51 Gangsters heaters
54 Regret

CAPTION CONTEST!

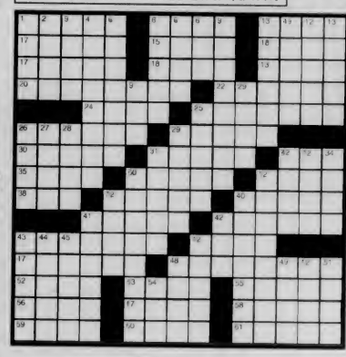
Submit captions and see the picture in color at:
www.dailycollegian.com/caption
Another great opportunity for delaying the start of your homework!

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"There is a tragic flaw in our precious Constitution, and I don't know what can be done to fix it. This is it: Only nut cases want to be president."
-Kurt Vonnegut



WONDERMARK By David Malki



LAST DITCH EFFORT By John Kroes

BUM BULL BEE By Matthew Sloan

NEVER PULL AN A.C. SLATER ON FREE-BALLIN' FRIDAY.

Submit your comics!
comics@dailycollegian.com

Submit your classifieds!
(413) 545-3500

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Once upon a time you were falling in love, now you're only falling victim to a domineering girlfriend. Run boy, RUN!

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Before you fall asleep tonight, take time to think of the underpaid worker in a distant land who manufactured your bedding.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
You smile like a clown and it makes children cry. Cut the crap and put on a somber face.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
Family vacations are only fun in theory.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
The ducks at the campus pond have x-ray vision. They know what you look like naked.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Well, that was a very public adjustment of your bulge. I hope your more comfortable now.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
MacGyver once used a snorkel and a can of baked beans to make a statue shaped like you. That's how bad he needed you.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Whatever is all over your computer screen is making it very dirty, and I'm not refering to dust.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
You are more beautiful than a gazelle and can jump twice as high. Enjoy your leaping prowess but watch out for hunters.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
You spend more time sitting at the DC than a seventh grader spends hanging around the mall. You're a DC-Rat.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
You will get your own TV show. Unfortunately it will only last for one episode and be called "Intervention."

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Dress like a poisonous puffer fish, fill your cheeks with air, and dive into the Totman swimming pool during scuba class.

Laugh little hyena, laugh.

comics@dailycollegian.com

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Montreal Weekend
From $99 Complete.
Best Hotels.
Best Prices.
montrealexpress.net
781-979-9001

APT. FOR RENT

Center of Town 1, 2, 3 bedrooms. NOW SHOWING for June and September. NO FEES. Schedule a showing 253-7879 view apts. at www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

APT. FOR RENT

Studio, 1,2,3,4 bedrooms available Going Fast, Still guaranteeing for Fall Semester ALL UTILITIES INCLUDED! Call ASAP 413-256-0741

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

EMPLOYMENT

Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

TEXTBOOK BUYBACK STAFF NEEDED FOR$15/HR
Online textbook company needs 20 college students to staff textbook buyback events at local private high schools in May and June. 10-30 hrs/wk with flex hrs to fit your sched. Email resume to winnie.imperio@varsitybooks.com

SERVICES

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1-800-550-4900. 24-hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthright.org.

Concerned About Your Eating?
Do you eat too little? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic, 577-5101

SERVICES

TAPESTRY HEALTH providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling &rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable, Safe. 413-548-9992. 27 Pray St. Amherst. www.tapestryhealth.org

School a Pain in your eyes?
Headache? Itchy eyes? Trouble reading? An eye exam can be the first step toward relief. Call Eye Care Services at UHS, 577-5383, to learn more.

TRAVEL

Montreal Weekend
From $99 Complete.
Best Hotels.
Best Prices.
montrealexpress.net
781-979-9001

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSWEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 27, 2008 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Terriers come to McGuirk

Maroon and White looks to rebound from loss to UMD

BY MIKE GILLMEISTER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Today's game against No.15 Boston University will mark the second time in as many games that the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team will face a ranked opponent.

The last time these teams met, UMass (1-1) upset the then-ranked No.16 Terriers behind hat tricks from three different Minutewomen.

BU is led by junior midfielder Sarah Dalton. Dalton is on the preseason watch list for the Tewaaraton trophy.

She's joined by senior captains Molly Collins (team-leading 37 ground balls in 2007) and Lauren Morton (41 goals in 2007).

The Minutewomen will counter with another name on the Tewaaraton watch list, senior attack Kathleen Typadis. In last year's contest, Typadis had four points on three goals and one assist.

The inability to cause turnovers hindered UMass against No. 3 Maryland in its last game, and caused turnovers weren't a huge factor in last year's contest against the Terriers, either.

Look for the attack position to be one of importance for UMass today.

Freshman Jackie Lyons could be a spark plug for the Maroon and White in this game. Against Holy Cross, Lyons had two goals, four ground balls and four caused turnovers. Junior Kaytlin McCormick will also be a presence at the attack position. McCormick has the team lead in goals with five, three of which came in the losing effort against Maryland.

If the Minutewomen hope to win against the Terriers – a team that has

See W. LACROSSE on page 7

BRIAN TROUPE/COLLEGIAN

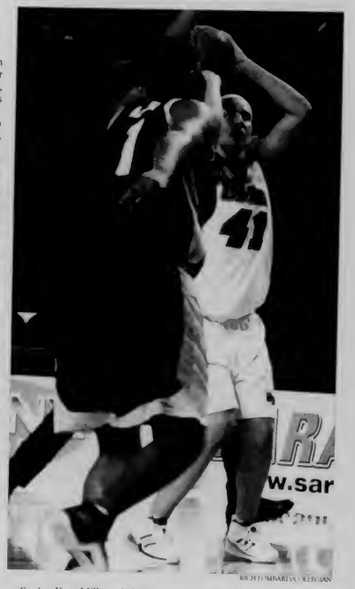
The Massachusetts women's lacrosse team will try to rebound from its 18-7 loss to Maryland on Saturday afternoon. UMass takes on Boston University tomorrow at 2 p.m. at McGuirk Alumni Stadium. Last season the Minutewomen defeated the Terriers.

SBU heads to Amherst for A-10 clash

Minutewomen seek revenge against Mitchell, Bonnies

BY STEVE GAMES
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Last season St. Bonaventure knocked the Massachusetts women's basketball team out of the Atlantic 10 Tournament. This week the Bonnies travel to UMass to attempt to keep them from making the tournament.



UMass (12-15, 4-8 A-10) squandered a 16-point lead in a first round loss to the Bonnies, 63-60. The Minutewomen led, 45-29, with 15:24 left in the game, when the Bonnies went on a 21-3 run to take the lead, 50-48. Tonight's game will be the 47th time these teams have met, with UMass holding a 29-17 advantage. The Minutewomen have lost six of their last nine games in this matchup, but won last year during the regular season at St. Bonaventure, 53-49.

"There's plenty of motivation for this game," UMass coach Marnie Dacko said. "We've said remember St. Bonnies from March of last year, we had two substantial leads and we blew them and at the end we blew it."

The Minutewomen want to keep playing after the regular season ends and as it stands now they are on the verge of making the tournament. St. Bonaventure (18-9, 6-6 A-10) and UMass are in different positions than a year ago. Last year the Bonnies were trying to make their push and squeezed into the 10th seed, while the Minutewomen sported a .500 record in the conference. This is not a do-or-die game for the Minutewomen, but depending on how the other bottom teams play, each game grows more important.

"I'm trying to take the pressure off the kids and say 'let's just go out and make plays and not worry about the result;' I think they've been so result-focused we forget about taking care of the ball, getting rebounds when we have it and making good decisions,"

See BASKETBALL on page 8

RICH LAM/ARTS COLLEGIAN

Senior Kate Mills and the Minutewomen take on St. Bonaventure tomorrow night at the Mullins Center.

Rebounding key for UMass

Victory over Dayton product of solid performance on glass

BY MIKE CONNORS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

As Dayton went through pregame warmups at the Mullins Center on Saturday afternoon, it looked like a team with a 21-6 record. The players were laughing and looked like they expected to secure a win against a Massachusetts women's basketball team that had lost four consecutive Atlantic 10 games.

However, the Flyers (21-7, 7-5 A-10) came up 20 points short of their season average, due largely in part to the rebounding disparity in a 56-46 Minutewomen victory.

Along with turnovers, UMass has been plagued by rebounding struggles this season – the Minutewomen average 35.1 rebounds per game, which is 10th in the conference.

Dayton is third in the A-10 with 39.1 rebounds per game but relied mainly on jump shots and couldn't match their season average.

By the time the final horn sounded, the Flyers had been outrebounded, 45-32, including 14-6 on the offensive end.

"Teams that beat Dayton on the boards won ballgames," UMass coach Marnie Dacko said. "So if we could go out and control the boards, we'd have an opportunity to beat them."

Dacko has stressed rebounding over the entire season but admitted that it's been difficult, as the team is routinely outworked on the glass.

In losses to Rhode Island and George Washington, UMass was outrebounded by a 72-49 margin. The Colonials grabbed 18 offensive rebounds, and this helped them to score 18 second-chance points and 40 points in the paint.

In the two most recent Minutewoman losses, against Saint Louis and Duquesne, the team did a better job of crashing the boards. They outrebounded the Billikens, 31-26, and were outrebounded, 39-37, against the Dukes.

In Saturday's victory, UMass built on these improved performances and put together a total team rebounding effort.

In addition to her game-high 23 points and five blocks, senior forward Katie Mills led the Minutewomen with 10 rebounds.

Fellow senior Alisha Tatham recorded nine rebounds, including three on the offensive glass. The captain provides the Minutewomen with their quickest perimeter defender, and with her athleticism, she grabbed a fifth of the team's rebounds.

Teya Wright also contributed to the solid team rebounding effort, grabbing seven rebounds.

"I think [Teya's] staying in games because she's moving her feet defensively, she got some rebounds, she had a lot of open looks inside," Dacko said. "Again, we've got to keep working with her on her pivot feet and making better power moves to the basket.

"She's going to grow as she matures and as she ages but she gave us some quality minutes defensively and she's got to keep that going."

When she stays out of foul trouble, Wright is the team's most effective rebounder. She averages 13.3 rebounds per 40 minutes, and has been doing a better job recently of remaining on the floor.

Currently tied for 12th place in the A-10, the Minutewomen will look to continue their rebounding success against a St. Bonaventure team that has also struggled with rebounding this season.

The Bonnies are one spot behind UMass on the boards, averaging 34.6 rebounds per game.

Since the Minutewomen lead the conference in field-goal percentage (43.9 percent), they'll greatly improve their chances of beating St. Bonaventure and getting one step closer to the A-10 Tournament if they replicate their rebounding performance against Dayton.

Mike Connors can be reached at mjconnor@student.umass.edu.

BY JOSHUA MOSES/COLLEGIAN

Freshman Teya Wright and the Minutewomen have struggled in rebounding throughout the season.

SUE WITTE/TENNESSEE MEDIA RELATIONS

Tennessee head coach Bruce Pearl led the Volunteers to a victory over then-No. 1 Memphis on Saturday night. The win earned UT its first-ever No. 1 ranking in this week's poll.

Tennessee takes over top spot after win over Memphis

Gonzaga, Saint Mary's compete for lead in WCC

BY JEFF LARNARD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

In a battle for supremacy in the state of Tennessee, and what proved to be a battle for the top spot in the national rankings, Tennessee upset previously undefeated Memphis when the top two teams in the nation met this past Saturday.

Tennessee took over as the No. 1 team in the nation in this week's ranking with its 66-62 victory over the Tigers; Memphis fell one spot to No. 2.

The Volunteers (25-2, 11-1 SEC) have now won nine straight games and 20 of their last 21. Memphis (26-1, 12-0 C-USA) snapped its 26-game win streak and its streak of 47 consecutive victories at home with the loss.

The game was low scoring compared to the teams' average output. Each team averages over 80 points per game but played more of a defensive game this past weekend.

The Tigers held UT leading scorer Chris Lofton to seven points. J.P. Prince contributed off the bench, adding 13 points for Tennessee.

FIGHT FOR FIRST

The No. 24 and No. 25 teams in the AP poll face off Saturday, March 1, in a game that will have significant impact in the West Coast Conference.

No. 24 Gonzaga hosts No. 25 Saint Mary's in a game that will likely decide first place for the conference. Both teams have the same conference record at 11-1, with St. Mary's holding the head-to-head advantage with its victory over the Bulldogs at the beginning of February.

Gonzaga (22-6, 11-1 WCC) will have one other conference game after its match up with the Gaels (24-4, 11-1 WCC), as will St. Mary's. Both teams are trying to build their resumes for the NCAA Tournament next month.

The Bulldogs have two impressive road wins against Connecticut and Saint Joseph's already under their belts, while St. Mary's has victories over No. 20 Drake and Oregon, and tough losses against No. 5 Texas, No. 23 Kent State and Southern Illinois.

When Gonzaga and St. Mary's faced off earlier this month it took overtime to decide a victor. The Gaels walked off their home court with an 89-85 victory.

BUTLER DROPS SIX SPOTS

Butler takes the biggest drop of the week in the AP polls as it falls six spots to No. 14.

The descent comes after Butler (25-3, 14-2 Horizon Conference) lost to No. 20 Drake this past week, 71-64. The loss ended Butler's nine-game winning streak.

Butler will look to be a threat in

See TOP 25 on page 8

INSIDE: MINUTEWOMEN SECURE A-10 TOURNEY SPOT | PAGE 10

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

AM SNOW : HI: 26 LO: 2 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 28, 2008

Violent threat shakes campus

Message found in restroom sparks more safety concerns

BY KATE OLESIN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A message threatening violence with a weapon was found in Bartlett Hall yesterday afternoon, adding to the theme of violent activity at the University of Massachusetts.

The message, scrawled in one of the second-floor men's bathrooms was found by a student at about 1 p.m., according to deputy chief of administration at UMPD Pat Archbald.

"We're asking people to be extra vigilant and aware of their surroundings and report anything suspicious," Archbald said.

The exact contents of the message have not been released by UMPD, since the investigation is ongoing. But Archbald reassured the UMass community that the University is taking the situation seriously.

"Clearly there's a heightened concern about safety on campus and we're [UMPD] being extra vigilant and addressing any concerns that come to our attention," he said.

According to Archbald and a campus alert on the UMass Web site, officers were refocused to campus, many of whom are in training or are "here for other purposes."

The University also sent a campus alert message to the student body via e-mail around 3 p.m.

By the late afternoon there was no commotion outside the building, nor any evidence of a message in either second-floor men's bathroom.

UMPD urges that anyone who was in the vicinity between 12:50 and 1 p.m. and who observed or heard suspicious activity should contact the police at 413-545-2121.

Kate Olesin can be reached at kate.olesin@gmail.com.

Bartlett Hall was the site of a threat of violence yesterday afternoon. A UMass student found a message in one of the second-floor men's restrooms around 1 p.m. The UMPD responded with an extra police presence in the immediate area. A campus alert e-mail was also sent to students.

UMass students walked from the Malcom X Cultural Center to MacKimmie residence hall to show support for former student Jason Vassell. The event was designed to raise awareness about recent campus hate crimes.

Vigil supports former student

Discussion focuses on campus hate crimes and racial issues

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

With candles in hand, approximately 35 students braved the cold weather last night for a two-minute vigil to show their support for former University of Massachusetts student Jason Vassell, while raising awareness about recent hate crimes on campus.

The vigil took place outside of MacKimmie residence hall in Southwest, the location of an incident on Feb. 3 involving Vassell, a 23-year-old African-American, and two Caucasian males not enrolled at the University.

Numerous students cried during the two-minute moment of silence, while the cold air breezed and blew out some of the candles. Despite the difficult conditions outside, Student Government Association President Aaron Buford thought the evening went well and was a good start to improving race relations on campus.

"It was really powerful to see people come out and show signs of solidarity and affirm the commitment that they have to seeing these issues be resolved," Buford said. "We're working at some really powerful and positive changes on campus."

Before the vigil, a 20-minute session was held at the Malcolm X Cultural Center featuring speakers and an open-floor discussion focusing on racial issues on campus. The focus was on Vassell but also included the commonality of hate crimes and the "negative culture" of Southwest.

"The FBI reported in 2006 that there were over 10,000 hate crimes, 66 percent of which were anti-black hate crimes," said Chris Tinson, the Assistant Resident Director of John Quincy Adams dormitory. "Of those hate crimes, 44 percent have been on campuses; colleges, universities and residences.

"Why at institutions of so-called higher learning are these types of issues unfolding," he asked. "It's unfortunate and uncomfortable, but if we're going to change it, we're going to have to embrace an anti-racist perspective."

He also talked at length about how the "negative culture" of Southwest has only fueled the problem at UMass.

"We seem to think that it's okay when the Red Sox and Patriots play or win that we can just act up," Tinson

See VIGIL on page 2

Historic buildings to find new Amherst home

Gray St. site will house several aged structures

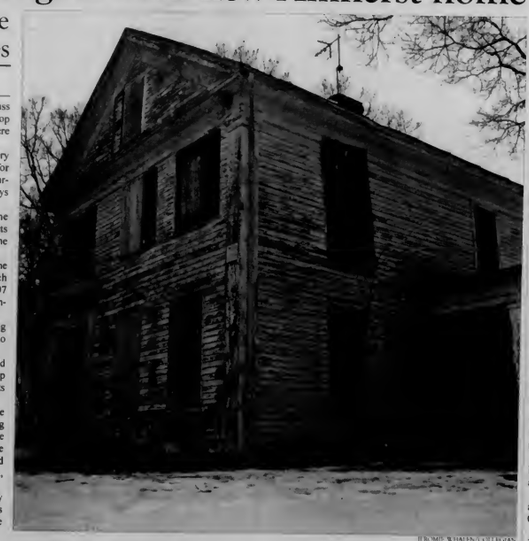
BY KRISTEN HEALY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Two area developers, Jerry Guidera and Russ Wilson, operating as Hills House LLC, plan to develop a cluster of historic homes in Amherst on a three-acre plot of land in the historic Dickinson District.

Guidera, of Amherst, and Wilson, of Shutesbury bought the land from developer Barry Roberts for $1.12 million in January 2008. Roberts originally purchased the land in July 2007 from the Amherst Boys and Girls Club.

"Our main focus for the project was restoring the Henry Hills House, and the other houses and projects were a way to generate enough revenue to complete the Hills House project," Guidera said.

Currently the Gray Street property includes the Henry Hills House and the Chapin-Ward House, which was relocated from Kendrick Park in November 2007 by Roberts for about $75,006. The property also contains four additional buildable lots.



The Town of Amherst is considering using Community Preservation Act (CPA) funds in order to secure two of the empty lots to build a small park.

According to the development plans, this "would secure an open view of the Henry Hills House and keep the Main Street corridor and downtown gateway in its current form."

Amherst's Historical Commission approved a move to the property of two former faculty houses belonging to Amherst College at Monday's meeting. The move would occupy the last two remaining lots. One is the former Tuttle farmhouse at 415 South East St. and the other is the Potvin House located at 23 Spring St., which will be remodeled.

Amherst College plans to hire a moving company in order to move the houses to Guidera's and Wilson's land at no charge to them, according to an article in the Daily Hampshire Gazette.

See HISTORIC HOMES on page 2

BRIAN WHALEN/COLLEGIAN

This Southeast St. structure will soon be relocated to a different part of Amherst via the efforts of two area developers. The former Tuttle farmhouse (pictured) also served as a residence for Amherst College faculty.

Progress with Amherst 250 plan continues

BY CAITLIN QUINN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Progress continues with the Amherst 250 Plan, as the University of Massachusetts looks to significantly bolster its faculty ranks.

The UMass administration is currently conducting searches for 105 new tenure-track faculty members. Of those searches, 27 are ready to make offers to candidates, while candidates for another 45 positions have visits scheduled.

Applicants are still being reviewed for the final 33 positions, according to deputy provost John Cunningham in a press release.

"The 105 searches are spread across the whole University," said Associate Provost for Faculty Recruitment and Retention Andrew Effrat. "About 50 different departments across the University are searching for new faculty."

The search committees are composed of primarily faculty members, but also include graduate students. Graduate student Darren Lone Fight is a member of a committee within the College of Humanities and Fine Arts (CHFA). The committee, which consists of Lone Fight and six professors, is responsible for hiring one new faculty member.

"We're at the end of the process," Lone Fight said. "We're not done but we're nearing the end. We've already brought in all of our candidates and we're at the deliberation stage."

The new faculty members will fill positions of departing faculty as well as new positions allocated to different areas by the Amherst 250 plan, according to Effrat.

Lone Fight's committee is conducting an interdisciplinary search, looking at candidates in every department of the College of Humanities and Fine Arts.

The committee still has some specific goals, however. It is looking for a faculty member to join the Native American

See AMHERST 250 on page 3

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
CXVIII
ISSUE 93

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Nicholas Belanger
Managing Editor Katie Huston
Business Manager Dan Exter
Production Manager Chris Martin
Night Supervisor Meghan Murphy
Advertising Manager Alex Bender
Advertising Production Katherine Shea
Arts & Living Editor Tim McCall
Arts & Living Editor Ryan McAskill
Copies Editor Adam Staggin
Editorial Editor S.P. Sullivan
News Editor Derrick Perkins
Sports Editor Jeremy Rice
Features Editor Dave Humphreys
Photo Editor Michael Phillis
Web Editor James Hale
Asst. Business Manager Eric Szymczak
Assistant Advertising Marsea Whooten
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Asst. Arts & Living Stephanie McPherson
Asst. Arts & Living Skye McIntyre
Asst. Editorial James Mathews
Asst. Editorial Melissa Garber
Assistant News Michael King
Assistant News Kate Olesin
Assistant News Holly Seabury
Assistant Sports Mike Connors
Assistant Sports Joe Meloni
Assistant Sports Eli Rosenswaike
Assistant Photo Brian Tedder
Arts Web Editor Michelle Abbasciano
Editorial Web Editor Leif Walcutt
News Web Editor Nick Bush
Sports Web Editor Steve Games

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts Calendar. Semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the The Weekly Collegian in 1936. Published daily since 1967, the Collegian has been published since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call 545-3500 between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Nicholas Belanger

COPY EDITOR
Amber Vaillancourt

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Michael Sakes

Senators announce presidential bids

SGA representatives discuss plans for upcoming elections

By Mike Fox
Collegian Staff

Two groups of candidates announced their intentions to run for President and Trustee of campus at last night's Student Government Association meeting.

Malcolm Chu, the Secretary of Diversity, and the Secretary of External Affairs, Lindsay McCluskey, announced they were running for SGA President and Student Trustee, respectively.

When asked why he wanted to run, Chu said, "I have served for a long time as an organizer on campus. I have been working closely with the SGA and I want to continue serving in such a capacity. I have a vested interest in organizing in any way committee to diversity and affordability on campus. I would like to be able to use this to create and enable more leaders on campus and to hopefully turn the SGA into a hub of student organizing."

Answering the same question, McCluskey stated, "With my job, I have served as a student organizer on the issues of affordability and accessibility. There needs to be a strong voice for students on this campus. I will build upon and enhance the network that I have been involved in with my job. I will also continue to be an organizer whether I win or lose the election, but it would be easier as Student Trustee."

Later in the night, Senators Derek Khanna and Libby Protzman also announced their intentions to run for SGA President and Student Trustee.

"This is a decisive moment in our college careers," Khanna said. "We can choose whether to continue with the status quo on campus, or to choose something new. We've had the same type of candidates but fees have kept increasing. It is time for more funds to be freed up and more accountability for RSOs and student elected officials. Having worked in state politics, I have the state government contacts that will help us work through or even above the administration."

On her intentions to run, Protzman said, "Having been involved with many RSOs on campus, commuter senate, and the ALANA and student bridges program; I feel that I represent the average student on campus and because of this, I can effectively represent issues that have been largely ignored by student leadership in addition to the issues brought forth by the strike. As a student who pays for her own education, I feel that it is important to make a change on our campus."

Soon after their announcement, Chu and McCluskey were endorsed by Speaker Carla Dominguez and the ALANA caucus. Speaking as the Interior Chair of the ALANA caucus, Senator Sean Robinson stated, "After hearing the senator's (Khanna) introductory comments prior to his installment in the SGA, the membership of the ALANA caucus would be mad to support him. His rhetoric is arbitrary and contradictory to the motivations and objectives of the caucus. On a more affirmative note, Secretaries Chu and McCluskey are the ideal candidates for the caucus to put efforts behind. Both of them have showed a profound commitment to diversity and the development of the ALANA caucus."

In response to the caucus's endorsement, Senator Khanna said, "I hardly believe that being a member of the caucus should be a prerequisite of representing minorities. As a second generation Indian-American, a smaller minority than African-Americans or Latinos, I would look forward to working together with these groups as President. I have attempted to join the ALANA caucus in the past, but have never received a response."

The other candidates for SGA President are Peter Kuusisto and Devin Ashe. The other Trustee candidate is Augusta Mfuko.

Mike Fox can be reached at mgfox@student.umass.edu.

Developers find new sites for buildings

HISTORIC HOMES from page 1

"Our plan is to restore these two buildings to their historic glory," said Guidera.

After the move, Amherst College has plans to transform the property on South East Street to a recreation site of open space. The Lord Jeffrey Inn hopes to expand onto the Spring Street property.

Renovations have already begun on both the Chapin-Ward House and the Henry Hills House. The Henry Hills House, built in 1865, is being offered at $850,000 plus the cost of repairs at closing which are estimated to be $300,000. The Chapin-Ward House, built in 1904, is selling for $450,000 plus an estimated $200,000 in repairs.

The two houses being transported from Amherst College will both require a great deal of renovations and plan to sell for at least $600,000, according to Guidera.

Guidera hopes that the houses from Amherst College will be moved sometime within the next month and will take approximately a year to renovate.

Currently Guidera is the operations director at the Center for Cross-Cultural Study in Amherst and Wilson is a builder and renovator. The two have taken out a two-year commercial loan to finance this project.

Kristen Healy can be reached at kkhealy@student.umass.edu

JEROMIE WHALEN/COLLEGIAN

Two area developers recently finalized agreements with the Town of Amherst and Amherst College to move several historic buildings to a new site in town. The Lord Jeffery Inn hopes to expand onto this Spring Street property.

JEROMIE WHALEN/COLLEGIAN

A discussion of campus hate crimes and racial issues preceded a vigil to support former UMass student Jason Vassell. SGA President Aaron Buford (pictured) participated in the talk at the Malcolm X Cultural Center yesterday evening.

Vigil shows support for former student said. "We're all going to have to be foot soldiers in the army against racism."

VIGIL from page 1

During the open discussion, talk centered on how incidences involving race are difficult for people to openly discuss and how these situations tend to get dismissed.

"I think this is a very clear sign that racism does exist and that oppression has continued to play out with hate crimes on our own campus, and it's really time to address it," Malcolm Chu, SGA Secretary of Diversity said. "The only way to address this is for the university and everyone else to be accountable and build relationships, dialogue and communication to challenge racism and the violence that comes with it."

The issue at the forefront last night involved the result of the Feb. 3 incident, which sent three men to the hospital with injuries and ultimately two in handcuffs.

At approximately 5 a.m., that morning, John Bowes, 20, and Jonathan Bosse, 19, allegedly kicked in Vassell's dorm window, while yelling racial epitaphs at Vassell. Bowes and Bosse then gained access into the dormitory when Vassell tried to open the main door for a friend. A fight ensued, leaving Vassell with a broken nose and the two other men with stab wounds.

Vassell was arrested approximately nine hours later and charged with two counts of assault with intent to murder and two counts of aggravated assault and battery with a deadly weapon. Bowes was later charged with two hate crimes and disorderly conduct. Bosse has not been charged.

Tracy Kelley, the Executive Secretary of the Committee for Justice for Jason Vassell, called for Vassell's charges to be reduced during a speech inside the Malcolm X Cultural Center before the vigil.

"His human rights were completely violated," she said. "Why do we always want to look at how it ended instead of how it was able to occur in the first place."

There will be a rally held on March 12 at the steps of the Student Union from 12-1 p.m., further discussing the issue two days before Vassell's pre-trial hearing.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosenw@student.umass.edu.

Take Out a classifieds ad
THE DAILY COLLEGIAN
now offers free online classifieds for students at
WWW.UMASSLIST.COM
• More complete, local and relevant category listings than any and all competitor web sites combined
• Users can setup daily e-mail updates for relevant listings. No more searching for apartments, now they come to you.
• Post unlimited online listings
• Little to no spam
By listing on this site you are supporting your local college newspaper, The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

FOUR Seasons
WINE • LIQUOR • CIGARS
WE HAVE ICE LUGES!!!
CIGAR SALE!!!
NOW CARRYING PIPES!!! & PIPE TOBACCO & SUPPLIES!!!
Hennessy Cognac X.O. 750 ml. $122.99
Grand Marnier 100yr Centenaire 750 ml. $109.99
Crown Royal Cask 16 Whiskey 750 ml. $94.99
Glenmorangie Burgundy Wood Finish 750 ml. $49.99
Jose Cuervo Platino Tequila 750 ml. $49.99
Glenmorangie Madiera Wood Finish 750 ml. $49.99
Ardbeg 10yr Islay Single Malt Scotch 750 ml. $47.99
Bailey's Original Irish Cream 1.75 liter $35.99
Tanqueray Gin 1.75 liter $33.99
Hennessy Cognac V.S.O.P. 750 ml. $44.99
Grand Marnier Cordon Rouge 750 ml. $33.99
Hennessy Cognac V.S. 750 ml. $28.99
Belvedere Pure Vodka 750 ml. $27.99
10 Cane Rum 750 ml. $26.99
Chopin Polish Vodka 750 ml. $27.99
Bailey's Flavored Irish Cream* 750 ml. $20.99
*Mint Chocolate and Caramel
Jose Cuervo Flavored Tequila* 1.0 liter $20.99
*Citrico, Tropino, Oranjo
Smirnoff Vodka 80° 1.75 liter $19.99
Jose Cuervo Gold 750 ml. $18.99
Myer's Platinum Rum 1.75 liter $18.99
Captain Morgan Parrot Bay Rum* 1.0 liter $17.99
*Including Coconut, Mango, Pineapple, Passion Fruit
Captain Morgan Spiced Rum 750 ml. $14.99
Smirnoff Twist Flavored Vodka* 750 ml. $11.99
*Including Strawberry, Watermelon, Raspberry, Black Cherry
WINE 10% OFF 6 BOTTLES* OF WINE EVERYDAY MIX & MATCH
Sale 2-28 - 3-13
333 Russell St., Rte. 9, Hadley, MA
584-8174 • Mon.-Sat. 9AM-11PM • Sun. Noon-11PM

Alumni react to violent acts

By Adam Coulter
Collegian Correspondent

The month of February has resulted in a concentrated string of violent crimes at the University of Massachusetts with questions being raised whether this kind of behavior can be prevented.

In a span of three weeks there have been four major incidents on or near campus, including two separate stabbings and an alleged attempted rape and attempted murder.

"My first reaction to hearing of this is, wow, people don't just fist fight anymore", said 2005 UMass graduate Steve Brandano. "When I was a student, I wasn't worried about getting stabbed."

Although many interpret the increase of violent activity on campus as unusual, there are some who believe that the recent rash of violence is nothing that hasn't occurred here before.

"These kind of things happened when I was there, they just weren't reported as much," said Paul Agranat, UMass class of 1984.

The rapid succession of these acts happening so close to one another seems to be one of the catalysts for the unusual amount of attention on this subject.

"It's scary, but I'm glad the school is being aggressive with disciplining these people; there's no place for this kind of violence in a University," Agranat added.

Regardless of quick investigations and the University reporting on the incidents, parents are still concerned. Kenny Gomberg, who has a son that's enrolled as a junior at UMass said, "I'm quite alarmed to hear this, although as a parent you're always worried, no matter where your kids are."

The violence here has also made parents of high school students a little fearful when it comes time to think about college.

"I have a sophomore in high school, and this makes me think twice", said Julie Agranat, a 1984 UMass graduate. "This is very disconcerting, they're such serious issues," she said referring to the attacks.

There is also much talk on why this is going on here and how can the University help to prevent this kind of behavior. Southwest residential area, which was the scene of two of the incidents, seems to receive the bulk of the discussion. The majority of the floors are co-ed structured.

"I believe a cause of the trouble could be that men and women are living together, sharing a floor," Agranat said.

The violence here continues to be addressed, with student groups such as The Student Government Association holding forums on campus safety, and the Interim Chancellor Thomas Cole sending out an e-mail in February that called on students to help make the community safe.

"Students must take responsibility," said Agranat.

Adam Coulter can be reached at apcoulte@student.umass.edu.

LAX players no longer enrolled

The three members of the men's lacrosse team who were arrested earlier this month for their alleged role in an off-campus incident are no longer enrolled at the University of Massachusetts.

Associate athletic director for media relations Jason Yellin confirmed that Christian Haggerty, Ryan Marcus and Christopher Casey are no longer students at UMass.

The three individuals were arrested for allegedly participating in a beating at 304 North Pleasant St. on Feb. 1.

Coach Greg Canella suspended five other players for involvement in an off-campus incident, but their status remains unchanged as the student athletes continue to serve their indefinite suspensions.

Though the 2008 season has already begun for UMass, the possibility remains for the five players to rejoin the team.

UMass officials are restricted by federal law the information they can release about students. Spokesperson Patrick Callahan said that the University is not permitted to reveal if a student has been charged in violation of the UMass Code of Student Conduct. The University can only confirm or deny if a student is still enrolled at UMass.

The Dean of Students office has the prerogative to expel students based on charges of violation of the student conduct, even before criminal charges are prosecuted in a court of law.

Amherst Police also confirmed that the investigation of the incident is ongoing and that no other individuals have been arrested in connection with the beating.

Staff report

Student assaulted off-campus

In the latest incident in the recent chain of violence that's plagued the area, a University of Massachusetts student was assaulted early Sunday morning on Shumway Street, near Amherst College, sustaining serious facial injuries.

Police say the victim, a 22-year-old-man, reported the crime at 9:18 p.m. Sunday. He suffered broken bones in his facial region, including damage to his eye socket and sinus cavity. He was treated at Cooley Dickinson Hospital in Northampton before seeing eye and sinus specialists in Boston and Connecticut, respectively.

According to Lt. Ron Young, the head of the police detective bureau, the injuries appeared to have been inflicted solely by fists and knees, without any other weapons. Young also stated that the 22-year-old was the only one injured in the fight.

Frank Vitale

University bolsters faculty numbers

AMHERST 250 from page 1

Studies certificate program.

"[The CHFA is] mainly hoping to widen the scope of courses offered," said Lone Fight. The certificate program would require more faculty and course offerings to become a major in the future.

"The [Native American Studies] certificate operates within the five-college system. So if a professor at Smith retires, it affects the UMass program. There's a gap that needs to be filled, but you hope the candidate will also build the program," added Lone Fight.

The search committees will be looking for applicants who display strength in their resumes and submitted statements in the areas of "teaching ability, research ability, and service." said Effrat. "The 105 [new faculty members] will be all tenured faculty, not just lecturers."

Lone Fight also said that he looks for service to the university.

"We are looking for willingness to participate in department programs," Lone Fight added. "We also look for scholarship and teaching ability."

The applicants are mostly individuals who have recently completed the highest degree in their field, according to Effrat, and will be filling junior faculty positions.

The Amherst 250 plan, introduced in 2005, will increase the size of the UMass faculty by 250, in order to improve the teaching and research performance of the University.

The general goal of the Amherst 250 plan is "adding on tenured faculty to bring the University back to the strength we once had," said Effrat.

Caitlin Quinn can be reached at cquinn@student.umass.edu.

Phamton rings plague BU students

By Borana Greku
The Daily Free Press

(U-WIRE) BOSTON - Boston University freshman Sarah Kamaras said once she misses a phone call, she begins to think her cellphone is vibrating throughout the day and she continually takes it out and checks it. Kamaras, a College of Communication student, does not suffer from this modern-day malady alone.

The term "ringxiety," coined by California School of Professional Psychology doctoral student David Laramie, is what happens when people think they hear their cellphones ring or vibrate when they are not.

"I think people acquire ringxiety because they're always waiting for a response to a call or text, and check incessantly to see if they received it," Kamaras said.

College of Arts and Sciences psychology professor Aaron Seitz said in an e-mail that ringxiety appears to be a "specific example of a fairly common phenomenon."

"It is very common for people to hear or see things that they expect even when they are not there," Seitz said. "Misreading signs, mishearing words and even more sophisticated misperceptions are things that most people can relate to."

COM freshman Haley Stoessl said she hears her phone ring when it does not, but is more likely to think it is ringing in a crowded area where there are many different noises than when she is by herself.

"In cases of ambiguity, our expectations shape what we hear," Seitz said. "Even simple cloud gazing speaks to our ability to see things that are not defined to be there."

"While it might be trendy to associate [ringxiety] with a particular device, it is more likely that it is a particular instance of an obsessive-anxious condition that can also manifest in other ways and with other expectation-based misperceptions," Seitz said.

Seitz said this phenomenon occurs most with students because they use their cellphones more than any other demographic.

Students have recently complained of "ringxiety," a term used to describe people who mistakenly hear their cell phones ring.

New tax for big oil companies

By H. Josef Hebert
Associated Press

The House approved $18 billion in new taxes on the largest oil companies Wednesday as Democrats cited record oil prices and rising gasoline costs in a time of economic troubles.

The money collected over 10 years would provide tax breaks for wind, solar and other alternative energy sources and for energy conservation. The legislation, approved 236-182, would cost the five largest oil companies an average of $1.8 billion a year over that period, according an analysis by the House Ways and Means Committee. Those companies earned $123 billion last year.

Senate Democratic leaders said they would put the bill on a fast track and try to avoid a Republican filibuster. The White House said the bill unfairly takes aim at the oil industry. President Bush is expected to veto the legislation if it passes Congress.

House Majority Leader Steny Hoyer, D-Md., noted it was two years ago, when oil cost $55 a barrel, when Bush said oil companies need no government subsidies to pursue more oil or gas.

"With the price of oil hovering around $100 do we really believe this incentive is justified?" asked Hoyer. "Do these companies need taxpayer subsidies to look for new product? They don't need any incentive."

Republicans said the measure unfairly targeted a single industry.

"It punishes the oil and gas industry. This is wrong-headed. It will result in higher prices at the gasoline pump. It's spiteful and wrong," said Rep. Jim McCrery, R-La.

The top Republican on the Ways and Means Committee, which developed the tax proposals, he cited statistics that show that oil companies already pay more taxes than many other industries.

Hoyer acknowledged "this legislation alone will not bring down gas prices." But he said the measure will provide a needed boost to alternative energy industries — solar, wind, biofuels, and geothermal — and help promote energy conservation. "That may bring down gas prices three years from now, 10 years from now," he said.

The bill would roll back two lucrative tax breaks for the five largest U.S. oil companies. One helps manufacturers compete against foreign companies; the other gives American companies a tax credit related to oil and gas extraction outside the country. Democrats estimated that those current breaks would save the oil companies $17.65 billion in taxes over the next 10 years.

The House-passed bill would use that money to promote renewable energy industries — such as wind, solar and cellulosic ethanol plants — by extending tax credits that recently expired or are scheduled to end at year's end.

The bill would offer tax credits for more energy efficient homes and a credit for "plug-in" gas-electric hybrid cars that would capture electricity off the power grid, once such cars become available in showrooms.

House Speaker Nancy Pelosi, D-Calif., said the shift of tax benefits from oil to alternative energy development was critical to increased energy independence and lowering energy costs. "We have the opportunity to invest in clean, renewable energy and energy efficiency," she said.

She noted the House twice last year passed similar tax plans, but they died in the Senate. Since then, the price of gasoline has climbed and large oil companies have made record profits, Pelosi said.

During debate, Rep Jim McDermott, D-Wash., urged lawmakers to "stop the madness of subsidizing oil companies" when the industry earned $123 billion last year.

The oil industry has lobbied intensely against the House tax legislation, calling it a "discriminatory bill" that targets companies that already pay considerable taxes. "New taxes ... will even further reduce our energy security by discouraging new domestic oil and natural gas production and refinery capacity expansions," the American Petroleum Institute said in a statement.

The House narrowly approved new taxes for the largest oil companies, which earned an estimated $18 billion in 2006. House Democrats spearheaded the legislation, while Republicans argued that it unfairly targets one industry.

YES COMPUTERS
Apple Specialist
Your local Apple-authorized sales and service center.
Conveniently located in downtown Northampton.
A Big Deal for a Little Laptop
The ASUS Eee PC
Present this coupon for $50 OFF Any Asus Eee PC expires 3/07/08
• Ultraportable: 7 inches and 2 pounds.
• Over 40 built-in programs, including a full office suite.
• Rugged, shock-resistant design.
• Simple, intuitive, Linux-based operating system.
• Built-in wireless Internet.
$395!
Yes Computers | 38 Pleasant St | 413-585-0007

SKYPLEX
18 Plus College Night
Thursdays
The #1 Place to Party!
3 Different Rooms/3 DJ's spinning the best in Top 40 Dance, House and Select Mashup
THE ULTIMATE HOT BODY CONTEST
$100 Best Male $100 Best Female
The Hottest 19 Plus SATURDAY NIGHT Dance Party
NOW HIRING!
Bartenders Barback
Cashiers Waitstaff
Security Staff
SATURDAYS
SKYPLEX
SkyPlex 10 Stearns Sq Downtown Springfield 413 827 9000 www.SkyPlex.us

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 28, 2008

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
- Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Clear our name

An uncomfortably large influx of violent events recently has cast the University of Massachusetts Amherst as a violent campus. The lacrosse scandal, the eight arrests after the Super Bowl, an alleged hate crime and numerous other violent acts have put the negative spotlight on our community. Likewise, yesterday's alleged threat scrawled on a bathroom wall in Bartlett has students, their parents and family members concerned for our safety.

Numerous stories have run in The Collegian, The Daily Hampshire Gazette, The Boston Globe and other publications, furthering the outside community's opinion that ours is a violent school.

This is not the case.

There is no clear-cut connection between any of these occurrences; they are anomalous, albeit they have occurred a little too close together for comfort.

The administration, although less than forthright initially after several instances of violence, has done its best to provide damage control, and to ensure students are kept safe, evidenced by the immediate closing of Bartlett Hall upon discovery of the threat.

There has been a forum discussion and rally to raise awareness of the alleged hate crime, and The Daily Collegian applauds these efforts. But racially motivated violence is not the only kind that ought to be condemned publicly by large groups of the student body; any violence, regardless of motivation, is unacceptable.

The University of Massachusetts has never quite been able to shake its reputation of being the nation's most violent large university ever since the 2005 ABC Primetime report that billed it as such. Alumni have written letters to the Boston Globe and comments on The Collegian's website condemning these acts, and the current student body ought to as well.

Racially motivated crimes spark discussions of how we can learn to coexist on campus, but it is not just racial tension that motivates these crimes. Racially motivated violence is abhorrent, but so is senseless, drunken and any other sort of adjective-prefixed violence.

There are only two possible remedies to the sudden upsurge in violent activity. The first is an increased police presence on campus and, judging from the demands of the numerous rallies of the United Student Action Coalition and the general climate of student opinion, that is definitely not the answer.

The second option – the more difficult, but more important one – is a realization on part of the student body that violent acts affect everyone: the victims of these crimes, their families and the rest of the student population. The quality of our livings spaces, our college experience and the outside opinion of our campus are all dependent upon a cease to all of this senseless violence.

The USAC's efforts this semester and last have proven that large groups of students on campus can organize for a greater good. It won't take a rally, however, to quell violence on campus; just a little mutual respect.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian editorial board.

Underlying causality

C.A. Chase

It is pointless to talk about hate crimes and violence without going beyond the surface.

It would be easy to name-check the obligatory parts of a typical altercation and the aftermath. But by doing the standard dissection, by hitting the race-diversity-violence talking points, the underlying problem of power is ignored.

What to do, what to do?

What to do about the Jason Vassell case, where on February 3rd a racially charged dispute escalated into a physical altercation?

Vassell was reportedly harassed by two individuals and called racial slurs. Feeling threatened after they came to his dorm room, an altercation occurred and Vassell stabbed the two individuals. He is currently being charged with aggravated assault and battery with a dangerous weapon.

The issue isn't of race; it's of the structure of power that props up the issue of race.

A rally was held yesterday in his support; many members of the campus community believe Vassell was acting in self-defense, and is the victim of a hate crime. What to do?

The answer, sadly, lies in the textbook, as there is no "Department of Justice" at UMass. If you get into the upper echelons of anthropology, then you'll hit "structural anthropology," which is Claude Levi-Strauss' theory that culture is shaped by binary distinctions that clash, meld, and dominate each other (man over woman, black over white, etc.).

Distinctions are created in life, and one half of the binary distinction is held over another. In setting one superior to the other (if you want to be cool and postmodern, throw "the other" and Foucault around a lot – you pick up a lot of hip, hip ladies), you give the dominant element power over the submissive element.

Professors are dominant over students. The rich are dominant over the poor. Men are dominant over women. When people attack the problems that stem from having these hierarchies, they don't attack the concept of distinctions. Without casting someone or something as different, you cannot hold it as inferior to you.

When you address the problems that come from these hierarchies (racism is bad, sexism is bad, et al) and not the distinctions themselves, the problems come back, albeit in different forms.

The issue isn't of race; it's of the structure of power that props up the issue of race.

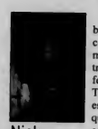
In any relationship, romantic or platonic, someone usually is the dominant partner. Someone has to decide whether you're going to eat at Antonio's or at Bueno y Sano. Extend this concept from personal relationships to relations between the individual as an actor with the state and state-sponsored/co-opted society, and you allow yourself to link your personal conception of yourself to where you fit into your worldview.

So how do you form an opinion about events such as the arrest of Jason Vassell from this framework?

Presently, people are dealing with issues such as this by casting it in surface terms of diversity and not in the broader context of power hierarcies.

By not discussing Jason Vassell's case in those terms, you don't deal with the issues of race that frame what is and what should be: the ideas that make up our lives. Instead, you slap a band-aid on a problem that will erupt again.

By having talking points about diversity instead of examining what casting someone as the "other," something different, then the discussion is transformed into something beneath denigration. Discussion is not a threat to entrenched social ills, it upholds them.



Without creation of context, there is no chance of social locution or political locution, of understanding the power relations and hierarchies that frame how we live, how we think, and how we die.

Without this context, this causality of race and lack of focused discourse, no road is taken, no destination is ever reached. Despite any pretensions to understanding, we are a wind-up clockwork orange; wandering from event to event without explication, without agency and without ends. There is no progress without more powerful dialogues.

C.A. Chase is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at cchase@student.umass.edu.

Addicted to incarceration

Nick Milano

You could hear them before they turned the corner. The clang of metal on metal. The trudging of dozens of feet down the corridor. The urging of two voices to make them move quicker. Then the prisoners in bright orange jumpsuits barged through the door and into the hallway.

I was sitting outside a Cambridge court with a group of fellow students waiting for the court to resume its daily docket. This was a special court, though – a drug court designated to finding alternatives to jail for drug abusers guilty of non-violent offenses.

The U.S. prison system rivals that of any in the world in terms of persons jailed. The statistics are just frightening. More people, over 2.3 million, are incarcerated in the United States than any other country in the world. Even the communist government of China imprisons fewer people than the democratically elected United States government – not to mention that China has over a billion people.

According to King's College's International Centre for Prison Studies, the United States even incarcerates people at a higher rate than Putin's regime in Russia and the totalitarian dictatorship in Cuba.

And the statistics keep coming. According to last week's Newsweek magazine, "Between 2000 and 2006, the number of drug offenders in federal prison jumped 26 percent to 93,751." The story is much of the same in both state and local jails. This increase of people imprisoned for drug offenses ties nicely together with what the progressive think tank Political Research Associates calls a "six-fold increase in incarceration over the past three decades" to demonstrate that the United States penitentiary system is in dire need of repair.

At least the first steps were taken in December when the Supreme Court reiterated that federal judges need not be tied down by sentencing guidelines for crack cocaine. NPR wrote that harsher penalties for people prosecuted for crack cocaine offenses usually spend 50 percent more time in jail than those in jail for powder cocaine.

Sadly, these changes are coming more than 20 years after they were written when it was believed that crack cocaine was more dangerous than powder cocaine. It should not take another 20 years for the American gulag to be a part of history.

It used to be the accepted norm that addiction was the sign of weak morals. But last week's edition of Newsweek reports how the science of addiction is beginning to be understood. It is becoming more and more apparent that being trapped in the haze of addiction by narcotics and alcohol is not the user's choice.

It is not healthy for a democratic society to put so many of its citizens behind bars.

Newsweek's cover story details how geneticists have already discovered genes that predispose certain people to addiction, perhaps a better explanation for why only one in 10 people who try an addictive drug actually develop dependence to it.

Since 1956, the American Medical Association has labeled addiction a disease, not merely a conscious decision. Sure lifestyle factors play a role that cannot be ignored, but as Newsweek asks, lifestyle decisions can cause diabetes, but does this mean that one keeps that person from receiving insulin? The director of the National Institute on Drug Abuse told Newsweek that, "The future is clear. In 10 years we will be treating addiction as a disease, and that means with medicine."

If the science community is widely acknowledging that addiction is a disease, but expecting different results; drug courts have a record of actually rehabilitating those who walk through their doors.

I am a witness. Those men in the orange jumpsuits were about to welcomed into a treatment program instead of going to jail. Prior to this, my colleagues and I saw the happy faces of men and women on probation addressing their drug problems. The judge rewarded those who took the program serious with praise and applause from the courtroom audience.

Those who were struggling were threatened with the prospect of jail Addiction is not a choice. It is a disease. The too few drug courts recognize this; it is time the entire American courts system responded accordingly.

Nick Milano writes on Thursdays. He can be reached at nmilano@student.umass.edu.

COLLEGIAN EDITORIALS:

Check out our forums at dailycollegian.com!

SHARPER THAN MITT ROMNEY'S JAW

editorial@dailycollegian.com

Clinton employs GOP-inspired smear tactics

Democratic primary voters in Ohio, Texas and Pennsylvania should take notice: Hillary Clinton intends to drag the party through the mud in order to regain the upper hand in her quickly fading bid to become its nominee for President.

Scott Harris

It started moments after the polls closed on February 19, and the news channels projected Obama as the winner in Wisconsin and Hawaii. Clinton took to a stage in Youngstown, Ohio essentially parroting the talking points of GOP favorite John McCain.

The United States needs to elect a President who is capable of being "commander-in-chief in a dangerous world," Clinton said. The Democratic Party needed to nominate a candidate whose support was based on "results, not speeches."

Earlier in the night, McCain accused Obama of tricking the American people with an "eloquent, but empty call for change." The two speeches were so similar in the first five minutes that I literally did a double-take to make sure I was listening to a candidate for the Democratic nomination, and not John McCain's wife.

Later in the night, political news Web sites began to report about the controversial speaker who introduced Hillary Clinton at her Youngstown, Ohio rally following the primary results. Tom Buffenbarger, President of the International Association of Machinists, told a cheering crowd of Hillary supporters that he had "news for all the latte-drinking, Prius-driving, Birkenstock-wearing, trust fund babies crowding in to hear him speak ... This guy won't last a round against the Republican attack machine. He's a poet, not a fighter."

These lines closely mirrored a 2004 Club for Growth PAC, a far right-wing group, ad criticizing Howard Dean. "I think Howard Dean should take his tax-hiking, government-expanding, latte-drinking, sushi-eating, Volvo-driving, New York Times-reading...," the ad said.

This was also similar to an introduction given by Bill Cunningham, a conservative radio host, at a McCain rally recently where he repeatedly invoked Obama's middle name, Hussein, and called him a "hack, Chicago-style politician."

Considering the amount of press time the Clinton campaign tried to get dedicated to the so-called "plagiarism" scandal, this rip-off is particularly amusing but also confusing.

News also broke shortly after the primary that wealthy Clinton supporters in Texas and Ohio were planning on forming a tax-exempt 527 group purposed with criticizing Obama's credentials.

The American Leadership Project will be seeking pledges of $100,000 from donors in order to raise $10 million in order to deluge the two crucial primary states with negative ads which will no doubt reinforce Republican talking points about Obama as Clinton's post-Wisconsin speech did.

This type of political advertising, which is designed to avoid federal regulations and resulted in groups like the Swift Boat Veterans for Truth, is tricky and is likely to get smacked with several fines from the Federal Election Commission – but after the damage has been done to Obama and the Democratic Party, if he becomes the nominee.

Clinton has resorted to mocking Obama and his supporters.

Barack Obama and John Edwards, in December 2006, denounced any 527 activity on their behalf.

Clinton has also resorted to mocking Obama and his supporters. At a Monday rally in Ohio, Clinton derided Obama's approach to politics, saying that he believes "The sky will open, the light will come down celestial choirs will be singing, and everyone will know that we should do the right thing and the world will be perfect."

Mark Penn, Clinton's pollster, has toured Sunday morning talk shows, to label states that Obama has won over the course of this campaign as irrelevant. First, he said, Obama's victories didn't matter because caucus states favor upper income voters (Iowa). Then, he said, Obama's victories didn't matter because they were in states that Democrats don't normally factor into the electoral equation (South Carolina).

Then, he said, Obama's victories didn't matter because because he wasn't winning traditional Democratic constituencies (Super Tuesday).

You get the picture.

These events are not isolated slip-ups. Reinforcing Republican talking points and importing Rove-style campaign tactics into the Democratic presidential primary race is the track that the Clinton campaign is headed down, hoping to rebound in the race.

Polls are increasingly undermining the hope of a Clinton resurgence. Clinton held a 13-point lead in Ohio on Feb. 20, according to SurveyUSA. She now only leads by two. Clinton held a 19-point lead in Texas on Feb. 19, according to Rasmussen Reports.

Every poll released in the last 72 hours shows Obama leading by an average of 3-5 points. Even in Pennsylvania, the only state where Clinton is outspending Obama, her lead has slipped from 22 points (Feb. 15) to 5 points (Feb. 27), according to Gallup.

Furthermore, virtually every poll shows Obama outperforming Clinton against McCain in a general election match-up. This is especially relevant in swing states, where polls show Obama besting McCain everywhere while McCain bests Clinton everywhere.

Of course, those leads will not hold up if Clinton decides to go nuclear on Barack Obama. If the last 10 days serve as a precursor to what we will see in the days leading up to the March 4 primaries, that is exactly what it appears she is ready to do. Clinton is writing speeches for the Republican Party.

Scott Harris is a UMass student.

Putting things in perspective

Brad Leibowitz

The date today is February 28, 2008, which means this is the 59th day of the Gregorian Calendar and we have another 307 days left in this, the eighth year of the new millennium (307 because 2008 is a leap year). Furthermore, for those out there so inclined to follow the Old Count Calendar of the Ancient Mayans, we have exactly 1,756 days left until December 21, 2012 – the date the Ancient Mayans predicted as Doomsday.

Author Douglas Adams once said, "In the beginning the Universe was created. This has made a lot of people very angry and has been widely regarded as a bad move."

To further understand the significance of the first paragraph, there is a theory which states that if ever anybody actually discovers what the Universe is for and why it is here, it will instantly disappear and be replaced by something even more bizarre and inexplicable. There is another theory which states that this has already happened.

all those issues, as important and seemingly pressing as they are, they mean nothing in the grand scale of you and how you relate to everything.

Throughout all ages of time, there have always been people who followed and believed that they were living in the end times. I am not one of them, but I am becoming more and more worried as the days pass. Take a second to put the paper down. Just look around. Take it in. Maybe you are in class ignoring a lecture, maybe you are eating by your lonesome and you thought you would pass the time by reading this fine piece of journalism which calls itself a newspaper.

Maybe you are in the bathroom; whatever the case, take a second to simply take it in.

Do yourself a favor and look around. Take in the faces of the people around you; take in the sounds which those faces are making. Take your time and smell the air. Simply observe everything happening around you. Take a time to read this, study each letter, absorb each word. I am sure that somewhere else on this page, there is a column speaking to more respected issues in current culture.

I am sure you have just read something about why Obama is going to win, or why the UMass lacrosse players who assaulted those three kids deserve to be charged with attempted manslaughter as opposed to assault and battery. I am sure you have just read something which requires you to have a greater understanding of the world at large to comprehend or relate to its meaning.

However, I say to you, all those issues, as important and seemingly pressing as they are, they mean nothing in the grand scale of you and how you relate to everything. Think to yourself, "when is the last time that I just sat here and daydreamed?"

Do you even know? It seems silly and frivolous, but ask yourself that question. You might be thinking to yourself, "is this kid serious?" Yes, I am. I say to you now, wherever you are, take a few moments today and every day here there after to sit down and daydream. Look at the world around you, this world which is seemingly crumbling while our leaders look on yet do nothing, to think about how great it used to be and to dream of how great it will be.

Think of all the issues which annoy you. Racism, poverty, global warming, war, etc – Ask yourself, how did we get here?

Stop and daydream. Think of all the ideas you have heard which inspires you. Daydream about all the thoughts which make you smile, which make you think of that safe little place you had while growing up.

Think of Louis Armstrong's "What a Wonderful World." Simply, daydream about a better tomorrow. You might think it silly and inane, but trust me, if you can't daydream; you have then lost the ability to dream. If you have lost the ability to dream, all your childhood inspirations, which were motivated by pure joy, have become lost to you. If you can't daydream about a better day, not only is your future lost, but so is your past.

Our world is in a state of turmoil, but it's not too off the deep end that it can't be fixed. Daydream to find the path of fixing it. You might think it childish, but some of the best thoughts and purest ideas come from the minds of untainted youth.

Finally, as Adams wanted, imagine a puddle waking up one morning and thinking, "This is an interesting world I find myself in, an interesting hole I find myself in, fits me rather neatly, doesn't it? In fact it fits me staggeringly well, must have been made to have me in it!"

This is such a powerful idea that as the sun rises in the sky and the air heats up and as, gradually, the puddle gets smaller and smaller, it's still frantically hanging on to the notion that everything's going to be alright, because this world was meant to have him in it, was built to have him in it; so the moment he disappears catches him rather by surprise. I think this may be something we need to be on the watch out for.

Brad Leibowitz writes on Thursdays. He can be reached at bleibow@student.umass.edu.

Do you see this cartoon?

It's poorly drawn, a little desperate-looking and not even that funny.

We both know you can do better.

Send editorial cartoons to editorial@dailycollegian.com or drop them off in the Ed/Op mailbox at the Collegian office in the Campus Center basement.

IN RESPONSE TO THE RSU'S REFUSAL TO REMOVE A POSTER DEEMED "pornographic" STUDENT AFFAIRS HAS PUT UP ONE UNASS STUDENTS will FIND OFFENSIVE.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Editorial@DailyCollegian.com

THE GREAT POSTER DEBATE

Dear editor:

Real men protect children.

It really is that simple, real men (and women) protect children. It is what it means to be an adult.

There is no shortage of creeps and perverts out there. There are those who wish to do inappropriate things with little girls and there are the NAMBLA folks who wish to do the same with little boys. Decent people of any sexual orientation believe in protecting children and thus all decent people must condemn displaying erect penises in the faces of small children.

The hallways of the Student Union Building are the most public of public space. The First Amendment permits content-neutral restrictions on the time, place and manner of speech. If the gay students have the right to display homoerotica, then straight students must have an equal right to display heteroerotica – do we really want the hallways of the Student Union plastered with Playboy centerfolds?

Even without small children walking through there, is this something that we really want?

And the thing that bothers me the most about the Radical Student Union's poster is the expression on the young man's face. Rape is clearly defined as a man using force (or the threat thereof) to insert himself into a woman against her will. "No" means "no" and "stop" means "stop", it isn't just being a gentleman; it is the law. So if it is a crime to force a woman to perform oral sex against her will, isn't it equally felonious to force a man to do the exact same thing?

And isn't a student group's advocacy of rape somewhat problematic?

An even more troubling question is why has the response of the RSU been to personally attack the reputations of its critics? So what if one young man went to a Halloween party dressed as a gynecologist? We have all seen far worse costumes. So what if a young lady put a picture of her pool party up on Facebook? She was wearing a swimsuit. And so what if I have a few gray hairs? It is far better than going bald, isn't it?

And what does any of this have to do with the very simple fact that it is inappropriate to have a penis montage plastered all over what is perhaps the most visible public space in the Student Union?

Has it occurred to anyone that if the personal character of any student can be attacked in such fashion, the administration has been given a powerful tool with which to silence all students? How many of those who criticize the university don't have something in their past that they would prefer not to see discussed on the television news? Do we really want to live in a world where only chaste virgins have the ability to comment on important public policy matters?

It is the time for all decent men, gay and straight, to tell the boys of the RSU to stop acting like schmucks.

Ed Cutting
UMass Republican Club

Dear editor:

President of the UMass Republican Club Brad DeFlumeri is a hypocrite. On Thursday February 21, 2008, DeFlumeri spoke about the brochures recently posted in the Student Union displaying what he claims is pornography. As quoted in the Daily Collegian on the same day DeFlumeri stated the brochures are a, "display of public indecency on taxpayer property."

From his comments one would believe DeFlumeri has an opposition to such graphic displays. Despite this claim, on the page of a Facebook group entitled, "I Want to Have Sex in the Library before I Graduate," DeFlumeri posted the comment, "Speaking from experience, sex in the Du Bois library is well worth the risk." This begs the question, how can one claim they are opposed to sexually explicit depictions when they are committing lewd acts on the same campus?

Alex Karampatsos
Christin Pinto
UMass students

Dear editor:

The Republican Party used to stand for something. If you haven't been following politics for any length of time this may be hard to believe, but take my word for it: Lower taxes, smaller government, and personal liberty used to be the core issues of the Republicans.

Now the UMass Republican Club and its embattled president Brad DeFlumeri have been reduced to protesting pamphlets, giving the "obscene images" far more publicity than they ever would have had otherwise.

At least those of us who consider ourselves conservatives can take some comfort in the fact that the UMass Republican Club is no longer affiliated with the College Republicans, thanks to allegations of sexual harassment being leveled at Mr. DeFlumeri: RSU as the kettle, Brad as the pot.

Republican Club speaker Ed Cutting added at the rally that "There is no difference between being gay in 1958 and being in the Republican Club in 2008."

The difference is that, last time I checked, being gay in 1958 didn't mean parading around like an imbecile protesting "issues" that no one else cares about

Zac Bissonnette
UMass student

Dear editor:

OK, so clearly a little focus is needed here. I know everyone likes to sling a little mud every once in a while, but seriously let's get down to business shall we?

So here's my argument: With all of the monumentally groundbreaking issues out there that affect our society on a global level, the Republican Club chose this small issue to spend time and effort on. I mean, sure, you could have focused on the historically impactful election we have coming up in a few months. You could have chosen the ongoing conflict in the Middle-East. Hell, you even could have chosen Medicare reform and universal healthcare. But no, apparently a few questionable posters on the second floor of an on-campus building were worthy of not only debate, but a full blown rally.

Simply put, the RC's involvement in this trivial matter is a mockery of student thought and potential. Think about it. We're students, and as much as it may surprise some, given the current topic of discussion, it is our responsibility to push the envelope; to ask the really important questions when the rest of the world lacks both the intellect and care to affect change.

A "Rally for Public Decency" isn't just a sham, it's a waste of time and effort that could have been spent on much more important (and productive) issues.

Also, I'd like to point out that not only is the topic not worthy of intellectual resources, but the result wasn't even worth it. The administration had already made its decision before the rally was held, and the Radical Student Union was showing clear signs of acquiescing to their ruling.

The rally held by the RC was not only unnecessary, but counterproductive. It really was just the kind of chest-slapping posturing that has eroded the legitimacy and integrity of both the left and the right of this campus for years.

So Mr. DeFlumeri, please don't ever waste our time with this political slap-fighting again. All it does is make you a small fish in a big pond. As a student community I know we can be so much more than that. You have a responsibility as a political personality on this campus to forward agendas that promote legitimate issues and discussions, not mire us in the muck of partisan infighting and bickering.

If you truly think of yourself as a leader, you'd lead the RC in a direction that doesn't involve childish complaints and useless non-issues, instead of simply grabbing at empty publicity that does nothing but degrade the intelligence and dignity of our school.

Justin Paresky
UMass student

Dear editor:

Today, after I walked out of my 11:15 class in Bartlett, I heard a loudspeaker coming from near the Student Union, so I let my curiosity get the better of me and wandered over. To my surprise and disgust, I witnessed an act of such prejudice and stupidity that I am now writing to you, the campus.

Many of you, I am sure, are aware that the Republican Club held a protest over posters depicting the safe ways to perform heterosexual and homosexual oral sex in the Student Union. Not only did they choose to become vocal on this issue, the speech made by President Brad DeFlumeri called for "public decency" and named the posters as sexual harassment against people who "don't want to see this kind of thing."

Now, last time I checked, Mr. DeFlumeri has just been through some allegations of sexual harassment himself, and should probably be keeping his head down. After having ceded from the Massachusetts Alliance of College Republicans, I would think that Mr. DeFlumeri would want to stay out of the limelight.

I call myself a moderate, so as not to affiliate with the crazy hippies or the crazy conservatives, but were I a member of our infamous Republican Club, I'd have quit by now. Mr. DeFlumeri is turning his fellow club members into jokes, and I can't see how they stand for it.

I would also like to apologize to the administration on behalf of the student body. You see, the University had already ordered the posters taken down, probably from a purely marketing standpoint; campus tours go right by the posters and in general the administration wants to be as moderate as possible; an understandable if upsetting standpoint. But the Mr. DeFlumeri went ahead with his protest, and thus made the administration look like they were supporting a crazed right-wing zealot who has been drawing heaps of negative attention to himself as of late.

So, sorry to the administration. I've had my issues with it like any other student, but no one deserves to be "supported" with a speech promoting homophobia.

So I guess I wrote to you for three reasons. First, the hypocrisy of Mr. DeFlumeri is ruining the Republican Club, which could be a respected group if they watched their mouths a little more. Also, the speech upset me personally and several other people I talked to, who are both conservative and liberal. No matter who you are doing it with, safe sex is a good idea. And thirdly, I think UMass ought to consider the idea that was probably not the administration's intent to support the anti-homosexual argument made today outside the Student Union, and we should probably all just take this as another piece of evidence that Brad DeFlumeri is just a man who loves the limelight, and has more than a few screws loose.

I hope this gets printed or put up on the Collegian Web site, because I'd love to enter into a friendly dialogue anyone who thinks I'm not being perfectly reasonable.

Hannah Hastings
UMass student

Dear editor:

OK, many of you will be shocked, but it looks like the University was the only reasonable party on this one. I am speaking of the Radical Student Union's posting of an image of graphic sexuality and Brad DeFlumeri's reaction to it.

Let's be totally honest here, RSU folks, there is no reason why you had to put up that pamphlet in the way that you did. If you wanted to raise awareness that "Safer Sex Can Be Fun" then you could have put up a giant sign directing people into your office for more information. You also could have plastered that pamphlet all over your window without showing the most explicit panels.

The especially graphic image of an erect penis about to be inserted in an open mouth would be objectionable in almost any public forum, and it has nothing to do with homophobia. Children do go by your window, not many, but some, and it is not your place to decide whether they are ready to be exposed to such images.

The only reason to put up that pamphlet in the way that you did was to provoke a reaction, so please do not try to convince anyone that you are surprised that you actually got someone to complain.

Now, Brad DeFlumeri, how foolish did you have to be to give them exactly what they wanted?! Really, you should know better, especially since your stated reason for wanting the pamphlet taken down was so correct. You say that you were only concerned that the pamphlet had prompted complaints and that it needed to come down for violating the schools' sexual harassment policy, but then why on earth would you confront them about it rather than simply reporting the incident to the University?

OK, perhaps you thought they would be reasonable, but I find it hard to believe that you are that naive. Never mind the fact that you have had your own issues with sexual harassment recently, you should have realized that they were looking for an issue and simply not given it to them.

You would have been much better off saving your ire for the University if they had not ordered the pamphlet removed.

The University policy on sexual harassment is very clear, and it is their responsibility to enforce it on an equal basis. Considering its educational focus, the pamphlet was clearly not pornographic as defined by the Supreme Court, but it is also clear that it was a graphic image that "a reasonable person would find offensive or sexually suggestive."

The truth of the matter that all students need to understand is that they agree to abide by all school policies when they accept admission to the University, and that includes giving up a small portion of their First Amendment rights in the name of maintaining a civil campus. It's not a free speech issue, and the University was entirely correct in requiring that the pamphlet be removed.

Look, both sides in this fight were wrong ... the RSU knew the pamphlet was too graphic for public consumption, and Brad should have known better than to give them an excuse to cry "free speech." As strange as it may sound, the University had the right idea on this one.

Ben Rudnick
UMass student

AVERSIVE RACISM

Dear editor:

This is a request to the student body and the faculty of UMass. Twice now I have heard students in classes refer to non-white populations as "colored people." This has been an unacceptable and offensive term for my entire life time, and certainly before then. I do not understand why some of my professors allow this term to be said without it going unacknowledged. Although confrontation on this matter produces tension, it is better to correct an individual than to let him or her continue to speak inappropriately. Please, refrain from using this term, and correct someone when it is said aloud. This is something that we should all care about.

Laurel Rogers
UMass student

TEXTBOOK CENTS

Dear editor:

I know that text books are pretty much essential to academic life at practically any level of education, but why do publishing companies have to charge so much?

Since they are a needed by most people to help with their work for their classes, there is really no need for it. Publishers will make money anyway, so why inflate the prices of the books with new editions every year, withholding the price of the books to force out competition and bundle books with CDs and DVDs that really aren't needed?

The only excuse that can fit is plain and simple greed.

That is why I am thankful for the Open Text Books plan that will be online and be significantly cheaper than the physical books. The RSO MassPIRG is working on this plan along with other organizations to put open text books into effect. That way, professors will have more options for their student should they find an Open Text Book that will fit their classes' needs.

The publishing companies have forced put competition killing the capitalist spirit that they are supposed to embody. Capitalism can work, and Open Text Books is one way to help it work.

Jon Chase
UMass student

The Daily Collegian encourages reader responses. Letters to the editor must be no longer than 550 words and may be edited for content or space constraints. Additional letters can be found online at dailycollegian.com.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 28, 2008 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Christian band spreads Good Word at Mullins

Award winning soft rock group Casting Crowns set to perform

BY PETER RIZZO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Despite the lack of name recognition they receive from the average college student, the Casting Crowns have a sizable number of accomplishments to their name. The band, who debuted in 2004, has quietly amassed a huge following amongst the Christian rock faithful with their spiritual soft rock tunes and is now taking their show to the Mullins Center.

Casting Crowns have recently been anointed with the title of "most played artist on all Christian radio formats combined," according to statistical polling. Since the band's inception they have racked up seven number one hits and sold more than three million albums. During this time Casting Crowns has also garnered the critical acclaim to back up its popularity, winning a Grammy Award, an American Music Award and several Gospel Music Dove awards, which are the main awards for Christian music.

The band consists of seven members, five men and two women, all of whom are more serious about their commitment to serving God than worrying about the band's success. While not on tour, the band remains active in their local church services; it is one of the central goals of the band to not let their professional career outweigh their spiritual obligations. Several of the band members spend their free time as youth pastor leaders with the intent of instilling the values of the Bible onto a younger generation.

The band is currently on tour behind their third album, "The Altar and the Door," and is showing no signs of losing its current momentum. The album debuted at number two on the Billboard 200 chart, and has gone on to sell more than half a million copies in the first two months of its release. Their tour has also seen similar success as it was the top grossing Christian music event of 2007.

The band, which features the conventional instruments of a rock band plus a violinist and pianist, is led by singer and songwriter, Mark Hall. Hall strives for honesty in his lyrics and uses the album title as a metaphor for the band's struggle of maintaining Christian values in their hectic everyday life.

"When we're at the altar, everything makes sense," Hall says. "We know what we're supposed to do. Everything's black and white. But somewhere between the altar and the door, when we leave and go out into our lives, it all leaks out, and everything gets gray again."

Casting Crowns will arrive at the Mullins Center with some distinguished opening acts. John Waller is a singer-songwriter who, like the headlining band, also works in his spare time as a worship leader. Waller recently left his position as the front man for the indie Christian rock band, According to John, and hopes to find equal success with his solo debut. His new album, "The Blessing," hits stores this March and its first single, which features guest vocals by Hall, is currently circulating the airwaves.

The Casting Crowns Web site has information about the band; everything from song downloads to information on each member's favorite biblical verses. Casting Crowns and John Waller, along with fellow Christian rock band Leeland, hit the Mullins Center this Friday Feb. 29, with tickets ranging in price from $20 dollars all the way up to $70 dollars for floors seats.

Peter Rizzo can be reached at prizzo@student.umass.edu.

CASTING CROWNS

MULLINS CENTER

FRIDAY FEB. 29

$20 - $70

The Casting Crowns, a critically acclaimed Christian rock group, will play at the Mullins Center on Friday night. Top: Casting Crowns at the American Music Awards. Bottom: Casting Crowns with Leeland, another Christian group performing on Friday.

'Charlie Bartlett' unfocused, uninspiring

Strong acting can't carry film

BY FRANK GODINHO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

"Charlie Bartlett" is a film that tries to create the same experience that a handful of better films (like "Rushmore," "Sixteen Candles," and "Ferris Bueller's Day Off") did in the past for today's generation of teenagers. The end result however is sloppy and over-the-top. In fact, just a quick glance of the film's promotional poster brings a sense of nostalgia for fans of "Ferris Bueller."

The title character, Charlie Bartlett (Anton Yelchin), is a modern day "Richie Rich," who has everything going for him, but is missing something in life that money can't buy – popularity. He gets expelled from his private high school for producing and administering authentic-looking fake IDs. After his expulsion, he's left with one final option: attending a public high school.

It's a formula that we've seen in practically every teenage comedy. A new student begins high school, is alienated by his peers and gets picked on by bullies. Yet in the end, he becomes the hero and most popular kid in school. The problem with "Charlie Bartlett" is the storyline through which the title character achieves his popularity.

Charlie, who isn't exactly your typical high school teenager, lives a life with chauffeurs, butlers, and even has a psychiatrist on-call, just in case. He makes the decision to take advantage of his personal psychiatrist by becoming his high school's dealer of prescription drugs.

It's unclear whether the film is merely poking fun at the psychiatric industry or whether they are trying to make a bigger statement through use of satire.

As the film progresses, Charlie develops a relationship with the principal's (Robert Downey Jr.) daughter, Susan (Kat Dennings). Dennings, who you may recognize as the girl from "The 40-Year-Old Virgin" has breakthrough role here, and shows her range, which includes singing at the end of the film. Yelchin, as well, has a breakout role as Charlie, who branches from that kid in "Alpha Dog" to a promising young actor with comedic and dramatic range. In fact, Yelchin gives Michael Cera a run for his money in defining the nerdy teenager with quirky humor.

But the best performance in the film belongs to Downey Jr., who plays Principal Gardner, stealing every scene he's a part of.

The biggest mistake for "Charlie Bartlett" is its confusing side stories and subplots. The film overstays its welcome, clocking in at an hour and 37 minutes, and feels unedited with a variety of scenes that deserved to be scrapped. There's an unnecessary plot involving Charlie's father in prison, and another that involves a bully that is afraid of asking a girl on date. But what's most distracting is the student lounge building (which most public high schools don't have the privilege of having anyway) adding security cameras by the administration's approval.

If "Charlie Bartlett" kept the focus on its main character instead of wasting time on unimportant supporting characters, the end result would have been much better. "Charlie Bartlett," a comedy which mocks the psychiatric industry, could have used a dose of Ritalin itself.

Frank Godinho can be reached at fgodinho@student.umass.edu.

CHARLIE BARTLETT

STARRING:
ANTON YELCHIN
AND ROBERT
DOWNEY JR.

GRADE: B

JEROME WHATLEY/FILE PHOTO

Actor Danny Glover introduced the film "Bamako" during last night's Massachusetts Multicultural Film Festival in the Mahar Auditorium. Following the film, Glover took part in a question and answer period which dealt with the movie's central concepts of globalization in Africa and the third world.

Donna Jean entertains

BY CODY KALTER
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

The feeling at Monday's show was one of intimacy and nostalgia, as the crowd danced the night away in a setting that is hard to find at Grateful Dead cover bands these days. The Iron Horse helped provide a certain intimate relationship with Donna Jean & the Tricksters that put fans in a similar place that many early Deadheads had discovered in late 60s San Francisco.

Donna Jean & the Tricksters started off the night with the Grateful Dead classic "American Beauty," which set good vibes for the rest of night. Jeff Mattson, the band's lead guitarist, prolonged scorching notes in his guitar solo that initiated the crowd blissfully into the night of music.

The band then went into one of their original songs, "So Hard," which gave new life to the recorded sounds from their debut album.

As the night progressed, the band followed a structure of Dead covers to originals, one after the other. The covers included "Loose Lucy," "Cosmic Charlie," "I Want to Tell You," "Tomorrow Is Forever" and "Till the Morning Comes".

They played originals like "Arise," which had a hint of reggae in it, "Moments Away" where Donna Jean and Wendy Lanter shared soulful "mmhmms" and "No Better Way" where the band incorporated a "One More Saturday Night" (another popular Grateful Dead song) guitar riff into the jam section of the song.

The crowd's energy elevated with every guitar lick and vocal note. The band captured the crowd with jams like "I Want to Tell You" and its seamless transition into "A Prisoner Says His Piece," another original.

Although Mookie Siegel (keyboard) was absent due to the sickness of his father, to whom Donna Jean had given a blessing before starting the show, the band was still able to keep their act together. Every note was as vibrant and perfect as the last.

The Tricksters played more Grateful Dead covers like "Rhapsody in Red" and the heavenly "Mission in the Rain" where Jeff Mattson and Tom Circosta, the band's rhythm guitarist, exchanged guitar riffs as if they were having a musical conversation.

If those in the crowd had closed their eyes and swayed to the music, it would have been like they were back listening to Grateful Dead again. The constant intense energy of the music and dancing and the intimate setting helped give the show that personal feeling. The crowd was wacky with people yelling out random song requests like the theme song from the Golden Girls and others that the band clearly never even thought to cover.

The recorded versions of the original songs do not do them justice, because it's not until hearing their live adaptations that one experiences the music on a higher level. A perfect example of this was "A Prisoner Says His Piece." In the recording one can hear the energy but it feels a bit constricted to its seven minutes. When played live, however, the sound resonates through the bones and heart. It's during these live performances when the true heartfelt jams come out of the band. This is exactly what happened at Monday night's performance.

Donna Jean & the Tricksters ended the night with an extraordinary cover of "Samson and Delilah," when the song's beginning lyrics "If I had my way!" were sung out loud, the audience went completely wild and sang along for the rest of the song.

Through each note and beat the listeners held on tight and were spun through different themes of Grateful Deadness. The band knew exactly how to please the crowd of mostly Deadheads as well as give them a taste of their new original album, to which the audience reacted well. The performance was one of many talents in improvisation and exceptional musicianship and ultimately kept the Iron Horse echoing with life and music on Monday night.

Coby Kalter can be reached at ckalter@student.umass

Service during spring break

UMass class to travel to New Orleans to aide in Katrina relief

BY EMMA REED
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Spring Break is a time to party in Mexico or relax in the Caribbean; or, in some cases, time to do Hurricane Katrina relief work in Louisiana.

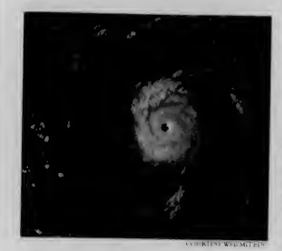
The UMass Amherst Alternative Spring Break is sending 40 UMass students to New Orleans and Houma, La. to help with Hurricane Katrina relief work. For over 10 years the Alternative Spring Break organization has sent students from UMass around the country to do various types of community service projects. For the past two years, many students have jumped on the ASB bandwagon to help in the relief efforts post-Hurricane Katrina.

This year Kent Higgins, the organizer of the trip, has appointed senior Scott Grannemann as the new trip leader. Grannemann has been part of the hurricane relief effort both times the ASB participated, and says, "Being a group leader I have more responsibilities. I organize fundraising and promotions, and I need to basically make sure everything runs smoothly. But I have awesome co-leaders working with me, and they make things a lot easier."

Grannemann and his seven co-leaders are in charge of teaching a two-credit class for the trip. Once a week students meet with their co-leaders and discuss specific readings. The students are also responsible for a 10 page paper after the trip is over.

At the beginning of spring break, 40 students and their co-leaders will pile into passenger vans and drive to Louisiana. Once down there the groups will stay in local churches. Because of preexisting connections with church groups from the area the cost of lodging is greatly decreased.

In total the trip only costs each student $200, which includes transportation, gas, food, lodging and textbooks for the class. The group will leave Amherst on Friday March 14 and will return on Sunday March 23. The trip will consist of about four and a half days of driving and five days of working.



After enduring hours upon hours of sitting on a bus comes the actual relief work. Grannemann says, "For the past few years we had been mostly gutting houses, but this year I hope to do more construction."

There has been a lot of progress made to rebuild New Orleans, but there is still a lot of work to be done. "We need to look for changes this year," says Grannemann, "Last year I visited the house we worked on in 2006, hoping that someone would have moved in and made some changes, but the house was exactly the same as we left it."

Although it may seem at times that the efforts made aren't amounting to much, there are many people down there working day and night to rebuild the city and the surrounding suburban areas. Changes and improvements are being made because of the work locals and nationwide volunteers are doing.

The trip may not seem like the riot house that one might experience in Cancun or Bermuda, but, like most community service trips, this one has its bright sides.

"It is a life changing experience. Not only did I meet some amazing people, but I got to help rebuild one of the most historical parts of our country," says Grannemann. The group also gets a chance to talk to the homeowners and get feedback from other volunteers getting a real taste of what life was like before the disaster, "It's tough because you can find food still left in fridges and family photos floating around. But, if I didn't do it someone else would have to, and that might mean something else might not get done," says Grannemann.

The massive Hurricane Katrina pummeled the Gulf Coast in August of 2005.

After Hurricane Katrina in 2005, many homes along the Gulf Coast, including in New Orleans, were left in ruins. Years later, people are still left homeless, despite efforts by relief groups like UMass's Alternative Spring Break.

Don't be intimidated by the emotional and physical labor of the Alternative Spring Break trip, because at the end of the day the group still finds time to play. After the day's work of knocking down walls, removing ruined furniture and basically tearing down abandoned houses, the groups get together and discuss the day's events. They call this sit down a "Process." The group discusses their frustrations, funny or sad stories, and ways to make things run more smoothly.

Once the "process" is over, that's when the group members get a chance to see the town. Because the trip is substance free, the extracurricular activities tend to be those of the sightseeing persuasion. But there are so many things to see including Bourbon Street, the French District and many other historical sights, that other substances aren't necessary.

The co-leaders, Grannemann and Higgins have been working since the start of this semester to promote, raise money and organize this year's trip.

Grannemann says, "The whole thing is a huge process and takes a lot of time and hard work, but in the end it's worth it. It's such a unique experience and you walk away with completely new perspective on life, and some great new friends."

The ASB organization promotes the idea of students taking time out of their busy schedules to join in relief efforts across the country. The trip not only looks great on resumes, but it is also a once in a lifetime experience to do something for Americans in need.

Grannemann says, "The reason I joined during my sophomore year was because I wanted to be able to know that I did something to help after the country's worst natural disaster. Any student who is able to go and do something for those who were affected should, because after college there aren't as many opportunities to help."

Emma Greed can be reached at ereed@student.umass.edu.

U.S. lifts ban on absinthe after almost one hundred years

BY DON MAYHEW
MCCLATCHY NEWSPAPERS

The phrase "think green" is supposed to stir ecologically friendly mental images of clean air, unpolluted streams and lush foliage.

But for this country's lovers of absinthe, the term has an entirely different meaning. The U.S. ban on the liquor, known by devotees as the Green Fairy, has been lifted after more than eight decades.

While it's unlikely that the anise-flavored aperitif, which more than a century ago in France rivaled wine in popularity, will ever again enjoy that kind of widespread acceptance, the people who drink absinthe display an extraordinary passion for it.

That has as much to do with the lore and ceremony surrounding the drink as the flavor itself, which can be bitter and complex – a nice way of saying it's often an acquired taste.

"It's not particularly flavorful," says Ken Fugelsang, an enology professor at California State University, Fresno, who touches on the distillation of absinthe during his wine production class. "It can be very bitter."

But what absinthe lacks in savory sweetness, it more than makes up for in cultural cachet.

It was the choice of drink by many of the influential artists and writers of La Belle Epoque, among them Toulouse-Latrec and Paul Verlaine. Edgar Degas and Pablo Picasso painted it. It's said Van Gogh was driven to cut off his ear while under its influence.

Add to that the elaborate way absinthe is traditionally served – either set afire with a sugarcube or mixed with chilled water poured over a sugarcube – and you've got an intriguing drink.

"I just pulled up eBay," Fugelsang says. "There were no fewer than 58 different absinthe kits and spoons and special sugars to use."

Marcel Nunis, Fresno playwright and founder of the Rogue Festival, first tried absinthe six years ago.

"The theater of the whole thing is attractive," he says. "When you have to burn something, it just looks illegal."

For nearly a century, it was.

According to Robert C. Lehrman, the attorney who represented Swiss absinthe manufacturer Kubler in its effort to reverse the ban, the drink made a convenient scapegoat early in the 20th century, both in Europe and the United States.

"Lots of people were drinking lots of absinthe," he says. "It was also a time of economic troubles. You had people lying in the street, drunk. They may have been plain alcoholics, or unemployed, or this and that. But absinthe got scapegoated, because it was so hugely popular."

When a Swiss man killed his pregnant wife and two children in 1905 after drinking absinthe – and Crème de Menthe, cognac and soda, more than six glasses of wine and a cup of coffee with a bit of brandy, as it turned out – absinthe took the fall. The Swiss soon banned it, with other countries following suit the next few years. The United States outlawed it in 1912.

The ban happened almost effortlessly. But if absinthe doesn't make the heart go plunder, what made it such an easy target?

Lehrman says French winemakers were struggling to control many diseases afflicting their grapes. To compete with absinthe, they waged a disinformation campaign.

"You can see a lot of posters from the era where the grape growers are saying on their propaganda, 'Wine and milk are good for you, absinthe is the devil's brew,'" he says.

The hysteria surrounding absinthe often involved one of its ingredients, wormwood, which contains thujone. For many years, thujone was considered a hallucinogenic. Recent scientific tests indicate that it's not. Wormwood itself was never illegal and can be purchased at many health food stores.

Mike Newton of Fresno has added a touch of wormwood extract to Pernod for years in an effort to create his own absinthe.

"For many years, Pernod was what was left of absinthe," he says. "The ban originally wasn't based on anything close to reason and science."

Lehrman concurs: "It's pretty much just alcohol. That is the predominant thing that would affect your behavior. You don't get too much more of an effect beyond what's in vodka."

Nevertheless, the ban stood for nearly a century. Absinthe persevered, available mostly in Czechoslovakia and Spain. The years deepened its mystery, a secretive forbidden fruit, until the Internet came along.

Connecting cultishly small but devoted audiences to one another is one of the things the Internet does best. Lehrman says absinthe benefited tremendously. Online communities gathered (www.wormwoodsociety.org is a particularly good example), and absinthe became available on the black market throughout Europe and North America.

"Absinthe was coming in in large quantities," he says. "There was a thriving trade, even two years ago, right before the change in U.S. policy."

So the federal agencies lifted the ban. But such was absinthe's notoriety that one of the requirements to sell it in this country is that the brand name must be printed larger on the bottle than the word "absinthe."

"They're sort of testing the waters," Lehrman says. "Will people be alarmed about this? Will people criticize them?"

Lucid, Kubler and St. George's (an Alameda, Calif., distillery) absinthes all have been approved for sale in this country.

Absinthe is available at a few liquor stores in the Fresno area. But few, if any, of Fresno's popular bars have begun serving it. Partly, that's because the liquor is expensive (more than $60 for a 750-milliliter bottle). It's also because serving absinthe is time consuming.

Tim Stookey, bar manager at the Presidio Social Club in San Francisco, says few places have yet to embrace it, even in his city.

"It's going to take a bit of consumer education before you see it emerging as something that's in high demand," he says. "The absinthe drip requires a certain amount of equipment. We got the absinthe before we got a lot of the equipment."

Instructions for a traditional serving of absinthe begin with an ounce or so of the aperitif poured into a parfait glass.

A special spoon Stookey described it as a trowel with holes in it – is placed across the top of the glass, and a sugarcube set on that. Then chilled water is poured slowly over the sugar, letting it drip into the alcohol.

That creates a cloud, or louche, in the glass. Absinthes are judged on their louches, which should be neither too thin nor opaque. Between five and seven ounces of water is typically poured into the glass before it's drunk.

The alcohol content in absinthe is very high – 60 percent or more. So it's not consumed straight. As a writer for Mixologist: The Journal of the American Cocktail put it, "both the alcohol and the anise oils are too strong and will immediately disable your palate."

Stookey compares the taste to the scents one experiences on a sunny bike "the same kind of sweet smell get if you went through a field in the Sierras that real sage, bright sort of smell."

He's as interested in adding absinthe to old-fashioned cocktails as he is in drinking it by itself.

"It's a nice ingredient," he says. "You add a sweetness and a bitterness and a vegetal note. A little dab will do you."

The ban on "Green Fairy," the alcoholic beverage better known as absinthe has been lifted in the United States after more than eight decades. The drink, which sports a 60 percent or more alcohol content, was banned in 1912 following smear campaigns by angry French wine makers.

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
Insurance Replacement Rates
FREE PICK-UP
POTTER'S AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates
Potter's Collision Repair
at North Amherst Motors
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.potterauto.com
(One mile North of UMass - on bus route)
Collision Repair & Glass Replacement

Lincoln Real Estate
25 N. Pleasant St • 413-253-7879 • www.amherstlincolnrealty.com
PROVIDING THE BEST OFF CAMPUS LIVING EXPERIENCE
24 HOUR MAINTENANCE
SAFE APARTMENTS
FRIENDLY STAFF
TWO GREAT LOCATIONS:
AMHERST CENTER AND HOBART LANE
WE START SHOWING APARTMENTS
FEB. 6TH FROM 11:30AM – 4:30PM M-F

your ADVENTURE
your BIRTHRIGHT
our GIFT
TAGLIT מסעות BIRTHRIGHT ISRAEL
www.birthrightisrael.com
your photo here!
Taglit-Birthright Israel provides free, ten-day trips to Israel for Jewish young adults ages 18 to 26. Register now at
WWW.BIRTHRIGHTISRAEL.COM

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 28, 2008 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Christian band spreads Good Word at Mullins

Award winning soft rock group Casting Crowns set to perform

BY PETER RIZZO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Despite the lack of name recognition they receive from the average college student, the Casting Crowns have a sizable number of accomplishments to their name. The band, who debuted in 2004, has quietly amassed a huge following amongst the Christian rock faithful with their spiritual soft rock tunes and is now taking their show to the Mullins Center.

Casting Crowns have recently been anointed with the title of "most played artist on all Christian radio formats combined," according to statistical polling. Since the band's inception they have racked up seven number one hits and sold more than three million albums. During this time Casting Crowns has also garnered the critical acclaim to back up its popularity, winning a Grammy Award, an American Music Award and several Gospel Music Dove awards, which are the main awards for Christian music.

CASTING CROWNS

MULLINS CENTER

FRIDAY FEB. 29

$20 - $70

The band consists of seven members, five men and two women, all of whom are more serious about their commitment to serving God than worrying about the band's success. While not on tour, the band remains active in their local church services; it is one of the central goals of the band to not let their professional career outweigh their spiritual obligations. Several of the band members spend their free time as youth pastor leaders with the intent of instilling the values of the Bible onto a younger generation.

The band is currently on tour behind their third album, "The Altar and the Door," and is showing no signs of losing its current momentum. The album debuted at number two on the Billboard 200 chart, and has gone on to sell more than half a million copies in the first two months of its release. Their tour has also seen similar success as it was the top grossing Christian music event of 2007.

The band, which features the conventional instruments of a rock band plus a violinist and pianist, is led by singer and songwriter, Mark Hall. Hall strives for honesty in his lyrics and uses the album title as a metaphor for the band's struggle of maintaining Christian values in their hectic everyday life.

"When we're at the altar, everything makes sense," Hall says. "We know what we're supposed to do. Everything's black and white. But somewhere between the altar and the door, when we leave and go out into our lives, it all leaks out, and everything gets gray again."

Casting Crowns will arrive at the Mullins Center with some distinguished opening acts. John Waller is a singer/songwriter who, like the headlining band, also works in his spare time as a worship leader. Waller recently left his position as the front man for the indie Christian rock band, According to John, and hopes to find equal success with his solo debut. His new album, "The Blessing," hits stores this March and its first single, which features guest vocals by Hall, is currently circulating the airwaves.

The Casting Crowns Web site has information about the band; everything from song downloads to information on each member's favorite biblical verses. Casting Crowns and John Waller, along with fellow Christian rock band Leeland, hit the Mullins Center this Friday Feb. 29, with tickets ranging in price from $20 dollars all the way up to $70 dollars for floors seats.

Peter Rizzo can be reached at prizzo@student.umass.edu

The Casting Crowns, a critically acclaimed Christian rock group, will play at the Mullins Center on Friday night. Top: Casting Crowns at the American Music Awards. Bottom: Casting Crowns with Leeland, another Christian group performing on Friday.

'Charlie Bartlett' unfocused, uninspiring

Strong acting can't carry film

BY FRANK GODINHO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

"Charlie Bartlett" is a film that tries to create the same experience that a handful of better films (like "Rushmore," "Sixteen Candles," and "Ferris Bueller's Day Off") did in the past for today's generation of teenagers. The end result however is sloppy and over-the-top. In fact, just a quick glance of the film's promotional poster brings a sense of nostalgia for fans of "Ferris Bueller."

The title character, Charlie Bartlett (Anton Yelchin), is a modern day "Richie Rich," who has everything going for him, but is missing something in life that money can't buy, popularity. He gets expelled from his private high school for producing and administering authentic-looking fake IDs. After his expulsion, he's left with one final option: attending a public high school.

It's a formula that we've seen in practically every teenage comedy. A new student begins high school, is alienated by his peers and gets picked on by bullies. Yet in the end, he becomes the hero and most popular kid in school. The problem with "Charlie Bartlett" is the storyline through which the title character achieves his popularity.

Charlie, who isn't exactly your typical high school teenager, lives a life with chauffeurs, butlers, and even has a psychiatrist on-call, just in case. He makes the decision to take advantage of his personal psychiatrist by becoming his high school's dealer of prescription drugs.

It's unclear whether the film is merely poking fun at the psychiatric industry or whether they are trying to make a bigger statement through use of satire.

As the film progresses, Charlie develops a relationship with the principal's (Robert Downey Jr.) daughter, Susan (Kat Dennings). Dennings, who you may recognize as the girl from "The 40-Year-Old Virgin" has breakthrough role here, and shows her range, which includes singing at the end of the film. Yelchin, as well, has a breakout role as Charlie, who branches from that kid in "Alpha Dog" to a promising young actor with comedic and dramatic range. In fact, Yelchin gives Michael Cera a run for his money in defining the nerdy teenager with quirky humor.

But the best performance in the film belongs to Downey Jr., who plays Principal Gardner, stealing every scene he's a part of.

The biggest mistake for "Charlie Bartlett" is its confusing side stories and subplots. The film overstays its welcome, clocking in at an hour and 37 minutes, and feels unedited with a variety of scenes that deserved to be scrapped. There's an unnecessary plot involving Charlie's father in prison, and another that involves a bully that is afraid of asking a girl on date. But what's most distracting is the student lounge building (which most public high schools don't have the privilege of having anyway) adding security cameras by the administration's approval.

If "Charlie Bartlett" kept the focus on its main character instead of wasting time on unimportant supporting characters, the end result would have been much better. "Charlie Bartlett," a comedy which mocks the psychiatric industry, could have used a dose of Ritalin itself.

Frank Godinho can be reached at fgodinho@student.umass.edu.

CHARLIE BARTLETT

STARRING: ANTON YELCHIN AND ROBERT DOWNEY JR.

GRADE: B

Actor Danny Glover introduced the film "Bamako" during last night's Massachusetts Multicultural Film Festival in the Mahar Auditorium. Following the film, Glover took part in a question and answer period which dealt with the movie's central concepts of globalization in Africa and the third world.

Donna Jean entertains

BY COBY KALTER
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

The feeling at Monday's show was one of intimacy and nostalgia, as the crowd danced the night away in a setting that is hard to find at Grateful Dead cover bands these days. The Iron Horse helped provide a certain intimate relationship with Donna Jean & the Tricksters that put fans in a similar place that many early Deadheads had discovered in late 60's San Francisco.

Donna Jean & the Tricksters started off the night with the Grateful Dead classic "American Beauty," which set good vibes for the rest of night. Jeff Mattson, the band's lead guitarist, prolonged scorching notes in his guitar solo that initiated the crowd blissfully into the night of music.

The band then went into one of their original songs, "So Hard," which gave new life to the recorded sounds from their debut album.

As the night progressed, the band followed a structure of Dead covers to originals, one after the other. The covers included "Loose Lucy," "Cosmic Charlie," "I Want to Tell You," "Tomorrow is Forever" and "Till the Morning Comes".

They played originals like "Arise," which had a hint of reggae in it, "Moments Away" where Donna Jean and Wendy Lanter shared soulful "mmhmms" and "No Better Way" where the band incorporated a "One More Saturday Night" (another popular Grateful Dead song) guitar riff into the jam section of the song.

The crowd's energy elevated with every guitar lick and vocal note. The band captured the crowd with jams like "I Want to Tell You" and its seamless transition into "A Prisoner Says His Piece," another original.

Although Mookie Siegel (keyboard) was absent due to the sickness of his father, to whom Donna Jean had given a blessing before starting the show, the band was still able to keep their act together. Every note was as vibrant and perfect as the last.

The Tricksters played more Grateful Dead covers like "Rhapsody in Red" and the heavenly "Mission in the Rain" where Jeff Mattson and Tom Circosta, the band's rhythm guitarist, exchanged guitar riffs as if they were having a musical conversation.

If those in the crowd had closed their eyes and swayed to the music, it would have been like they were back listening to Grateful Dead again. The constant intense energy of the music and dancing and the intimate setting helped give the show that personal feeling. The crowd was wacky with people yelling out random song requests like the theme song from the Golden Girls and others that the band clearly never even thought to cover.

The recorded versions of the original songs do not do them justice, because it's not until hearing their live adaptations that one experiences the music on a higher level. A perfect example of this was "A Prisoner Says His Piece." In the recording one can hear the energy but it feels a bit constricted to its seven minutes. When played live, however, the sound resonates through the bones and heart. It's during these live performances when the true heartfelt jams come out of the band. This is exactly what happened at Monday night's performance.

Donna Jean & the Tricksters ended the night with an extraordinary cover of "Samson and Delilah;" when the song's beginning lyrics "If I had my way!" were sung out loud, the audience went completely wild and sang along for the rest of the song.

Through each note and beat the listeners held on tight and were spun through different themes of Grateful Deadness. The band knew exactly how to please the crowd of mostly Deadheads as well as give them a taste of their new original album, to which the audience reacted well. The performance was one of many talents in improvisation and exceptional musicianship and ultimately kept the Iron Horse echoing with life and music on Monday night.

Coby Kalter can be reached at ckalter@student.umass.

Service during spring break

UMass class to travel to New Orleans to aide in Katrina relief

BY EMMA REED
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Spring Break is a time to party in Mexico or relax in the Caribbean; or, in some cases, time to do Hurricane Katrina relief work in Louisiana.

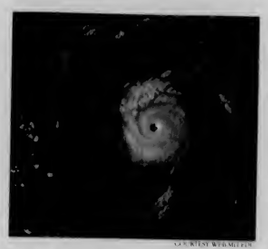
The UMass Amherst Alternative Spring Break is sending 40 UMass students to New Orleans and Houma, La. to help with Hurricane Katrina relief work. For over 10 years the Alternative Spring Break organization has sent students from UMass around the country to do various types of community service projects. For the past two years, many students have jumped on the ASB bandwagon to help in the relief efforts post-Hurricane Katrina.

This year Kent Higgins, the organizer of the trip, has appointed senior Scott Grannemann as the new trip leader. Grannemann has been part of the hurricane relief effort both times the ASB participated, and says, "Being a group leader I have more responsibilities. I organize fundraising and promotions, and I need to basically make sure everything runs smoothly. But I have awesome co-leaders working with me, and they make things a lot easier."

Grannemann and his seven co-leaders are in charge of teaching a two-credit class for the trip. Once a week students meet with their co-leaders and discuss specific readings. The students are also responsible for a 10 page paper after the trip is over.

At the beginning of spring break, 40 students and their co-leaders will pile into passenger vans and drive to Louisiana. Once down there the groups will stay in local churches. Because of preexisting connections with church groups from the area the cost of lodging is greatly decreased.

In total the trip only costs each student $200, which includes transportation, gas, food, lodging and textbooks for the class. The group will leave Amherst on Friday March 14 and will return on Sunday March 23. The trip will consist of about four and a half days of driving and five days of working.



After enduring hours upon hours of sitting on a bus comes the actual relief work. Grannemann says, "For the past few years we had been mostly gutting houses, but this year I hope to do more construction."

There has been a lot of progress made to rebuild New Orleans, but there is still a lot of work to be done. "We need to look for changes this year," says Grannemann, "Last year I visited the house we worked on in 2006, hoping that someone would have moved in and made some changes, but the house was exactly the same as we left it."

Although it may seem at times that the efforts made aren't amounting to much, there are many people down there working day and night to rebuild the city and the surrounding suburban areas. Changes and improvements are being made because of the work locals and nationwide volunteers are doing.

The trip may not seem like the riot house that one might experience in Cancun or Bermuda, but, like most community service trips, this one has its bright sides.

"It is a life changing experience. Not only did I meet some amazing people, but I got to help rebuild one of the most historical parts of our country," says Grannemann. The group also gets a chance to talk to the homeowners and get feedback from other volunteers getting a real taste of what life was like before the disaster. "It's tough because you can find food still left in fridges and family photos floating around. But, if I didn't do it someone else would have to, and that might mean something else might not get done," says Grannemann.

The massive Hurricane Katrina pummeled the Gulf Coast in August of 2005.

After Hurricane Katrina in 2005, many homes along the Gulf Coast, including in New Orleans, were left in ruins. Years later, people are still left homeless, despite efforts by relief groups like UMass's Alternative Spring Break.

Don't be intimidated by the emotional and physical labor of the Alternative Spring Break trip, because at the end of the day the group still finds time to play. After the day's work of knocking down walls, removing ruined furniture and basically tearing down abandoned houses, the groups get together and discuss the day's events. They call this sit down a "Process." The group discusses their frustrations, funny or sad stories, and ways to make things run more smoothly.

Once the "process" is over, that's when the group members get a chance to see the town. Because the trip is substance free, the extracurricular activities tend to be those of the sightseeing persuasion. But there are so many things to see including Bourbon Street, the French District and many other historical sights, that other substances aren't necessary.

The co-leaders, Grannemann and Higgins have been working since the start of this semester to promote, raise money and organize this year's trip

Grannemann says, "The whole thing is a huge process and takes a lot of time and hard work, but in the end it's worth it. It's such a unique experience, and you walk away with completely new perspective on life, and some great new friends."

The ASB organization promotes the idea of students taking time out of their busy schedules to join in relief efforts across the country. The trip not only looks great on resumes, but it is also a once in a lifetime experience to do something for Americans in need.

Grannemann says, "The reason I joined during my sophomore year was because I wanted to be able to know that I did something to help after the country's worst natural disaster. Any student who is able to go and do something for those who were affected should, because after college there aren't as many opportunities to help."

Emma Reed can be reached at ereed@student.umass.edu.

U.S. lifts ban on absinthe after almost one hundred years

BY DON MAYHEW
MCCLATCHY NEWSPAPERS

The phrase "think green" is supposed to stir ecologically friendly mental images of clean air, unpolluted streams and lush foliage.

But for this country's lovers of absinthe, the term has an entirely different meaning. The U.S. ban on the liquor, known by devotees as the Green Fairy, has been lifted after more than eight decades.

While it's unlikely that the anise-flavored aperitif, which more than a century ago in France rivaled wine in popularity, will ever again enjoy that kind of widespread acceptance, the people who drink absinthe display an extraordinary passion for it.

That has as much to do with the lore and ceremony surrounding the drink as the flavor itself, which can be bitter and complex – a nice way of saying it's often an acquired taste.

"It's not particularly flavorful," says Ken Fugelsang, an enology professor at California State University, Fresno, who touches on the distillation of absinthe during his wine production class. "It can be very bitter."

But what absinthe lacks in savory sweetness, it more than makes up for in cultural cachet.

It was the choice of drink by many of the influential artists and writers of La Belle Epoque, among them Toulouse-Latrec and Paul Verlaine. Edgar Degas and Pablo Picasso painted it. It's said Van Gogh was driven to cut off his ear while under its influence.

Add to that the elaborate way absinthe is traditionally served – either set afire with a sugarcube or mixed with chilled water poured over a sugarcube – and you've got an intriguing drink.

"I just pulled up eBay," Fugelsang says. "There were no fewer than 58 different absinthe kits and spoons and special sugars to use."

Marcel Nunis, Fresno playwright and founder of the Rogue Festival, first tried absinthe six years ago.

"The theater of the whole thing is attractive," he says. "When you have to burn something, it just looks illegal."

For nearly a century, it was.

According to Robert C. Lehrman, the attorney who represented Swiss absinthe manufacturer Kubler in its effort to reverse the ban, the drink made a convenient scapegoat early in the 20th century, both in Europe and the United States.

"Lots of people were drinking lots of absinthe," he says. "It was also a time of economic troubles. You had people lying in the street, drunk. They may have been plain alcoholics, or unemployed, or this and that. But absinthe got scapegoated, because it was so hugely popular."

When a Swiss man killed his pregnant wife and two children in 1905 after drinking absinthe – and Crème de Menthe, cognac and soda, more than six glasses of wine and a cup of coffee with a bit of brandy, as it turned out – absinthe took the fall. The Swiss soon banned it, with other countries following suit the next few years. The United States outlawed it in 1912.

The ban happened almost effortlessly. But if absinthe doesn't make the heart go plunder, what made it such an easy target?

Lehrman says French winemakers were struggling to control many diseases afflicting their grapes. To compete with absinthe, they waged a disinformation campaign.

"You can see a lot of posters from the era where the grape growers are saying on their propaganda, 'Wine and milk are good for you, absinthe is the devil's brew,'" he says.

The hysteria surrounding absinthe often involved one of its ingredients, wormwood, which contains thujone. For many years, thujone was considered a hallucinogenic. Recent scientific tests indicate that it's not. Wormwood itself was never illegal and can be purchased at many health food stores.

Mike Newton of Fresno has added a touch of wormwood extract to Pernod for years in an effort to create his own absinthe.

"For many years, Pernod was what was left of absinthe," he says. "The ban originally wasn't based on anything close to reason and science."

Lehrman concurs: "It's pretty much just alcohol. That is the predominant thing that would affect your behavior. You don't get too much more of an effect beyond what's in vodka."

Nevertheless, the ban stood for nearly a century. Absinthe persevered, available mostly in Czechoslovakia and Spain. The years deepened its mystery, a secretive forbidden fruit, until the Internet came along.

Connecting cultishly small but devoted audiences to one another is one of the things the Internet does best. Lehrman says absinthe benefited tremendously. Online communities gathered (www.wormwoodsociety.org is a particularly good example), and absinthe became available on the black market throughout Europe and North America.

"Absinthe was coming in in large quantities," he says. "There was a thriving trade, even two years ago, right before the change in U.S. policy."

So the federal agencies lifted the ban. But such was absinthe's notoriety that one of the requirements to sell it in this country is that the brand name must be printed larger on the bottle than the word "absinthe."

"They're sort of testing the waters," Lehrman says. "Will people be alarmed about this? Will people criticize them?"

Lucid, Kubler and St. George's (an Alameda, Calif., distillery) absinthes all have been approved for sale in this country.

Absinthe is available at a few liquor stores in the Fresno area. But few, if any, of Fresno's popular bars have begun serving it. Partly, that's because the liquor is expensive (more than $60 for a 750-milliliter bottle). It's also because serving absinthe is time consuming.

Tim Stookey, bar manager at the Presidio Social Club in San Francisco, says few places have yet to embrace it, even in his city.

"It's going to take a bit of consumer education before you see it emerging as something that's in high demand," he says. "The absinthe drip requires a certain amount of equipment. We got the absinthe before we got a lot of the equipment."

Instructions for a traditional serving of absinthe begin with an ounce or so of the aperitif poured into a parfait glass.

A special spoon Stookey described it as a trowel with holes in it – is placed across the top of the glass, and a sugarcube set on that. Then chilled water is poured slowly over the sugar, letting it drip into the alcohol.

That creates a cloud, or louche, in the glass. Absinthes are judged on their louches, which should be neither too thin nor opaque. Between five and seven ounces of water is typically poured into the glass before it's drunk.

The alcohol content in absinthe is very high – 60 percent or more. So it's not consumed straight. As a writer for Mixologist: The Journal of the American Cocktail put it, "both the alcohol and the anise oils are too strong and will immediately disable your palate."

Stookey compares the taste to the scents one experiences on a nature hike, "the same kind of smell you'd get if you went through a snow field in the Sierras, that real sage, bright sort of smell."

He's as interested in adding absinthe to old-fashioned cocktails as he is in drinking it by itself.

"It's a nice ingredient," he says. "You add a sweetness and a bitterness and a vegetal note. A little dab will do you."

The ban on "Green Fairy," the alcoholic beverage better known as absinthe has been lifted in the United States after more than eight decades. The drink, which sports a 60 percent or more alcohol content, was banned in 1912 following smear campaigns by angry French wine makers.

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
POTTER'S AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
Insurance Replacement Rates
FREE PICK-UP
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates
Potter's Collision Repair
at North Amherst Motors
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.potterauto.com
(One mile North of UMass - on bus route)
Collision Repair & Glass Replacement

Lincoln Real Estate
25 N. Pleasant St. • 413.253.7879 • www.amherstlincolnrealty.com
PROVIDING THE BEST OFF CAMPUS LIVING EXPERIENCE
24 HOUR MAINTENANCE
SAFE APARTMENTS
FRIENDLY STAFF
TWO GREAT LOCATIONS:
AMHERST CENTER AND HOBART LANE
WE START SHOWING APARTMENTS
FEB. 6TH FROM 11:30AM – 4:30PM M-F

your ADVENTURE
your BIRTHRIGHT
our GIFT
TAGLIT · תגלית
BIRTHRIGHT ISRAEL
www.birthrightisrael.com
your photo here?
Taglit-Birthright Israel provides free, ten-day trips to Israel for Jewish young adults ages 18 to 26. Register now at
WWW.BIRTHRIGHTISRAEL.COM

UM has big challenge ahead

Minutewomen head to BC for non- conference dual match

By Scott Feldman
Collegian Staff

In case Dartmouth wasn't a big enough challenge last week (a 7-0 loss), the Massachusetts tennis team gets another shot today at the No. 75 team in the country when it travels to Boston College.

The Minutewomen will take the court against the Eagles today at 5 p.m. for another non-conference dual match.

The Maroon and White hope to halt a downward skid that started with a 7-0 loss to Dartmouth last week, and continued with a close 4-3 loss to Army.

UMass coach Judy Dixon acknowledged that this week will be a challenge and that the team will have to go through some growing pains in order to be at peak performance when conference play starts.

"Tomorrow is going to be a difficult match for us, but I keep telling the team that the most important part of the season is the conference matchups," said Dixon. "All these matches serve to make us stronger and better by giving us match play experience of a very high quality."

The Minutewomen are a very young squad – currently three out of the six singles players are freshman. This youth can be both an advantage and a disadvantage.

"They don't know what to expect and they don't take anything for granted," said Dixon. "They don't have any preconceived notions about who's good, or who we should lose to. They go into every match with a certain level of enthusiasm and that's the good news."

"On the other side of it," continued Dixon. "Because they're freshman, their confidence hasn't had a chance to build up and when we start the year with a very top-quality schedule, rather then easing into the year, their confidence can go down because they don't have any experience underneath them to hold up."

Getting matched up against high level competition right away can be a challenge, but freshman Candynce Boney has proven herself to be ready for the collegiate level.

She has a 6-2 record in match play this season as an individual and earned both the Atlantic 10 rookie of the week and player of the week honors. This is her second straight week as the conference's top rookie. After her third week in the spring season, she began playing in the second singles position behind Masha Pozar. Boney has been described as the go-to player and should help carry the Maroon and White today.

"I expected big things from her, but I'm always cautious about [an athlete's] freshman year," said Dixon. "I'm continuing to watch her grow. As with every freshman, it's just a matter of being mature in match play. I'm very pleased with her and I expect she will continue to have a very good season."

One player that Dixon hopes will step up this weekend is the Minutewomen's top singles player Masha Pozar. As the leader of the team with a veteran presence, her performance will be critical to the Maroon and White's effort to pull off the upset.

"I'm hoping for a really strong effort from her in the next two or three matches," said Dixon.

Dixon believes that the key to defeating BC will be the play of her freshman. If they can manage a few upsets alongside a strong performance by Pozar, the Minutewomen's strong doubles play may be enough for an impressive road upset.

Scott Feldman can be reached at sfeldman@student.umass.edu.

COLLEGIAN – MASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Masha Pozar will need help from her younger teammates to complete an upset on the road against Boston College.

Rosanio's 22 lifts UMass over Bonnies

W. HOOPS from page 10

inside the paint.

Saint Bonaventure had to dig deep into its bench, as its two best players, center Dana Mitchell and guard Katelyn Murray, combined for only seven points, out of 19 shots.

One of the only bright spots for the Bonnies was that Murray had four steals on the night. However, she couldn't convert many of the steals, as Rosanio disrupted the rhythm of the normally dominant scorer. Rosanio was one of the main reasons that Murray had four fouls, two of which were late in the second half.

UMass caught a break in the form of a leg injury to Saint Bonaventure junior forward Erica Schiefen, who was a problem on offense for the Minutewomen in the first half.

Schiefen returned minutes later, but it was already a different game.

Rosanio bothered the Bonnie offense all game in transition, while senior center Kate Mills blocked shots left and right. Mills turned away eight shots, to go with 10 points and seven rebounds.

The extra pressure that Saint Bonaventure put on Mills opened up the floor for her teammates to show the skills that they are not usually credited for having.

"[The Bonnies] opened up the middle of the floor more and we were able to get inside the paint a little more," Mills said. "I think [the pressure] gave my teammates a lot more confidence in themselves, which they definitely deserve."

Freshman guard/forward Stephanie Lawrence was perfect in scoring on the night, going one-for-one from 3-point range and 4-of-4 from the foul line.

Lawrence saw extended time because freshman forward Teya Wright found herself in foul trouble early in the game.

"It's inexperience," said UMass coach Mamie Dacko of Wright. "Teya's just getting her feet wet. We have her playing defense away from the [basket] and she's got to slide [her feet], she's a dominant force on the boards."

UMass only needed 10 points from its bench, while Saint Bonaventure mustered 25 from its reserves.

Next up for the Minutewomen is their regular season finale in Philadelphia, Pa., against the Temple Owls.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu.

McCormick scores 3 in win

W/ LAX from page 10

Baumgartner found Curro cutting on the left side of the net.

The BU defensive unit was stout in the first half, not allowing a shot on goal for the first 13 minutes of the game. Goalkeeper Rachel Klein was impressive in net, rarely allowing the UMass offense any second chances on shots. BU would go up 4-0 before UMass could answer.

"We couldn't get any goals to get our momentum going," Venechanos said. "It was close in the first half, but we couldn't put goals away."

Attacker Holly Drown (two goals, one assist) took the ball in the offensive zone and scored the first goal for the team with just over 12 minutes left in the first half.

Redshirt junior Kaitylin McCormick was continually double-teamed, which helped free up the UMass offense. BU's defense began to collapse, and the Minutewomen mounted a comeback.

Senior captain Kathleen Typadis easily scored with nine minutes to go in the first, cutting the deficit to 4-2.

The Terriers were unable to set up their offense due to a potent defense led by Julie Papeleo and Jackie Rosenzweig.

Midfielder Merritt Cosgrove split a pair of defenders and got the ball to McCormick up the field. McCormick turned and took a strong charge to the net, scoring the Minutewomen's third goal in a row and the attacker's sixth of the season, closing the gap to 4-3 at halftime.

The Minutewomen stalled the BU offense early in the second half, but struggled to transition out of their own zone and could not build any offensive momentum.

Three minutes into the second half, Curro finally broke through the UMass defense, giving the Terriers a 5-3 lead.

Attacker Holly Drown cut to the middle on a free-position shot and faked before firing behind the right corner of the net. McCormick tied the game at five on another free-position shot.

Terriers coach Liz Robertshaw called a timeout after the game-tying goal.

"After BU called that timeout, they started to out-hustle us a little bit and, they got more opportunities," Venechanos said.

The Terriers scored two goals in a 20 second span, putting the team up 7-5.

Less than a minute after BU took the two-goal lead, Melynda Zwick caught a pass, turned and cut the deficit to one.

The Terriers then answered with three straight goals to open up the game.

Leading 10-6, BU began to run the clock, but McCormick tried to keep it close, scoring her third goal of the game with three minutes remaining.

Collins scored her fourth goal, putting the game out of reach for the Minutewomen.

"This one is tough," Venechanos said. "We were there, but we still had to play a complete game to win."

McCormick said the team is not going to dwell on the loss.

"We're going to leave this in the past and move on," she said. "These are two tough losses, and we should have won, but we were not executing properly."

UMass will host Harvard at McGuirk Stadium Saturday at 1 p.m.

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu.

Home-and-home with Terriers on tap

HOCKEY from page 10

the same, but the wins have come more frequent in the second half of the season.

Sophomore Brett Bennett has emerged as the starting goaltender, but it appears to be a move made out of necessity more than merit. Senior Karson Gillespie saw a lot of time earlier in the season but struggled to find anything resembling consistency.

"Bennett has helped solved that issue, he's played a little bit better for them," Cahoon said. "[Goaltending] is still an area of concern for them. It's just a question of whether we can put enough pressure on them to expose that end of their play."

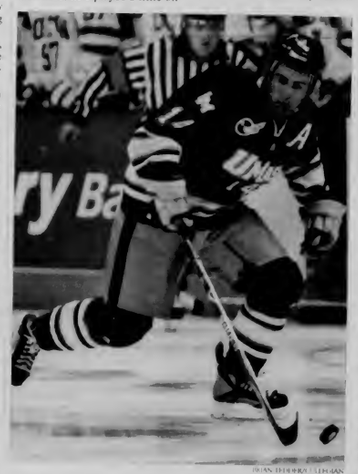
That system served UMass well early in the season, but the Minutemen got away from their strengths in losing 10 of their last 13. Junior Chris Davis scored a goal in Sunday's 5-4 overtime loss to Maine, but he hasn't had the offensive season he hoped.

His personal struggles sum up most of the team's problems since the downslide began. He's created chances with his natural ability but hasn't taken advantage of the opportunities with goals.

"You get down some times, and that's just the way the season's been going for me," Davis said. "But I've had enough chances and I had the feeling that I'd get one eventually."

There are a number of reasons for the offensive decline, the easiest and most important adjustment the team has to make, according to Davis, is heading to the net to create second- and third-chance opportunities.

"Going to the net is the biggest thing. We're not the biggest team, but we're very fast in our league. Getting to the net isn't about strength and size, it's about getting there quicker," Davis said.



Both losses to Maine last weekend were especially tough for the Minutemen to move past, but they understand that they must to get points this weekend.

"We showed that we're not a team that's going to give up. I think with a lot of the beatings we've taken in the last month, it shows the type of character of the guys in our locker room," senior captain Mike Kostka said.

The four points at stake this weekend are crucial for the Minutemen who currently sit two points ahead of Maine for the final playoff spot.

"Wherever we play in our league, it's a tough game whether it's home or away," Davis said. "I just know that I'm pretty pumped up to play both games this weekend. And I'm pretty sure that the rest of the guys are as well."

Joe Meloni can be reached at joe.meloni@gmail.com.

BRIAN TEIXEIRA/ COLLEGIAN

P.J. Fenton is second on the team with five power play goals. He is second in scoring with 23 points (eight goals, 15 assists).

Meyers played well in relief of Dainton game that started the Minutemen's longest losing streak of the season.

MEYERS from page 10

On Sunday he played the third period and overtime of a 5-4 loss to Maine. The Minutemen rallied from three goals down in the third period, but fell in overtime.

Meyers has played significantly less time than Dainton, but similar to 2007-08 Meyers is playing well when called upon.

Though his last two decisions were losses, Meyers has a goals-against average of 2.08 and a .929 save percentage, compared to Dainton's 2.52 GAA and .912 save percentage.

Despite the overtime goal, Meyers held the Black Bears scoreless in the third while his teammates made a comeback.

STILL MAKING HISTORY

As it stands now, UMass still holds the eighth and final spot for the Hockey East Tournament with four games remaining in the regular season – two against Boston University this Friday and Saturday and two against Merrimack next weekend.

If the Minutemen hold their ground in the conference, it will mark the sixth consecutive season the UMass has reached the postseason, easily a record for the young program, which was resurrected in 1993 after 24 years without ice hockey at UMass.

With eight of 10 teams in Hockey East participating in the tournament, it may not initially appear to be that impressive of a feat.

However, since joining the conference at the start of the 1994-95 season, the program has made significant strides in establishing itself as a perennial contender as opposed to an also-ran.

UMass coach Don Cahoon has brought the team to the postseason in all but his first two years at the helm, the 2000-01 and 2001-02 seasons.

The team reached its only Hockey East finals game in 2004 under Cahoon (a 2-1 triple-overtime loss to Maine) and has reached the semi-finals on two other occasions (2003 and 2007).

Jeremy Rice can be reached at jeremyr@student.umass.edu.

SUNDAY SPECIAL (Every Sunday from 10am to 4pm) : Full Service Oil Change $19.95
FREE WIRELESS INTERNET
Auto Express is your one stop for
MASS STATE INSPECTIONS
with extended hours for your convinence!
Monday, Wednesday & Friday 8 am to 6pm
Tuesday & Thursday 8am to 7pm
Saturday 8 am to 5 pm
Sunday 10 am to 4pm
Axels • Brakes • Batteries • Mufflers • Tune-Ups • Full Service Oil Changes
118 South East St. Amherst, MA 01002
413-253-0056
Bring this coupon in to donate 5% of your purchase to the Center for Popular Economics

Check out the Collegian's podcast section for the Men's Basketball Podcast
featuring beat writers
Eli Rosenswaike and Michael King

Think positive.

		6		3	5			2
				7			9
9		5				7		1
						3		6
	8	7				4	5
5		9
8		3				1		7
	6			8
7				3	6		9

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

ACROSS
1 Tranquilizes
6 Ike's initials
9 Stop, look and look?
14 Circa
15 "Dallas" commodity
16 Pay tribute to 17 Feel
18 One Gabor
19 Long-tailed lizard
20 Draws forth
22 Rigid bracelets
24 Saints ... winds
25 Age-old rumors
26 Castile defender
29 Capital on the Nile
31 Freudian concerns
32 Herder to find
34 Laurel and Musial
36 Mosl passe
38 Silver services
43 Bart Simpson's mom
45 Inexpensive
46 Allergic reaction
50 Forest
52 Gymnast Korbut
53 Beautify
55 Doctor of music?
57 Swagger
58 Shrinking flowers?
62 Two-wheelers
63 Actress West
65 Journalist Shriver
66 Happening
67 Drop a fly, e.g.
68 Top spots
69 Takes five
70 Meal cut
71 Approaches

DOWN
1 Perry Mason story
2 Genesis shepherd
3 Actress Anderson
4 Sweet wine
5 Pewter mug
6 Bucks mates
7 Fourth of MMXVI
8 Went into detail
9 Knee-ankle connection
10 Two-way switch
11 Computer type
12 Cesar or George
13 Expunges
21 USAF grp
23 Without help
25 Be the right size
26 Wife's address
27 Mare's morsel
28 Southern constellation
30 Stargazer
33 "Losing My Religion" group
35 U.S. del. group
37 Made logs
39 Sneaker go-up
40 Slippery fish
41 Chasing game
42 Hot tub
44 Acquired
46 Thief
47 Make it big
48 Underhanded characters
49 Lack
51 Star Wars, initially
54 Spars with sails
56 Kind of candle
58 Word of action
59 Ms. Bombeck
60 Level
61 Give guff to
64 "Exodus" hero

amherst cinema
Fri, Feb 29 - Thu, Mar 6
4 MONTHS 3 WEEKS AND 2 DAYS 2:15 4:45 7:15 9:45 PLUS 12:00 pm Sat & Sun
There Will Be Blood 2:30 6:00 9:15
JUNO 2:45 7:30 9:30 PLUS 12:30 Sat & Sun
The SAVAGES 5:00
20 Amity St. Downtown Amherst (413) 253-2547 www.amherstcinema.org

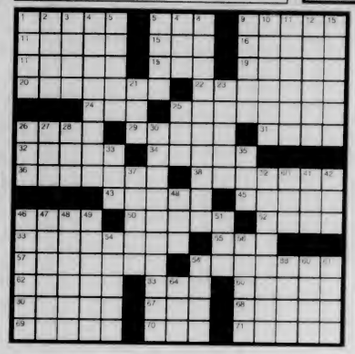
PLEASANT STREET THEATER
Fri. Feb 29 - Thu. Mar 6
persepolis 2:15 4:45 7:15 9:45 PLUS 12:00 pm Sat & Sun & 10:15 am Wed
NO COUNTRY FOR OLD MEN 1:45 4:15 7:00 9:30 PLUS 10:00 am Wed
27 Pleasant St. Downtown Northampton www.pleasantstheater.org (413) 584-5848

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"I don't deserve this award, but I have arthritis and I don't deserve that either."

—Jack Benny

ECOLOGY By Jen Fill



RETRO GEEK By Steve Dickenson and Todd Clark

LABRAT By Richard Martelly

Still looking for the PERFECT summer job?
We CAN help!
Grotonwood and Oceanwood two Christian summer camps looking for qualified college students to be a part of a life-changing ministry this summer
SPECIAL NEEDS UNIT LEADER - The perfect position for a Special Education major that wants to gain more experience working with special needs adults, and develop their leadership skills. Summer salary of $3,100 + room board
COUNSELORS - This is an awesome opportunity to make a difference in the lives of kids this summer. Challenge the campers to grow while developing your leadership and teaching skills. Summer salary of $2800 + room board
For more information and an application go to our website: www.grotonwood.org and look under the "Summer Staff" tab.
Grotonwood/ Oceanwood
167 Prescott St
Groton MA 01450
978-448-5763
office@grotonwood.org

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Your pale yellow shirt looks like a white shirt that someone accidentally mistook for a urinal.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
You are as stubborn as an Argentinian pack mule and equally as sterile.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Stop gawking at the person's mole. It's rude and if for some reason it pops off, it might poke your eye out.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Pretend to be throwing up every time you walk past a stranger on campus. It's fun to toy with people's self-esteem.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
When New Navy perfects its spring line, it's going to blow Old Navy away. Pre-order your capris now!

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Thank goodness the DC is taking time out of their busy week and money out of your wallet to worship the almighty blueberry.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
You are strong, but also quite tender. You would make a lovely stew.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Fall asleep on your keyboard. When you awake you will have written a stream of unconsciousness masterpiece.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Your day to day activities are more repetitive than NASCAR. Shift your schedule and go off course.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Tell the crew guys to put their clothes back on. Just cause you row you can't be naked all the time.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Someone is watching you and licking their lips, but don't worry. You are boring and don't taste good so they will stop soon.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Pretend to faint and see if Prince Charming, or Matthew Mconaghey comes out of nowhere and saves you.

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Montreal Weekend
From $99 Complete.
Best Hotels.
Best Prices.
montrealexpress.net
781-979-9001

APT. FOR RENT

Hobart Condos 3 Bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, phone (internet access), in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for June and September. NO FEES. 253-7879 www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

Studio, 1,2,3,4 bedrooms available Going Fast, Still guaranteeing for Fall Semester ALL UTILITIES INCLUDED! Call ASAP 413-256-0741

APT 4 RENT

2 Bedroom apartments in Sunderland. HEAT, HOT WATER, CABLE, INTERNET INCLUDED! Call ASAP 413-665-3856

HOUSE 4 RENT

28 Stockbridge St. 6 Bedroom house- 2 baths, living room, eat in kitchen, pantry, laundry, finished basement, yard, 2 car garage. 1.5 mi. to campus! $2925+ www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

EMPLOYMENT

A GREAT JOB! Spend your summer in a lakefront cabin in Maine. If you're looking to spend this summer outdoors, have fun while you work, and make lifelong friends, then look no further. Camp Mataponi, a residential girls camp in Maine, has female/male summertime openings for Land Sports, Waterfront (small crafts, skiing, life guarding, WSI, boat drivers), Ropes Course, Tennis, H.B. Riding, Arts & Crafts, Theater, Cooking, Gymnastics, Dance, Videography, Group Leaders & more. Top salaries plus room/board & travel provided. Call us today toll free at 1-888-684-2267 or apply online at www.campmataponi.com.

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

EMPLOYMENT

Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voiceemail: 545-6837

PART-TIME CAMPUS PROMOTER: Hand out fliers and set up posters. Average $9-20/hr plus residual income: innovativewebconcepts@yahoo.com.

TEXTBOOK BUYBACK STAFF NEEDED FOR$15/HR

Online textbook company needs 20 college students to staff textbook buyback events at local private high schools in May and June. 10-30 hrs/wk with flex hrs to fit your sched. Email resume to winnie.imperio@varsitybooks.com

SERVICES

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthright.org

Concerned About Your Eating?
Do you eat too little? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic, 577-5101

TAPESTRY HEALTH providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling &rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable, Safe. 413-548-9992. 27 Pray St. Amherst.

SERVICES

www.tapestryhealth.org

School a Pain in your eyes?
Headache? Itchy eyes? Trouble reading? An eye exam can be the first step toward relief. Call Eye Care Services at UHS. 577-5383, to learn more.

TRAVEL

Montreal Weekend
From $99 Complete.
Best Hotels.
Best Prices.
montrealexpress.net
781-979-9001

Spring Break 08 Hot Deals. Hot Destinations. Hot Parties. Ask About Group Deals and FREE TRIPS. 1-800-426-7710 www.sunsplashtours.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 28, 2008 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Rosanio leads the way

Senior scores 22, leads team past Bonnies

By Mike Gillmeister
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's basketball team is in the Atlantic 10 Conference Tournament.

After its 70-50 win over Saint Bonaventure, coupled with a La Salle loss, the Minutewomen are still in the hunt for a conference title.

UMass shot 59 percent from the field, including 86 percent from the free-throw line (13-for-15). Three UMass starters finished the game in double-digits in points.

The Maroon and White played a fast paced game, causing turnovers and working hard in the transition game.

However at the halftime buzzer, the Bonnies had already spoiled the Maroon and White's dominance, tying the game three times.

UMass held the lead for much of the first half, the Bonnies trailing by as much as 12. Senior forward Alisha Tatham finished the game with a double-double, including career-high's in points (15) and rebounds (14).

UMass	70
SBU	50

Senior guard Pam Rosanio was the key to UMass's energy in the first frame, notching three assists, two rebounds and two steals. By game's end, Rosanio led all players in points, with 22. Her sound defense led to four turnovers.

As a team, the Minutewomen cause 15 turnovers and converted both fast break chances. Saint Bonaventure didn't help its cause by converting only 32 percent of its shots from the field. They were also out-rebounded 36-26.

The Bonnies are normally a team that spreads its offense out and takes shots from the wing, but the defense of Mills and Rosanio caused them to take more chances

See W. HOOPS on page 8

Pam Rosanio and the Minutewomen clinched a spot in the Atlantic 10 Tournament with their win last night and a loss by La Salle to Saint Joseph's.

Minutewomen fall short, BU pulls away late

Maroon and White tie game twice, but Terriers too much

By David Brinch
Collegian Staff

In a game characterized by quick scoring and aggressive play by both teams, Boston University took advantage of a Minutewoman offense that was only effective in short spurts.

The Massachusetts women's lacrosse team suffered a tough loss Wednesday afternoon, falling to the Terriers, 11-7, at McGuirk Stadium.

BU	11
UMass	7

"We got some draws and good shots, but we didn't execute," UMass coach Alexis Venechanos said. "Unfortunately you have to play the whole game to win."

UMass had the advantage in groundballs, turnovers and draw controls, but were outshot 29-to-24.

BU jumped ahead early but UMass fought back, chasing the Terriers and trailing 7-6 midway through the second half. The Terriers then scored three straight goals and pulled away from the Minutewomen, who could not put together a second comeback attempt.

BU got on the board early when midfielder Molly Collins scored her first goal of the season on a shot that went right over UMass goalkeeper Krissy Anderson's left shoulder.

The Terriers scored again nearly four minutes later on an unassisted goal by Steph Walker, then BU made it a 3-0 lead mid way through the first half when attacker Erica

See W. LAX on page 8

Kaytlin McCormick scored three goals in the loss to Boston University. Holly Drown had two goals and an assist.

UMass back on road for NFCA Leadoff

By Jeremy Rice
Collegian Staff

A fatigued but energetic Massachusetts softball team will head back out on the road this weekend for the NFCA Leadoff Classic in Columbus, Ga.

The Minutewomen (4-6) went 2-3 in Cathedral City, Calif., last weekend, defeating Fresno State and Michigan State and taking No. 2 Arizona to 13 innings before falling in a 4-2 game.

UMass has Florida State and DePaul on tap Friday before facing off against Texas A&M and Auburn Saturday. The Minutewomen finish the tournament against Mississippi State.

UMass Softball

UMass coach Elaine Sortino takes her team to this tournament annually. It is primarily composed of the NCAA Tournament bracket from two years prior, or 2006, when the Minutewomen reached the Super Regionals and one win away from the team's fourth Women's College World Series berth.

The Minutewomen usually have two weeks between long road trips like this, but the opportunity to play in both the Palm Springs Classic and the Leadoff Classic was enough for Sortino to book the team on back-to-back weekends.

The Leadoff Classic was moved back a week this year, which gave Sortino the chance to play her team against the nation's best in both tourneys.

"Now we've been able to play on two national stages back-to-back," Sortino said. "Every ranked team in the nation except for Tennessee was [at the Palm Springs Classic]. That place was loaded, so we've got plenty of opportunity to do what we need to do for our RPI."

A week between the two events would be challenging enough, but a delayed flight back from California halted the team in Denver and has shortened their practice schedule.

"Monday would have been our day off," Sortino said. "It's been very stressful, very hard, very challenging and mentally exhausting."

In the team's first two tournaments, pitching was the constant, but with the rest of the team finally seeing some time on a real field (they've been practicing inside Boyden Gymnasium most of the winter), the team's hitting is starting to come around.

The team's offensive leaders, Stacy Cullington and Lauren Proctor, have yet to gain the form they held last year. Sortino said she simply wants her veterans to be less selective with pitches at the place, while her freshmen need to get more comfortable in the batter's box.

"Am I happy with our offense? The answer would be no," Sortino said. "I felt like we weren't quite what we were looking for early in the count. It either takes experience for our younger kids to learn that, or trust from our older kids, who are being a little too picky [at the plate]."

Serio earns A-10 honor

Catcher Jessica Serio was named the Atlantic 10 Player of the Week after going 7-of-13 last weekend with two doubles and four RBIs.

Serio now leads the Minutewomen with a .357 batting average and four RBIs (tied with Carly Normandin). She hit .221 last year with five RBIs on the season.

The sophomore switched from third base to catcher after when she came to UMass. She spent most of 2007 adjusting to her new position, but has settled down behind the plate and her hitting has benefitted.

"I can't talk about her enough," Sortino said. "She handles our pitchers well, and she's turned into a really unbelievable catcher and a great asset to the team."

Jeremy Rice can be reached at jeremyr@student.umass.edu

UM on brink of elimination

By Joe Meloni
Collegian Staff

When the 2007-08 season began, the Massachusetts hockey team planned to be in the race for home ice in the quarterfinals of the Hockey East Tournament.

Entering the final two weeks of the regular season, the Minutemen (11-13-6, 6-12-5 Hockey East) find themselves in a race, but rather than fighting for a spot in the top four, they are struggling to hold on to the eighth and final position in the conference tournament.

"It's disappointing if we let it be disappointing. There's no question that we wanted to have more wins in league than we have right now," UMass coach Don Cahoon said. "We didn't want to go through the drop off and the decline that we've experienced."

UMass's opponent this weekend, Boston University (14-14-4, 12-8-3 Hockey East), experienced a change in play this season but went in a direction opposite to the Minutemen. After losing 10 of its first 16 games, the Terriers have won 9-of-16 including their last six, and are currently tied for second place in Hockey East with Vermont.

The first meeting between these teams turned in favor of the Minutemen when sophomore winger Will Ortiz beat BU's Brett Bennett at 13:14 of the third period. Senior P.J. Fenton added an empty-net goal in the final minute, capping off a 5-3 win.

Cahoon, however, doesn't plan to use much of the meeting in November to prepare for the weekend.

The game resembled most of BU's this season. Each goal changed the lead, and the momentum swung back forth throughout. The Terriers' style has remained

See HOCKEY on page 8

Cory Quirk and the Minutemen have just four games left in the regular season to secure a postseason spot. They currently sit two points ahead of Maine for the eighth and final seed.

Mass Attack struggling on special teams

By Jeremy Rice
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts hockey team squandered an opportunity to close in on clinching a postseason berth last weekend when it got swept at Maine on a tough Saturday-Sunday road trip.

The Minutemen's scoring trouble of late did not follow them to Orono, as they scored six goals over the two games. Instead, the team rediscovered one of it earlier struggles – special teams.

The Mass Attack was just 2-for-11 on the power play against Maine, while the Black Bears were 3-for-7. The Minutemen had ample opportunity to take advantage of Maine penalties but were shut down by goaltender Ben Bishop and the Maine penalty kill.

The two power play goals were scored by captain defenseman Mike Kostka and forward P.J. Fenton. Kostka leads the team with six goals with the man advantage, and Fenton is second with five.

UMass Hockey

After that, Cory Quirk has three power play goals, but no one else has more than two.

Currently, the Minutemen are in the middle of the pack in Hockey East in power play success rate, ranking fifth at 16.6 percent.

They are eighth in the conference with a man in the box, at 82.8 percent. Interestingly, Boston University and Boston College – both ranked nationally and sitting at second and fourth respectively in the conference – are the only two teams with a worse success rate on the penalty kill.

Meyers fills in

At the beginning of the 2007-08 season, it was unknown who would be the Minutemen's starting goaltender after second-team All-American and team MVP Jon Quick made the jump to professional hockey after two collegiate seasons.

Sophomore Dan Meyers did well in spot starts behind Quick last season, but it was unclear if he could handle the load of a complete season as the full-time starter.

An early injury and a hot start by freshman goalie Paul Dainton brought Meyers back to the same role he played in his freshman year.

His last start came was a 3-2 loss to New Hampshire on Jan. 11, the

See MEYERS on page 8

COLLEGIAN
WEEKEND EDITION

FRI H:30 | SAT H:39 | SUN H:39 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 29, 200

Looking ahead

By Mike Fox
Collegian Staff

Speaking before a modest crowd, candidates for student trustee and SGA president squared off on issues of diversity, affordability of higher education, and their qualifications last night.

The three candidates for trustee – Libby Protzman, Lindsay McCluskey, and Augusta Mfuko – and the four candidates for president – Devin Ashe, Malcolm Chu, Derek Khanna, and Peter Kuusisto – held a steady banter with one another

See DEBATE on page 2

INSIDE:

EDITORIAL OPINION
Magazu on: Bringing brotherly love to Laissez-faire
Page 4

ARTS & LIVING
Bowerbirds and N.E.R.D. bring their acts to Northampton
Page 8

SPORTS
Minutewomen hope to improve A-10 Tournament seeding
Page 12

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 94

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Exter
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Tim McCall
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Ryan McAskill
COPY EDITOR Adam Staigin
EDITORIAL EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Rice
ASS. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Szymczak
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Marnea Whooten
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Stephanie McPherson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Teresa Reilly
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Garber
ASSISTANT NEWS Kate Olesin
ASSISTANT NEWS Will McGuinness
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Seabury
ASSISTANT SPORTS Michael King
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Meloni
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenwaike
WEB EDITOR James Hale
PHOTO EDITOR Toan Trinh
ASST. PHOTO EDITOR Michael Phillis
ASST. PHOTO EDITOR Brian Tedder

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY OWNED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. ESTABLISHED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL (413) 545-3500 OR PRESS 0. M-F 8 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
S.P. Sullivan

COPY EDITOR
Dominic Poli

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

We know you're busy
Thanks for reading

UM releases strike proposal

By Elizabeth Hawley
Collegian Staff

More than three months after the end of the General Student Strike at the University of Massachusetts, a final proposal from the administration will be released tonight.

In early November of last year, 45 students formed a coalition demanding the administration rollback of student fees, give students control over student space, increase funding for and focus on campus diversity programming, and the removal of police officers from dorms.

Graduate and undergraduate students boycotted classes on November 15 and 16 to raise awareness of their cause.

After the strike Interim Chancellor Thomas Cole agreed to meet with ten student representatives weekly to negotiate around these demands. Members of the United Student Action Coalition drew up a proposal detailing possible steps the administration could take to meet each of their demands.

"I think the negotiations started smoothly," said Ruth Thompson, student trustee and member of the negotiating team. According to Thompson, the negotiations have been "picking up high speed" towards the end of the process.

The University administration, according to Thompson, is "still very much scared of the power students have."

The administration refrained from commenting on the proposal.

Thompson said she feels the students have earned a number of victories through the negotiation process.

According to Thompson, so far the administration has essentially agreed to spend $900,000 on student demands. She said the student body has demonstrated a mixed response, with some students impressed by how much the University has given students, and some students anxious for more.

One demand from November was "student control over student space." Students felt that the Student Union and Campus Center are too expensive for most student groups to use, and the rooms charge for equipment in the space. The administration is expected to help reduce those fees.

Students also demanded increased funding of diversity programming, including support services, and services designed to attract more diverse applicants to the university. One example of such programming is transportation.

"There's a lack of transportation for students coming from Holyoke and Hadley," said Thompson.

The university has agreed to help with transportation in the future. The students and university officials are still negotiating over increased funding for other diversity support services.

Thompson said that the demand to rollback student fees was definitely the most difficult to negotiate, mentioning that while the negotiations continue, there is a proposal to raise student fees by about three percent.

The student proposal asked the administration to find areas on campus where spending could be cut back while the administration searched for a new source of revenue. The student proposal also called for reductions in fees as early as next year. Fees are the same across the UMass system, and Thompson said that the negotiating team knew that this would be a difficult issue at the start.

The administration is expected to provide assistance for a student lobby day April 16, according to Thompson. Students would travel to the Massachusetts State House to lobby for more funding towards public higher education.

"I think the cops out of the dorms was the easiest [issue to negotiate]," said Thompson in part because the UMass Police Department denied allegations of undercover police officers going into the dorms in the first place.

Thompson said that once Thomas Cole stepped in as interim chancellor, it was easy to negotiate a Police Community Advisory Board, which will allow students to have a voice with the UMPD.

The final report was supposed to be released last Friday, February 22, but it was postponed "primarily because we didn't feel we had enough time" Thompson said. This was in part because a few meetings were postponed due to weather.

By Monday, Thompson hopes the final proposal will be easily available to students. There will be a vote on whether to accept the proposal March 5. "If [the students] do accept, we're just gonna celebrate," she said.

If not, another strike may be on the way.

Elizabeth Hawley can be reached at ehawley@student.umass.edu.

Candidates face off in Cape Cod Lounge

DEBATE from page 1

and the audience for nearly two hours in the Cape Cod Lounge of the Student Union.

The candidates for trustee focused on issues relating to college affordability and how their respective experiences would help them confront the challenges facing the University of Massachusetts.

Protzman touched on her involvement in numerous campus activities and her desire to lobby the state government for school support. McCluskey focused on her past experiences organizing as the Secretary of External Affairs and how the connections that she has built would help her in the future. Mfuko – the only graduate student running – touched on her experience in the Graduate Student Senate and her involvement with the strike to highlight her abilities in advocacy.

The three candidates all stated that the school needs to be more affordable to both in and out of state students and that holding the position of trustee would be the best way they could fix a broken system.

The four candidates for president participated in a heated session. While the candidates began by describing their respective experience with SGA, the debate soon turned to an argument over how to free up finances on campus and the involvement of diversity organizations, such as the ALANA caucus, in student government.

Several times Khanna expressed his displeasure with the past several SGA administrations and the ALANA caucus which supported them. He expressed a desire to change the "status quo" of the student government administration, citing fee increases and a need to work through or above the administration.

Chu – the ALANA endorsed candidate often used his experience as an organizer of the student strike to demonstrate his qualifications for the presidency. His stances, closely identified with the strike, demonstrated a desire to continue negotiations with the administration. He reiterated the positions of his running mate, McCluskey, stressing a desire to focus on campus affordability.

Ashe stated his support of the strike and identified himself as a candidate based on action and not rhetoric. He spoke about his time in the Ways and Means Committee of the SGA Senate as a necessary experience to serve as president.

Kuusisto centered his statements on his familiarity with financial issues and his time serving as SGA auditor. He expressed a desire to run SGA with fiscal efficiency and more communication with the student body.

After the candidates made their opening statements and answered issue related questions from UVC-TV 19, WMUA, and The Massachusetts Daily Collegian, the floor was opened for members of the audience to question the candidates. Some of the questions asked during this session touched upon issues such as the SGA-endorsed fee increases and their stances on the upcoming referendum questions.

Khanna was questioned several times in relation to his statements on diversity and his personal comments directed at current SGA President Aaron Buford and Trustee Ruth Thompson.

Towards the end of the debate, Khanna and Thompson had an exchange in relation to the honesty of Khanna's figures on diversity and his attacks on the past administration.

Other issues touched upon during the audience questioning period included the candidate's stances on recent SGA events, such as last week's minutes crisis, the candidate's personal motivations to run, and how to get the student body more involved with student government.

The SGA elections will be held next week on March 5th and 6th.

Mike Fox can be reached at mgfox@student.umass.edu.

DANIEL COLOMBO/COLLEGIAN

Student trustee candidates touted their qualifications during last night's debate.

Venezuelan society, politics reach UMass

By Gisel Saillant
Collegian Staff

The Afro-Latino movement reached the University of Massachusetts last Tuesday, as Jesus "Chucho" Garcia lectured about a social movement in Venezuela.

The lecture, titled "The Afro-Venezuelan Social Movement and the New Left in Latin America," brought a global perspective to UMass students.

He explained the more complex issues that exist in this community other than the stereotypes that are in the media about Latin America, "We are stereotyped as people that play drums, and shake [our buttocks] not as intellectuals," Garcia said.

Garcia is an intellectual activist and leader of the network of Afro-Venezuelan organizations and Strategic Alliance of Afro-descendants in Latin America. The lecture highlighted changes he feels must be made in the Venezuelan constitution and the involvement of the United States in the social movement.

Garcia gave his speech in Spanish, his native tongue, and it was translated into English by UMass faculty members, including Professor Agustin Lao Montes, who introduced Garcia to the attendees.

"I'm not Chavista, I'm not Bolivarian, I'm a revolutionary," Garcia said.

According to Garcia, this social movement evolves around racial and economic inequality in Venezuela.

"The problem of racism [in Venezuela] is that is under the veil of racial mixture," Garcia said. Education, according to Garcia, is the solution to the country's problems.

That is why the Afro-Venezuelan movement has made it a priority to implement more African elements in the school curriculum.

"We went to the ministry of education to demand our participation," Garcia said.

These demands were discussed with Cuban instructors that came to Venezuela to implement a new school agenda. Garcia admitted that the Cuban instructors had strategies, methods and objectives that should be included in the Venezuelan school system.

However, when the question about the content that should be taught came up, disagreements arose.

"The Cubans thought the issue of racism should not be included," Garcia said. After a month and a half of deliberations, Garcia said that they had won their petition.

Garcia expressed that the Afro-Venezuelan contributions needs to be included because, "[Professors] are the first reproducers of racism," according to Garcia.

According to Garcia, one of the mistakes made during the Cuban revolution was ignoring of the racism issue.

In order for the Afro-Venezuelan movement to gain momentum, changes need to be upheld in the Venezuelan constitution, according to Garcia.

"Chavez proposed a constitution reform, which among other things would announce Venezuela as a socialist nation, and dismantle the capitalist that it is now, in the 1999 constitution, we were not officially recognized," Garcia said.

This new addition in the Venezuelan constitution grants recognition to the indigenous population, but not African descendants in Venezuela.

The movement remains strong, as Garcia spoke about the accomplishments the Afro-Venezuelan organizations have made since 2005 by creating a presidential commission against racism.

"To advance recognition in the issues in the constitution in the organic laws of education, cultural, and land laws, [we] need to push the topic into public policy," Garcia said.

Although it was the first time Garcia visited UMass, the United States has been involved with this social movement.

Garcia questioned the true intentions of the United States' support of the social movement.

"The Afro blackness social movements have become important to the U.S – it is not an accident that there was a delegation in Columbia," Garcia said.

Garcia focused on how the United States wants to capture this black movement, the creation of schools of leadership that were put in place by Colin Powell, has only one objective.

"We see it as [that the U.S] will pick leaders that will support invasions," Garcia said.

This is a subtle manipulation tactic from the United States to catch the black movement in Latin America, Garcia said during his lecture.

"The agenda is low intensity, low profile intervention, is not like in 2004 the overt intervention in Haiti," Garcia said.

"Take a look at the diaspora in Latin America in light of the changes that are happening now," Garcia said.

The lecture was hosted by the Afro-American Studies department and the center for Latin American, Caribbean and Latino Studies. Students and faculty alike crowed the Shirley Graham Du Bois Library located in the New Africa house.

"Garcia's thought-provoking presentation at UMass-Amherst enables us all to see how global the problems of capitalism and white supremacy truly are and how our local struggles are significant fronts in a worldwide resistance movement," said Amilar Shabazz, department chair of Afro-American Studies. "Certain details may be different and delivered in a different language, but the bottom-line truth is the same: The unchecked power of rampant racism and corporate capitalism equals disease, death and dislocation whether in Caracas or Katrina."

"I'm interested in Latin American social movement, but more familiar with Mexico," said Quincy Saul, a junior at Hampshire College, "It was very interesting to hear a radical perspective in Venezuela that is both critical of Chavez and recognizes the change."

Gisel Saillant can be reached at gsaillan@student.umass.edu

Journalist discusses media censorship the Mid East

By Jennifer Heshion
Collegian Staff

Israeli-Arab journalist Khaled Abu-Toameh discussed the effects of censorship on the media reporting on the Israeli-Palestinian conflict with University of Massachusetts students earlier this week.

"I would rather see people talking with each other than killing each other," said Abu-Toameh – an award winning journalist – to the crowded room last Wednesday night in the Campus Center.

Abu-Toameh has been a journalist for over 20 years in Israel and has seen first-hand the level of destruction caused by the power struggle between the state of Israel and the Palestinian people led by the political party Hamas since 2006.

The speech was co-sponsored by UMass Student Alliance for Israel, UMass Democrats, and Hasbara Fellowships, a group focused on educating students on Israeli and Middle Eastern history in addition to teaching students to be pro-Israel activists on their campuses.

"We brought Abu-Toameh here because he can give an insider's perspective of the censorship that occurs in Palestinian areas and therefore why Americans can't get the full picture of the hatred present in the Palestinian society," said president of the Student Alliance for Israel Matt Hoffman.

"If talking to Hamas would end the violence I would go talk to the devil even just to end the violence," said Abu-Toameh.

Abu-Toameh believes that for Israel to strike a deal with Hamas is the only way to resolve the conflict, even if it is only temporarily, without great financial loss and the loss of many lives for both sides.

The Israeli-Palestinian conflict is essentially a dispute over land, namely the West Bank and the Gaza Strip. Thus far the power struggle between the two has cost hundreds of thousands of lives, mostly civilian lives.

As a resident of Jerusalem and journalist for The Jerusalem Post and NBC news, Abu-Toameh knows the barriers placed upon journalists in both Israel and Palestine when reporting news of the conflict.

In Israel he is free to write what he wants and does not have to deal with the brutality of government censorship in Palestine, he said.

"I found it sad and ironic that as an Arab-Muslim I'm more free to work for a Jewish newspaper than a Palestinian one," said Abu-Toameh who had began his journalistic career as a writer for a newspaper run by the Palestinian Liberation Organization (PLO).

"I have no problem working for any newspaper that gives me a free platform," said Abu-Toameh.

When asked by a member of the audience what he considered most detrimental to a journalist in terms of censorship, Abu-Toameh answered that he believed "self censorship is much more destructive, much more dangerous."

He went on to say that when editors censor their writers there is nothing a writer can do about it, but when a government censors writers there are always ways to get around it.

According to Abu-Toameh, when Yasser Arafat came to power in Palestine everyone had high expectations for him but Arafat decided to crackdown on the Palestinian media so that every journalist was completely loyal to him. Many Palestinian journalists were fired, beat up or had their offices torched if they spoke against the government, or had to flee the country, he said.

"Arafat created a media that was no different than the media under Saddam Hussein," said Abu-Toameh.

Between 1994 and 2001, Arafat spent the money and power he had as the leader of the PLO on corrupt endeavors.

"Instead of building a hospital, Arafat built a casino," said Abu-Toameh.

According to Abu-Toameh when journalists, including himself, tried to warn the government of what Arafat was doing they were told that it was Jewish propaganda against the Palestinians.

"Our job as journalists is to criticize the government and to report the truth," stated Abu-Toameh when asked by his colleagues why it was important for them to continue to report what was happening despite the Palestinian dismissal of their work as Jewish propaganda.

According to Abu-Toameh when Hamas won the 2006 election replacing the political party Fatah, which was started by PLO leaders, Palestinians were hopeful that things would be better and the corruption of Fatah would be over. The PLO refused to accept defeat and was given financial support from the U.S against Hamas.

Although Hamas publicly states that it does not recognize Israel's right to exist, Hamas does express willingness to form a truce or some sort of security arrangement, according to Abu-Toameh.

Abu-Toameh described Hamas as a "reliable enemy" much more discipline than Fatah and prepared for a truce with Israel.

"You can't wipe out Hamas," said Abu-Toameh, "As long as Palestinians see Hamas as victims of Israel and the U.S they are not going to turn against them."

DANIEL COLOMBO/COLLEGIAN

Abu-Toameh criticized the handling of news by the Palestinian government earlier this week.

However Abu-Toameh assured students that although Hamas has the support of the Palestine people over the PLO, if they lose the faith of the people they will be brought down.

"Palestinians are not stupid, no one forced them to vote for Hamas," said Abu-Toameh, "The minute Hamas does something wrong the Palestinians will pull them down and execute them in Gaza."

Abu-Toameh is currently in a lecture circuit around America to present the facts about the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, not to sensationalize or promote the interests of either side, he said.

"I'm not pro-anything, I'm just a reporter," said Abu-Toameh.

"I condemn the killing of any civilian, Jewish or Palestinian," he said. "I don't see the difference when a Jewish mother cries or when a Palestinian mother cries."

Jennifer Heshion can be reached at jheshion@student.umass.edu

EDITORIAL OPINION

'Love thy neigbhor' capitalism

Eric Magazu

Free markets and free trade are buzzwords frequently invoked by politicians as the very definition of the liberty that defines American civic life. They are certainly values that are integrated into our nation, but to understand them in a vacuum, to take them to an extreme, or to believe that they can survive absent some other shared moral principles would be to fail to comprehend fully the nature of the liberty that defines America.

If one understands free markets to mean a complete laissez-faire, non-interventional policy on the economy or free trade to mean that American sovereignty shall be yielded up to global authorities, then this is precisely where the error would creep in. In a very basic sense, there are benefits to taking the position that allows for maximum individual autonomy in both these areas.

Complete individual autonomy in free markets and free trade would permit any legal economic exchange to occur between two consenting parties in any place in the world. This is the view of libertarian, Austrian school economists. When understood with economic tools such as comparative advantage, these policies maximize overall economic benefits in a raw sense.

Simultaneously, these policies can be corrosive to the bonds of brotherhood that exist between citizens of a common nation. In the case of free markets, we lose the sense of common ideals and ethics that ought to be shared by members of the same community. In the case of free trade, we lose the sense of loyalty that one man should have for his fellow citizen, and we lose national self-sufficiency.

The reason for this is that while there is an overall increase in economic benefits, this policy does not take into account the distribution of talents within the community. While a company owner may be able to minimize production costs and possibly reduce the cost of goods and services, it can lead to a distribution of labor that does not allow for a citizen with certain talents to find gainful work.

The suggested solution in this scenario is that the government can redistribute the extra profits the company makes and provide it in the form of a transfer program to the party that is now unemployed. However, the receipt of transfer payments is harmful to both the community as a whole and the individual receiving the benefits. What most people want is simply to earn a living for themselves.

In free trade, a policy interpreted to this extreme can permit people who live in a country to escape any greater loyalty to the nation as a whole. There ought to be some common bond of brotherhood among citizens so that even larger companies recognize that they are Americans first and foremost.

The solution to these dilemmas is not massive government intervention in the economy. Instead, trading agreements should first be negotiated on a national level between two countries such that both countries meet a need that benefits their citizens.

There ought to be some common bond of brotherhood among citizens.

Second, there should be minimal government intervention in markets, but just enough to ensure lots of competition. The government should favor smaller businesses and work in the most organic way possible to induce companies to naturally prefer to be smaller. This ensures greater competition.

The third requirement, however, is the most important. We, as a whole people, must rededicate ourselves to loving and serving each other. When our neighbor is in distress, he should never need to rely on government; he can rely on members of his community to come to his aid of their own free will. This requires a complete change of heart from where our society is today.

It can be said that this is not human nature, and this is true, as human nature does not voluntarily do right of its own accord. But that idea fails to see that if we restore God to our common discourse, then it becomes very possible.

Our society will eventually need some force that binds us together as a people, and it will either be a tyrant or an intrusive government. However, when a people have a strong trust in God, then God Himself provides the binding force. Tyrants can find no refuge and government can be limited.

When the Puritans arrived in America they were not yet known as Americans, since the idea did not yet exist. John Winthrop, the leader of this wise and pious group of early Americans, and our first founding father, taught us:

"We must entertain each other in brotherly affection. We must be willing to abridge ourselves of our superfluities, for the supply of others' necessities. We must uphold a familiar commerce together in all meekness, gentleness, patience and liberality.

"We must delight in each other; make others' conditions our own; rejoice together, mourn together, labor and suffer together, always having before our eyes our commission and community in the work, as members of the same body. So shall we keep the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace. The Lord will be our God, and delight to dwell among us, as His own people."

Eric Magazu is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at emagazu@student.umass.edu.

Happiness is finding a pencil

Leigh Greaney

The other day I was flipping through dusty pages at a used bookstore searching for something to generate a spark in myself, a little pick-me-up. I meandered over to the self-help section and gazed at binding upon binding of people's troubles labeled and fixed. Then, I stopped. The word was bold and bright in black and white and read, "Happy."

I guess, technically, all self-help should result in happiness, so why not go straight to the source? I lifted the book from its trap between "Get Rid of Your Wrinkles" and "Lose Weight Fast" and did my usual should-I buy-this-book test.

I opened the book in the middle to find a list of things that spark happiness. "Babies wearing jeans" was the only necessary thing I had to read before I rushed to the checkout line. Who doesn't love a good denim wearing infant?

On the way out of the store, the first thing I saw on the street shocked me. There was a blue jean baby strapped to her father's chest looking right at me. The irony put a smile on my face that lasted for the rest of the day.

What struck me even more then the irony was the feeling that it gave me. What is it about the little coincidences in life that make us so happy? Do we need to be told what to look for to find happiness or does it find us? What does it take to make people happy in the first place?

Maybe we just like to feel part of the bigger picture. Maybe we are blind to the light in our life until we are told it's there. But when we find it, the warmth that fills us up is as encompassing as that first ember that spawned happiness.

Walking around campus, it's not hard to see glimmers of happiness. Even easier to see is its absence. Preoccupation with workloads, pressures from all directions, personal issues, and everything else life brings about clouds our vision from little sparks of happiness.

There is beauty everywhere and sometimes we just are too inattentive to see it.

Had I not picked up that book and not walked out on that street exactly when I did, I would have never even noticed anything particularly special about that bundle of baby joy.

For ages, people have known that the goal in life is to be happy. But do we even really know what that means? In a world that bogs us down with hatred and inequality on a daily basis, are we truly living it right? Are we only able to make ourselves happy when we are conscious that happiness is the goal?

The key is not to wish happiness upon ourselves and others. It is to create it. We have to open our eyes more often to see the good that surrounds us. The little things in life can be so much more fulfilling if they are seen in the light they are meant to be seen in. There is beauty everywhere and sometimes we just are too inattentive to see it.

Take the time to dwell on things that make you smile. It's not a waste of time. Whether you write a list of things that bring you joy and then seek them out, whether you read something happy and seek to find its message in your own life, or whether you simply put your mind at ease from the preoccupations that overshadow beauty, the goal is to be happy. You'll live longer. You'll feel better. You'll breathe easier.

One of the greater benefits of appreciating things simply to appreciate them is that it's contagious. Once you start realizing that you could feel happier, you start making an effort to see things differently. Once other people notice this change in you, they too might open up their eyes to beauty.

Imagine waking up and simply being happy because the sun is shining. Imagine smiling at something that doesn't just involve something sarcastic. Imagine feeling whole.

It seems very idealistic to simply be happy. With all the horrors of the world and the treacherous circumstances that accompany each day, sometimes happiness seems impossible. But, it's not. You just have to look for it.

Without even realizing it, you've opened yourself up to this realm of thought. Once you place this newspaper down, try to find at least one thing that brings a smile to your face.

Whether it's miniature jeans on miniature people, or the face of a friend, you should try to dwell on the light in your life. You might just notice the weight being lifted off your heart. You might just smile. You might be contagious. You might be happy.

Leigh Greaney is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at lgreaney@student.umass.edu.

The tuition debate

Hannah Nelson

Gov. Deval Patrick wants to help out college students with their in-state tuition. But more likely than not, you're not going to be seeing any of the deals.

Patrick is trying to breathe some life back into a bill that the House of Representatives shot down last year 97-51. And if the House hadn't, former Gov. Mitt Romney would have vetoed it even faster.

The bill has been amended by Patrick's team to make it a bit more acceptable to the new House, but the issue of letting non-taxpaying non-citizens pay in-state prices to public state colleges is not sitting well with many.

It's not fair, to borrow the remark from a 6-year-old in the sandbox. I can't possibly see how this makes sense, especially amid all the immigration debate, this will only fuel that fire.

It isn't just illegal immigrants who have financial hardships; it is something that does not discriminate

Under the bill, the children of illegal immigrants who have lived in the state for at least three years would be eligible for in-state tuition rates rather than the out-of-state tuition as is the norm presently.

This bill has been tweaked by Patrick to specifically help high achieving students in high school attend college because they would not otherwise be able to afford it. We all know the plight of paying for college, and anything to help should be welcomed with open arms. Denying anyone affordable education is never supposed to be debatable.

Bills with the same ideas as the one set to go before the House in Massachusetts are already in affect in California, Illinois, Kansas, Nebraska, New Mexico, New York, Oklahoma, Texas, Utah, and Washington.

And joining Massachusetts are similar bills in Minnesota, New Hampshire, New Jersey, North Carolina, Oregon, South Carolina, Tennessee, and Virginia. Similar bills have been vetoed in Connecticut and Wisconsin. Nevada, Georgia and Texas all grant illegal immigrants varied access to certain scholarship and award programs for in-state students.

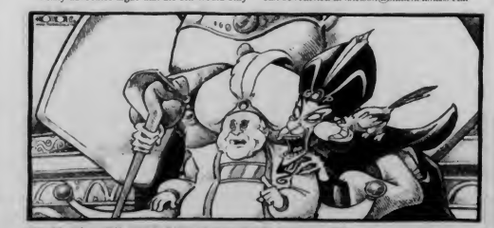
Many advocates argue that the bill would only affect something like 500 children of illegal immigrants. They don't want the mistakes of the parents to impend the achievements of the children.

But then you are looking at a possible drawin for more illegal immigrants from neighboring states to Massachusetts – after all, Connecticut vetoed it. It also makes it look like illegal immigrants are being pardoned, and how is that fair for immigrants who came into the country the legal way? Representatives are reassuring the current in-state college students that no fully qualifying Massachusetts student would be negatively affected in their financial situation by the bill.

"These are exactly the people we need to retain – productive workers," Shuya Ohno of the Massachusetts Immigrant and Refugee Advocacy Coalition said to The Wakefield Observer. "Certainly, the senior citizen portion of the population is growing, but the workforce is shrinking."

So if you look over the coming years, we're going to be in a bind. Am I the only who sees some strong ulterior motives in that statement? Now it gets to the heart of the matter, is this really about giving some hard-working students a chance, or is it about the stereotype of the immigrant worker?

Though on the flip side, there is the question of whether or not it will cost the state more to have a less qualified workforce. Knowing the unstable condition of the economy not just in Massachusetts but across the country at the moment, that question answers itself.



But there are juniors and seniors, and graduate students for that matter, who have lived in Massachusetts for three or more years. Some are registered voters in Amherst, and while these students are not "permanent" residents according to some politicians, doesn't that put them in the same position?

Many students call their dorm or apartment home despite state citizenship. How can you tell me that these students – who spend eight to nine months out of the year, and possibly more at school – are going to have to pay more than an illegal immigrant for their education?

One year of residency in Massachusetts usually qualifies the United States citizen for in-state tuition. It's not as if the children of illegal immigrants are being denied the chance to an education.

There are plenty of students who come from out of state with their own sets of financial woes. It isn't just illegal immigrants who have financial hardships, it is something that does not discriminate. By all means, let's get affordable education on the table, but can we try to somehow make the slices of the pie even?

Hannah Nelson is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at hnelson@student.umass.edu

"MY FRIENDS, LET'S JUST FORGET ABOUT CAMPAIGN FINANCE REFORM. RULES WERE MADE TO BE BROKEN BY CONSERVATIVES. LIBERAL ATTACK MACHINE! LIBERAL ATTACK MACHINE!!"

Liberty over security

Immediately following the terrorist attacks of Sept.11, 2001, my high school hired more police officers, more security and more limitations of movement within the student body. More or less, my school ended up like a prison.

Joe Hughes

Besides wondering how Sept. 11 should have had any influence on a small random high school located in south Minneapolis that no terrorist would have even heard of, I wondered how much of the event was exploited to fulfill what the school's administration originally desired. I wondered how much was done to merely appease paranoid communal minds while fully understanding that all of the work and expenses paid were going to complete waste.

It wasn't just my school that dramatically changed, of course. The entire nation experienced a dramatic metamorphosis. The most obvious and significant change took place within the airports.

Before coming to UMass, I spent a year working in Israel. If there was one thing I learned while living there, it's this; if terrorists want to kill people, they will do it, and nothing can stop them unless a society's entire infrastructure is changed.

In Israel, coping with terrorism is a part of life. There are bag and coat checks outside every club, bar, station, school, restaurant and museum. Soldiers are present in all areas, with a minimum of one on each bus. Yet even with all of the precautions undertaken, Israel's system has still failed to completely halt terrorist attacks.

I remember a café that got blown up only shortly after my being there. At the door was a standard security guard who checked every person and bag that came to the entrance. Soldiers patrolled all over the populated area. Yet all of this could not stop what happened from occurring.

Working in London over the summer compounded what I learned about this. One night, after I visited a club called "Tiger Tiger" in London's Piccadilly Circus, there was an attempted bombing on the building, as well as the areas around it, with the intention of killing as many civilians as possible.

Although England has suffered numerous terrorist attacks in the past, it has nevertheless refrained from taking the strongest measures possible in preventing them. This is mostly because the attacks are relatively rare, and preservation of civilian freedom and an ageless way of life was the priority.

Only a few weeks after the attempted attack, the Tour de France began in Hyde Park. When I came to watch, I was surprised to discover that although there were perhaps hundreds of thousands of people crammed into a very dense space, my backpack was not checked by the security regulating the entering lines.

The danger of the complete lack of security became all the more obvious to me when I threw my backpack next to an old couple to save the spot and walked away for a minute. Before it hit me that maybe I should not have done that, the couple was already scared sh*tless.

I later asked a British buddy of mine about the absence of security at the Tour De France, and how I thought it made no sense. He responded that there is no way to prevent a terrorist attack from happening if a killer has a will. The measures England or any other country have taken in preventing attacks are to merely give the public a peace of mind, to prove that something was being done to prevent terrorism from happening.

The reality is that given the enormous amount of terrain terrorists have to attack, there would be no way to prevent such events from unfolding. This man was right. Only a few days later, a terrorist in Scotland incompetently attempted an attack which backfired, resulting in his becoming a permanent burn victim. London had been on lock down only a few days before from the attempted Tiger Tiger bombing, and yet with all of the security, there was still a way.

So the question is; is terrorism actually preventable?

So the question is; is terrorism actually preventable? I'm not usually a cynic, but this time, at least in the long run, my answer is, "No." The world needs to start looking at the big picture; yes, security measures will minimize attacks, but is sacrificing our liberties and our ways of life worth it?

Isn't the whole reason we're combating it in order to preserve these very freedoms? A killer who wants to kill and who is not afraid of dying will do so, and if he's not completely incompetent, he will do it.

Some may consider this simple truth to be defeatist; it isn't. In reality, this truth is the complete opposite. By reducing pointless restrictions inhibiting our freedoms, we can instead focus our energies on other problems that kill American citizens in levels that far exceed that of terrorism; poverty and a poor health care for example.

If the point of counterterrorism is to save innocent lives, then why not start tackling the problems that are not only of far greater danger to us, but problems which are far simpler to stop?

Joe Hughes is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at jhughes@student.umass.edu.

Look before your leap this year

FEATURES

Club polo is HOT TO TROT

UMass women's polo team preps for their upcoming spring season

BY EDEN UNIVER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The University of Massachusetts has a little known secret that is worth a second glance.: the women's intercollegiate polo club.

The club, founded in 2001 practices at Stone Pony Farm, which is ten minutes from the UMass campus.

During a recent practice, five girls rode around the ring with their coach, Hilary Blythe, and their polo mallets in hand. Each girl seemed secure in her saddle, although everyone had bright red cheeks below their helmets from the frosty temperature and snowy conditions.

The actual game of polo is a foreign concept to many UMass students. It is not a typical sport that almost all students are familiar with like basketball, football, or hockey.

"Polo is an intense and athletic sport where the main goal is to score as many goals as possible in a thirty minute game divided up into four seven and a half minute chukkas," said Sarah Ku, co-president of the team. "In my opinion, polo is a combination of horseback riding, hockey, croquet and soccer," she said.

Polo is a more rigorous sport than some may perceive it to be and it requires many different skills and abilities to play in a game. "Polo involves speed, agility, grace, toughness, competitiveness, and no fear," said Ku.

Jill Smith, team secretary, agrees that the sport encompasses many different skills in one, calling polo a "contact, team [and] horse sport. It is very unique."

The girls walk, trot, and even canter (a three-beat type of gait) their horses around the ring during practice. Actual games do not begin for the polo team until later in the semester, so to prepare, the girls work out the horses.

According to Roger Booth, a rider at Stone Pony Farms, the horses have down-time from mid-December to late January and the girls need to build up the horses' fitness by exercising them around the ring.

The first thing that the girls must do when they arrive at practice is to get the horses ready to ride.

"We arrive at the barn and begin laying out all the tack and leg wraps for the horses," said Brett Camara, treasurer of the team. "We then have to go out into the paddocks on the farm and bring in all the horses that we will be using that day. We then have to begin grooming them and tacking them up."

Tacking up a horse includes putting on the saddle, stirrups, bridles and any other type of equipment they may need.

After the horses are all tacked up and ready to go, a typical practice begins when the team's coach has chosen a polo pony for each girl to ride, Ku said.

"We warm up the horses and ourselves by walking, trotting, and cantering around for about 10 minutes and hit some balls around," says Ku. "Then our coach arranges us in teams of 3 so we can scrimmage each other. The scrimmages prepare us for real game situations, too."

The practices vary depending on weather and what kinds of exercises Blythe has in store for them that day.

"Our coach then usually has us run drills, practicing our swings and working together. We then may play a short checker, which is one quarter of a four checker game to get practice," said Camara. "Then all the horses must be cooled out and brought back into the barn where they are un-tacked and groomed."

After practice is over there is still much to be done.

"The girls and I then thoroughly clean the tack with soap and water and clean the tack room," said Camara. "Before we leave, all horses must be fed and their grain buckets refilled for the morning as well as their water buckets filled."

It is not all practices and chores, however. Once the weather warms, the game season begins.

"The team competes as often as possible. There aren't too many universities in the New England region that have competitive teams," said Ku. "On average we have one game a month and most of the time the games are away. We normally have games against Yale, Skidmore, Vassar, and in March we travel to Regionals which is held at Cornell University where we compete against two teams that are entered in the tournament."

Polo is not a sport for the faint-of-heart. It is extremely competitive and the girls have to be tough to keep up in a game.

"My favorite thing about polo is the speed of the game and the swings we use to play," said Camara. "It is a very fast paced game that allows girls to bump, turn, and get a little rough to gain a goal for their team. It takes a lot of practice with the swings but it is worth the practice to do well in a game or scrimmage."

The girls work hard to keep their team afloat. They do what they can to manage financially, but horses do require quite a bit of funds to maintain. The team does 'bring-ins,' or evening chores for all the horses, for the stable in return for being able to use the horses.

"Currently their responsibilities include about 13 bring-ins a semester in addition to club dues," said Blythe.

According to Blythe, the girls also help with riding ring maintenance by chopping ice away from the arena in the spring.

Even though the team works hard for the use of the barn's horses, there is more to polo than simply having horses to ride.

"We are a pretty new club," said Smith, "We haven't been around for that long and it is difficult because we don't get a lot of money from the school but we try really hard to fundraise."

To join the team, the girls did not have to be experienced polo players. In fact, all it takes is a bit of horseback riding knowledge and the motivation to take part in the sport.

"As long as you have some horseback riding experience and feel comfortable in the saddle, Hillary [Blythe] takes the time to train you how to play the game as well as rules and regulations," said Camara. "We love to train new people how to play and they as well seem to love how to learn."

As the girls gain experience with practice and competitions they also gain camaraderie and the chance to be part of a new and often exciting club.

"This club has made me more experienced as a rider, as well as meeting great girls and having a talented coach," Camara said.

Eden Univer can be reached at EUniver@student.umass.edu.

Sara Ku scores a goal during a game against Vassar College at Stone Pony Farm.

CINEMARK
The Best Seat In Town
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
367 Russell St 413-587-4233
Schedule for Friday 2/29/2008 thru Thurs. 3/06/2008
Purchase Tickets @cinemark.com

In Bruges (R)*
1:30 4:10 7:35 10:10

Semi-Pro (R)*
1:05 2:00 3:30 4:35
7:05 7:50 9:40 10:20

The Other Boleyn Girl (PG-13)*
1:10 4:25 7:15 10:00

Be Kind Rewind (PG-13)*
1:55 4:55 7:45 10:25

Charlie Bartlett (R)*
1:15 4:20 7:40 10:00

Vantage Point (PG-13)*
1:25 4:15 7:00 9:50

Definitely, Maybe (PG-13)
1:20 4:00 7:35 10:15

Jumper (PG-13)
1:00 4:05 7:10 9:35

Step Up 2 The Streets (PG-13)
1:50 4:45 7:30 9:55

The Spiderwick Chronicles (PG)
1:40 4:30 6:55 9:25

Fool's Gold (PG-13)
1:35 4:40 7:25 10:05

* NO PASSES NO SUPERSAVERS
TICKETS AND INFO AVAILABLE AT CINEMARK.COM

Bowerbirds musically and socially aware

COURTESY OF BOWERBIRDS.ORG

North Carolina-based trio Bowerbirds aims to incorporate their personal message of social and political activism into their music and live performances. The band's stripped down lineup of guitar, bass, drum, violin and accordion serve as a catalyst for their overall artistic vision.

By Brian Wood
Collegian Staff

In an ever-evolving social climate currently dominated by apathy, North Carolina's Bowerbirds represent a deviation from an unhealthy social criterion. When the band graces the stage at the Iron Horse Music Hall Saturday Night, they will be accompanied by not only their music, but also their advocacy for hopefulness and social awareness, concepts that are the archetype for their respective lives.

When I first was exposed to Bowerbirds, I was immediately astonished with the trio's ability to use largely minimalist instrumentation to create an overwhelmingly powerful, yet intimate listening experience. The band's stripped down lineup of guitar, bass drum, and generally violin or accordion, serve as a catalyst for songwriter Phil Moore's artistic vision, while his lyrics are an instrument of progress and compassion.

After conversing through e-mail with the band, I discovered that this profound minimalism is an extension of their very being. Drawing from their constant interactions with nature and their collective distress over the current state of the planet, the band has crafted music that aims to lend support toward a more sustainable and less destructive culture, while additionally endeavoring to model their own lives in a manner that mirrors their musical ambitions.

Beth Tacular, who plays a variety of roles within the group, was kind enough to take time out from their current tour to answer a few questions regarding the band, their music, the future and life off the stage before their performance in Northampton.

Brian Wood: For starters, who are the members in the band and what roles do they play?

Beth Tacular: Phil Moore is the songwriter and he writes the guitar and lead vocals and plays guitar and high-hat at live shows. Mark Paulson plays violin, piano, percussion, and sings, as well as records the albums. I play accordion, autoharp, and percussion and sing.

BW: If I'm not mistaken, a bowerbird is an animal known best for its elaborate theatrical mating rituals. Which forces me to ask, how did you all land on the name "Bowerbirds," and what kind of significance does it hold for you?

BT: I found out about bowerbirds from a children's encyclopedia I was reading to get ideas for paintings, during the summer when Phil was starting to write the songs that would become the basis for our new band. I couldn't believe they existed. They were so amazing. We liked the way they were described in the encyclopedia: as being these birds that compensate for their sort of unassuming looks by building intricate art to attract lovers.

Also, bowerbirds sort of represent the genius of evolution to us, and our not even having known they existed represents to us how many species we will never know ever existed, because this civilized culture is currently wiping them out way too fast, as part of this " great extinction" we are causing.

BW: Your latest album, "Hymns for a Dark Horse," was one of my favorite releases last year. The albums title implies a sympathy for those under the radar. Was a particular "unknown" a focal point or inspiration for this album?

BT: The dark horse (or underdog who has a remote chance of winning) in the title, is the idea that we might be able to stop our civilized society before it finishes wiping out the rest of the rain forests, killing the oceans, imprisoning all our young poor people, numbing ourselves with prescription psychoactive drugs so we don't notice we are turning all our land into wasteland, lawns or pavement and eventually wiping ourselves out (because we can't survive without a healthy land base or healthy minds).

The songs are hymns, songs with deep spiritual

See BOWERBIRDS on page 10

BOWERBIRDS
IRON HORSE
MARCH 1
10 P.M.
$10

The Source

(the sors) n. key to discovering the weekly happenings of Western Mass.

Friday, February 29

EXHIBIT

This weekend, Smith College's annual spring bulb show, which contains over 5,000 bulb plants, will be on display from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. in the Lyman Conservatory. The exhibit is free and open daily to the public.

FILM

The Five College Film Festival will take place. There will be a screening of student works, followed by an awards presentation. The event starts at 7 p.m. in Stoddard Hall Auditorium at Smith College, and is free and open to the public.

CONFERENCE

A conference at Smith College titled "Bamako: Globalization on Trial in Africa," which started yesterday and will continue through Saturday. Visit www.fivecolleges.edu/sites/african for more information.

PLAY

Tony Kushner's "A Bright Room Called Day" will be performed at 8 p.m. The performance will take place in the Hallie Flanagan Studio Theater, Mendenhall Center for the Performing Arts at Smith College. Doors open at 7:30. Tickets are $8 for the general public and $5 for students and seniors.

Saturday, March 1

DANCE

Five College Faculty Dance Concert the show will premier varied works by Rodger Blum of Smith College, Paul Dennis of UMass, Tim Early of Mount Holyoke College and Cathy Nicoll and Fritha Pengelly of Hampshire College. The performance begins at 8 p.m. and takes place in Theater 14 at the Mendenhall Center for Performing Arts. Tickets are $9 for the general public and $5 for students and seniors.

Sunday, March 2

READING

Smith College's "Gallery of Readers" series continues with a reading by two local writers, Carolyn Kindahl and John M. Corbett. It takes place at 4 p.m. in the Neilson Library Browsing Room at Smith College. The event is free and open to the public.

Compiled by Allie Roth, Collegian Staff

YES COMPUTERS
Apple Specialist

In downtown Northampton!

Now featuring the ASUS Eee PC

The Pioneer Valley's premier Apple- and Asus-authorized dealer.

- Ultraportable: 7 inches and 2 pounds.
- Over 40 built-in programs, including a full office suite.
- Rugged, shock-resistant design.
- Simple, intuitive, Linux-based operating system.
- Built-in wireless Internet.

Present this coupon for $50 off any Asus Eee PC!
expires 3/7/08

$395!

Yes Computers | 38 Pleasant St, Northampton, MA | 413-585-0007

Hitmakers set to hit-up Pearl Street

By Ian Nelson
Collegian Staff

In a March 2005 interview with BBC Radio 1, N.E.R.D.'s Pharrell Williams, one half of big-time top 40 producers The Neptunes, seemed to be preparing an obituary: "N.E.R.D. is dead," he claimed.

Perhaps scripted directly from the meaning of the band's acronymic name, which stands for No one Ever Really Dies, Pharrell and N.E.R.D. have risen from the grave to perform a string of March dates in support of their new record due this spring. The dates seem to serve as a warm-up to their spot on Kanye West's "Glow In The Dark" tour, which also features Chicago rapper Lupe Fiasco and Rhianna of "Umbrella" fame.

N.E.R.D. is made up of The Neptunes (Pharrell and Chad Hugo), and their friend Shay Haley. The band was conceived in response to The Neptunes' interest of crafting sounds differing from their previous production work. The young duo was discovered at a talent show by Teddy Riley, founder of 90s R&B mainstays Blackstreet. After high school, The Neptunes dived right into the music industry, producing tracks for Blackstreet as well as all-female trios SWV and Total. They began to craft a unique sound, which propelled them to mainstream success, producing cuts for Mase and N.O.R.E. in the late 90s.

Hit after hit spewed from The Neptunes' heads, including ODB's "Got Your Money," Mystikal's "Shake Ya Ass," and Britney Spears' 2001 smash "I'm A Slave 4 U," which earned them their first number one hit. In the same year, The Neptunes were named "Producers of the Year" by both the Source Awards and the Billboard Music Awards.

The year 2001 also saw the European release of N.E.R.D.'s debut record "In Search Of…," which The Neptunes found too similar to their previous sound, so they moved to employ pop group Spymob to add some edgier instrumentation to their funky R&B and pop songs. Two singles were birthed from the record, the heavier "Lapdance" and the huge drum sounds featured on the anthem "Rock Star." The album was released in the United States in 2002, earning the trio moderate success, including winning 2002's Shortlist Music Prize, which recognizes the best album of the year selling under 500,000 copies.

N.E.R.D. took a break in 2003, giving way to The Neptunes' first whole record featuring their own name, "The Neptunes Present… Clones," which hit number one on the Billboard 200 chart. The duo received two Grammy's in 2004, one for "Producers of the Year," and one for their contribution to Justin Timberlake's solo debut "Justified." The Neptunes are credited with jumpstarting Timberlake's post-'N Sync career, as well as discovering female R&B singer Kelis, and brothers Pusha T and Malice of hip hop duo Clipse.

N.E.R.D. resurged in 2004 with their record "Fly Or Die." The trio evolved a bit by learning the necessary instruments to perform by themselves live, with Pharrell on drums and Hugo learning guitar. The album remained true to the same adolescent ideas found on "In Search Of…" and continued the funky, soulful, radio-friendly fare.

In early 2005, Pharrell announced N.E.R.D.'s demise, claiming that The Neptunes would not stop producing and their friendship with Shay Haley had not diminished, though disagreements with their manager at Virgin Records led to the group's shutdown. The Neptunes continued their reign over top 40 radio, and have worked with big names such as Ludacris, Busta Rhymes, Usher, Fabolous, T.I., Gwen Stefani, Slim Thug, and legends Snoop Dogg and Jay-Z. They have also re-mixed artists from Prince to Limp Bizkit, from the Rolling Stones to Janet Jackson. The Neptunes also have production credits on Madonna's new album due out April 29.

The new record, scheduled to drop this spring, has been rumored to be titled "N.3.R.D.," though MTV has referred to it as "N.R.3.D." Either way, the album's title is a clever play on the group's name. It will be the third album under the N.E.R.D. appellation. Pharrell has not given much of a description of what the record might sound like, merely describing it as "a Red Bull with growth hormones in it."

Their month-long warm-up dates precede the "Glow In The Dark" tour, which also features Kanye West and Lupe Fiasco. Those two emcees, along with Pharrell, make up the hip hop super group CRS, or Child Rebel Soldiers. Their only track recorded together currently, "US Placers," features a verse from each member over a loop of "The Eraser" by Thom Yorke.

Lupe Fiasco hinted at an entire record with the other two in an interview with www.sohh.com last summer, though nothing is officially planned and they are "going wait until everything settles down some," before ultimately deciding the groups' future. The impending tour, which stops in Boston May 15, allows for a bringing-together of the three.

N.E.R.D. will be at the Pearl Street Night Club Saturday, March 1. The show starts at 8:30, and general admission tickets are $25 at the door, $22.50 in advance through the venue's Web site, www.ibeg.com.

Ian Nelson can be reached at inelson@student.umass.edu.

N.E.R.D.
PEARL STREET
MARCH 1
8:30
$25, $22.50

UMass alum brings island sound to Noho

By Shelby Landeck
Collegian Correspondent

After years of playing back up, John Cruz returned to Northampton's Iron Horse Music Hall to headline a show of his own.

After a 50 minute set by Cruz's longtime friend Joe Keenan, who joked about being "demoted to the opener," Cruz took the stage with percussionist Jefferies, whose talent in percussion was matched only by her animated facial expressions, and electric guitar player John Caban.

Positioned on the left side of the stage, Jefferies center stage and Caban to the right, the trio kicked off the set with the upbeat title track off of Cruz's latest release, "One of These Days." As a preface to a song talking about being happy just sitting on a front porch and rocking, Cruz joked, "I'm at the age when I should be buying a house, but everything in Hawaii is so expensive. I've got my eyes on a porch right now ... It's a really nice porch."

The crowd reveled in Cruz's humor and soon fell into a trance while listening to Cruz's slow, soulful follow up "Let Us Dream," a song born out of a poem Cruz wrote at 19, just before leaving Hawaii for college at the University of Massachusetts.

As people began to shout requests, Cruz laughed and said, "A few weeks ago a guy in Maui yelled out, 'Play Smoke Two Joints!' (a Sublime song John played at shows when he was younger) I didn't play the song. I had him removed. I have that kind of power now," Cruz explained laughing at his fame.

Cruz then invited Mark Herschler, of the Herschler Brothers to the stage. Cruz had played with the Herschler Brothers after college and the Iron Horse Music Hall in Northampton was one of their frequent gigs. "It's really great to be back," said Herschler.

The reunited bunch then launched into "Hurricane," the feel-good song moving the crowd to sway gently as Cruz sang, "I feel good, ain't looking back, and it's a hell of a sign I've got to keep on track. I was down, but now I'm back on my feet again."

"Angel," a song that's guitar arrangements made the small Iron Horse feel like a tropical island, despite the snow and freezing rain that was coming down outside, was next on the set list. "I brought the sunshine yesterday," said Cruz, "but those snowflakes are something else man."

Half way into the set, whether due to the music flowing from the stage, or the alcohol flowing from the bar, the crowd loosened up a bit. Couples began to stand up and dance between the tightly-packed tables to "Ku'u Home O Kahalu'u," a smooth song written by a friend of Cruz's in Hawaii.

Just before taking a short hiatus, Cruz injected life into the crowd with a break from the sounds of the islands, and belted out "Baby's Gone Blues," a song heavily influenced by the blues music he was exposed to during his time in the Northeast.

The crowd quickly became quite and contemplative as Cruz and Keenan retook the stage to play "Grave Digger." The pair, who has been together since Cruz first moved to the area, complemented each other well, and the song came through beautifully.

Keenan then left the stage and Jefferies and Caban resumed their positions for a song that has become an unofficial Hawaiian anthem, "Island Style." The song came much to the delight of the crowd, who if too bashful to stand up and dance, were swaying rhythmically in their seats.

The slow soulful ballad, "My First Child," which Cruz claimed was to be the last song calmed the crowd, which sat quietly taking in Cruz's warm vocals. Cruz wasn't fooling anyone when he walked of stage at the song's close, only to immediately return and give the audience just what it wanted. He returned to play "Shine On," a hit from his first album, "Acoustic Soul."

Cruz left the stage for the final time to a standing ovation and screams of Hawaiian protest, "Hou, Hou!" which in Hawaiian means, "More, More!" While Cruz failed to offer up another encore, he did provide the crowd with their own tropical escape, a place to forget the cold New England weather. Even though it only lasted an hour and a half, it was just enough.

Shelby Landeck can be reached at slandeck@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY JOHNCRUZ.COM

Hawaiian-born Cruz caused the Northampton audience to rise to their feet and dance along to his guitar-driven tropical songs. He injected his personality into the entire performance.

Band brings unique view on music, life to Iron Horse meaning to us in which we decry the devastation the culture at large is causing, and with which we announce our desire to sidestep that culture and be part of the positive culture that has always existed alongside this destructive culture since the beginning of time. We don't really need to do this to the Earth's body - killing all these ecosystems in the name of profit. This culture is like a smallpox disease that will maim the Earth and make it suffer, but leave it alive. At least we don't have the ability to totally wipe out life on Earth.

BOWERBIRDS from page 8

BW: The album's lyrics make frequent references to nature. Do you find this to be a constant source of inspiration for you?

BT: Yes. We decided to move out to the country, after having spent a lot of time in cities and in wilder places, and we finally realized we feel a lot calmer and more in touch with life when we can interact with wild plants and animals on a regular basis, and when we have some peace and quiet. Also, it's a lot easier to not spend a ton of money, which means we don't have to make a lot of money, which means there is less reason for us to do work that supports endeavors that are exploiting people or nature.

BW: I have read that you were building a home from largely recycled materials without the aid of power tools. What inspired such a rustic project, what have you taken from it, and what's the latest status on it?

BT: We were inspired to build our own home by our friend Aimee Argote, of the amazing band Des Ark, who told us she was using the money her grandmother had saved for her college education to instead build a mini-cabin to live in, so she wouldn't have to pay rent and could be able to afford to tour and always have a place to come home to.

We had been thinking about buying a house either in town or in the country. It turned out that we really couldn't afford to buy a house anywhere, if we wanted to be able to tour and also make mortgage payments, and still be able to work on art and music as much as we wanted to. We bought an airstream and started looking around for cheap land in the country, and we found some really great land in a cool area with plenty of interesting people, and pretty close to Chapel Hill and Raleigh. We were going to try to build our home sort of normally, until we realized that would cost us like $60,000, so we are trying to build it for a sixth of that.

It's really fun to scrounge around for used materials, and we are saving a lot of money, and the house will have more character. We started the cabin by using logs from a 100-year-old tobacco barn that we dismantled off of someone's property, so it was free. We are totally learning as we go, but we have gotten some pointers from a couple friends. Right now we are finishing framing the roof, and then what we have to still do is: put on the roofing and siding, order wool for the insulation and install it, finish the whole interior of the house, install the windows and doors, add the porches and balcony, and like 100 other things. It's kind of overwhelming. But every night at the airstream we go out to the cabin as it's getting dark and just sit in it and feel very, very happy.

I'd say something we are taking from it is it is automatically simplifying our priorities and slowing our minds down to a calmer pace. It's connecting us to the weather more. We get to feel what it's like to spend a day outside working in 17-degree weather with a bad wind chill. We get to really appreciate things like long underwear, our tiny wood stove in the airstream, down coats (we are birds) and warm blankets.

BW: Do you see the experience making its way into any of your future music?

BT: Yeah, definitely. One of our new songs is actually a sort of love song duet between me and Phil, and it's not a syrupy version of love, but it has more to do with the way we fight but keep coming back to each other. I think the process of building a home together is much harder on a relationship than playing in a band together or running a design business together, but at the same time is an amazing thing to share.

BW: Have you ever played Northampton before? If so what are your thoughts on the city and the musical environment? If not, what kind of atmosphere are you anticipating?

BT: We haven't ever been to Northampton before. We have no idea what to expect.

BW: Are there any plans for a new album in the near future? If so what can listeners anticipate?

BT: We are re-releasing "Hymns for a Dark Horse on Dead Oceans," with two bonus tracks, and it will also be on vinyl for the first time. This should come out in April or May, in stores nationwide. Then we will be recording and releasing another album sometime soon, depending on how quickly it comes together. We are playing a few new songs on tour, so people can get a sneak preview.

Bowerbirds play along with openers Phosphorescent this Saturday, March 1, at The Iron Horse in Northampton. Tickets are $10, and doors open at 10 p.m. For more info on the band or to purchase tickets visit www.iheg.com.

Brian Wood can be reached at bywood@student.umass.edu.

BRIAN TEDDER/COLLEGIAN

UMass coach Travis Ford isn't the only one excited about the recent production from Matt Glass, Tony Gaffney, Gary Correia and the rest of the Minuteman bench.

Glass among bench players stepping up

Freshman guard providing big lift

By Eli Rosenswaike
Collegian Staff

Matt Glass got the standard treatment from his teammates following Massachusetts's victory over St. Bonaventure on Sunday.

He got made fun of.

Even the media ribbed him a little bit, as one reporter jokingly asked Glass if he could remember the last time he attempted a 2-point shot.

The freshman guard had no such recollection.

"I guess I'm kind of a specialist right now," Glass said laughing, referring to his 3-point launching habits this season and that day against the Bonnies.

After hitting four 3-pointers and scoring more points (14) than minutes played (13), Glass was the center of attention after the victory. As he was leaving a rare postgame press conference appearance to further discuss his performance on the radio, a teammate made fun of how important Glass suddenly became.

It was definitely meant to be a joke at the time, but Glass – and the rest of the UMass bench – will be imperative for the Minutemen in their hopes of reaching the NCAA Tournament for the first time since 1998.

"At the beginning of the season we weren't getting a lot from the bench, myself included," fellow reserve Tony Gaffney said before practice yesterday. "The spark they've provided has played a huge role in the three-game win streak we got going, and going into the [Atlantic 10] Tournament it's going to be huge too."

Gaffney and Glass have been the main cogs off the bench recently for UMass coach Travis Ford. Gaffney doesn't score often and Glass doesn't do much other than shoot from long-range, but the energy each provides makes up for some of their deficiencies.

"Between the two of them, I call them 'crazy,'" backup point guard Gary Correia said. "Their approach to the game is to go out there and run around, fly around, and their effort always makes up for a lot of things."

On the offensive end Glass runs around, but usually to a familiar perch into one of the two corners.

"I try to hide in that corner a little but to see if they'll forget about me," Glass said after hitting four 3-pointers against SBU. "Everybody focuses on guys who can create things for our team so it's easy to just forget about certain guys. So I just sort of hide out there and if the opportunity comes, I try to make the most out of it."

Glass has averaged a mere 5.9 minutes per game, but that is likely to increase as Ford's scoring options off the bench are limited. The 6-foot-7 guard leads the team in 3-point field goal percentage at 45.5 percent, and the Minutemen will need that lift when Gary Forbes and Chris Lowe are getting a rest.

Correia has also given valuable minutes in lieu of Lowe. Much like the starting floor general, Correia brings great quickness that UMass's up-tempo offense requires from the ball-handler. He hasn't contributed much in the scoring department, but he takes care of the basketball (35 assists compared to 15 turnovers) and gets his teammates involved.

One of those guys he sets up is Glass. And that means a 3-point attempt. In 141 minutes this season, Glass has taken one two-point field goal. It was a miss. But he hasn't missed often on his 33 3-point tries.

"We need Matt Glass to produce. I thought the bench was probably the best it's been all year long as far as production-wise. They gave us a huge, huge boost," Ford said after the game against the Bonnies. "All these guys [Gaffney, Glass, Correia and Luke Bonner] need to be at the point where they understand their role. We tell them, 'Don't hurt us and if you can really help us that's a great bonus.'"

An added bonus would be to see Glass attempt a shot within the 3-point line.

"I have to look to expand my game a little bit but right now things are clicking," Glass said.

Maybe he should just stick to what he knows. After all, he's a "star" now.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosenswa@dailycollegian.com.

Spiders await UMass

By Michael King
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's basketball team controls its own destiny. If it win its final three regular season games and have a respectable showing in the Atlantic 10 tournament, the Minutemen can be reasonably assured of their first bid to the NCAA tournament since the 1998 season.

The team's quest begins tomorrow at Richmond. The Spiders (15-11, 8-5 Atlantic 10) are one of the more surprising squads in the A-10 this season. With an 8-5 record in conference, Richmond currently sits tied for third place. A victory would place the Minutemen (18-9, 7-6 A-10) in line to earn a bye of the first round of the A-10 tournament by virtue of finishing among the top four teams in the regular season.

But before the Maroon and White begin contemplating its conference tournament situation, UMass coach Travis Ford knows the Spiders pose a challenge for the Minutemen.

"Just reading their comments after last night's game, they're flowing with confidence," Ford said, referring to Richmond's 20-point dismantling of St. Bonaventure Wednesday.

Even though the Spiders pose unique matchup problems for the Minutemen, with their methodical, slow-down offense, Ford wants his team to remember to play its own style of basketball.

"We're two totally different teams," Ford said. "Last year we concentrated a lot on them, and we still have a game plan again this time. But we need to be who we are. We're probably not going to change as much to defend these guys."

Yet the Spiders maintain a post presence that could expose the Minutemen's weakness in the paint. In the team's victory over SBU, sophomore center Dan Geriot scored a career-high 35 points, including 21 in the first half.

Though Geriot is adept in the paint offensively, his skill set allows him to play effectively from the perimeter. In addition, Geriot leads the Spiders in both scoring and rebounding.

"You have to understand how he scores," Ford said. "He probably scores quicker in the post than anyone I've ever seen. He has a very unorthodox shot. He does a great job creating angles for himself in the post to score. He's a big-time problem."

It remains to be seen if senior Dante Milligan or junior Luke Bonner will be charged with the primary responsibility of guarding Geriot. Milligan has enjoyed strong offensive performances in his last few games, but the senior is prone to collecting fouls on defense, especially against superior big men.

Meanwhile, Bonner prefers to take shots from beyond the arc, yet the junior has shown little value on offense and has been a liability at times.

If Geriot tries to pull his defender away from the basket with his 3-point shot, the Minutemen will need Forbes to play a significant role on the defensive glass.

Regardless of the outcome, fatigue should not be an issue for the Minutemen. Though Ford acknowledged his team's sluggish nature after Sunday's win over St. Bonaventure, the Minutemen will have enjoyed six days without competition.

"I think it came at a good time, but we won't know until Saturday," Ford said. "You could see Sunday that our guys were still fatigued from the Rhode Island game, so I think it came at a good time."

Maple Farm Foods
OPENING SOON
Deli with Boarshead and more!
ZUCCHINI 99¢ lb
CANTALOUPE $1.99 ea. or 2 for $3.00
CALIFLOWER $1.79 ea. or 2 for $3.00
GREEN PEPPERS 99¢ lb
STRAWBERRIES $1.99 ea.
BROCCOLI CROWNS 99¢ lb
PINEAPPLE $1.99 ea.
JUMBO EGGS $1.59 dozen
ALL GUIDA MILK $3.29 1 gallon
Open 7 Days 9-8
10 So. Maple St., Hadley • 585-1117

A-10 tourney on horizon

Seeding on the line in remaining games

By Mike Connors
Collegian Staff

Though not replicating the success of last year's regular season, the Massachusetts women's basketball team will once again return to the Atlantic 10 Tournament, barring an unlikely combination of regular-season finales from throughout the conference.

The Minutewomen put themselves in prime position to qualify for the tournament after last night's 70-50 home win over Saint Bonaventure, coupled with Saint Joseph's defeat of La Salle, 70-52.

UMass would fail to get into the tournament if La Salle, Saint Joseph's, Dayton, Charlotte, and Xavier all won, with the Minutwomen losing.

If this were to transpire, the team's fate would lie in the hands of a coin toss with URI.

Last season, UMass entered the tournament as a seven seed and jumped out to two large leads against St. Bonaventure, then a 10 seed. However, they squandered a 16-point lead with 15 minutes remaining and suffered a first-round loss.

With one conference game left this season, the Minutewomen find themselves tied with three other teams for the final four spots in the tournament. Rhode Island, Duquesne and Saint Louis share 5-8 records with UMass.

If the Minutewomen defeat Temple this weekend, they'll have an improved chance of going into the tournament with a nine or 10 seed rather than the final 12th or missing it all together.

Tatham rebounding

Alisha Tatham has given the Minutewomen excellent defending and has also scored some key baskets this season – including the game-winner against Fordham – but in the past two games the senior co-captain has established herself as a force on the glass.

Tatham grabbed nine rebounds in the team's 56-46 win over Dayton this past Saturday and recorded a game-high 14 rebounds in the Minutewomen's victory last night.

The Canadian national also finished second on the team with 15 points on an efficient 7-of-8 from the floor against the Bonnies.

Tatham averages 3.4 rebounds on the season but averaged only 2.7 before these two recent games.

UMass has outrebounded opponents by double-digits in both these games, an area they've struggled in this season.

With their efforts in the last two matchups, the Minutewomen now have a slight edge against their opponents in the rebounding department this season (35.2 to 35 per game).

Free throw success

While UMass has struggled with rebounding and turnovers this season, it hasn't had trouble shooting the ball.

They lead the conference shooting 44.3 percent from the floor and rank near the top of the A-10 in free-throw shooting. Only St. Louis (75.7 percent) is ahead of the UMass's 74.8 percent shooting from the charity stripe.

Since the ball is in their hands the majority of the time, it's no surprise that Pam Rosanio and Kate Mills lead the Minutewomen in free-throw attempts and makes.

Rosanio has been to the line 145 times, converting 112 (77.2 percent). Mills doesn't get to the line as frequently, but her 87.1 percent (61-of-70) is good for second in the conference.

Free-throw shooting becomes important in the postseason because of the more intense atmosphere, so this strength could benefit UMass, especially if the game is tightly contested in the final few minutes.

Stefanie Gerardot (82 percent) and Sakera Young (79.1 percent) are also effective free-throw shooters, while Teya Wright and Tatham struggle, shooting 65 and 56.3 percent, respectively.

Mike Connors can be reached at mjconnor@student.umass.edu.

FJ Stanley/Collegian

Alisha Tatham and the Minutewomen travel to play Temple tommorow night.

Owls host UMass in key conference matchup Saturday

Steve Games
Collegian Staff

It was one week ago that the Massachusetts women's basketball team was on the brink of missing out on the Atlantic 10 tournament. Today, the Minutewomen have the 10th seed and look to move up.

UMass (13-15, 5-8 A-10) travels to Temple for one of the toughest matchups of the season Saturday. Temple (18-11, 11-2 A-10) is in second place and riding a four-game winning streak. The Owls are 11-2 at home, while the Minutewomen have struggled on the road this season with a 2-11 record.

UMass defeated St. Bonaventure Wednesday night at the Mullins Center, with 22 points from senior forward Pam Rosanio. They are in 10th place, but with a win they could move up as high as the eighth seed.

The Minutewomen will look to carry over their consistent play from the past two games, in which they outrebounded their opponents and turned the ball over less than 20 times.

Senior forward Kate Mills did everything for the Minutewomen against St. Bonaventure, coming close to a quadruple-double with 10 points, seven rebounds, seven assists and eight blocks. According to ESPN research, the only Division 1 women's level player to set the mark was UCLA's Ann Meyers, who had 20 points, 14 rebounds, 10 assists and 10 steals in a 1978 game against Stephen F. Austin State University. Mills averages a team-high 17.6 points, 6.9 rebounds and 2.25 blocks per game on the season.

She will need to bring her shot-blocking ability and also stay out of foul trouble against Temple. In Temple's last game, against Saint Louis, the Owls made two school records when they went to the foul line 55 times and made 32 free throws.

UMass is 18-28 against Temple all time and has not won since 2002-03 season. The last time UMass visited Temple was in 2006 and the Owls won by 35 points. Last season, the Minutewomen played the Owls much closer losing, 63-59. In that game Mills scored 23 points and pulled down eight rebounds.

Senior guard Ashley Morris leads the Owls with 15.3 points and four assist per game. Morris is a three-point threat, having made 58 3-pointers this season. Freshman guard Lindsay Kimmel is the other outside threat. Kimmel has made 48 shots this season, 42 from 3-point range.

Temple is not ranked in the Top 25, however, the Owls have defeated two Top 25 teams this season. On Jan. 19, they defeated conference rival No. 13 George Washington, 68-66, and took down then-No. 22 Purdue, 61-47, on Nov. 24.

Steve Games can be reached at sgames@student.umass.edu.

Take Out a classifieds ad

THE DAILY COLLEGIAN

now offers free online classifieds for students at

WWW.UMASSLIST.COM

- More complete, local and relevant category listings than any and all competitor web sites combined
- Users can setup daily e-mail updates for relevant listings. No more searching for apartments, now they come to you.
- Post unlimited online listings
- Little to no spam

By listing on this site you are supporting your local college newspaper, The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

Crimson come to Amherst

By Melissa Turtinen
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's lacrosse team will host Harvard on Saturday at 1 p.m.

This will be a "game of tactics," according to John Sinnett of UMass Media Relations, because Harvard's assistant coach Sarah Albrecht was the assistant coach for UMass last year.

"We're a different team than we were last year. [Albrecht] got to know our players pretty well. She has seen us play a bunch of times. We're looking for a great matchup," said UMass coach Alexis Venechanos.

The Minutewomen won 18-7 when they took on the Crimson last year, but Venechanos thinks this year will be different.

"We're a completely different team and so are they," Venechanos said. "They are well coached and have a great team. I'm expecting two strong teams competing the whole game and maybe into overtime. I'm expecting a battle, a battle of Massachusetts."

Last week Harvard (1-0) played Holy Cross and scored 19 goals while allowing two. The Minutewomen (1-2) took on the Crusaders in their first game of the season Feb. 19, winning 9-5.

"[Harvard is] clicking on attack and they are clicking on defense," Venechanos said. "We have got to bring our 'A' game in order for us to get the results we want."

Harvard's stand-out players are Jess Halpern and Kaitlin Martin. Freshman midfielder Halpern was named Womenslax.com Rookie of the Week. She is a young player who has been stepping up in important games, according to Venechanos. Martin, a junior attack for the Crusaders, has also been playing well.

"They have a sound defense and a smart team," Venechanos said.

The Minutewomen are going into this game focusing on just the game at hand instead of getting caught up in the big picture, according to Venechanos. They are worrying about each play and how they can make it a great game on Saturday.

In recent games the Maroon and White have been turning the ball over too often and that has been a main cause for losses against Maryland and Boston University in the last week.

"We keep saying there is only one ball on the field," Venechanos said. "We get there first but we can't keep it on our stick. We've just got to keep possession. Whoever has the ball longer in the game usually wins."

The Minutewomen have also been practicing on keeping possession to get high-quality shots on net. Typically they are rushed in the offensive zone and the shots they take are ones the defenders are allowing.

They are also working on defensive communication as well as bringing the ball up the field safely. The Minutewomen are doing well at getting some shots off in the attack, one-on-one dodges and finding the open person off of the double team.

"Hopefully we will be getting more opportunities than they do [during the game]," Venechanos said. "Each player is excited for each other; they want to go out and play UMass lacrosse on Saturday."

Melissa Turtinen can be reached at mturtine@student.umass.edu.

Brian Tetreault/Collegian

Junior attacker Julie Pasquantonio and the Minutewomen host Harvard Saturday afternoon at McGuirk Stadium. UMass has lost two straight games since winning its season opener.

Seniors leading both men's and women's ski teams

By David Brinch
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's and women's ski teams got a major lift from their seniors last weekend, as Eliza Hawkins and Jason Small both finished first overall at the U.S. Collegiate Snowsport Association Regional, leading the Minutewomen and Minutemen to second- and first-place finishes, respectively.

"It was obviously a very good weekend," UMass coach Skip Fox said. "Our two senior stars shined. Jason was in the second and the first and Eliza in the third and the second, and to come out as the individual champions of the event, they both skied well."

It was definitely a team effort for the Minutemen in the giant slalom event, as four out of five skiers placed in the top 10 at the USCSA Regional.

Small took first with a combined time of one minute, 59.67 seconds, while Ian Hohmeister took sixth and Andrew Hawes took ninth. Matthew Small came in 10th, but his score did not count, as only the top three finishers for each team can score for their respective team.

For the women, Eliza Hawes was dominant, finishing the giant slalom with a time 2:05.61 seconds, while Emily Shilleto finished fourth. Freshman standout Jamie Talouomis scored for the Maroon and White, finishing in 14th place with a time of 2:10.91. Sophomores Ashley Hawes and Heidi Skinner also finished with impressive runs.

The team will look to continue its hot streak as it heads to Sunday River, Maine, this Sunday for the United States Collegiate Skiing Association National Championships.

"I am hoping everybody skis the way they did last weekend," Fox said.

UMass faces not only its Eastern Intercollegiate Skiing Association foes but also some tough teams from out West coming to the East Coast to compete in the championships.

"Our biggest competition is going to be Colby-Sawyer College and Plymouth State for the women," Fox said.

"Coming in from out West, Rocky Mountain College and the University of Sierra Nevada are both very strong. It is going to be a challenge but we have an advantage of being in the East," he said.

Teams like Colorado State, Idaho and Puget Sound will give UMass a challenge, but Fox believes if the team has a good couple of days, it will finish strong and produce good results.

Fox also realizes the differences in skiing conditions from the East Coast to the West Coast.

"It is a different ballgame in terms of snow conditions," Fox said.

"They are used to skiing on softer snow, which requires a little more touch. We are used to skiing on the boiler plain ice which you get here in the east, which definitely requires tough, technical skills."

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu.

NEC's up next for UM

After full week off, runners set for race

By Adam Miller
Collegian Staff

After a week off, the Massachusetts track and field teams travel to Boston this weekend for the New England Championship.

This meet is unique from the others throughout the year because it is the only time UMass will compete with Division II and Division III teams. Because of the set-up, the New England Championships is one of the deepest championship rounds all year.

The New England Championships is another qualifier for the men's IC4A and women's ECAC championship. The first qualifier came at the Atlantic 10 Championship.

Both UMass teams are concerned with the depth of this field because it lacks athletes in scoring positions. The men's team risks falling out of contention for the top 10 with one or two poor finishes this weekend.

"Our margin for error is very small so we have to compete at a high level," UMass men's coach Ken O'Brien said.

Last season the men fell just short of the top 10 with a 12th-place finish. O'Brien believes the Minutemen can improve from last year with several strong showings from their top athletes.

UMass will rely on its distance runners, sophomores Tyler Cotto and Nicolai Naranjo, along with junior Jesse Regnier to come out on top.

"If we convert those 10 opportunities at a high level, we could finish in the top five," O'Brien said.

UMass women's coach Julie LaFreniere faces a similar dilemma because there are not enough athletes to fill each event. Last year the Minutewomen went into Boston with a smaller team, but finished 23rd.

"This is a deeper team than last year but this team isn't nearly to the depth that I want," LaFreniere said. "We don't have people in every event, which will hurt us."

The Minutewomen have many of New England's best athletes, but they will have to step up their efforts and achieve personal records to reach their goal of a top-10 finish.

In addition to this sense of urgency, senior Christina DeRosa has to must improve her time in a race not typical for her.

DeRosa is in the top three in New England for the 5K, but does not have the same level of success in the 3K.

Although her best event is the 5K, she already qualified for the ECAC during the A-10 Championship on Feb. 16 and will not run it again as a precautionary measure to keep her fresh for the remainder of the indoor season.

"I don't want her to keep pounding at the 5K week after week," LaFreniere said.

Injuries have already plagued the Minutewomen. Senior Jen Curtin suffered a twisted ankle during practice this week and missed working out in preparation for this weekend. Curtin's ankle has nagged her constantly due to a history of sprains.

Her participation in the New England Championship will be ultimately a last-minute decision based on how she feels.

Adam Miller can be reached at ajmill@student.umass.edu.

Comix

"I MAY NOT AGREE WITH YOUR OPINION, BUT I WILL SMACK YOU IN THE FACE IF YOU OPEN YOUR MOUTH AGAIN."

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

APT. FOR RENT

Center of town 1,2,3 bedrooms. NOW SHOWING for June and Sept. NO FEES. Schedule a showing 253-7879 view apts. at www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Free Ride to Church & back in Dwight Chapel Van Be at Haigis Mall @ 10:00am or Converse Hall @ 10:20am Sundays www.dwightchapel.org See you there!

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520

Japanese speakers! Rent us your ears! $12/hr for participating in listening experiments contact phonetics lab. phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu 545-6837

RAFT GUIDES
Zoar Outdoor is seeking adventuresome people to be full and part-time summer raft guides. Learn how to guide a raft during our training program and spend the summer on the Deerfield River. Applicants should have customer service experience and a positive attitude and be comfortable working as a team or independently. Application deadline: Feb. 15th. Call 800-532-7483 or see www.zoaroutdoor.com/jobs.htm for an application.

CAMP TAKAJO, Naples, Maine, Noted for picturesque lakefront location, exceptional facalities. Mid-June thru mid-August. Counselor positions in tennis, baseball, basketball, soccer, lacrosse, golf, flag football, roller hockey, field hockey, swimming, sailing, water skiing, gymnastics, dance, horseback riding, archery, weight training, newspaper, photography, video, woodworking, ceramics/pottery, crafts, fine arts, silver jewelry, copper enamel, nature study, radio/electronics, theater, costumer, piano accompanist, music instrumentalist, backpacking, rock climbing, canoeing/kayaking, ropes course, secretarial, nanny. Call Takajo at (866) 356-2267 Submit application online at takajo.com Will be in the Campus Center Job Fair tomorrow

Put up Posters! Through summer, car, sell, commitment needed. Up to $12/hr w/bonus. 20 hrs between Mon-Wed, excellent communicator, fast-paced, punctual, resume and formal cover letter to postering@art-spromo.org. Hiring ASAP.

THE GREATEST SUMMER OF YOUR LIFE CAMP PONTIAC Is coming to UMASS! Located in NY State Camp Pontiac, a premier co-ed overnight camp in New York, is looking for fun, enthusiastic and mature individuals who can teach and assist in all areas of athletics, aquatics, the arts, or as a general bunk counselor. Interviews will be held on Thursday, Feb. 21st 9:00AM-11:30AM Campus Center/Student Union Complex-Room 901. Please email: stefanie@campppontiac.com or call Stefanie at 516-626-7668 to set up an interview

French speakers! Rent us your ears! $12/hr for participating in listening experiments. Contact the phonetics lab. phonetics_lab.linguist.umass.edu 545-6837

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

Marketing Intern As a Marketing Intern (paid position) you will assist in marketing efforts to grow sales of the leading economic policy analysis model. Responsibilities include developing presentations and other marketing material, writing for newsletters, website, and blog, and assisting with internet marketing, promotions, campaigns, and other marketing efforts. Please send cover letter and resume to Fred Treyz, REMI, 433 West St., Amherst, MA 01002. fax 413-549-1038. resumes@remi.com. REMI is an eoe and maintains a drug-free workplace.

SERVICES

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthright.org.

Concerned About Your Eating?
Do you eat too little? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic, 577-5101

TAPESTRY HEALTH providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling &rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable, Safe. 413-548-9992. 27 Pray St. Amherst. www.tapestryhealth.org

SERVICES

Spring Break from $199 Land price starting from $199 for 7 days. We also have an all inclusive hotel start from $799 per person. Give us a call today it's not to late to still get away 1-800-GET-SUN-1

APT. FOR RENT

grow sales of the leading economic policy analysis model. Responsibilities include developing presentations and other marketing material, writing for newsletters, website, and blog, and assisting with internet marketing, promotions, campaigns, and other marketing efforts. Please send cover letter and resume to Fred Treyz, REMI, 433 West St., Amherst, MA 01002. fax 413-549-1038. resumes@remi.com. REMI is an eoe and maintains a drug-free workplace.

SERVICES

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthright.org.

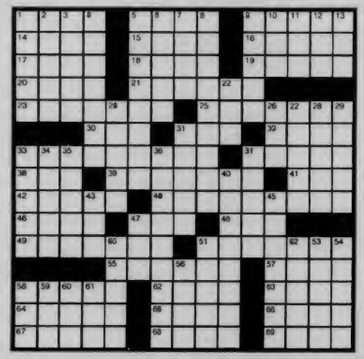
Concerned About Your Eating?
Do you eat too little? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic, 577-5101

TAPESTRY HEALTH providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling &rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable, Safe. 413-548-9992. 27 Pray St. Amherst. www.tapestryhealth.org

SERVICES

Spring Break from $199 Land price starting from $199 for 7 days. We also have an all inclusive hotel start from $799 per person. Give us a call today it's not to late to still get away 1-800-GET-SUN-1

ACROSS
1 Rogues
5 Jack or ace
9 Bindestiff
14 Shelter a fugitive, e.g.
15 Toward shelter
16 Fisherman's boot
17 Accomplished
18 Boys of the house
19 Strong adhesive
20 McClurg or Arsent
21 Medium-sized sofa
23 Places of worship
25 Porters
30 Consume
31 D.C. old-timer
32 Yemeni port
33 Alaska, once
37 Author Loos
38 ___ du Diable
39 Critical reports
41 Mouse-spotter's cry
42 Country trumpkins
44 Thrill
46 Idyllic place
47 Part of a TV
48 Classic car
49 Takes out text
51 Got a one-base hit
55 Spoiled
57 Al or Tipper
58 Marsh plant
62 Right-hand man
63 Emulate a couch potato
64 Once more
65 PGA props
66 Latin being
67 Wanderer
68 Makes a mistake
69 Fortuneteller



DOWN
1 Youngest son
2 Residence
3 Jeans material
4 More inclined?
5 Tape
6 Medicinal plants
7 Tenant's expense
8 Member of a fleet
9 Winter wool
10 Talkative tunes
11 Bother
12 Tex-
13 Snoop
22 Snakelike fish
24 Dens
26 Is able to
27 Farewell
28 One robbed to pay Paul
29 Serpent
31 Write letter by letter
33 Worn down
34 Give the slip to 35 Insurgent
36 Exaggerate
37 Colorado ski resort
40 Caution
43 Organic compound: suff.
45 Some switches
47 Corporate big wig
50 Prevailing tendency
51 Passover feast
52 Slack
53 Obliterate completely
54 Yield
56 Cake layer
58 ___ Antonio, TX
59 Psyche subdivision
60 Lake maker
61 Actress Scala

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

This is the doodle box.

Submit your doodles to comics@dailycollegian.com

Continuing & Professional Education
UMassAmherstOutreach
Summer Session 2008
No Matter where you are...
Session I: June 2 - July 10
Session II: July 14 - Aug 20
Online Gen Ed's
Small Classes
Great Faculty
PLAN AHEAD!
UMassULearn.net

Corny on the Cobb

By Jenn Cotrupi and Amanda Graziano

Rampage

EVERYTHING IS NEGOTIABLE!
...make a price, make the right price
233 N. Pleasant St. • Suite 27 &28 Amherst, Ma • (413) 687-0117

SALES GOING ON ALL DAY, EVERYDAY

Summer dresses
Video games coming soon
Looking for inspiring designers

Extra savings on 4 pairs of Jordans or Air Forces

Pepperoni Nipples!

			5		3
		1				3
8	3						2	4
		3	9		5	7
7	6						8	9
		4	7		1	2
1	9						3	2
		2				6
			1		6

Quote of the Weekend

"Aaaaaaaaaaaaaaarrrgh."

— Chewbacca

Caption Contest

Winning Caption Submitted by:Michael Berlin

Next week's contest will start on Monday. See the picture and submit captions at www.dailycollegian.com/caption

"Stop taking pictures and help me with this back zipper."

Horoscopes

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
You will find yourself oddly attracted to one of the large beasts on page seven of this fine piece of journalistic integrity.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Congratulations to whatever pisces has a birthday today. Technically, YOU'RE FIVE!

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
(Insert mildly offensive albeit amusing comment of your choosing here.)

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Allow yourself to be plucked like the petals of a beautiful flower. In plucking, there is pleasure.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Take the meaning of "Leap Day" literally by leaping into the air and flinging your flaccid body onto strangers as they pass by.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Fill a super soaker with BBQ sauce and spray the police. BBQ Pork!

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Spontaneously break into a medley of Motown songs as a means of celebrating the beauty of this day.

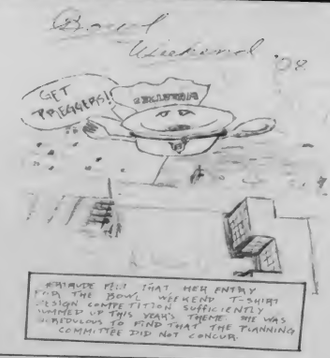
virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Put a basketball in your shirt and walk around with a bottle of booze. See if anyone questions your parenting skills.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Your jeans are overplayed and haggard. Try a nice pair of ecru colored, pleated slacks. YAY SLACKS!

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
The scent of your tuna sandwich is overpowering and unpleasant. Finish the sandwich or leave the premises.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Make crazy eyes at a timid looking person and see if you can make them cry.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
You have more in common with Rupaul than you think.



Retro Geek

By Steven Dickenson and Todd Clark

Bum Bull Bee

By Matthew P. Sloan

Sports Weekend

Friday, February 29, 2008 www.dailycollegian.com

Minutemen driving towards NCAA Tournament berth

Page 11

Women's LAX takes on Harvard

Page 13

MARCH

INSIDE: MINUTEMEN ROLL THROUGH RICHMOND | PAGE 8

THE MASSACHUSETTS
DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

PARTLY CLOUDY : HI: 47 LO: 38 | WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM | MONDAY, MARCH 3, 2008

Gas prices on the rise

UMass community searches for alternative transportation

BY ALYSSA MONTALBANO
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

The financial impact of the increase of gas prices throughout the country has taken the enjoyment out of traveling for many people.

Gas prices rose a full nine cents from last week, according to John Paul, a spokesman for the American Automobile Association (AAA). A Feb. 25 survey revealed that customers pay an average of $3.09 per gallon in the United States. Gas prices ranged from $2.95 to $3.25 per gallon last week.

According to the U.S. Energy Department, gas prices will peak near $3.40 this spring.

"If gasoline prices keep rising, it will reduce consumer spending on other products, which will be one more factor tending to push the U.S. economy into a recession," said University of Massachusetts economics professor David Kotz.

For UMass students living off campus, new gas prices are causing headaches.

"It has a huge effect on me," sophomore Loraine Burger said. "It's basically the main reason I work 25 hours a week while going to school full-time."

Sophomore Kevin Maio is also facing similar problems with gas. "I try to drive as little as possible now," he said. "Having my car on campus is a bonus, but with gas prices rising, it is more of a hassle and a real burden on my wallet."

Many people are finding alternate methods of transportation to save on gas, such as using the public transportation systems or carpooling with family and friends.

Members of the UMass community can take advantage of the Pioneer Valley Transit Authority (PVTA) public transportation system. The PVTA serves many purposes, bringing students back and forth to dorms, transporting students to off-campus housing, bringing students to local retail establishments and transporting students to the other Five College campuses.

"I try to drive as little as possible because gas has gotten so expensive," UMass senior Chris Soper said. "I take the PVTA every day to and from class, especially during the wintertime."

See GAS PRICES on page 2

As gas prices continue to rise, people across the country are feeling the financial effects of automobile travel. Members of the UMass community have turned to other options such as public transportation.

Local hospital improves patient care

New clinic to make blood-clot testing faster and more reliable

BY ELYSE WOOD
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Cooley Dickinson Hospital's cardiology department opened the doors of its new Anticoagulation Clinic on Feb. 19. The clinic treats referred patients taking anticoagulation medication, specifically Coumadin and Warfarin.

In the past, patients had to go to their physicians to be referred to a lab, then go to the lab to get a full blood sample and wait almost a week for the results to return to their physician.

The clinic offers a quick blood sampling method that provides results in about a minute. A registered nurse makes a dose adjustment is made within the clinic with the assistance of a software program that manages the clinic's data.

Patients taking anticoagulation medication are supposed to have an INR blood test monthly to readjust their medication dosage. The test measures the blood's ability to clot. The dose adjustment is made to reduce the medication side effect of bleeding and thromboembolic events, which are when clots break loose and are carried down the blood stream.

Anticoagulation medication is a blood thinner that helps prevent clots that lead to strokes. The most common disorder that is prescribed this medication is Atrial Fibrillation (AF), which causes an irregular heartbeat, making it more difficult for the chambers of the human heart to empty blood properly into the body. AF alone affects more than 2 million Americans.

The other leading disorders include deep vein thrombosis, the development of blood clots in a deep vein and pulmonary embolism - a circumstance where a clot breaks loose and travels to the lungs.

"March is actually DVT (Deep Vein Thrombosis) Awareness Month, so the clinic is opening at a good time," said Ann Messier, a registered nurse of CDH's cardiology department.

Anticoagulation clinics are common in larger hospitals. Western Massachusetts medical centers such as Holyoke Hospital, Mercy Medical Center, Riverbend Medical Group and VA Medical Center have their own clinics.

See HOSPITAL on page 2

Cooley Dickinson hospital recently opened an Anticoagulation Clinic at its Northampton facility. The clinic offers quick and efficient methods to test patients' blood-clotting ability.

Professors honored

Memory Holloway receives UMass public service award

BY JESSICA SACCO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

University of Massachusetts Dartmouth associate professor of art and history Memory Holloway recently received the President's Public Service Award.

In the 10th year of the annual award, Holloway will be recognized with professors Maria Idali Torres of UMass Amherst, Gary Siperstein of UMass Boston, Kay George Roberts and Fred Martin of UMass Lowell and Stephen Doxsey of UMass Medical School, for their services to the University.

Torres

The aim of the President's Public Service Award is to "recognize professors that go above and beyond their duty to help their schools," said William Wright, director of public information for the UMass president's office.

The award was started as a way to acknowledge teachers who embody the public service aspect of the school's mission.

Each year the chancellors from each campus nominate several candidates whom they believe demonstrate outstanding community service.

UMass president Jack M. Wilson makes the final decision.

An exhibit featuring their exploits will be displayed at Massachusetts State House and it will travel through each campus. Each recipient will also have his or her portrait featured at the UMass club in downtown Boston.

Holloway, who has been with UMass-Dartmouth for the past 11 years, earned the award through her work at the Salvation Army, where she, as along with students,

See AWARD on page 2

Alumni encourage service to country

BY EMILY REYNOLDS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Amherst College hosted four alumni speakers who have served in the military during the war in Iraq on Friday as part of a series of ongoing events that brings awareness of issues surrounding the military to the Amherst community.

Although Amherst is known as a left-leaning town politically, the town is trying to do more to close the gap between the military and civilian divide, according to Amherst College President Anthony Marx.

"The college is proud of our alumni that choose to go on and serve," said Marx.

The four alumni who spoke at the forum included Matt Flavin (class of 2002), Michael Proctor (class of 2002), Todd Nichols (class of 1999) and author Paul Rieckhoff (class of 1998).

All speakers agreed about the importance of serving the country in one way or another, regardless of military involvement.

"Think about service; think about the military or some other kind of service," said Proctor.

"Service can actually help you, and you serving can help others," Proctor added. "It's your duty to help people."

Besides the military, Proctor suggested the Peace Corps or Teach for America as organizations that allow volunteers to help the country. The forum's theme was to encourage people to get involved with the country in some way.

"Do something that gets you out into the world," Nichols said. "Get involved; have an opinion; go out and vote."

The four of the speakers joined the military at different times and for various reasons.

"Some people insist that many naively joined in a fit of patriotism," said Flavin.

Flavin cited a military questionnaire in which most who joined did so for something of which they could be proud.

"My decision to join was entirely voluntary," Flavin said. "I am grateful to have had the chance to serve."

In Flavin's unit, there were many who joined because of the benefits after service, including college.

"Many would not have joined if they came from a different socio-economic class," said Flavin.

Rieckoff joined in 1998 even though he had a job on Wall Street. Both his father and grandfather had been drafted in other wars, but Reickoff wanted to join the military for the challenge.

"I did not want to go to war,

See PANEL on page 2

O'Reilly makes Amherst appearance

Ed O'Reilly, a Massachusetts candidate for the United States Sentate, spoke in front of an audience of about 30 people at Amherst's Black Sheep Deli on Thursday. O'Reilly is attempting to unseat junior Senator John Kerry this November with the Democratic nomination.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
CXVIII
ISSUE 95

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Nicholas Belanger
Managing Editor Katie Huston
Business Manager Dan Exter
Production Manager Chris Martin
Night Supervisor Meghan Murphy
Advertising Manager Alex Bender
Advertising Production Katherine Shea
Editorial Production Mike Sarkes
Arts & Living Editor Ryan McAskill
Copy Editor Adam Staggs
Editorial Editor S.P. Sullivan
News Editor Derrick Perkins
Sports Editor Jeremy Rice
Features Editor Dave Humphreys
Photo Editor Michael Phillis
Web Editor James Hale
Asst. Business Manager Eric Smyczak
Assistant Advertising Marsea Whooten
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Asst. Arts & Living Stephanie McPherson
Asst. Arts & Living Sioe McIntyre
Asst. Arts & Living Brian Wood
Asst. Editorial James Mathews
Asst. Editorial Melissa Garber
Assistant News Michael King
Assistant News Kate Olesin
Assistant News Holly Seabury
Assistant Sports Mike Connors
Assistant Sports Joe Meloni
Assistant Sports Eli Rosenswaike
Assistant Photo Brian Tedder
Arts Web Editor Michelle Abbasciano
Editorial Web Editor Leif Walcutt
News Web Editor Nick Bush
Sports Web Editor Steve Games

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the The Weekly Collegian in 1936. It adopted its present name in 1967. The Collegian was first broadcasted since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call Wednesday between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
William McGuinness

COPY EDITOR
Nicole Amaral

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

WEB EDITOR
James Hale

People across the country are feeling the financials effects of automobile travel due to the rising price of gas. Members of the UMass community have turned to other options such as a free local bus service offered by the PVTA.

As gas prices rise, students avoid the roads

GAS PRICES from page 1

According to UMass economics professor Michael Ash, a history of cheap gas created a society based on automobile independence.

"Because so much of our infrastructure was built during a period of cheap gas, we don't have a society that is well set up for carpooling, buses and other mass transportation," he said. "I expect that there will be more carpooling, but it's unlikely to be enough to shield households from the higher price of gas."

People may begin to turn away from Sport Utility Vehicles such as Ford Explorers and trucks to more fuel-efficient cars.

"I have a v-10 in my truck and it eats up gas. I can watch my gas gauge drop sometimes," said sophomore Mike Berthiaume. "But I don't have a choice. I guess I'll just keep paying these ridiculous prices."

According to the 2008 Environmental Protection Agency and Department of Energy's fuel economy guidebook, the top 5 leaders of fuel-efficient cars are the Toyota Prius (hybrid-electric), the Honda Civic Hybrid, the Nissan Altima Hybrid, the Ford Escape Hybrid and the Toyota Camry Hybrid.

"There will probably be a shift toward smaller, more fuel-efficient cars," Kotz said. "So far electric cars are expensive, so it is not clear that they save money compared to gasoline cars."

Alyssa Montalbano can be reached at amontalb@student.umass.edu.

Professors honored with award

AWARD from page 1

faculty, inmates from the Bristol County House of Correction and members of the community, cooks for impoverished individuals.

During Christmas and Thanksgiving, the organization's volunteers cook meals for 400 people. Holloway admits this experience has taught her a lot about people.

"You learn about people in a different way," she said. "You see what it's like to be hungry, and it becomes very personal. When you eat and cook with them, you understand them in a very different way."

Mercy Bell, a fifth-year senior at UMass Dartmouth who volunteered with Holloway at the Salvation Army, said that it was a great learning experience – one that she would like to do again.

Bell, like Holloway, is also a firm believer in helping the community.

"Volunteering is really connecting to the great circle of life, partaking in reciprocity, by saying, 'Here, universe, use me for something,'" she said. "We get from others as much as we give. When we take ourselves out of that loop, we are hindering growth."

Holloway was also recognized for her collaboration with the Massachusetts Foundation for Humanities scholarship program, where she teaches adults who desire an education but lack the financial means.

"The important thing is that this [program] gives people a chance who never really had a chance in high school," Holloway said. "It gives people a chance to learn in a really good and encouraging environment."

Community service has always been a part of Holloway's life, as both her mother and grandmother were a part of it. This is her fifth year participating, and her passion and devotion has encouraged many around her to become a part of her world as well.

"I think she could lead a revolution laughing if she wanted to," said Bell. "You don't feel like she's leading, actually, more like she's having a lot of fun and letting you in on a piece of the action and you'll follow because it's more fun. That's rare."

Jessica Sacco can be reached at jsacco@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY UMASS.EDU

UMass Dartmouth professor Memory Holloway was honored with the UMass President's Public Service Award for her work in the community.

The Daily Collegian has a NEW and IMPROVED Web Site

BEST OF THE WEEK
NEW LOOK
PHOTO SLIDESHOWS
BLOGS
New User Interface
PODCASTS
FORUMS
Expanded Media
INTERACTIVE JOURNALISM

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Clinic improves blood testing

HOSPITAL from page 1

COURTESY COOLEY DICKINSON CLINIC

Cooley Dickinson hospital recently opened an Anticoagulation Clinic at its Northampton facility to improve blood-clot testing.

"Cooley Dickinson Hospital has been talking about adding a clinic to their facility for years. But when the decision was finally made, it only took six months to implicate," said Messier.

The Anticoagulation Clinic is located on the first floor of the main entrance and is open Monday through Friday with a referral from a physician. It is managed by a trained registered nurse with oversight from clinic medical director George Bowers, a medical oncologist/hematologist.

The clinic currently has four patients and is in process of welcoming 100 more referred patients.

Elyse Wood can be reached at erwood@student.umass.edu.

Alumni recall military service

PANEL from page 1

but I wanted that excitement – that leadership," said Reickoff. "I never regretted my decision to join."

Nichols also joined before the war in Iraq, though he has served in the Middle East three times.

"If you want a leadership challenge, there is no greater thing to do than join the military," Nichols said. "It is an amazing, rewarding experience and one that you cannot really get in any other employment."

Proctor's key factor in his decision was the threat of terrorism.

"My decision to join came right after September 11," said Proctor. "After serving in the military, no other job will be the same, but they are trying to move on."

Flavin is now attending law school at Georgetown University.

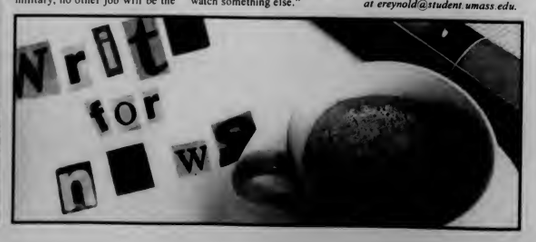
"I want to be involved, but I want to be involved in another way," said Nichols.

Nichols is on his way to graduate school.

Rieckoff is the founder and director of Iraq and Afghanistan Veterans of America, as well as an author. His book "Chasing Ghosts" recalls his experiences during and after his time in Iraq.

Rieckoff has also become a political activist. He is hoping to bridge the divide between those in the military and those who are not.

"We are not a country at war; we are a military at war," said Rieckoff. "If you see the war on TV, you can flip the channel and watch something else."



"There is a disconnect between those who serve and those who do not really know about the war going on," said Nichols.

According to Marx, last week was the first time a military recruiter was allowed on campus for more than a generation. In April, Amherst will host General Wesley Clark to continue its effort of educating the public. The college is also in the process of creating a scholarship for military veterans.

The panel was held in honor of Navy Lieutenant Joshua Gross from the class of 1998. Gross recently died in a helicopter crash in Corpus Christi, Texas.

"We've been given a lot, and we can really give back in a strong way," said Proctor.

Emily Reynolds can be reached at ereynold@student.umass.edu.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

Editorial Opinion

Monday, March 3, 2008

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
– Sir Salman Rushdie

Editorial@dailycollegian.com

ALANA's promise

At the most recent installment of the SGA's weekly senate meeting, I had the privilege of announcing the ALANA caucus' official endorsement for president and trustee in the upcoming student elections. As internal chair, I have the opportunity to address the senate on behalf of the caucus during officer reports at the start of each meeting. On Wednesday, I utilized this public space to formally announce the caucus' support for Malcolm Chu and Lindsay McCluskey for president and trustee, respectively.

Shawn Robinson

To the average UMass student, the paragraph above will probably have little to no meaning or significance. Despite high levels of apathy and ignorance in regards to campus politics, I insist that all UMass students should concern themselves with this issue. For those of you that aren't quite up to speed, I'll break it down to the best of my ability.

What I am about to tell you comes at the risk of sounding cocky and subsequently jinxing a successful streak. Superstition aside, it's important to note the last four sets of candidates to be endorsed by the caucus have all found their way into office. Caucus members and allies played an essential role in each of these campaigns, starting with Eddie Bustamante and most recently Aaron Buford.

In this respect, the caucus is somewhat of a political party, a very powerful one at that. The pessimists may feel that these elected positions are little more than hollow titles for students consumed by their quest for power, but contrary to such beliefs, these officials play a crucial role in shaping the social climate on campus.

Based on their track records, Chu and McCluskey are clearly ideal for the positions to which they aspire. McCluskey's background as a statewide organizer is quite extensive; I can't name one individual on campus more qualified for the role of trustee. For the past year she has served as secretary of external affairs within the SGA. She is a founding member of PHENOM, a group of students, faculty, and staff unified in their quest to make public higher education free here in affordable here in Massachusetts. She was also a key organizer for a statewide "study in," which brought hundreds of students to the statehouse for a demonstration in response to raising tuition rates and student fees.

Chu is currently the SGA's secretary of diversity. During the past year he has played a pivotal role in various initiatives on campus. He was a central organizer for the Jena Six rally that took place early last semester. He was the outreach coordinator for the General Student Strike, which led to the current negotiations between students and administrators. From his position as secretary, Chu has been instrumental in the rebuilding of a once stagnant ALANA caucus.

Despite high levels of apathy and ignorance ... UMass students should concern themselves with this issue.

Looking beyond their prior accolades, the platform that Chu and McCluskey are running under features an assortment of issues that are relevant to UMass students. Their most salient platform item is a universal concern for all college students: the issue of affordability and access.

Nearly all of us have had a personal exchange with bright, talented individuals who weren't able to seek higher education simply because most four-year institutions were outside their price bracket. We are also familiar with the plight of the average college student who leaves the University with several thousand dollars of debt looming over their heads.

Chu and McCluskey are seeking to reduce the frequency of these circumstances by building a coalition of students to lobby the statehouse for a substantial increase in funding public for public higher education.

In addition, they are pushing for a substantial reduction of tuition and fees. The logic is simple: cheaper tuition and more financial aid result in a more affordable education system. Many candidates have expressed such ambitions before, but this duo has the social network and resources to get it done - that alone should get them elected. I openly challenge any reader to find me a college student willing to turn down more money.

Another key issue Chu and McCluskey have taken up is the tight constraints that surround RSOs, particularly those of the cultural variety. These student groups often receive budgets so minute that one must be amazed that they are able to function at all. In addition to being underfunded, they have severe limitations placed on their spending. "No food and no travel," says the administration. If food is to be served it must come from university catering, which often charges a rate that doubles the yearly budget of these RSOs.

Chu and McCluskey have been adamant in expressing their plan to free up these budgets, and to allow RSOs to spend money on what they need.

Hopefully, those of you that were residing in the dark are being led towards the light now. Now that you know all the politics you should hear the human side of the story. Malcolm and Lindsay are two good friends of mine, and I have worked with them closely since I transferred to UMass a year ago.

In my time knowing them, they have continued to leave me inspired, motivated, and in awe of their work ethic. In times when most students are either sleeping or out poisoning their livers, I've watched these two individuals fight fatigue with bloodshot eyes, working tirelessly for the causes to which they are devoted. They are two selfless souls totally committed to uplifting the experience of their fellow students.

Shaun Robinson is the Interior Chair of the ALANA caucus. He can be reached at skrobins@student.umass.edu.

Bill Buckley: remembering an inspiration

Brad DeFlumeri

All those UMass liberals who love to hate me for my deeply held right-wing views have one man to thank or blame. William F. Buckley is the reason why I am a political person, the reason why I am a conservative and undoubtedly the reason why I lead the UMass Republican Club. He was an intellectual dynamo: intelligent and witty on-camera and off. He was a conservative's conservative and a liberal debater's most terrifying intellectual nightmare. His views, and more importantly, his electrifying articulation of what it meant to be a conservative, transcended intellectual history and are chiefly to thank for ushering in the Reagan Revolution and the three terms in presidential office of two men named Bush.

His intelligence and conviction made it intellectually feasible and defensible to be a conservative at a time in American life when there purportedly wasn't anything worth conserving. For so many on the right, he was an intellectual and ideological giant who could say what they were thinking, and in a way that they couldn't quite say it. Over the course of many decades, his persuasive writing and compelling commentary unleashed a political and intellectual fury on the left, from which it has yet to fully recover.

He was indeed so many of these things and so much more to a legion of adoring fans, admiring readers, employees and coworkers at National Review, and politicians and intellectuals across the globe. To the intellectual detriment of friend and foe alike, William F. Buckley passed away at age 82 last Wednesday.

Buckley became prominent on the national political scene in his mid-twenties with the publication of "God and Man at Yale" in 1951. In the book Buckley, a devout Roman Catholic and Yale graduate, aggressively challenged the liberal secular education that Yale University imparted. The book threw liberal elite academia, and its burgeoning love affair with collectivism, into a frenzy – it was a perspicacious and intellectually overwhelming rejection of everything elite academia was becoming. The book propelled the young writer into political superstardom in many conservative circles.

Then there was his founding of the publication that did more to amalgamate the disparate forces of the right-wing than any other, The National Review. According to Buckley, in the face of prevailing political, cultural and social liberalism in the 1950s, "National Review would stand athwart history, yelling: stop!"

Buckley, who founded National Review in 1955 at age 29, said in the landmark magazine's first issue: "National Review is out of place, in the sense that the United Nations and the League of Women Voters and the New York Times and Henry Steele Commager are in place. It is out of place because, in its maturity, literate America rejected conservatism in favor of radical social experimentation."

William F. Buckley is the reason why I am a political person, the reason why I am a conservative.

With his famously inimitable wit, Buckley continued, "For we offer, besides ourselves, a position that has not grown old under the weight of a gigantic, parasitic bureaucracy, a position untempered by the doctoral dissertations of a generation of PhDs in social architecture, unattenuated by a thousand vulgar promises to a thousand different pressure groups, uncorroded by a cynical contempt for human freedom. And that, ladies and gentlemen, leaves us just about the hottest thing in town."

To all those who watched him rise to intellectual stardom in the 1950s and 1960s after many debates with paragons of the left such as Gore Vidal and Noam Chomsky, Buckley's social and political impact over the course of his accomplished adult life was not at all surprising. These observers knew early on that there was something remarkable about the man. His copious literary output (Yale University itself owns writings of his that weigh seven tons) spread across multiple genres. His brilliance was as apparent in print as it was on his television talk show "Firing Line" – the longest-running show in TV history with one host.

Despite his impressive intellectual accomplishments, Buckley's greatest gift may have been his ability to befriend his ideological enemies, who were simultaneously confounded by his arguments and taken by his gentlemanly nature. Ever the gracious victor in debate and in his writings, Buckley denounced Bill O'Reilly of Fox News and other in-your-face conservatives as "bullies."

Breaking from many in the Republican Party late in his life, Buckley opposed the Iraq War's management from the start, and labeled the war's objective "failed." He was openly critical of the presidential administrations of George H.W. Bush and his son, and especially negative on the topic of the latter's lack of oratory brilliance.

Despite this, President Bush remarked on Wednesday that "America has lost one of its finest writers and thinkers." Presidential-hopeful John McCain, writing on the Web version of National Review said "Buckley was a man of tremendous vision and big ideas."

When my Club hosted National Review Online editor Jonah Goldberg last semester, I asked him what Buckley had meant to the conservative movement. He flatly answered that there would have been no modern conservative movement or Reagan Revolution if Buckley hadn't so articulately expressed his ideas in the National Review.

To so many conservatives Buckley is, was, and always will be the greatest articulator of our beloved worldview. For all he did to awaken the intellect of so many young conservatives, and for so much else, Bill Buckley will be dearly missed. May he rest in peace.

Brad DeFlumeri is President of the UMass Republican Club. He can be reached at bdeflume@student.umass.edu

"The Daily Collegian UMass Yak-Back!"
AIRING DAILY ON UVC-TV 19
AT 1 P.M. AND 5 P.M.

STAY TUNED TO UMC AND THE EDITORIAL/OPINION PAGE!

Facebook sets the record straight

Lauren Rockoff

How can you ever really be sure that your opinions and your ideas are your own? What I'm talking about is something that has crept into all of our lives at some time or another.

Avril Lavigne fan? Didn't think so. But, remember some time ago when Avril was sued because her song "Girlfriend" sounded a whole lot like the Rubinoo's "I Wanna be Your Boyfriend?" Or what about that Harvard student who wrote a book to critical acclaim, that turned out to have been written some time before by another author, one whom the student had read and enjoyed?

Can we admonish these creative individuals, making the assumption that they knowingly plagiarized the work of others? Well, for the person who first came up with the idea, the "borrowing" of his or her creation is no small matter.

Now, we all have at least a basic understanding of the concept that most everything we come up with comes from the things we experience in our lives. True, we mix them up and mold them in new ways, but in the end, we can all agree, that we start with external inspiration of some kind.

How are we to know when inspiration has crossed the line into plagiarism? When can we ever be sure that our brainchildren have not been adopted from others?

There is a popular concept in psychology that refers specifically to this type of "idea recycling," or unintentional plagiarism. It is often brought up when doctoral candidates are preparing their theses and cannot remember the source of some information which they deem necessary to include. So convinced are they that the information cannot be found anywhere but in their heads, that it becomes common knowledge for them – information that they are comfortable claiming as of their own creation, without citation.

When we look at all the books that have been published, all the screenplays that have been written, the songs that have been sung and the music that has been played, can we honestly believe that none have ever been repeated less than accidentally?

473 posts ago on Mary Sue's Facebook wall, you referenced this great idea.

Surely, authors have repackaged the words of others and gotten away with it. With all those fake-memoir, formerly Oprah-loved novelists running around, there have to be others who have traveled along the fuzzy lines of re-creation and convinced themselves that they had been original.

But when it comes to our ideas, most would like to believe that they are solely our own. Yet, is it merely a coincidence that many young people share the political opinions of their parents or that certain miracle diet plans keep returning to us in new books with new-fangled titles? We would like to believe that we come up with our own stuff. We would like to believe that we are all completely original.

So, what are we to do about this universal problem? If you're good, like photographic-memory and writing-down-everything-that-happens-in-your-life good, then you are probably all set.

But for those of us who have failed to catalog every bit of environmental stimuli that has come our way in the last two decades that we've been on this Earth, we need some other way. Hence Facebook, e-mail and blogs. Perhaps it was not Mark Zuckerberg's intent or the plan of the creators of Gmail (which stores everything that goes through your in- and out-boxes forever and ever) to remedy this problem, but they've come quite close.

Did you have that idea about [insert really good idea here] first or was it Mary Sue? Aha, it was I, you can truthfully declare. Because, 473 posts ago on Mary Sue's Facebook wall, you referenced this great idea you had during a boring discussion that day.

It's there, it's all pretty much there. From the moment you registered and began checking your Facebook six times a day, and updating it as frequently, your life has been archived with little effort or insight from you.

So it may or may not be clear that all of this comes forth in a sarcastic tone, because thankfully, it's impossible to tell through Facebook or include in your Gmail messages every last detail of your life. But the point remains.

In this age of technology and government spying, you have to be aware of everything you say. And basically, be sure not to claim any idea as your own. Someone may be listening. And that someone may be the real creator of what you thought was your idea.

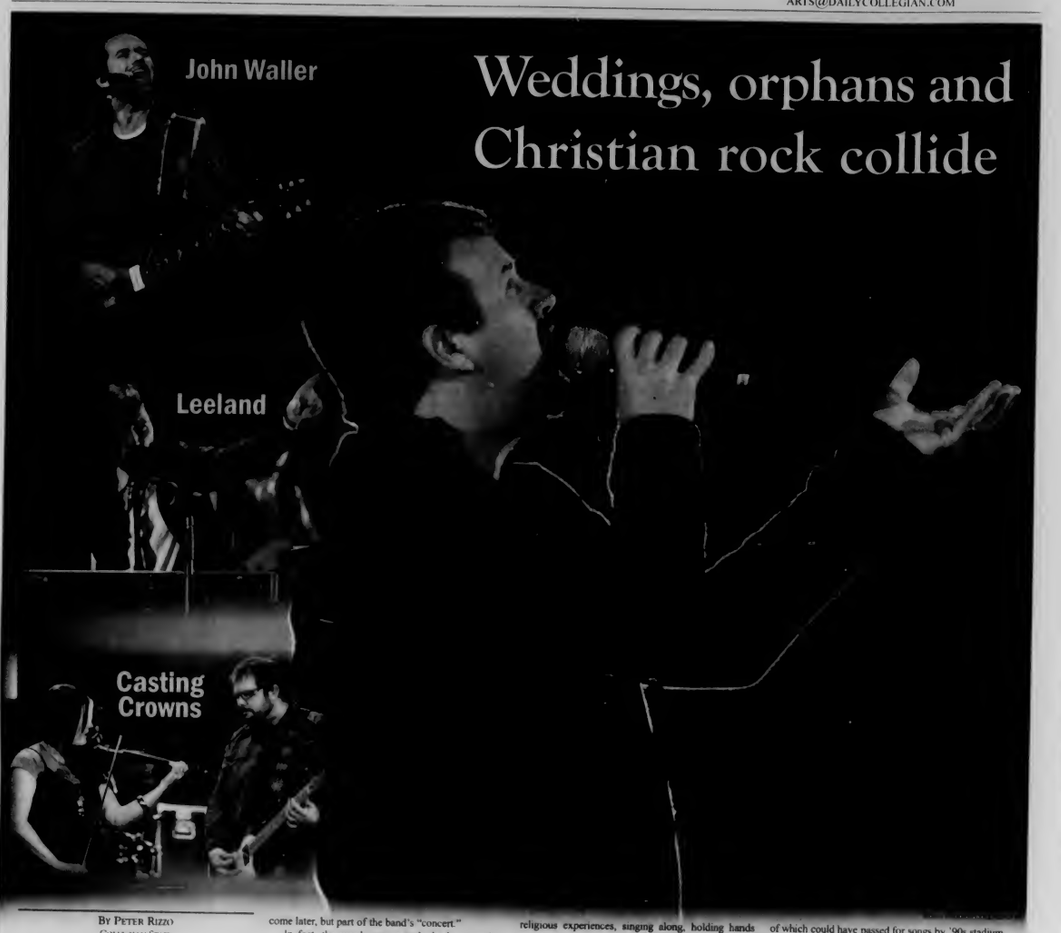
So watch out, be passive, and don't even think about writing a book. But don't take my word for it (a concluding line I borrowed from the host of my favorite show in elementary school, LeVar Burton of PBS's "Reading Rainbow"). Be secure in knowing that this column contains not only my words, but those of all the other writers I have ever read.

Lauren Rockoff is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at lrockoff@student.umass.edu.

DAILY COLLEGIAN READER POLL

The United Student Action Coalition rallied outside Whitmore on Tuesday to reiterate the demands of last semester's strike. Do you think the rally was effective?

☐ Yes. ☐ No. ☐ There was a rally?



Cast your vote online at www.dailycollegian.com!

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, MARCH 3, 2008

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Weddings, orphans and Christian rock collide

BY PETER RIZZO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

For faithful fans, Friday night's Casting Crowns concert promised to be a family-friendly evening showcasing the band's blend of '90 alt-rock pop songs and religious overtones. The band showed no sign of slowing down on its current tour, as the Mullins Center was packed to the brim with eager audience members.

For the average concert-goer, however, the Casting Crowns concert would have proved an unusual experience. While the band played many of their hits, they spent large amounts of time doing unrelated things. Halfway through the first set, the band left the stage abruptly, and the audience was greeted with dim lights and a commercial about reusable drinking water in Africa. This was not the intermission, which would come later, but part of the band's "concert."

In fact, the word concert isn't the best word to describe the event at all. The show was a multimedia event that combined various forms of entertainment with a strong focus on Catholic religious doctrine. The band's leader Mark Hall played equal parts singer, stand-up comic and televangelist, each with varying degrees of success.

Casting Crowns did their best to keep the crowd guessing, turning the Mullins Center into their own church as fans sang along to just about every song.

Halfway through the concert, one audience member spontaneously proposed to his girlfriend on stage. The spectacle was met with uproarious applause when the bride-to-be said yes. This was far from the most out-of-the-ordinary occurrence of the night, as many audience members seemed to be having their own religious experiences, singing along, holding hands and dancing.

The band does more than just preach about the Word, they actively engage in it. During intermission, the band directed fans to World Vision booths outside where for the price of a dollar a day, and far less than the actual concert, they could help give food and clean water to African children in need.

After this short intermission, in which the audience members spent their time adopting foreign children, they quickly returned to their seats where the band launched into the title track off their second album, "Lifesong." The band made frequent references to their back catalog, playing songs off their earlier albums such as "Who am I?" and "If We are the Body," while taking the time to promote new songs like "Slow Fade" and "The Word is Alive," all of which could have passed for songs by '90s stadium rockers Creed.

The opening acts put more emphasis on the music, using the time to promote themselves in hope of one day headlining a Christian tour of their own, or gaining a spot at "Soulfest," the Christian equivalent of Lollapalooza. Leeland's sound and appearance was reminiscent of Taking Back Sunday, and their sound was laced with an MTV, emo flair. John Waller, the first to go on stage, used his time to showcase songs from his upcoming album and also to build anticipation for the main attraction.

All in all, the event had a carnival-like atmosphere which would have been surprising even to veteran concert-goers. The band also did an admirable job of trying to balance their music with their real passion for religion.

Peter Rizzo can be reached at prizzo@student.umass.edu.

Bowerbirds 'free from the city's cluster'

BY BRIAN WOOD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Straying from the common culture they view as destructive in its nature, North Carolina's Bowerbirds deliver inspiration for listeners with similarly progressive mentalities. As front man Phil Moore lyrically professed during their performance at The Iron Horse Music Hall Saturday, their music is "making matchsticks to start other people's fires."

Bowerbirds possess a stage presence and sound that is simultaneously haunting and soothing. With sweeping accordion and violin accompanying often minimalist acoustic guitar, the band's sound, when experienced live, is as inviting as a warm fire on a brisk winter's night.

The band opened the night with "Hooves," which also serves as the opening track on their latest album "Hymns for a Dark Horse." The chemistry amongst the trio was unmistakable even from the song's very commencement, effortlessly creating waves of sound that were just as lavish as their recorded counterparts, yet with a decidedly more intimate dimension to them.

While simultaneously finger picking and playing the high hat and tambourine with his feet for additional emphasis, Moore's voice resonated through the crowd in a demanding, yet comforting manner, bringing the audience at the hall to a whispered lull.

"You're the kindling still that burns below my heart, and you're the hooves that lead me through the forest," professed Moore during the song, while Beth Tacular and Mark Paulson supplied a gorgeous backdrop of accordion and understated percussion to the mellow number.

The band's next two songs illustrated the group's ability to seamlessly harmonize with one another. "Slow Down" and "In Our Talons" both showcase the combined vocal talents of Paulson and Tacular, who, during the respective songs, compliment Moore by adding additional layers of vocals that contribute to the songs compelling choruses.

The band gave those in attendance a glimpse of their newest music by performing two previously unreleased songs. Both songs draw lyrical inspiration from Moore and Tacular's current project of building their own home together.

The first selection was somewhat a love song, which featured both Phil and Beth singing solo parts before joining in unison for the heartfelt conclusion. The song revolves around the emotional connection the two have developed with each other and their surroundings during the past months.

The second debutant track was a surprisingly upbeat number, delving into their personal separation from the exploitation that accompanies life in modern society. The song begins with the highly visual lyrics, "One morning you wake to find you are shackled to your bed and bound and gagged; oh my, what a predicament," and reaches new heights with the group declaring in unison, "you are free, you are already free" at the song's conclusion.

Sandwiched between the new material was an established favorite in "My Oldest Memory," a song that showcases Paulson's violin talents, and further reinforcing the strength of the groups unified vocal harmonies when shouting out during choruses, "Is this an island that plots like a villain, or an old ghost friend we don't believe in?"

"Olive Hearts" was an undoubted highlight. The number shifts from upbeat accordion and harmonized choruses into a slower finale where Moore gives cheers to a wide variety of characters.

Following in the peaceful wake of "Olive Hearts" was "Bur Oak," a similarly melodic piece in which Moore would rattle the narrative with an occasional hi-hat strike, injecting moments of urgency into the otherwise low-key selection.

Closing out the night was "Dark Horse," a song that comes alive with its reassuring lyrics. Moore, Paulson and Tacular combine harmoniously during the chorus to proclaim, "We stow our words in the cellar so we never lose hope, and keep this wood fire stoked while the bitter winds blow." A rousing reception from the large and attentive audience followed, and the band graciously talked with admirers.

Bowerbirds are a band that is unified in their resolve, and anchored by their beliefs. Following their heartfelt ambitions by taking their message on the road, the band is a joy to experience in person, due to their obvious affection towards one another, and their artfully crafted views on the positive advancement of American culture. As Moore proclaims on "In Our Talons," "It takes a lot of nerve to destroy this wondrous earth." This is a nerve that the band successfully strikes with anyone open to listening.

Brian Wood can be reached at bjwood@student.umass.edu.

BRIAN WOOD/COLLEGIAN

Bowerbirds' Phil Moore and Beth Tacular brought their unique societal views to the stage at the Iron Horse this past Saturday night. Both currently reside off of the power grid in rural North Carolina.

Jazz fusion train rolls in NoHo

BY MATTHEW SOLOMON
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The heart and soul of music is still alive and breathing. In the hurricane that is pop culture, many musical acts have gotten blown away. Yet, at least one band has managed to secure its roots, producing fruit with a smooth, yet tangy flavor and a refreshingly delightful after-taste.

Medeski, Martin & Wood, the widely acclaimed jazz-funk fusion trio, played the Calvin Theater in Northampton on Friday, proving once again why they deserve to be considered one of the best live ensembles of the day. The combination of keyboard/organ/piano player John Medeski, drummer/percussionist Billy Martin and bassist Chris Wood is like a train ride through the Arizona desert in late July – hot, dry, exotic and dreamy.

Friday evening, this experienced yet energetic group of New England-educated musicians brought their new and improved blend of funkadelic jazz infused hip-hop to a packed house that couldn't help but juke and jive to the rejuvenating rhythms and beats. These well-established veterans of the music world may be getting older, but on this particular evening, they were as tight and effective as ever.

Their impressive gifts were evident while they played with the same youthfulness they must have possessed in 1991 when they first broke out on the music scene. They've come a long way from their beginnings in a Brooklyn, N.Y. neighborhood known as D.U.M.B.O. (Down Under the Manhattan Bridge Overpass.)

Their upbeat and eccentric musical style is the perfect catalyst to get an energetic reaction from a crowd, big or small. Since they're a constantly evolving organism, this show in particular was a creative and inspired accumulation of all past performances, rather than a staged and planned out sanitized performance. The three friends are constantly growing as musicians and are always open to new and eclectic ideas. In fact, they don't really have any boundaries musically.

In their world of renegade pop, lines are constantly being blurred while labels are ignored in favor of creative and inspirational musical outlets. Their music is the result of energy being released suddenly and precisely in a cohesive yet unruly microcosm of sound. It's free flowing and forever changing.

They've always believed in the power of live music and only recorded albums on special occasions when they feel it's absolutely necessary for posterity. For example, their most recent compilation, "Let's Go Everywhere," is a children's album guest-starring their own kids on vocals.

Other studio albums of theirs include an all-acoustic album, "Tonic," named for the Lower East Side club (and former kosher winery) where it was recorded. "Out Louder" was recorded with the help of guitar legend John Scofield. Fourteen other albums have also been created since "Notes from the Underground" was made in January of 1992 with the Sex Mob's slide trumpeter Steven Bernstein.

Side projects are also a big part of the band's history. This is what keeps them always fresh and on their toes. Chris Wood plays with his brother Oliver, forming the bass and guitar duo of the Wood Brothers. Billy Martin runs his own record label and is an expert in Afro-Caribbean bell and clave patterns.

Together, Medeski and Wood epitomize the essence of free-wheeling group improvisation and are constantly battling to defeat the drive towards sanitized popular music.

Their vision has been simple from the beginning. They have followed their gut instincts, let the details work themselves out naturally and haven't looked back once. Failure is seemingly ignored in favor of looking towards the future.

Matthew Solomon can be reached at msolomon@student.umass.edu

Fans of the jazz fusion band Medeski, Martin and Wood were treated to the "power of live music" Friday night at the Calvin Theatre in Northampton. The group has built a devoted fan base with their unique "free wheeling group improvisations."

In latest installment 'Hawk' face plants

BY DAVID HUMPHREYS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

What do a crappy story, bad character models, an unfitting soundtrack and poor features have in common? Ask Neversoft.

In the world of skating games, the "Tony Hawk" series has ruled supreme for the past decade. With all the improvements in the video game industry, Neversoft proves that it, along with its premier game, cannot stand the test of time. Although Neversoft's latest skate title, "Tony Hawk's Proving Ground," has some (ope) redeeming qualities, it is obviously a rehash of previous titles, mostly "Tony Hawk's Project 8." Where "Project 8" succeeded, "Proving Ground" fails miserably.

The story is, generally speaking, the framework for any good game. From Madden to Lost Odyssey to Halo 3, even the thinnest storyline, if it is assembled well, will keep gamers coming back for more. The story of "Proving Ground" falls flat on its face.

Centered around a skater in inner-city Philadelphia, the story follows him (there's still no female character models to choose from) around while going on missions from professionals or completing tasks. Somehow, by doing these (often mundane) things, your character becomes a world-famous skater. Sound familiar? It is exactly the same story as "Project 8," just in a different, bored-looking environment.

The differences between "Proving Ground" and "Project 8" lie in only the surface of the game and exist solely to draw players in, rather than contribute to the overall experience. The three not-so-varying story lines (Rigger, Hardcore and Career) offer some break in the monotony, but not for long.

The big difference between "Proving Ground" and previous titles are the addition of slow-motion tricks. Adding on to the success of "Nail-the-Trick" in "Project 8," are "Nail-the-Grab" and "Nail-the-Manual." Although they show you how to do both, "Nail-the-Manual" has a much steeper learning curve. For the most part, all these gimmicky tricks are completely useless and often hinder the player from racking up the points necessary to clear a level.

While the tricks may not be useful (other than looking cool) at least they don't have the same bugs as the levels do. Full of clipping issues, the level design often detracts significantly from the game experience. Although skating through cars can be fun, the major problems lie when the skater goes right through a half or quarter pipe. These completely amateurish mistakes should never happen from a respected production company.

The mistakes don't just stop with level design; they extend on to another problem (and useless feature): the rigging option. Rigging, or building your own skateable materials, is cool on paper. In practice, it's boring, monotonous and difficult. The worst part, aside from the serious camera problems and awkward controls, is getting your rigging piece stuck somewhere on the map. Whether it is down two stairs or off a ledge, there is almost no way to pick up and move your piece once it's not on the same plane as the character.

The one (partially) redeeming feature of the game is the soundtrack, in particular two songs: "The Pretender" by the Foo Fighters and "Sympathy For The Devil" by the Rolling Stones. Both great songs, both completely out of place. Surrounded by pop-punk and hip-hop, these rock songs stand out like a sore thumb. Or, in the case of "Proving Ground," like gold.

With less than 10 hours of game play, the only reason for a replay is to bump up those Am scores to either Pro or Sick. Even then, it isn't really worth it. Don't buy "Proving Ground," don't borrow it, don't invite your friends to play it and most importantly, don't encourage Neversoft to produce this tired crap any more.

Dave Humphreys can be reached at dhumphre@student.umass.edu

"TONY HAWK'S PROVING GROUNDS"

NEVERSOFT

1/5

VISITING COLLEGE CHEF SERIES

Welcome Chef Joel D. Blice, CEC
& Chef Donald Stauffer, CEC
Villanova University

CHEF JOEL D. BLICE, CEC

CHEF DONALD STAUFFER, CEC

VILLANOVA FAVORITES:

- Gingered Carrot Soup
- Apple and Fennel Slaw with Citrus Glazed Red Onions
- Philly Cheesesteak Pizza
- The "Dine Out" Barbeque Plate
- Hickory Smoked Texas Dry Rub Ribs
- Moroccan Barbequed Salmon
- Jamaican Jerked Chicken
- "Philly" Baked Beans with Kennett Square Mushrooms
- Philadelphia Water Ice
- The Trifle

Tuesday, March 4
Berkshire DC from 5–9 pm

NACUFS LOYALE HORTON Dining Award 2007 Grand Prize

DINING SERVICES UMassAmherst
umass.edu/diningservices

VILLANOVA DINING SERVICES "THE BEST. SERVING THE BEST"

FoodManagement's BEST CONCEPTS CONTEST COMPETITOR

COOKING BAKING 101

If you like the heat, come into our kitchen!

- Breakfast Cookery
- Stir-fry dishes
- Fresh bread, cakes, truffles & more

APRIL 4 COOKING 101 2-5 PM
APRIL 11 COOKING 101 2-5 PM
APRIL 18 BAKING 101 2-5 PM
APRIL 25 BAKING 101 2-5 PM

Classes will be held in the Berkshire DC

Willie Sng, Executive Chef
Simon Stevenson, Pastry Chef

DINING SERVICES UMassAmherst
umass.edu/diningservices

Contact UMass Dining at 545-2472 or sign up at your favorite DC at the cashier station. Registration will be filled on a first come, first served basis. Limited to 12 students per class.

Free for students on a meal plan and $25 for students without a meal plan.

UM falls, clinches A-10 berth

UMass loses to Temple, but clinches last spot in tournament

BY MIKE CONNORS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Despite losing five of its last seven games, the Massachusetts women's basketball team qualified for the Atlantic 10 Tournament.

The Minutewomen fell, 64-46, on Saturday to a Temple team that earned a share of the regular-season conference title with No. 15 George Washington.

UMass (13-15, 5-9 A-10) secured the final spot in the A-10 Tournament and will play Dayton at 2 p.m. on Friday. It will be the second time the teams meet this season – the Minutewomen defeated the Flyers, 56-46, at the Mullins Center on Feb. 23.

Temple	64
UMass	46

Both teams struggled from the field in the first half and UMass remained in the game, trailing, 31-26. Often this season the Minutewomen have dug themselves double-digit halftime deficits but limited the Owls (19-11, 12-2 A-10) to 2-of-8 shooting from beyond the arc.

Temple missed its first eight shots and didn't convert its first field goal with just over 14 minutes remaining in the first half, tying the game at four.

Pam Rosanio led UMass with 15 points on 5-of-11 shooting. However, the rest of the Minutewomen struggled from the field, including leading scorer Kate Mills. The senior forward leads the team, averaging 17.4 points per game, but went 4-of-11 from the floor and finished with 13 points.

The Owls' leading scorer, Ashley Morris, also shot poorly from the floor. The senior guard shot 3-of-13 but assisted on a game-high 11 baskets, while committing two turnovers.

LaKeisha Eaddy led Temple with 16 points on a perfect 7-of-7 shooting.

The Minutewomen did a good job of defending center Lady Comfort, limiting her to 3-of-12 shooting and 12 points. One area Comfort didn't struggle in was rebounding – the senior corralled 13 rebounds and helped the Owls gain a 42-29 rebounding advantage.

In addition to getting outrebounded, the Minutewomen were dominated in the paint. Temple scored 28 points in the paint while UMass managed just 10.

The team is often effective when Mills gets the ball inside and uses her quickness and finesse to score the ball down low.

If a team cannot score in the paint, it's going to have to score from beyond the 3-point line, but UMass hit 2 of its 13 attempts.

Point guard Kim Benton continues to struggle from beyond the arc, hitting 1-of-6 from three against the Owls off the bench.

Benton established herself as a 3-point specialist last season but still hasn't found her form this season. The junior is shooting 24.8 percent from outside this season.

The rest of the bench lacked production as well. Whitney McDonald scored two points on 1-of-6 shooting and was the only other player besides Benton to score off the bench.

The Temple bench provided nearly half of the team's points (28). Shaqwedia Wallace scored 10 points while Shanea Cotton led the bench effort with 12 points.

Mills, Alicia Tatham and McDonald each turned the ball over three times … Temple was 4-of-12 from beyond the arc … The Minutewomen had 11 assists and 13 turnovers while the Owls had 12 assists and 14 turnovers.

Mike Connors can be reached at mjconnor@student.umass.edu.

PAM ROSANIO LED UMASS WITH 15 POINTS IN THEIR LOSS AT TEMPLE. THE MINUTEWOMEN HAVE A REMATCH WITH DAYTON IN THE FIRST ROUND OF THE PLAYOFFS.

Harris scores 24 in big win

M. HOOPS from page 8

Anderson's basket, but Forbes came up with the offensive rebound to keep the possession alive and run out some clock. Forbes was eventually fouled and hit both free throws, giving the Minutemen a 70-64 lead with 2:45 left in the contest.

The ensuing possession for the Spiders took 43 seconds and resulted in no points, as UMass took advantage of its foul to give. After the foul, the Spiders took the ball out of bounds, and Anderson missed a jumper 20 seconds later. Forbes corralled the rebound, and Lowe took all but two seconds off the shot clock before making a layup to give UMass an eight-point lead with 1:31 left.

The Spiders made consecutive lay-ups to cut the lead to four, but UMass iced the game with four free throws by Forbes in the final 20 seconds.

Harris led all scorers with 24 points, hitting 5-of-7 from long distance. Brower was even better from the perimeter, connecting on all but one of his six attempts. Both Brower and Forbes had 17 points and seven rebounds. Forbes has reached double figures in scoring in every game this season.

Gonzalvez led Richmond with 20 points, while three others reached double figures. Starting forward Kevin Smith didn't score a point in 18 minutes of action.

The Minutemen had trouble in the turnover department, committing 15 which led to 25 points for the Spiders. But the 3-point performance by Brower and Harris, coupled with solid free throw shooting late, enabled UMass to hold on for the win.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@student.umass.edu.

ETIENNE BROWER WAS 5-FOR-6 FROM 3-POINT RANGE AGAINST THE SPIDERS. HE DID NOT ATTEMPT A TWO-POINT FIELD GOAL.

Mass Attack stays alive in playoff hunt

HOCKEY from page 8

Pressed in his own zone, defenseman Justin Braun cleared the puck out by lobbing it over everyone. Crowder found himself all alone at the BU blue line with the puck.

He brought puck toward the net from wide to the right, faked the forehand and had an easy backhand into an open net.

"[Braun] chipped it off the glass. I had just come off the bench, so I was behind the defense," Crowder said. "I skated in a little bit. I think the goalie came out for a poke check, and I just beat him."

Quirk scored again on the power play with three minutes remaining in the second. Alex Berry found him creeping into the slot and got the puck to him. Quirk relayed the shot past Bennett and just inside the right post.

In the third, Quirk returned the favor to Berry, as the duo hooked up on a shorthanded goal, Berry's second of the season.

Quirk forced a turnover and brought the puck into the BU zone. It seemed as though Quirk was going for the hat trick, and Bennett seemed to agree because he didn't see Berry following the play.

Quirk saw him, and fed him the puck Bennett moved over to make a play. Berry one-timed the puck for the easy goal.

"I saw Al come in late," Quirk said. "He made a good play not going hard to the net and staying back a little. Then I just found him and he put it home."

The goal was a deal-breaker for the Terriers, who looked more frustrated the rest of the third period than they were determined to make a comeback.

With a two-goal lead, the Minutemen found themselves on the penalty kill, and in serious danger of losing momentum. Instead, they cloved out the game with a clutch play.

BU coach Jack Parker pulled Bennett with six minutes remaining to try and create some kind of momentum swing.

"There was no sense in letting the score stay at 4-1," he said.

The Minutemen had a player in the penalty box, creating a minute of 6-on-4 hockey for BU. The defense held on through the final minutes of the game, and Chris Davis scored an empty-netter with three minutes left.

Jeremy Rice can be reached at jeremyr@student.umass.edu

Minutemen come up short at Yale

M. LAX from page 8

PETER MCNICHOLS SCORED TWO GOALS AGAINST YALE. HE NOW HAS FOUR POINTS ON THE SEASON (THREE GOALS, ONE ASSIST).

game, senior captain Paul Manesis took a pass from Schneider and raced up field. After successfully clearing the UMass zone, and with teammates racing parallel to him on either side, Manesis opted to force his way through two Yale defenders rather than to make a pass. The two Bulldogs converged on him, jarring the ball loose and ending another UMass possession.

"They did a good job riding against us. I don't know if we were trying to force some clears, but what happens is [Manesis] is a senior and he wants to make plays. He just made a bad decision," Cannella said.

UMass's first goal, however, came in the transition game. Freshman attack Zach Rodgers stationed himself at midfield as a loose ball rolled toward the line. He muscled a Yale midfielder out of position and scooped up the ground ball. Junior Tim Balise raced toward the goal, and Rogers quickly located him. Balise caught the pass in stride and fired past Carafides.

The goal, Balise's first of two on the day, tied the game at 1-1 after Yale scored the first of the game at 4:52 of the first quarter.

Balise's second score made it 7-4 with 5:21 left in the game. Following the goal, Yale's Gregory DuBoff won his 11th of 14 faceoffs on the afternoon. Reale won 10-of-16 draws against Holstra but failed to repeat his success against DuBoff. Sophomore Bobby Hayes took over for Reale at times in the game. He also struggled against DuBoff losing both of the draws he took.

Cannella didn't blame the poor success rate on faceoffs for UMass's poor offensive showing. However, it is difficult for attackmen and midfielders to develop a rhythm without regular possession of the ball.

"They won most of the faceoffs, so they had most of the offense. [DuBoff] was dominating us, so we tried to jam him and light for a loose ball," Cannella said of replacing Reale with Hayes. "Yale's guy was someone who [Hayes] had some success against last season."

UMass's struggles on the offensive side forced its defenseman to play very aggressively as the game came to a close. Trailing 7-3, senior Brian Danvers leveled a Yale player at midfield and attempted to free the ball with a stick check as he lay on the ground. Officials whistled Danvers and Rogers both on the play, putting the Minutemen down two men with a four-goal deficit.

Joe Melton can be reached at joe.melton@gmail.com

Typadis and Co. run over by Crimson

W. LAX from page 8

29 fouls called on Harvard and 28 on UMass. McCormick was issued a red card in the second half for arguing with one of the officials and was ejected from the game.

Goalie play was another problem for the Minutewomen. Venechanos decided to start freshman goalie Colleen Speth, but the Crimson were all over her and scored 10 goals until she was substituted for veteran netminder, Redshirt junior Chrissy Anderson. Anderson is coming off of a leg injury that sidelined her for all of last season.

One area that the Minutewomen excelled in was ground balls. The Maroon and White grabbed 14 ground balls, while the Crimson tracked down four.

In spite of the final score, both teams played patiently. UMass drew 16 charges, and Harvard drew 17.

The real problem for the Minutewomen was the constant yellow cards. Harvard played a solid, methodical game, and UMass could not get anything to click on either offense or defense.

"I think it's just us losing our composure," Venechanos said of her team's miscues. "Harvard was very composed and calm and played their [style of] game. They took us out of our game from the start."

Harvard was very good at shutting down key players for UMass as senior captain Kathleen Typadis only mustered one goal on four shots, three on goal.

With one of their best players thrown out of the game and the other shutdown offensively, the Minutewomen had to rely on other players to contribute. Junior attack Julie Pasquantonio had two goals on three shots on goal.

The Maroon and White also couldn't put together many fluid offensive plays either. The Minutewomen only had four assists as a team, compared to Harvard's 12.

UMass' defensive effort was anemic as well. The Minutewomen only had one caused turnover, as opposed to Harvard's five.

Next up for UMass is its first away game of the season. The Minutewomen will take on Dartmouth this Wednesday in Hanover, N.H.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu.

MSU slips past Balschmiter

SOFTBALL from page 8

Balschmiter allowed a double. Aggies catcher Erin Glasco tried to score from first on the double by Macie Morrow. Glasco was thrown out at the home. Balschmiter finished the inning with a strikeout, ending the only threat for the Aggies to catch up.

UMass's other victory on the weekend came against Auburn. After scoring one run in two games on Friday, the Minutewomen totaled six runs, doing most of their damage in the fourth inning with four runs. Behind a solid performance from sophomore pitcher Bailey Sanders, who went 6 2/3 innings giving up two earned runs while striking out a season-high seven batters.

In the top of the second inning senior outfielder Lauren Proctor tripled, scoring Mollica all the way from first to put UMass up, 1-0. In the next inning Salato came up with the bases loaded. She hit a hard ball to deep center, but was caught on a diving catch. Sophomore Whitney Williams tagged from third.

In the fourth inning with the bases loaded and two outs, Cullington drew a walk, putting the Minutewomen up 3-0. Salato singled and scored another run and after a pitching change Sero was hit by a pitch scoring another run. Reeves also drew a walk and gave Sanders a 6-1 lead to work with.

On Sunday, with No. 18 Mississippi State down two runs, UMass scored three runs in the top of the seventh off Balschmiter. The Minutewomen almost pulled it out in the bottom of the seventh when Cullington hit a one-out double after sophomore outfielder Carly Normandin walked. With runners on second and third, Salato lined out to the pitcher and Normandin was tagged out at third to end the game.

Steve Games can be reached at sgames@dailycollegian.com.

Take Out a classifieds ad
THE DAILY COLLEGIAN
now offers free online classifieds for students at
WWW.UMASSLIST.COM
- More complete, local and relevant category listings than any and all competitor web sites combined
- Users can setup daily e-mail updates for relevant listings.
- No more searching for apartments, now they come to you.
- Post unlimited online listings
- Little to no spam
By listing on this site you are supporting your local college newspaper, The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
Insurance Replacement Rates
FREE PICK-UP
POTTER'S
APTS & TRUCK RENTAL
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates
Potter's Collision Repair
at North Amherst Motors
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.potterauto.com
(One mile North of UMass - on bus route)
Collision Repair & Glass Replacement

Arigato II
Hibachi Steak & Seafood
15% off with Student ID
(except Friday & Saturdays)
Sushi · Full Bar · Cocktails
Parking Garage
Pleasant St
Lincoln's Arigato
Arigato II
Main St
Town Hall
Reservations Suggested
413.253.0707

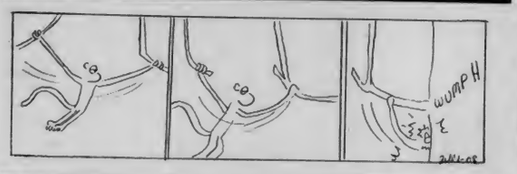
Jolly good.

	2				9
3							7
8		7	9			1	6
	6			5		8
4			7		6			5
		5		9			7
	1	8			7	5		4
2								6
		4					8

ACROSS
1 Watered
6 Snow-day rides
11 Pedal pumper
14 Vibrant
15 Long-necked wader
16 Ocean off NC
17 Purple shade
18 Barest hint
19 ___ Na Na
20 Compared with
22 Mouthed-off
24 Shamus
25 Concentrate
27 Seven times a week
28 Counts
30 City near Cleveland
32 Scottish loch
33 Sly comments
35 Last part of a sonnet
37 Nods off
39 Lifts and hurls
43 Bell positions
47 Prepared to pray
48 High point
51 Marcus Aurelius, e.g.
53 Environs
54 Talisman
56 Identify oneself to a computer
58 Chasing game
59 Excavates
61 Annual golf event
63 Bus. ltr. abbr.
66 Automaton
68 Hit the slopes
69 Sergeant Bilko
70 Festive
71 Retirement letters
72 Graded
73 Accumulate

DOWN
1 Actor Holbrook
2 Dressing ingredient
3 Paint ingredient
4 Tanguay and Gabor
5 Low boost
6 Coffee?
6 Comic bits
7 Spare time
8 European eagle
9 Hounds
10 Slammin' Sammy
11 Move dog
12 Kennedy and Merman
13 ___ Knight & the Pips
21 Intl. broadcasters
23 Guitarist Carlos
24 Tango teams
26 Distress signal
29 Cooking sticks
31 To the ___ degree
34 Health resort
36 Mouse-spotter's cry
36 Fam member
40 Some pieces
41 Parker and Powell
42 Makes only
44 Letters on Cardinal caps
45 Hoffman movie
46 Took aim at
48 Right to use
49 Big pieces
50 Actress Straasman
52 Meier Sebastian
55 Poetic treasure
57 Bellini opera
60 Mrs. Copperfield
62 "Birches," e.g.
65 Picnic pest
67 Herndon and Cobb

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

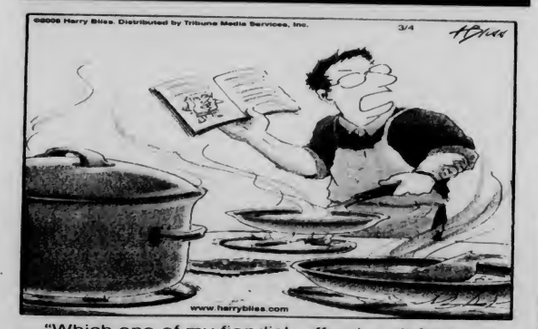


Still looking for the PERFECT summer job?
WE CAN HELP!
Grotonwood and Oceanwood two Christian summer camps looking for qualified college students to be a part of a life-changing ministry this summer.
SPECIAL NEEDS UNIT LEADER - The perfect position for a Special Education major that wants to gain more experience working with special needs adults, and develop their leadership skills. Summer salary of $3,100 + room/board.
COUNSELORS - This is an awesome opportunity to make a difference in the lives of kids this summer. Challenge the campers to grow while developing your leadership and teaching skills. Summer salary of $2600 + room/board.
For more information and an application, go to our website, www.grotonwood.org and look under the "Summer staff" tab.
Grotonwood- Oceanwood
167 Prescott St
Groton MA 01450
978-448-5763
office@grotonwood.org

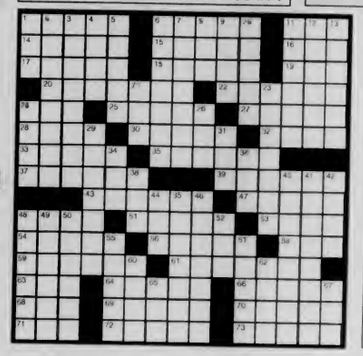
QUOTE OF THE DAY

"I'd like to have my ashes spread all over the beach. So even after I'm dead, I'm still gonna get in girls' pants."

– Steven Tyler



ECOLOGY BY JEN FILL



WONDERMARK BY DAVID MALKI

BLISS BY HARRY BLISS

"Which one of my fiendish offspring defaced the bordelaise recipe with SpongeBob?"

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
You dance like a giraffe on ether. It is both awkward and dangerous.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Although it can be risky and even lifethreatening, picking up hitchhikers can yield many valuable rewards.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
You're wearing a North Face, but you're clearly not the kind of girl who's into climbing mountains. Besides, Uggs have no grip.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
Your digital camera is meant for the capturing of good memories, not the blackmailing of enemies.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
Generally speaking, you're a hard worker, but from the looks of things, your left eye is a bit lazy.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Your hair is more finely coiffed than a the dog-fro of an award-winning poodle.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Channel your inner Zorro today during your Spanish test. You'll scratch your "Z" and your teacher will give you an A.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Just like the time you cut all the hair off of your favorite Barbie, your actions cannot be undone. Think before you play hair stylist.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
You're more dormant than Mount Saint Helens. Wake up and spew your brew all over the place.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
The only thing better than swimming with dolphins is illegally swimming with giant goldfish in the Durfee Conservatory pond.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
In a game of Rocks, Paper, Scissors, staying three steps ahead of your opponent is superfluous.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Your words sting worse than a paper cut. Speak Band-Aids, spit antibiotic ointment, and apologize for mean things you've said.

Thanks for being such a great listener.

comics@dailycollegian.com

Continuing & Professional Education
UMassAmherstOutreach
Summer Session 2008
Don't Wait-
Jump Start Your Career
This Summer
Session I June 2 - July 10
Session II July 14 - Aug 20
Online Gen Ed's
Small Classes
Great Faculty
PLAN AHEAD!
UMassULearn.net

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Montreal Weekend
From $99 Complete.
Best Hotels.
Best Prices.
montrealexpress.net
781-979-9001

APT. FOR RENT

Hobart Condos 3 Bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, phone (internet access), in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for June and September. NO FEES. 253-7879 www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

APT 4 RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

EMPLOYMENT

ACCOUNTANT REPRESENTATIVE, SALES REPRESENTATIVE, STORE KEEPER, CLERK AND SECRETARY NEEDED- Requirement (Computer Literate, Along with CV.) for more information write us below: Gina Shoes Limited Email: gina.limited@gmail.com

EMPLOYMENT

Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

PART-TIME CAMPUS PROMOTER: Hand out fliers and set up posters. Average $9-20/hr plus residual income: innovativewebconcepts@yahoo.com.

SERVICES

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906,1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthright.org.

SERVICES

Concerned About Your Eating?
Do you eat too little? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic, 577-5101

TAPESTRY HEALTH providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling &rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable, Safe. 413-548-9992. 27 Pray St. Amherst. www.tapestryhealth.org

SERVICES

School a Pain in your eyes?
Headache? Itchy eyes? Trouble reading? An eye exam can be the first step toward relief. Call Eye Care Services at UHS, 577-5383, to learn more.

TRAVEL

Montreal Weekend
From $99 Complete.
Best Hotels.
Best Prices.
montrealexpress.net
781-979-9001

TRAVEL

Spring Break in Rome, Florence, Venice, Italy
Heading to Italy this Spring? Visit www.prestotours.com for Expert Touring Advice. VIP Walking Tours of the Vatican City, Colosseum and more. No Lines. Elite English Speaking Tour Guides. Small Groups. Student Discounts. Low Price. Online Booking. info@prestotours.com. 617-642-7082

UM falls, clinches A-10 berth

UMass loses to Temple, but clinches last spot in tournament

BY MIKE CONNORS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Despite losing five of its last seven games, the Massachusetts women's basketball team qualified for the Atlantic 10 Tournament.

The Minutewomen fell, 64-46, on Saturday to a Temple team that earned a share of the regular-season conference title with No. 15 George Washington.

UMass (13-15, 5-9 A-10) secured the final spot in the A-10 Tournament and will play Dayton at 2 p.m. on Friday. It will be the second time the teams meet this season – the Minutewomen defeated the Flyers, 56-46, at the Mullins Center on Feb. 23.

Temple	64
UMass	46

Both teams struggled from the field in the first half and UMass remained in the game, trailing, 31-26. Often this season the Minutewomen have dug themselves double-digit halftime deficits but limited the Owls (19-11, 12-2 A-10) to 2-of-8 shooting from beyond the arc.

Temple missed its first eight shots and didn't convert its first field goal with just over 14 minutes remaining in the first half, tying the game at four.

Pam Rosanio led UMass with 15 points on 5-of-11 shooting. However, the rest of the Minutewomen struggled from the field, including leading scorer Kate Mills. The senior forward leads the team, averaging 17.4 points per game, but went 4-of-11 from the floor and finished with 13 points.

The Owls' leading scorer, Ashley Morris, also shot poorly from the floor. The senior guard shot 3-of-13 but assisted on a game-high 11 baskets, while committing two turnovers.

LaKeisha Eaddy led Temple with 16 points on a perfect 7-of-7 shooting.

The Minutewomen did a good job of defending center Lady Comfort, limiting her to 3-of-12 shooting and 12 points. One area Comfort didn't struggle in was rebounding – the senior corralled 13 rebounds and helped the Owls gain a 42-29 rebounding advantage.

In addition to getting outrebounded, the Minutewomen were dominated in the paint. Temple scored 28 points in the paint while UMass managed just 10.

The team is often effective when Mills gets the ball inside and uses her quickness and finesse to score the ball down low.

If a team cannot score in the paint, it's going to have to score from beyond the 3-point line, but UMass hit 2 of its 13 attempts.

Point guard Kim Benton continues to struggle from beyond the arc, hitting 1-of-6 from three against the Owls off the bench.

Benton established herself as a 3-point specialist last season but still hasn't found her form this season. The junior is shooting 24.8 percent from outside this season.

The rest of the bench lacked production as well. Whitney McDonald scored two points on 1-of-6 shooting and was the only other player besides Benton to score off the bench.

The Temple bench provided nearly half of the team's points (28). Shaqwedia Wallace scored 10 points while Shanea Cotton led the bench effort with 12 points.

Mills, Alicia Tatham and McDonald each turned the ball over three times ... Temple was 4-of-12 from beyond the arc ... The Minutewomen had 11 assists and 13 turnovers while the Owls had 12 assists and 14 turnovers.

Mike Connors can be reached at mjconnor@student.umass.edu.

KEITH MEADOWS/COLLEGIAN

Pam Rosanio led UMass with 15 points in their loss at Temple. The Minutewomen have a rematch with Dayton in the first round of the playoffs.

Harris scores 24 in big win

M. HOOPS from page 8

Anderson's basket, but Forbes came up with the offensive rebound to keep the possession alive and run out some clock. Forbes was eventually fouled and hit both free throws, giving the Minutemen a 70-64 lead with 2:45 left in the contest.

The ensuing possession for the Spiders took 43 seconds and resulted in no points, as UMass took advantage of its foul to give. After the foul, the Spiders took the ball out of bounds, and Anderson missed a jumper 20 seconds later. Forbes corralled the rebound, and Lowe took all but two seconds off the shot clock before making a lay-up to give UMass an eight-point lead with 1:31 left.

The Spiders made consecutive lay-ups to cut the lead to four, but UMass iced the game with four free throws by Forbes in the final 20 seconds.

Harris led all scorers with 24 points, hitting 5-of-7 from long distance. Brower was even better from the perimeter, connecting on all but one of his six attempts. Both Brower and Forbes had 17 points and seven rebounds. Forbes has reached double figures in scoring in every game this season.

Gonzalvez led Richmond with 20 points, while three others reached double figures. Starting forward Kevin Smith didn't score a point in 18 minutes of action.

The Minutemen had trouble in the turnover department, committing 15 which led to 25 points for the Spiders. But the 3-point performance by Brower and Harris, coupled with solid free throw shooting late, enabled UMass to hold on for the win.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@student.umass.edu.

KEITH MEADOWS/COLLEGIAN

Etienne Brower was 5-for-6 from 3-point range against the Spiders. He did not attempt a two-point field goal.

Mass Attack stays alive in playoff hunt

HOCKEY from page 8

Pressed in his own zone, defenseman Justin Braun cleared the puck out by lobbing it over everyone. Crowder found himself all alone at the BU blue line with the puck.

He brought puck toward the net from wide to the right, faked the forehand and had an easy backhand into an open net.

"[Braun] chipped it off the glass. I had just come off the bench, so I was behind the defense," Crowder said. "I skated in a little bit. I think the goalie came out for a poke check, and I just beat him."

Quirk scored again on the power play with three minutes remaining in the second. Alex Berry found him creeping into the slot and got the puck to him. Quirk relayed the shot past Bennett and just inside the right post.

In the third, Quirk returned the favor to Berry, as the duo hooked up on a shorthanded goal, Berry's second of the season.

Quirk forced a turnover and brought the puck into the BU zone. It seemed as though Quirk was going for the hat trick and Bennett seemed to agree because he didn't see Berry following the play.

Quirk saw him, and fed him the puck Bennett moved over to make a play. Berry one-timed the puck for the easy goal.

"I saw Al come in late," Quirk said. "He made a good play not going hard to the net and staying back a little. Then I just found him and he put it home."

The goal was a deal-breaker for the Terriers, who looked more frustrated the rest of the third period than they were determined to make a comeback.

With a two-goal lead, the Minutemen found themselves on the penalty kill, and in serious danger of losing momentum. Instead, they closed out the game with a clutch play.

BU coach Jack Parker pulled Bennett with six minutes remaining to try and create some kind of momentum swing.

"There was no sense in letting the score stay at 4-1," he said.

The Minutemen had a player in the penalty box, creating a minute of 6-on-4 hockey for BU. The defense held on through the final minutes of the game, and Chris Davis scored an empty-netter with three minutes left.

Jeremy Rice can be reached at jeremyr@student.umass.edu

Minutemen come up short at Yale

M. LAX from page 8

JESSICA SCHWIK/COLLEGIAN

Peter McNichols scored two goals against Yale. He now has four points on the season (three goals, one assist).

game, senior captain Paul Manesis took a pass from Schneider and raced up field. After successfully clearing the UMass zone, and with teammates racing parallel to him on either side, Manesis opted to force his way through two Yale defenders rather than to make a pass. The two Bulldogs converged on him, jarring the ball loose and ending another UMass possession.

"They did a good job riding against us. I don't know if we were trying to force some clears, but what happens is [Manesis] is a senior and he wants to make plays. He just made a bad decision," Cannella said.

UMass's first goal, however, came in the transition game. Freshman attack Zach Rodgers stationed himself at midfield as a loose ball rolled toward the line. He muscled a Yale midfielder out of position and scooped up the ground ball. Junior Tim Balise raced toward the goal, and Rogers quickly located him. Balise caught the pass in stride and fired past Carafides.

The goal, Balise's first of two on the day, tied the game at 1-1 after Yale scored the first of the game at 4:52 of the first quarter.

Balise's second score made it 7-4 with 5:21 left in the game. Following the goal, Yale's Gregory DuBoff won his 11th of 14 faceoffs on the afternoon. Reale won 10-of-16 draws against Hofstra but failed to repeat his success against DuBoff. Sophomore Bobby Hayes took over for Reale at times in the game. He also struggled against DuBoff losing both of the draws he took.

Cannella didn't blame the poor success rate on faceoffs for UMass's poor offensive showing. However, it is difficult for attackmen and midfielders to develop a rhythm without regular possession of the ball.

"They won most of the faceoffs, so they had most of the offense. [DuBoff] was dominating us, so we tried to jam him and fight for a loose ball," Cannella said of replacing Reale with Hayes. "Yale's guy was someone who [Hayes] had some success against last season."

UMass's struggles on the offensive side forced its defenseman to play very aggressively as the game came to a close. Trailing 7-3, senior Brian Danvers leveled a Yale player at midfield and attempted to free the ball with a stick check as he lay on the ground. Officials whistled Danvers and Rogers both on the play, putting the Minutemen down two men with a four-goal deficit.

Joe Meloni can be reached at joe.meloni@gmail.com

Typadis and Co. run over by Crimson

W. LAX from page 8

29 fouls called on Harvard and 28 on UMass. McCormick was issued a red card in the second half for arguing with one of the officials and was ejected from the game.

Goalie play was another problem for the Minutewomen. Venechanos decided to start freshman goalie Colleen Speth, but the Crimson were all over her and scored 10 goals until she was substituted for veteran netminder, Redshirt junior Chrissy Anderson. Anderson is coming off of a leg injury that sidelined her for all of last season.

One area that the Minutewomen excelled in was ground balls. The Maroon and White grabbed 14 ground balls, while the Crimson tracked down four.

In spite of the final score, both teams played patiently. UMass drew 16 charges, and Harvard drew 17.

The real problem for the Minutewomen was the constant yellow cards. Harvard played a solid, methodical game, and UMass could not get anything to click on either offense or defense.

"I think it's just us losing our composure," Venechanos said of her team's miscues. "Harvard was very composed and calm and played their [style of] game. They took us out of our game from the start."

Harvard was very good at shutting down key players for UMass as senior captain Kathleen Typadis only mustered one goal on four shots, three on goal.

With one of their best players thrown out of the game and the other shutdown offensively, the Minutewomen had to rely on other players to contribute. Junior attack Julie Pasquantonio had two goals on three shots on goal.

The Maroon and White also couldn't put together many fluid offensive plays either. The Minutewomen only had four assists as a team, compared to Harvard's 12.

UMass' defensive effort was anemic as well. The Minutewomen only had one caused turnover, as opposed to Harvard's five.

Next up for UMass is its first away game of the season. The Minutewomen will take on Dartmouth this Wednesday in Hanover, N.H.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu.

MSU slips past Balschmiter

SOFTBALL from page 8

Balschmiter allowed a double. Aggies catcher Erin Glasco tried to score from first on the double by Macie Morrow. Glasco was thrown out at the home. Balschmiter finished the inning with a strikeout, ending the only threat for the Aggies to catch up.

UMass's other victory on the weekend came against Auburn. After scoring one run in two games on Friday, the Minutewomen totaled six runs, doing most of their damage in the fourth inning with four runs. Behind a solid performance from sophomore pitcher Bailey Sanders, who went 6 2/3 innings giving up two earned runs while striking out a season-high seven batters.

In the top of the second inning senior outfielder Lauren Proctor tripled, scoring Mollica all the way from first to put UMass up, 1-0. In the next inning Salato came up with the bases loaded. She hit a hard ball to deep center, but was caught on a diving catch. Sophomore Whitney Williams tagged from third.

In the fourth inning with the bases loaded and two outs, Cullington drew a walk, putting the Minutewomen up 3-0. Salato singled and scored another run and after a pitching change Sero was hit by a pitch scoring another run. Reeves also drew a walk and gave Sanders a 6-1 lead to work with.

On Sunday, with No. 18 Mississippi State down two runs, UMass scored three runs in the top of the seventh off Balschmiter. The Minutewomen almost pulled it out in the bottom of the seventh when Cullington hit a one-out double after sophomore outfielder Carly Normandin walked. With runners on second and third, Salato lined out to the pitcher and Normandin was tagged out at third to end the game.

Steve Games can be reached at sgames@dailycollegian.com.

Take Out a classifieds ad

THE DAILY COLLEGIAN
now offers free online classifieds for students at
WWW.UMASSLIST.COM

- More complete, local and relevant category listings than any and all competitor web sites combined
- Users can setup daily e-mail updates for relevant listings.
- No more searching for apartments, now they come to you.
- Post unlimited online listings
- Little to no spam

By listing on this site you are supporting your local college newspaper, The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
Insurance Replacement Rates
FREE PICK-UP
POTTER'S AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates
Potter's Collision Repair
at North Amherst Motors
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.pottersauto.com
(One mile North of UMass - on bus route)
Collision Repair & Glass Replacement

Arigato II
Hibachi Steak & Seafood
15% off with Student ID
(except Friday & Saturdays)
Sushi · Full Bar · Cocktails
Parking Garage
Pleasant St
Amherst Cinema
Arigato
Arigato II
Main St
Town Hall
Reservations Suggested
413.253.0707

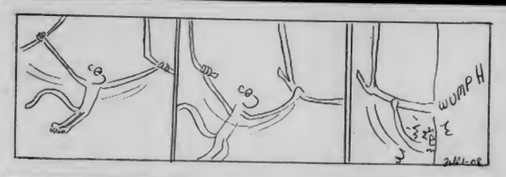
Jolly good.

	2				9
3								7
8		7	9			1	6
	6			5		8
4			7		6			5
		5		9			7
	1	8			7	5		4
2								6
		4					8

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

ACROSS
1 Watered
6 Snow-day rides
11 Pedal pumper
14 Vibrant
15 Long-necked wader
16 Ocean off NC
17 Purple shade
18 Barest hint
19 __ Na Na
20 Compared with
22 Mouthed-off
24 Shamus
25 Concentrate
27 Seven times a week
28 Courts
30 City near Cleveland
32 Scottish loch
33 Sly comments
35 Last part of a sonnet
37 Nods off
39 Lifts and hurls
43 Belt positions
47 Prepared to pray
48 High point
51 Marcus Aurelius, e.g.
53 Environs
54 Talisman
56 Identify oneself to a computer
58 Chasing game
59 Execrables
61 Annual golf event
63 Bus. tr. abbr.
66 Automaton
68 Hit the slopes
69 Sergeant Bilko
70 Festive
71 Retirement letters
72 Graded
73 Accumulate

DOWN
1 Actor Holbrook
2 Dressing ingredient
3 Paint ingredient
4 Tanguay and Gabor
5 Low-boost coffee?
6 Comic bits
7 Spare time
8 European eagle
9 Hounds
10 Slammin' Sammy
11 Mouse dog
12 Kennedy and Merman
13 __ Knight & the Pips
21 Intl broadcasters
23 Guitarist Carlos
24 Tango teams
26 Distress signal
29 Cooking sticks
31 To the __ degree
34 Health resort
36 Mouse spotter's cry
38 Fam. member
40 Spine piece
41 Parker and Powell
42 Males only
44 Letters on Cardinal caps
45 Hoffman movie
46 Took aim at
48 Right to use
49 Big pieces
50 Actress Strassman
52 Meir Sebastian
55 Poetic measure
57 Bellini opera
60 Mrs. Copperfield
62 "Birches," e.g.
65 Picnic pest
67 Herndon and Cobb

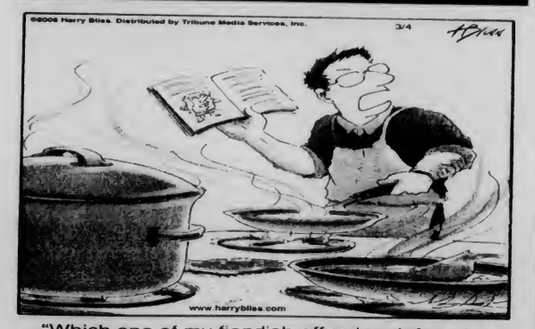


Still looking for the PERFECT summer job?
WE CAN HELP!
Grotonwood and Oceanwood two Christian summer camps looking for qualified college students to be a part of a life-changing ministry this summer
SPECIAL NEEDS UNIT LEADER - The perfect position for a Special Education major that wants to gain more experience working with special needs adults, and develop their leadership skills. Summer salary of $3,100 + room/board.
COUNSELORS - This is an awesome opportunity to make a difference in the lives of kids this summer. Challenge the campers to grow while developing your leadership and teaching skills. Summer salary of $2800 + room/board
For more information and an application, go to our website, www.grotonwood.org and look under the "Summer Staff" tab
Grotonwood- Oceanwood
167 Prescott St
Groton MA 01450
978-448-5763
office@grotonwood.org

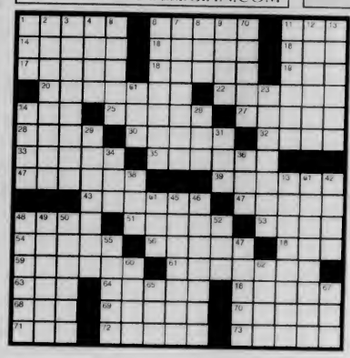
QUOTE OF THE DAY

"I'd like to have my ashes spread all over the beach. So even after I'm dead, I'm still gonna get in girls' pants."

– Steven Tyler



ECOLOGY BY JEN FILL



WONDERMARK BY DAVID MALKI

BLISS BY HARRY BLISS

"Which one of my fiendish offspring defaced the bordelaise recipe with SpongeBob?"

Continuing & Professional Education
UMassAmherstOutreach
Summer Session 2008
Don't Wait-
Jump Start Your Career
This Summer
Session I June 2 - July 10
Session II July 14 - Aug 20
Online Gen Ed's
Small Classes
Great Faculty
PLAN AHEAD!
UMassULearn.net

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
You dance like a giraffe on ether. It is both awkward and dangerous.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Although it can be risky and even lifethreatening, picking up hitchhikers can yield many valuable rewards.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
You're wearing a North Face, but you're clearly not the kind of girl who's into climbing mountains. Besides, Uggs have no grip.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
Your digital camera is meant for the capturing of good memories, not the blackmailing of enemies.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
Generally speaking, you're a hard worker, but from the looks of things, your left eye is a bit lazy.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Your hair is more finely coiffed than a the dog-fro of an award-winning poodle.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Channel your inner Zorro today during your Spanish test. You'll scratch your "Z" and your teacher will give you an A.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Just like the time you cut all the hair off of your favorite Barbie, your actions cannot be undone. Think before you play hair stylist.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
You're more dormant than Mount Saint Helens. Wake up and spew your brew all over the place.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
The only thing better than swimming with dolphins is illegally swimming with giant goldfish in the Durfee Conservatory pond.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
In a game of Rocks, Paper, Scissors, staying three steps ahead of your opponent is superfluous.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Your words sting worse than a paper cut. Speak Band-Aids, spit antibiotic ointment, and apologize for mean things you've said.

Thanks for being such a great listener.

comics@dailycollegian.com

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Montreal Weekend
From $99 Complete.
Best Hotels.
Best Prices.
montrealexpress.net
781-979-9001

APT FOR RENT

Hobart Condos 3 Bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, phone (internet access), in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for June and September. NO FEES. 253-7879 www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

APT 4 RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

EMPLOYMENT

ACCOUNTANT REPRESENTATIVE, SALES REPRESENTATIVE, STORE KEEPER, CLERK AND SECRETARY NEEDED- Requirement (Computer Literate, Along with CV.) for more information write us below: Gina Shoes Limited Email: gina.limited@gmail.com

EMPLOYMENT

Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

PART-TIME CAMPUS PROMOTER: Hand out fliers and set up posters. Average $9-20/hr plus residual income: innovativewebconcepts@yahoo.com.

SERVICES

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906,1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthright.org.

SERVICES

Concerned About Your Eating?
Do you eat too little? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic, 577-5101

TAPESTRY HEALTH providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling &rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable, Safe. 413-548-9992. 27 Pray St. Amherst. www.tapestryhealth.org

SERVICES

School a Pain in your eyes?
Headache? Itchy eyes? Trouble reading? An eye exam can be the first step toward relief. Call Eye Care Services at UHS, 577-5383, to learn more.

TRAVEL

Montreal Weekend
From $99 Complete.
Best Hotels.
Best Prices.
montrealexpress.net
781-979-9001

TRAVEL

Spring Break in Rome, Florence, Venice, Italy
Heading to Italy this Spring? Visit www.prestotours.com for Expert Touring Advice. VIP Walking Tours of the Vatican City, Colosseum and more. No Lines. Elite English Speaking Tour Guides. Small Groups. Student Discounts. Low Price. Online Booking. info@prestotours.com. 617-642-7082

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, MARCH 3, 2007 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Still in the hunt

Three players score in double digits in first road win over Spiders

By Eli Rosenswaike
Collegian Staff

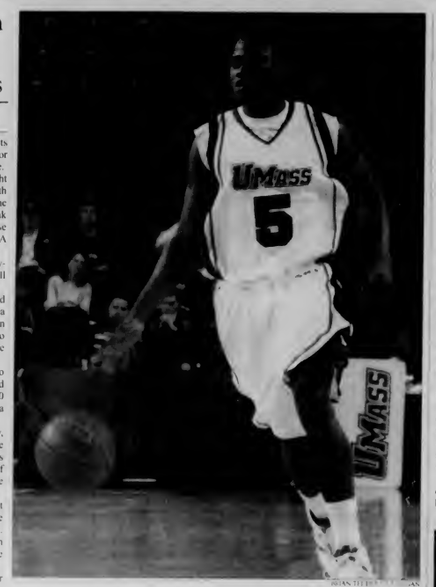
For the first time in team history, the Massachusetts men's basketball team beat Richmond on the road. For the Minutemen, it couldn't have come at a better time.

UMass defeated the Spiders, 78-74, Saturday night at the Robins Center in Richmond, Va., on the strength of five 3-pointers from both Ricky Harris and Etienne Brower. The Minutemen extended their winning streak to four games with the victory and helped their case to receive a possible at-large bid into the NCAA Tournament.

"We're excited. This is a Richmond team that's playing some of the best basketball in the conference."

UMass	78
Richmond	74

UMass coach Travis Ford said after the game, in a phone interview for CBS3 in Springfield. "Any time you go on the road and beat a team like Richmond, it's gratifying and very much needed."



The Minutemen (19-9, 8-6 Atlantic 10) have two games left in the regular season, wins in each would secure a first-round bye for UMass in the Atlantic 10 Tournament, which will be held at the Boardwalk Arena in Atlantic City, N.J., from March 12-15.

Richmond (15-12, 8-6 A-10) came out firing early, taking a quick 8-0 lead about two minutes into the game after two 3-pointers by David Gonzalvez. But UMass tied the game at 14-14 at the 13:20 mark in the first half and slowly pulled ahead and added to its lead as the game progressed.

The Minutemen were up by as much as 10 against Richmond (49-39, 16:31 left in the game), but the Spiders made a run late to give UMass a brief scare. After a lay-up by Richmond guard Kevin Anderson which cut the lead to 68-64, Gary Forbes helped secure the victory for UMass with a pair of timely rebounds.

Point guard Chris Lowe missed a jump shot after

See M. HOOPS on page 6

Ricky Harris scored 24 points on 9-of-13 shooting and 5-of-7 from beyond the arc. Etienne Brower and Gary Forbes both had 17 points.

Mass Attack splits weekend, wins first season series over BU

By Jeremy Rice
Collegian Staff

Saturday night the Massachusetts hockey team knocked off Boston University in a 5-1 game at the Mullins Center, avenging a 3-0 defeat Friday in Boston.

It was the type of win that makes one wonder where the Minutemen have been since the start of 2008.

BU	3
UMass	0
UMass	5
BU	1

Cory Quirk scored a pair of goals and added an assist as the Mass Attack stayed in control throughout the game, much like they did for most of the first half of the season.

"I'm really happy that the kids were determined to get themselves back on track," UMass coach Don Cahoon said.

The Terriers nearly doubled up the Minutemen in shots on goal, 28-15, but great play on the defensive end held BU to one goal. The teams traded goals in the first period, but UMass scored two goals each in the second and third for the convincing victory.

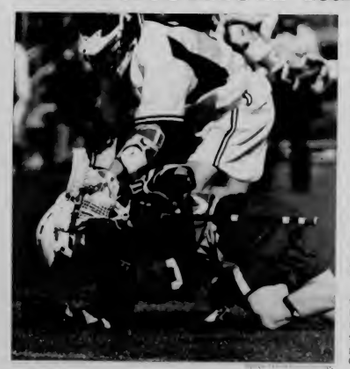
"It was nice that the offense could be generated by the defense, but it was the defense that really set the tone," Cahoon said.

Goaltender Paul Dainton made 27 saves in the game, but also got plenty of help from his defenseman, including Martin Nolet, who fended off a 3-on-1 early in the game to prevent an easy goal for BU.

Quirk opened the scoring on the power play just over three minutes into the game, tipping a shot by P.J. Fenton from the top of the left circle. Quirk dropped the blade of his stick as the puck came in, redirecting it through BU goalie Brett Bennett's legs.

The Terriers did not respond until the final minute of the first period, when Brandon Yip scored from the left point.

The Minutemen were aggressive throughout the first and played with a sense of urgency, which has been badly needed, entering the final two weeks of the regular season.



The second period was back-and-forth until the midway point, when Scott Crowder scored his second goal of the season to break the tie.

See HOCKEY on page 6

Cory Quirk scored two goals and assisted on a shorthanded rally in a 5-1 win over the Terriers.

Minutemen fall short at Yale

Tim Balise scored two of the Minutemen's four goals in the loss at Yale as the team struggled offensively throughout the game.

By Joe Mellona
Collegian Staff

NEW HAVEN, Conn. — Trailing, 6-2, at the start of the fourth quarter on Sunday afternoon, the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team seemed poised to sneak back into the game. Junior Joe Reale won the opening faceoff, and freshman Peter McNichols cut the Yale lead to 6-3 at 12:34 of the period.

But the Bulldogs quickly snatched the momentum away from UMass (1-1), extending their lead back to four when Michael Karwoski fired a shot past Doc Schneider to seal the victory for Yale (1-1). UMass added another late, but the Bulldogs held on for a 7-4 victory.

The game was largely an offensive struggle for the Minutemen. The Bulldog defenders prevented UMass from executing its game plan with strong perimeter defense and superb goaltending from senior George Caradides (nine saves).

"I thought we got some looks early, and their goalie made some saves. Our execution wasn't great, and it was hard to get in the flow of the game," UMass coach Greg Cannella said.

"In the third and fourth quarter, guys were trying to score three goals at once instead of just taking it one at a time. They tried to take the team on their shoulders, and it's tough to do that on offense."

Yale	7
UMass	4

The Minutemen played their trademark strong defense. The Bulldogs managed 25 shots, but the experienced UMass defensive core forced Yale into shots that Schneider had little trouble saving for the most part. He had his second consecutive game with double-digit saves with 13 after a career-high 19 against Hofstra last Saturday.

Allowing seven goals in a game is typically a good thing for teams in Division I lacrosse. But the Yale defenders overshadowed their counterparts in maroon and white. The Bulldogs succeeded especially in shutting down the UMass transition offense.

After Karwoski's goal put Yale up by four with 7:29 remaining in the

See M. LAX on page 6

Minutewomen upset Aggies

By Steve Games
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts softball team took down No. 2 Texas A&M on Saturday at the NFCA Leadoff Classic Saturday in Columbus, Ga. Junior pitcher Brandice Balschmiter allowed one run and the Minutewomen bats provided enough to win, 4-1.

The weekend didn't start as well as it ended. The Minutewomen lost both games on Friday. Florida State shut them out in the first game, 6-0, and No. 19 DePaul needed extra innings to win, 2-1. On Saturday the Minutewomen won both games, defeating the Aggies and then Auburn, 6-3. The Minutewomen closed the weekend with a loss to No. 18 Mississippi State, 3-2.

The last time UMass (6-9) defeated a second-ranked team was back in 2002 when it beat Stanford, 3-1. Texas A&M could only come up with one run against Balschmiter despite getting nine hits. UMass put together a two-run first inning, all with two outs. Junior right fielder Samantha Salato singled and then sophomore catcher Jessica Serio reached on an error. Both runners advanced to second and third. Sophomore infielder Sarah Reeves came up and singled in both runners with a hit to left field.

The Minutewomen added two more in the bottom of the third inning by taking advantage of another Aggie error. Junior third baseman Whitney Mollica reached on an error and sophomore outfielder Jill Andrews pinch ran for her. Andrews advanced to second on a sacrifice bunt. Sero singled and Andrews went to third.

UMass put more pressure on the bases by pinch running junior outfielder Davina Hernandez for Sero. Hernandez stole second and Reeves came up to the plate to knock in her third RBI of the day by reaching on a fielder's choice. Senior second baseman Stacy Cullington came up next and hit a single that scored Hernandez from third.

The four runs were more than enough for Balschmiter, who got out of a tough stretch in the top of the fourth. After allowing Texas A&M to score a run and one runner on first,

See SOFTBALL on page 6

UMass loses third straight

McCormick scores a pair as Maroon and White fall again

Kaytlin McCormick scored a pair of goals against the Crimson, but the Minutewomen fell behind early and could not recover.

By Mike Gillmeister
Collegian Staff

With a 20-11 loss on Saturday against the Harvard Crimson, the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team is now on a three-game losing streak.

UMass (1-3) could not get into a rhythm as Harvard (2-0) saw three different players score hat tricks, two of which happened in the first half. The Crimson moved the ball around well with eight players scoring on the day and six scoring multiple goals.

Harvard	20
UMass	11

Crimson attack Kaitlin Martin (five goals, three assists) and midfielder Jess Halpern (four goals) led the way for Harvard and scored nearly half of the Crimson goals.

The Crimson were also backed by the strong goaltending of Kathryn Tylander.

"We can't play backup," said UMass coach Alexis Venechanos of her team's ability to rebound from Harvard's four-straight goals after UMass scored the first goal of the game. "We had 13 shots, and we only scored on one. You can't beat a team like Harvard shooting so poorly."

Sophomore attack Stephanie Hopkins put the Minutewomen up 1-0 with her first goal of the season. Hopkins' goal came just 39 seconds after the opening whistle.

Senior attack Kaytlin McCormick ended the Maroon and White's scoring drought with her first goal of the game, which made the score 4-2. McCormick had two goals and two assists but could not convert on either of her free-position shots.

Free-position shots were one of the many problems with which the Minutewomen dealt. UMass was one-of-13 on the free chances. Harvard's three-of-seven was much more effective.

It was a physical game that saw

See W. LAX on page 6

INSIDE: CHARITY HEROES PAGE 4

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

SHOWERS: HI: 43 LO: 35 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM TUESDAY, MARCH 4, 2008

For the second time in as many weeks, a violent message was found in a men's bathroom on campus. Though UMass police did not reveal details, it confirmed that the threatening note was similar to the one discovered last Wednesday.

Second message found

Police discover threatening note in Furcolo

By Frank Vitale
Collegian Staff

For the second time in a week, a threatening message was found written in a men's bathroom on campus, this time in Furcolo Hall, an academic building primarily devoted to the education department. UMass police responded to the scene and are currently conducting an investigation.

The entire campus, including Furcolo Hall, remained open with classes taking place as usual.

Students received an e-mail from Ed Blaguszewski, director of news and information, just after 8 a.m., informing them of the message and of the police's response. It also notified them that classes would continue as usual, as well as asking students to report any suspicious activity to UMass police.

According to Blaguszewski, a janitor found the message early this morning, around 6 a.m.

This latest message comes on the heels of a strikingly similar situation last Wednesday, when students were informed by a near-identical e-mail that "a message threatening violence with a weapon was found scrawled in the second-floor men's room of Bartlett Hall."

A second e-mail was sent out later that night informing students that though UMass police were continuing their investigation, "the time frame included in the threat [had] passed."

It again asked for student cooperation with the police. The similarities between the incidents have not gone unnoticed.

"We do think now there is some common language among the messages. There may be a connection," said Blaguszewski. "We're continuing to investigate. We're hoping we can identify the source."

In the wake of the Virginia Tech tragedy, schools across the country have been taking steps to notify students of potential trouble before it happens. The

VIOLENCE from page 2

Furcolo Hall, the home of the UMass School of Education, is located on North Pleasant St. near Totman Gym on the north edge of campus.

UM athletes read to local 3rd-graders

By Holly Seabury
Collegian Staff

To help celebrate "Grab Your Hat and Read with the Cat" Day, in honor to children's author Dr. Seuss's March 2 birthday, three very tall University of Massachusetts athletes walked into an elementary school wearing big costume hats with their favorite Seuss books.

Once the athletes entered the building yesterday morning, students in the hallway at the Mosier Elementary School in South Hadley began to follow and wave to the star players, including Liam Coen, quarterback of the UMass football team, and senior forwards Gary Forbes and Etienne Brower of the men's basketball team.

After the warm welcome, the athletes sat down in Jennifer Yellin's third-grade classroom and informally discussed the literature of the legendary Seuss, just minutes before the class returned from lunch and filed into their desk chairs. Some students dressed in UMass attire for the special occasion.

UMass Sports Information Director Jason Yellin introduced the athletes as the students smiled and anxiously waited for some of their favorite sports players to speak.

Brower was the first to read, selecting "One Fish, Two Fish, Red Fish, Blue Fish" to read to the class, followed by Forbes who read "Hop on Pop," followed by Coen who chose "Yertle the Turtle." The students, not affected at all by the press, which included two cameramen and several photographers, quietly listened and laughed out loud at appropriate spots in the books.

After the readings, the students were allowed to ask questions. Mostly curious about the athletes' interest in Dr. Seuss, one student asked what their favorite books were and another asked if they were fans of the legendary author. The athletes talked about their favorite Seuss books and the first one they read as a child, which was "The Cat in the Hat" for all three.

The students then received basketball programs and Coen's player card

See READING on page 2

UMass athletes Liam Coen (left), Gary Forbes (center) and Etienne Brower read Dr. Seuss books to students at a local elementary school yesterday afternoon.

UMass Dining Services wins notable award

By Jennifer Hishon
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Dining Services has been awarded one of Restaurants and Institutions (R&I) Magazine's 2008 Ivy Awards for excellence in the food service industry.

"This is the award that every dining establishment would love to have," said Executive Director of UMass Dining Services Ken Toong.

The R&I Ivy Awards are given annually to food service institutions that demonstrate the highest standards of achievement in food, service and overall hospitality.

This year, UMass, Alinea restaurant in Chicago, Bartolotta Ristorante di Mare in Las Vegas, Hotel Healdsburg in Healdsburg, Calif., Per Se restaurant in New York City and the Presbyterian Hospital of Plano, Texas received Ivy Awards.

R&I Magazine bills itself as a leading source of information in both print and online for the food service industry, including chains, independent restaurants, hotels and institutions such as UMass.

According to R&I's Web site, every year since its establishment in 1971, the past Ivy Award recipients nominate restaurants, hotels and noncommercial institutions for the prestigious

See AWARD on page 2

Profiling candidates for SGA pres. and trustee

Peter Kuusisto hopes to bring his experience to the SGA presidency

By Emily Reynolds
Collegian Correspondent

Editor's note: Check future issues of the Collegian for profiles of the other candidates for SGA president and student trustee.

Peter Kuusisto, a candidate for Student Government Association president at the University of Massachusetts, is running on his prior experience on and off campus.

The 22 year old is currently the SGA auditor and has been the economic advisor in the past. He has also served as treasurer for the UMass Democrats and co-president of the Economics Club, and working with the organization for presidential hopeful Barack Obama in Massachusetts.

"We need a very experienced person within the student government to run," said Kuusisto. "I feel I am the most experienced."

According to Kuusisto, his experiences on campus started when he was just five years old.

"I live in the area, and I feel a strong connection to the campus," Kuusisto said.

Kuusisto is adamant that there is a need for experience in the SGA in order to bring about a change.

"We need a different conversation than the one that is happening," said Kuusito. "I can bring a different point of view to the election.

"Being co-president of the Economics Club helped me learn how to manage things, and it is time I stepped up and started managing," he said.

Kuusisto is running on a platform of being more open to dialogue. According to his Facebook.com group, Kuusisto wants to send out regular e-mails updating students on campus happenings.

"We need more communication between students and the president," he added.

Kuusisto is also running with the idea that a change is necessary. Although he respects fellow candidate Derek Khanna, he feels that Khanna's campaign is too much like current president Aaron Buford's and previous trustee Mishy Lieblum's.

"We really need people who can think for themselves," said Kuusisto.

Kuusisto is a resource economics major and his group can be found on Facebook.com as "Peter Kuusisto for Student Government Association President."

"I am not the candidate attached to a group, I am the independent candidate attached to your ideas," Kuusisto wrote on Facebook.

Emily Reynolds can be reached at ereynold@student.umass.edu.

Libby Protzman wants to relate to student body in trustee position

By Jessica Sacco
Collegian Staff

Sophomore Libby Protzman is in the race for student trustee at the University of Massachusetts with her running mate Derek Khanna – a candidate for SGA president.

Protzman is a legal studies major and currently holds the position of commuter senator. She is involved in a multitude of on and off-campus activities, ranging from being a member of the UMass Democrats to a sister of the Chi Omega sorority.

In the past, Protzman has worked with the Sylvan Area Government, helped the Brown, McNamara and Cashin House councils, and been a part of the Public Policy and Relations Committee.

Protzman's desire for the position developed from former student trustee Mishy Lieblum, who she felt had a large amount of influence over the SGA, as well as on the campus.

"I want to make change and make a difference using this influence," said Protzman. "I know many of the trustees currently on board and I want to work cooperatively with them to make UMass Amherst safer, more diverse and a more affordable place for every undergraduate and graduate student."

Protzman plans to organize students to rally behind their cause – not just that of one person or a political party. She believes this can be achieved by keeping constant liaison with the student body to ensure everyone is updated on current campus issues.

Protzman feels that the strongest point of their campaign is their ability to relate to every student.

"We want to represent everyone equally and we realize campus is largely diverse," she said. "We are the only non-partisan team running for office currently, and we are endorsed by both the UMass Democrats and UMass Republicans, which shows our universal consideration and support."

Protzman has a great amount of respect for her partner and feels they make a great team and would enhance the campus greatly.

"Derek and I want change. There have been overwhelming odds for anyone who stood up against the current party and now it's time for us to change those odds," she said.

Confidence, Protzman admits, is something she cannot boast, because she feels pride is a great flaw.

"I am humbled by the overwhelming support of the student body and RSOs that have received Derek and I so well," she said. "I believe we have more than a chance to win, but also a great chance to make a difference for UMass students."

Jessica Sacco can be reached at jsacco@student.umass.edu.

Candidate Peter Kuusisto hopes his experience as SGA auditor will translate into election to SGA president.

One of the candidates for student trustee, Libby Protzman, hopes to unite the student body.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 96

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Exter
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Michael Sarkes
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Ryan McAskill
COMICS EDITOR Adam Stajgis
EDITORIAL EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Rice
FEATURES EDITOR Dave Humphreys
PHOTO EDITOR Michael Phillis
WEB EDITOR James Hale
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Stymczak
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Marsea Whooten
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Stephanie McPherson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Skye McIntyre
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Brian Wood
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Garber
ASSISTANT NEWS Michael King
ASSISTANT NEWS Kate Olesin
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Seabury
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Connors
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Meloni
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenwaike
ASSISTANT PHOTO Brian Tedder
ARTS WEB EDITOR Michelle Abbasciano
EDITORIAL WEB EDITOR Leif Walcutt
NEWS WEB EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS WEB EDITOR Steve Games

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1902, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. IT RESUMED DAILY SPACE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN ONLINE SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 5:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Meghan Murphy

COPY EDITOR
Kirsten Swenson

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Michael Sarkes

WEB EDITOR
Steve Games

BRIAN TEDDER/COLLEGIAN

The violent message found in Furcolo Hall yesterday morning was cause for extra concern since the building is adjacent to the Mark's Meadow Elementary School. The school features an enrollment of young students ranging from kindergarten to grade six.

Threatening message found in bathroom

VIOLENCE from page 1

Massachusetts Board of Higher Education took steps last February to implement an emergency text-messaging system.

Students like Matilda Brown, 20, are concerned about safety and about police presence in the area when a specific threat is made.

"I mean, I don't pack heat when I come to school," she said.

Other students, such as Peter Rizzo, 19, regard the threats with skepticism.

"I think it's stupid to think that anyone who was going to commit a legitimate act of violence would write it on a bathroom stall," said Rizzo.

Anyone with information on either incident is asked to contact UMass police at 545-2121.

Frank Vitale can be reached at fvitale@student.umass.edu.

UM Dining Services exalted for excellence

AWARD from page 1

award. The winners are then chosen based on votes from the readers of R&I, which include over 154,000 subscribers.

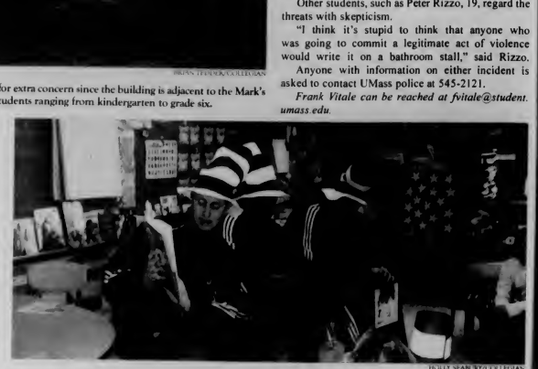
The subscribers consist of executives who operate independent and chain restaurants, hospitals, colleges, schools, airline food services, hotels and resorts, as well as distributors and consultants in the food service supplies industry.

The acknowledgement of excellence from one's peers can be the most significant aspect for the recipients of the Ivy Award, according to Toong.

"It's especially meaningful because it means UMass Amherst has been recognized by its peers for being one of the best in the business," said Toong.

The 2008 Ivy Award declared UMass Dining Services "a model for contemporary campus food service."

The Ivy Award continued its praises of UMass by acknowledging the University's efforts in health education for the students.



"The University's dining services department is educating students about health, nutrition and environmental responsibility while introducing them to a world of food and flavors," the magazine wrote.

The Ivy Award recognized the diverse programs and dining services offered here at UMass including the guest chef program, the campus' multiple dining stations, as well as the use of international cuisine and local food services.

The Ivy Award is just one of the many honors that UMass Dining Services has received in the past year from peers in the food service industry. In 2007, the University was awarded the Loyal E. Horton Dining Contest grand prize by the National Association of College and University Food Services in the category of Residential Dining Program. Also in 2007, UMass received the Best Concepts Award from Food Management magazine.

The six winners of the Ivy Award will be inducted into the Ivy Society as members for life in Chicago on May 18. The recipients will attend the gala awards dinner during the National Restaurant Association Show. In addition to their induction into the Ivy Society, the winners will be featured in the May 1 issue of R&I magazine.

Jennifer Hetshin can be reached at jhetshin@student.umass.edu.

HOLLY SEABURY/COLLEGIAN

Several UMass athletes read books to young students at a South Hadley elementary school. The event helped to celebrate the National Education Association's Nation's Largest Reading Celebration.

Athletes read to local students

READING from page 1

so that the athletes could autograph for their young fans. Some students also pulled out basketballs and footballs from a closet and began to play and warm up to their new guests.

"I was going to bring my own football!" exclaimed Ryan, a third-grader.

"I really liked the reading," said Giana.

The event, as part of the National Education Association's "Nation's Largest Reading Celebration," was a first for the athletes, though Jason Yellin hinted toward a future, perhaps similar, event for the UMass Athletic Department.

All three players said that they had never really read to a classroom of children before, but were happy to be part of the NEA's event.

"We never really get the opportunity to do something like this, so this was great for us," said Coen. "It's really fun for us, especially because we're with people so young, and everyone's happy."

Holly Seabury can be reached at hseabury@dailycollegian.com.

VISITING COLLEGE CHEF SERIES
Welcome Chef Joel D. Blice, CEC & Chef Donald Stauffer, CEC
Villanova University

CHEF JOEL D. BLICE, CEC CHEF DONALD STAUFFER, CEC

VILLANOVA FAVORITES:
- Gingered Carrot Soup
- Apple and Fennel Slaw with Citrus Glazed Red Onions
- Philly Cheesesteak Pizza
- The "Dine Out" Barbeque Plate
- Hickory Smoked Texas Dry Rub Ribs
- Moroccan Barbequed Salmon
- Jamaican Jerked Chicken
- "Philly" Baked Beans with Kennett Square Mushrooms
- Philadelphia Water Ice
- The Trifle

Tuesday, March 4
Berkshire DC from 5–9 pm

2007 Grand Prize
DINING SERVICES UMassAmherst
umass.edu/diningservices
"THE BEST SERVING THE BEST"
Food Management's BEST CONCEPTS

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 5
Worcester, Franklin, Hampshire DCs
from 7–11 am

MENU:
Maple Grain Pancakes
Maple French Toast
Maple Sausage Links
Maple Sticky Buns
Maple Nut Muffins
Maple Syrup
Maple Flavored Coffee
And more!

New England MAPLE BREAKFAST

ENTER TO WIN
a Basket of Local Maple Treats
Valued at $30.00

NORTH HADLEY SUGAR SHACK
2007 Grand Prize
DINING SERVICES UMassAmherst
umass.edu/diningservices
Be A Local Hero
Food Management's BEST CONCEPTS
Maple Sugaring video provided by the Massachusetts Maple Producers Association

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
EDITORIAL OPINION
TUESDAY, MARCH 4, 2008
"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
- Sir Salman Rushdie
EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The RSU speaks out

When the Radical Student Union (RSU) placed a safe sex brochure in our office window in October last year, we never would have imagined the controversy it would cause.

Radical Student Union

Up until two weeks ago, not one person had filed a complaint, nor had we heard any negative feedback concerning the poster's placement in the Student Union. On the contrary, we received nothing but positive responses.

The reaction of the past two weeks, however, has been charged with issues of identity, homophobia and racism, because the brochure depicts two men of different races in safe sexual contact. The response of the Republican Club has been to call such imagery indecent; the administration has called it a violation of the student code of conduct.

Republican Club members are the last people on this campus who should be naming what is decent versus indecent at the University. After charges of sexual harassment from the MACR, repeated hate speech and physical assault against various RSU members and others, as well as vandalism of our events, they now have the nerve to call our efforts "indecent."

Unfortunately, they have been able to cause enough of a commotion to actually get the administration to respond, and now that the administration has gotten involved, there is a whole new layer to this.

The University is now threatening the RSU with loss of office space as well as disciplinary action against three individual RSU members. These charges were given to us after a censored version of this poster was put up in response to their request to take them down entirely.

Clearly, this is about the administration trying to be the bosses they aren't instead of the bureaucrats they are.

The administration has strangely interpreted our censoring of the materials as in fact "highlighting" them. The actual charges are failure to comply with the directions of University officials and unauthorized use of and defacing of University property.

As we deem their directions to be in violation of our right to free speech, we have naturally refused. The unauthorized use and destruction of University property, on the other hand, is highly ironic.

It was them, after all, who took down all the billboards in the Student Union, leaving almost no space for student advertising in the SU, as well as painting the walls a putrid pink. All of this occurred without the slightest input from students.

Clearly, this is about the administration trying to be the bosses they aren't instead of the bureaucrats they are. It is an issue of student control over student space. They have demanded that we take the materials down without ever meeting with our group as a whole; without ever trying to work with us. They are not concerned with student life on campus, but obedience to a controlled and marketable campus.

Proof of this can be found in the uneven responses to the RSU campaign for safe sex and the violent aggression of the Republican Club. Since the end of September, the RSU has suffered numerous assaults and hate speech from the Republican Club.

We have reported these instances to the police, Center for Student Development and the dean of students. Regardless of our efforts, the Republican Club not only maintains their office space, but has one of the highest budgets out of any political group on campus.

The administration has continuously refused to do anything about their aggressive behavior. Meanwhile, we try to uphold our right to free speech, and it is we who are threatened with disciplinary action.

Last semester, we had a strike for student control of student spaces, and clearly the administration has not gotten the hint. They have not gotten the hint that the University belongs to the 24,000 students that live here and pay tuition, and that their role is to facilitate our agency, not to curtail it.

Admittedly, disapproval of the brochures is not just about identity or authority. One of the main objections to the poster is that it can be seen by children who use the Cape Cod Lounge on a weekly basis.

Regardless of the fact that the lounge is one floor below the RSU office, we must question the current methods of our society to keep sexuality and sexual imagery silenced and taboo; it is our firm belief that these repressive efforts are harming youth.

The high occurrence of sexually transmitted infections (STIs) in adolescents is unacceptable, especially when we, as adults, are expected to teach our children how to stay safe. Refusing to discuss sex only exposes our own personal discomfort with sex as a society, a discomfort that is terribly damaging given the centrality of sex in our lives.

This issue is even more critical given the spread of STIs in our generation, a generation that the administration has not been a part of. We cannot allow the administration and the Republican Club's negative view of sexuality take precedence over public health and put the safety of the student body at risk.

Many people have called our placement of these posters an intentionally provocative action. What we want to make clear, however, is that we displayed these posters with the intentions of providing both information for safer sex practices, and to shine a light on our office as a safe space for the marginalized queer community on campus.

We feel strongly that the images on these posters, within the context of the dialogues and information shown beneath them, provide an important representation of safe oral sex. Any sexually active person cannot deny that safe oral sex is rarely practiced, if ever. By presenting this information to a wide range of people, who may not question their practices otherwise, we are helping to prevent the spread of STIs.

The Radical Student Union can be reached at rsu-info@stuaf.umass.edu.

Beware of UMass roads

John Gruenenfelder

As you're driving through campus, the car in front of you suddenly disappears from sight. No, it's not a tear in space, though your car might wish it was.

Instead, as you begin to plummet in yourself, you realize too late that it's a pothole. On the bright side, perhaps your mangled car and body will provide enough filler for the next driver to pass unhindered overhead.

The moonscape that is the roadways of Massachusetts would rival any bomb-scarred battlefield. In what is perhaps the worst indictment of local roads, the potholes on Sunset Avenue adjacent to the Southwest residential area can actually be seen from Google Maps. That's bad.

In an apparent stopgap measure, a truck was on campus last week pouring asphalt into holes on North Pleasant. But asphalt is fickle, and a wet winter day is not the best time to apply it. Not surprisingly, the passing traffic did little more than kick up a storm of pebbles.

Winter is harsh on road surfaces, of course, but the roads in this state are reaching a crisis. Some of the highways around town are in decent shape so the ability to construct a surface which holds up against winter weather is certainly present.

Outside of the long, snowy months, I normally ride a scooter around the area. It's inexpensive and gets me where I need to go, yet the sorry condition of the roads has already forced me to avoid certain parts of town.

Worse still, the constant bumps and vibrations actually knocked my side mirror loose and sent the retaining bolt into the void. A trip to the hardware store fixed that, but my scooter is literally being shaken apart.

Sadly, it won't be getting better any time soon. Along with road conditions, the state's transportation budget has also reached a crisis point.

The moonscape that is the roadways of Massachusetts would rival any bomb-scarred battlefield.

A report last year from the Massachusetts Transportation Finance Commission stated that "over the next 20 years, the cost just to maintain our transportation system exceeds the anticipated resources available by $15 billion to $19 billion." That's quite a shortfall and it doesn't even address growth and new construction.

This phenomenon is not limited to Massachusetts. Infrastructure maintenance budgets all over the country are either in debt or barely scraping by.

This has left roads, sewers, water mains and other facilities crumbling in many major cities. Recently, there have been sinkholes in New York City and, even worse, the collapse of the I-35W bridge in Minneapolis that killed 13 people.

That might seem like a good call to action, but too many states are still waiting. For what, it's hard to say. Governor Deval Patrick seems to be one of those playing the waiting game. He has formed a plan called MassTrans, which will merge some regional transportation departments in an effort to make the system more efficient. He has also suggested that casino revenue could help reduce the burden on the state.

Unfortunately, the details Patrick was supposed to deliver to the legislature in early February never came, and according to the Boston Globe last week, Patrick told reporters that "he was not close to completing the plan." Meanwhile, the roads continue to crumble.

The fact that the state needs an infusion of money is no secret, the commission's report also says that "virtually every transportation agency in the state is running structural deficits."

And yet in December, the federal government withheld $1 billion in matching funds because Massachusetts had not set aside enough of its own money for infrastructure repairs. Lacking both money and a comprehensive transportation plan, Governor Patrick really needs to get the ball rolling.

Where does the University fit into these transportation woes? Many campus roads are in dire need of repair. Massachusetts Ave. and North Pleasant St. are the two worst streets on campus and also the two most heavily traveled.

North Pleasant St. has seen some heavy traffic from the two construction projects along it, but much of that traffic has instead used Stockbridge Road. At what point does North Pleasant warrant repaving? When we finally lose a PVTA bus?

With the end of winter weather still some ways away, drivers need to be prepared for even worse conditions. It's no joke that some of these giant holes will soon be causing real accidents.

If you happen to find a side mirror and an Arizona license plate lying beside a campus pothole, please send in a spelunking crew. I'll probably need some help getting back out.

John Gruenenfelder is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at jgruenen@student.umass.edu.

Wedding crashers and political debates

GLOBAL PERSPECTIVES

Greg Collins

To crash a wedding uninvited and absorb its sights and sounds is a hidden desire of both party lovers and college students. Modeled after the film "Wedding Crashers," this goal became ever attainable this past weekend when my American University in Cairo friends and I attended a Muslim wedding for an AUC administrator.

It was quite possibly the most lavish party I had ever experienced in my life. Held at Cairo's policy headquarters, an ornate government building replete with mesmerizing Arab architecture, held multiple cameras and large projector screens that followed the bride's and groom's every move as they walked slowly from outside, up winding stairs and into the party room.

This room, adorned with colorful banners, facsimile Roman pillars and authentic Egyptian artifacts, provided the ideal atmosphere for an event as momentous as a Muslim wedding.

The bride and groom, and, to a lesser extent, the wedding's attendees, were treated royally the entire night. Famous Cairo musicians serenaded the couple, while 40 or so Egyptian male dancers encircled the invitees, including us AUC students, and taught us unique Egyptian dancing techniques.

Exit polls suggest we were only somewhat successful in emulating their moves, which leads to one conclusion – Egyptian men are noticeably better dancers than American males.

Not only were we treated like celebrities, but famous Egyptian actors and actresses did actually attend the wedding. In addition, the food was delectable, as evidenced by my consumption of three plates of chicken, kofta, rice, hummus, pasta salad, regular salad and cake. I can only hope that the next American wedding I attend is half as enjoyable as that Muslim wedding.

In contrast to this joy was a heavy intensity emanating from an AUC panel discussion last Thursday concerning the Israeli-Arab conflict, particularly the recent escalation in violence between the Israeli military and Hamas terrorists. Organized by the Al Quds Club, the Palestinian advocacy student group on campus, the panel included the deputy general of the Arab League and an Al Jazeera reporter.

America has been able to become the most powerful and virtuous country in the world without its government endorsing a specific faith or genetic makeup.

Frustrated by the deputy general's polished rhetoric throughout the portion of the discussion I attended, specifically his emphasis on Israeli violations of international law, I asked him during the question and answer session whether he considered the targeting of innocent Israeli civilians by Hamas to be terrorism.

He then rambled on for the next 15 minutes about how Hamas terrorists are resistance fighters and freedom warriors. Luckily, I had the opportunity to ask a follow-up question, which merely tried to clarify his answer – does killing Israeli civilians not in uniform constitute terrorism, and is therefore a violation of international law?

Yet once again, the deputy general dodged the question and instead continued on with platitudes equating Israel with Nazi Germany and Hamas terrorists with American revolutionaries.

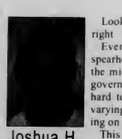
His lack of a direct answer to a direct question revealed one of the fundamental problems facing Arab nationalists, and, to a lesser but equally as important extent, Zionists. It is the utter inability to objectively analyze an issue without allowing ethnic heritage to play a role in shaping one's conclusions.

A Palestinian should not support the targeting of innocent Israelis because they are not Arabs. An Arab leader should not turn a blind eye to Hamas' killing of innocent Israelis, many of whom did not even exist when Israel gained statehood.

Similarly, a Jew should not support Israel merely because it provides a safe haven for Jews. He should not support Israel because it is an official Jewish state with an official Jewish religion. Significantly more important is the fact that Israel, thus far, has been far more committed than surrounding Arab states in embracing liberal democratic traditions which transcend ethnic considerations.

Yet Israel should not be an official Jewish state with an official Jewish religion. America has been able to become the most powerful and virtuous country in the world without its government endorsing a specific faith or genetic makeup, even as many immigrants arriving on U.S. soil have endured incredible oppression abroad similar to that of the Jewish people.

Israel most assuredly has a right and a duty to defend itself, with force if necessary, against Palestinian terrorists. However, these efforts should be directed towards protecting not only the Jewish people, but also any innocent person living within Israel's borders, a goal which the country has a history of fulfilling.



The central security issue for the Israeli Defense Forces and Air Forces, then, is to identify who is the enemy. Because Hamas intentionally and systemically blends in with the innocent Palestinian civilian population, it is very difficult for Israel to distinguish between innocents and terrorists.

The burden, therefore, should not be on Israel to have to justify its military responses, but instead on Hamas to explain why it places its own Palestinian people in danger by disguising themselves as innocents. The hard fact is that Hamas should be held directly responsible for the deaths of 10 or so innocent Palestinians in the most recent Israeli attack.

In any event, I may convert to Islam just so I can celebrate a Muslim wedding.

Greg Collins is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at gcollins@student.umass.edu.

Don't drink the Kool-Aid

Joshua H. Wilder

Look to your left, look to your right – drugs are all around you.

Ever since President Reagan spearheaded the "war on drugs" in the mid '80s, American police and government officials have worked hard to curb illicit drug use, with varying degrees of success, depending on who you talk to.

This weekend, President George W. Bush urged Congress to quickly pass legislation designed to end the illegal sale of highly addictive prescription drugs on the Internet.

Bush also explained his administration's goal of cutting youth drug use over the course of his final year in office. His new policy seeks a 10 percent cut in youth drug use by utilizing random student drug testing and community outreach.

According to Bush, there are an estimated 860,000 fewer young people using drugs today than when he took office in 2001, but one major problem is the misuse of prescription drugs.

There is no denying that highly addictive drugs such as OxyContin, which affects the brain and the body the same way heroin does, are harmful to all people, both young and old. The fact that someone could buy such drugs online is a serious issue that needs to be addressed.

According to John Walters, Bush's drug policy advisor, "rogue" Internet pharmacies often do not require prescriptions or allow prescriptions to be faxed, making it easier for customers to forge documents or use it at multiple pharmacies.

It is commendable that the president is intent on making a difference during his last year in office. Promoting a solid drug policy can be an effective way to do so. But the drug issue is a complex one, and there is a lot more than meets the eye.

While a good strategy is to focus on drugs that are already deemed illegal, that is just scratching the surface when it comes to our drug problem here in America. Bush mentioned prescription drugs, marijuana, methamphetamine and cocaine, but left out another serious offender: "Purple drank."

No, that is not the new Kool-Aid flavor of the month, but the street name for a drug that is taking many by surprise. Purple Drank is a recreational drug popular in the hip-hop community in many southern statesmany. Its main ingredient is prescription-strength cough syrup containing codeine and promethazine.

But the drug issue is a complex one, and there is a lot more than meets the eye.

The purple color found in Purple Drank comes from dyes in the cough syrup. Recently, the term has expanded to cover mixtures including over-the-counter cough syrup, according to an article by scholar Yolanda Walker.

While it may surprise many students here at UMass, apparently there is an entire Purple Drank culture that has become hard to miss. Houston, Texas, producer DJ Screw first popularized the drug concoction and helped launch the habit from the underground Houston rap scene to other southern states.

The drink provides the user with a hypnotic, euphoric and disorienting high that is apparently catching on down south.

Rapper Lil' Wayne is someone who frequently mentions his affinity for the drink, which is also commonly referred to as "syrup." A recent MTV article explained how the rapper is often seen with his Styrofoam cup, filled to the brim with what he calls his "Easter-pink Sprite."

While this does sound peculiar and hilarious to most rational people, the syrup is much more serious than that. The University of Texas recently found that 8.3 percent of secondary students in Texas have taken codeine syrup to get high. But the results can be fatal. Last December, rapper Pimp C died from an accidental overdose of syrup mixed with an existing sleep apnea condition.

Rapper Bun B recently said that the "Texas Tea" has become an "epidemic," and that anyone who uses it needs to "take a look at themselves."

This bizarre and unbelievable story illustrates the unpredictability of drug use in this country. Even though our government focuses billions of dollars, years of energy and time fighting illegal drug use, people are still finding other ways to get high and in the least likely of places.

It seems almost as though people have an unconscious desire to get high, no matter what they have to do. It raises some tough questions.

How do we go about reducing the abuse of legal drugs, or over-the-counter medications like cough syrup? What can you tell your kids to prevent them from doing the same thing? And compared to the negative effects of abusing the Purple Drank, such as vomiting and heart failure, is having a few hits off a joint really that bad?

Putting together a solid, understanding and flexible drug policy is obviously very important. But how can we prepare when drugs like the Purple Drank slip through the cracks? Policy makers have their Styrofoam cups full of that problem.

Josh Wilder is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached a jhwilder@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 96

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Exter
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Michael Sarkes
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Ryan McAskill
COMICS EDITOR Adam Szagin
EDITORIAL EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Rice
FEATURES EDITOR Dave Humphreys
PHOTO EDITOR Michael Phillis
WEB EDITOR James Hale
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Szymczak
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Marwa Whooten
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Stephanie McPherson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Skye McIntyre
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Brian Wood
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Garber
ASSISTANT NEWS Michael King
ASSISTANT NEWS Kate Olesin
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Seabury
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Connors
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Meloni
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenwaike
ASSISTANT PHOTO Brian Tedder
ARTS WEB EDITOR Michelle Abbasciano
EDITORIAL WEB EDITOR Leif Walcutt
NEWS WEB EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS WEB EDITOR Steve Games

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SCENE IN 1903, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1936. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN ONLINE-ONLY SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Meghan Murphy

COPY EDITOR
Kirsten Swenson

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Michael Sarkes

WEB EDITOR
Steve Games

BRIAN TEUTSCH/COLLEGIAN

The violent message found in Furcolo Hall yesterday morning was cause for extra concern since the building is adjacent to the Mark's Meadow Elementary School. The school features an enrollment of young students ranging from kindergarten to grade six.

Threatening message found in bathroom

VIOLENCE from page 1

Massachusetts Board of Higher Education took steps last February to implement an emergency text-messaging system.

Students like Matilda Brown, 20, are concerned about safety and about police presence in the area when a specific threat is made.

"I mean, I don't pack heat when I come to school," she said.

Other students, such as Peter Rizzo, 19, regard the threats with skepticism.

"I think it's stupid to think that anyone who was going to commit a legitimate act of violence would write it on a bathroom stall," said Rizzo.

Anyone with information on either incident is asked to contact UMass police at 545-2121.

Frank Vitale can be reached at fvitale@student.umass.edu.

UM Dining Services exalted for excellence

AWARD from page 1

award. The winners are then chosen based on votes from the readers of R&I, which include over 154,000 subscribers.

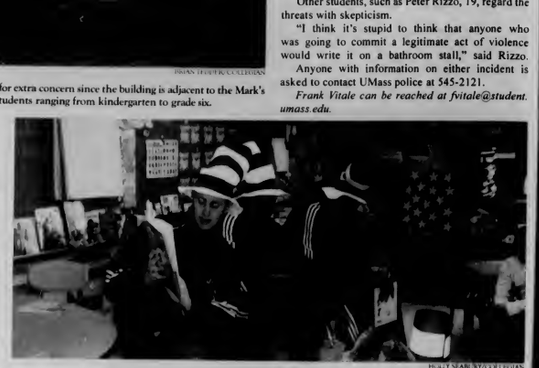
The subscribers consist of executives who operate independent and chain restaurants, hospitals, colleges, schools, airline food services, hotels and resorts, as well as distributors and consultants in the food service supplies industry.

The acknowledgement of excellence from one's peers can be the most significant aspect for the recipients of the Ivy Award, according to Toong.

"It's especially meaningful because it means UMass Amherst has been recognized by its peers for being one of the best in the business," said Toong.

The 2008 Ivy Award declared UMass Dining Services "a model for contemporary campus food service."

The Ivy Award continued its praises of UMass by acknowledging the University's efforts in health education for the students.



"The University's dining services department is educating students about health, nutrition and environmental responsibility while introducing them to a world of food and flavors," the magazine wrote.

The Ivy Award recognized the diverse programs and dining services offered here at UMass including the guest chef program, the campus' multiple dining stations, as well as the use of international cuisine and local food services.

The Ivy Award is just one of the many honors that UMass Dining Services has received in the past year from peers in the food service industry. In 2007, the University was awarded the Loyal E. Horton Dining Contest grand prize by the National Association of College and University Food Services in the category of Residential Dining Program. Also in 2007, UMass received the Best Concepts Award from Food Management magazine.

The six winners of the Ivy Award will be inducted into the Ivy Society as members for life in Chicago on May 18. The recipients will attend the gala awards dinner during the National Restaurant Association Show. In addition to their induction into the Ivy Society, the winners will be featured in the May 1 issue of R&I magazine.

Jennifer Heshion can be reached at jheshion@student.umass.edu.

HOLLY SEABURY/COLLEGIAN

Several UMass athletes read books to young students at a South Hadley elementary school. The event helped to celebrate the National Education Association's Nation's Largest Reading Celebration.

Athletes read to local students

READING from page 1

so that the athletes could autograph for their young fans. Some students also pulled out basketballs and footballs from a closet and began to play and warm up to their new guests.

"I was going to bring my own football!" exclaimed Ryan, a third-grader.

"I really liked the reading," said Giana.

The event, as part of the National Education Association's "Nation's Largest Reading Celebration," was a first for the athletes, though Jason Yellin hinted toward a future, perhaps similar, event for the UMass Athletic Department.

All three players said that they had never really read to a classroom of children before, but were happy to be part of the NEA's event.

"We never really get the opportunity to do something like this, so this was great for us," said Coen. "It's really fun for us, especially because we're with people so young, and everyone's happy."

Holly Seabury can be reached at hseabury@dailycollegian.com.

VISITING COLLEGE CHEF SERIES

Welcome Chef Joel D. Blice, CEC & Chef Donald Stauffer, CEC
Villanova University

CHEF JOEL D. BLICE, CEC CHEF DONALD STAUFFER, CEC

VILLANOVA FAVORITES:

- Gingered Carrot Soup
- Apple and Fennel Slaw with Citrus Glazed Red Onions
- Philly Cheesesteak Pizza
- The "Dine Out" Barbeque Plate
- Hickory Smoked Texas Dry Rub Ribs
- Moroccan Barbequed Salmon
- Jamaican Jerked Chicken
- "Philly" Baked Beans with Kennett Square Mushrooms
- Philadelphia Water Ice
- The Trifle

Tuesday, March 4
Berkshire DC from 5–9 pm

2007 Grand Prize

DINING SERVICES
UMassAmherst
umass.edu/diningservices

"THE BEST SERVING THE BEST"

FoodManagement's BEST CONCEPTS

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 5
Worcester, Franklin, Hampshire DCs
from 7–11 am

MENU:
Maple Grain Pancakes
Maple French Toast
Maple Sausage Links
Maple Sticky Buns
Maple Nut Muffins
Maple Syrup
Maple Flavored Coffee
And more!

New England MAPLE BREAKFAST

ENTER TO WIN
a Basket of Local Maple Treats
Valued at $30.00

NORTH HADLEY SUGAR SHACK

2007 Grand Prize

DINING SERVICES
UMassAmherst
umass.edu/diningservices

Be A Local Hero

FoodManagement's BEST CONCEPTS

Maple Sugaring video provided by the Massachusetts Maple Producers Association

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, MARCH 4, 2008

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
- Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The RSU speaks out

When the Radical Student Union (RSU) placed a safe sex brochure in our office window in October last year, we never would have imagined the controversy it would cause.

Radical Student Union

Up until two weeks ago, not one person had filed a complaint, nor had we heard any negative feedback concerning the poster's placement in the Student Union. On the contrary, we received nothing but positive responses.

The reaction of the past two weeks, however, has been charged with issues of identity, homophobia and racism, because the brochure depicts two men of different races in safe sexual contact. The response of the Republican Club has been to call such imagery indecent; the administration has called it a violation of the student code of conduct.

Republican Club members are the last people on this campus who should be naming what is decent versus indecent at the University. After charges of sexual harassment from the MACR, repeated hate speech and physical assault against various RSU members and others, as well as vandalism of our events, they now have the nerve to call our efforts "indecent."

Unfortunately, they have been able to cause enough of a commotion to actually get the administration to respond, and now that the administration has gotten involved, there is a whole new layer to this.

The University is now threatening the RSU with loss of office space as well as disciplinary action against three individual RSU members. These charges were given to us after a censored version of this poster was put up in response to their request to take them down entirely.

Clearly, this is about the administration trying to be the bosses they aren't instead of the bureaucrats they are.

The administration has strangely interpreted our censoring of the materials as in fact "highlighting" them. The actual charges are failure to comply with the directions of University officials and unauthorized use of and defacing of University property.

As we deem their directions to be in violation of our right to free speech, we have naturally refused. The unauthorized use and destruction of University property, on the other hand, is highly ironic.

It was them, after all, who took down all the billboards in the Student Union, leaving almost no space for student advertising in the SU, as well as painting the walls a putrid pink. All of this occurred without the slightest input from students.

Clearly, this is about the administration trying to be the bosses they aren't instead of the bureaucrats they are. It is an issue of student control over student space. They have demanded that we take the materials down without ever meeting with our group as a whole; without ever trying to work with us. They are not concerned with student life on campus, but obedience to a controlled and marketable campus.

Proof of this can be found in the uneven responses to the RSU campaign for safe sex and the violent aggression of the Republican Club. Since the end of September, the RSU has suffered numerous assaults and hate speech from the Republican Club.

We have reported these instances to the police, Center for Student Development and the dean of students. Regardless of our efforts, the Republican Club not only maintains their office space, but has one of the highest budgets out of any political group on campus.

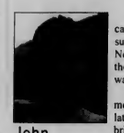
The administration has continuously refused to do anything about their aggressive behavior. Meanwhile, we try to uphold our right to free speech, and it is we who are threatened with disciplinary action.

Last semester, we had a strike for student control of student spaces, and clearly the administration has not gotten the hint. They have not gotten the hint that the University belongs to the 24,000 students that live here and pay tuition, and that their role is to facilitate our agency, not to curtail it.

Admittedly, disapproval of the brochures is not just about identity or authority. One of the main objections to the poster is that it can be seen by children who use the Cape Cod Lounge on a weekly basis.

Regardless of the fact that the lounge is one floor below the RSU office, we must question the current methods of our society to keep sexuality and sexual imagery silenced and taboo; it is our firm belief that these repressive efforts are harming youth.

The high occurrence of sexually transmitted infections (STIs) in adolescents is unacceptable, especially when we, as adults, are expected to teach our children how to stay safe. Refusing to discuss sex only exposes our own personal discomfort with sex as a society, a discomfort that is terribly damaging given the centrality of sex in our lives.



This issue is even more critical given the spread of STIs in our generation, a generation that the administration has not been a part of. We cannot allow the administration and the Republican Club's negative view of sexuality take precedence over public health and put the safety of the student body at risk.

Many people have called our placement of these posters an intentionally provocative action. What we want to make clear, however, is that we displayed these posters with the intentions of providing both information for safer sex practices, and to shine a light on our office as a safe space for the marginalized queer community on campus.

We feel strongly that the images on these posters, within the context of the dialogues and information shown beneath them, provide an important representation of safe oral sex. Any sexually active person cannot deny that safe oral sex is rarely practiced, if ever. By presenting this information to a wide range of people, who may not question their practices otherwise, we are helping to prevent the spread of STIs.

The Radical Student Union can be reached at rsuinfo@stuaf.umass.edu.

Beware of UMass roads

John Gruenenfelder

As you're driving through campus, the car in front of you suddenly disappears from sight. No, it's not a tear in space, though your car might wish it was.

Instead, as you begin to plummet in yourself, you realize too late that it's a pothole. On the bright side, perhaps your mangled car and body will provide enough filler for the next driver to pass unhindered overhead.

The moonscape that is the roadways of Massachusetts would rival any bomb-scarred battlefield. In what is perhaps the worst indictment of local roads, the potholes on Sunset Avenue adjacent to the Southwest residential area can actually be seen from Google Maps. That's bad.

In an apparent stopgap measure, a truck was on campus last week pouring asphalt into holes on North Pleasant. But asphalt is fickle, and a wet winter day is not the best time to apply it. Not surprisingly, the passing traffic did little more than kick up a storm of pebbles.

Winter is harsh on road surfaces, of course, but the roads in this state are reaching a crisis. Some of the highways around town are in decent shape so the ability to construct a surface which holds up against winter weather is certainly present.

Outside of the long, snowy months, I normally ride a scooter around the area. It's inexpensive and gets me where I need to go, yet the sorry condition of the roads has already forced me to avoid certain parts of town.

Worse still, the constant bumps and vibrations actually knocked my side mirror loose and sent the retaining bolt into the void. A trip to the hardware store fixed that, but my scooter is literally being shaken apart.

Sadly, it won't be getting better any time soon. Along with road conditions, the state's transportation budget has also reached a crisis point.

The moonscape that is the roadways of Massachusetts would rival any bomb-scarred battlefield.

A report last year from the Massachusetts Transportation Finance Commission stated that "over the next 20 years, the cost just to maintain our transportation system exceeds the anticipated resources available by $15 billion to $19 billion." That's quite a shortfall and it doesn't even address growth and new construction.

This phenomenon is not limited to Massachusetts. Infrastructure maintenance budgets all over the country are either in debt or barely scraping by.

This has left roads, sewers, water mains and other facilities crumbling in many major cities. Recently, there have been sinkholes in New York City and, even worse, the collapse of the I-35W bridge in Minneapolis that killed 13 people.

That might seem like a good call to action, but too many states are still waiting. For what, it's hard to say. Governor Deval Patrick seems to be one of those playing the waiting game. He has formed a plan called MassTrans, which will merge some regional transportation departments in an effort to make the system more efficient. He has also suggested that casino revenue could help reduce the burden on the state.

Unfortunately, the details Patrick was supposed to deliver to the legislature in early February never came, and according to the Boston Globe last week, Patrick told reporters that "he was not close to completing the plan." Meanwhile, the roads continue to crumble.

The fact that the state needs an infusion of money is no secret; the commission's report also says that "virtually every transportation agency in the state is running structural deficits."

And yet in December, the federal government withheld $1 billion in matching funds because Massachusetts had not set aside enough of its own money for infrastructure repairs. Lacking both money and a comprehensive transportation plan, Governor Patrick really needs to get the ball rolling.

Where does the University fit into these transportation woes? Many campus roads are in dire need of repair. Massachusetts Ave. and North Pleasant St. are the two worst streets on campus and also the two most heavily traveled.

North Pleasant St. has seen some heavy traffic from the two construction projects along it, but much of that traffic has instead used Stockbridge Road. At what point does North Pleasant warrant repaving? When we finally lose a PVTA bus?

With the end of winter weather still some ways away, drivers need to be prepared for even worse conditions. It's no joke that some of these giant holes will soon be causing real accidents.

If you happen to find a side mirror and an Arizona license plate lying beside a campus pothole, please send in a spelunking crew. I'll probably need some help getting back out.

John Gruenenfelder is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at jgruenen@student.umass.edu.

Wedding crashers and political debates

GLOBAL PERSPECTIVES

Greg Collins

To crash a wedding uninvited and absorb its sights and sounds is a hidden desire of both party lovers and college students. Modeled after the film "Wedding Crashers," this goal became ever attainable this past weekend when my American University in Cairo friends and I attended a Muslim wedding for an AUC administrator.

It was quite possibly the most lavish party I had ever experienced in my life. Held at Cairo's policy headquarters, an ornate government building replete with mesmerizing Arab architecture, held multiple cameras and large projector screens that followed the bride's and groom's every move as they walked slowly from outside, up winding stairs and into the party room.

This room, adorned with colorful banners, facsimile Roman pillars and authentic Egyptian artifacts, provided the ideal atmosphere for an event as momentous as a Muslim wedding.

The bride and groom, and, to a lesser extent, the wedding's attendees, were treated royally the entire night. Famous Cairo musicians serenaded the couple, while 40 or so Egyptian male dancers encircled the invitees, including us AUC students, and taught us unique Egyptian dancing techniques.

Exit polls suggest we were only somewhat successful in emulating their moves, which leads to one conclusion.

Egyptian men are noticeably better dancers than American males.

Not only were we treated like celebrities, but famous Egyptian actors and actresses did actually attend the wedding. In addition, the food was delectable, as evidenced by my consumption of three plates of chicken, kofta, rice, hummus, pasta salad, regular salad and cake. I can only hope that the next American wedding I attend is half as enjoyable as that Muslim wedding.

In contrast to this joy was a heavy intensity emanating from an AUC panel discussion last Thursday concerning the Israeli-Arab conflict, particularly the recent escalation in violence between the Israeli military and Hamas terrorists. Organized by the Al Quds Club, the Palestinian advocacy student group on campus, the panel included the deputy general of the Arab League and an Al Jazeera reporter.

America has been able to become the most powerful and virtuous country in the world without its government endorsing a specific faith or genetic makeup.

Frustrated by the deputy general's polished rhetoric throughout the portion of the discussion I attended, specifically his emphasis on Israeli violations of international law, I asked him during the question and answer session whether he considered the targeting of innocent Israeli civilians by Hamas to be terrorism.

He then rambled on for the next 15 minutes about how Hamas terrorists are resistance fighters and freedom warriors. Luckily, I had the opportunity to ask a follow-up question, which merely tried to clarify his answer – does killing Israeli civilians not in uniform constitute terrorism, and is therefore a violation of international law?

Yet once again, the deputy general dodged the question and instead continued on with platitudes equating Israel with Nazi Germany and Hamas terrorists with American revolutionaries.

His lack of a direct answer to a direct question revealed one of the fundamental problems facing Arab nationalists, and, to a lesser but equally as important extent, Zionists. It is the utter inability to objectively analyze an issue without allowing ethnic heritage to play a role in shaping one's conclusions.

A Palestinian should not support the targeting of innocent Israelis because they are not Arabs. An Arab leader should not turn a blind eye to Hamas' killing of innocent Israelis, many of whom did not even exist when Israel gained statehood.

Similarly, a Jew should not support Israel merely because it provides a safe haven for Jews. He should not support Israel because it is an official Jewish state with an official Jewish religion. Significantly more important is the fact that Israel, thus far, has been far more committed than surrounding Arab states in embracing liberal democratic traditions which transcend ethnic considerations.

Yet Israel should not be an official Jewish state with an official Jewish religion. America has been able to become the most powerful and virtuous country in the world without its government endorsing a specific faith or genetic makeup, even as many immigrants arriving on U.S. soil have endured incredible oppression abroad similar to that of the Jewish people.

Israel most assuredly has a right and a duty to defend itself, with force if necessary, against Palestinian terrorists. However, these efforts should be directed towards protecting not only the Jewish people, but also any innocent person living within Israel's borders, a goal which the country has a history of fulfilling.

The central security issue for the Israeli Defense Forces and Air Forces, then, is to identify who is the enemy. Because Hamas intentionally and systemically blends in with the innocent Palestinian civilian population, it is very difficult for Israel to distinguish between innocents and terrorists.

The burden, therefore, should not be on Israel to have to justify its military responses, but instead on Hamas to explain why it places its own Palestinian people in danger by disguising themselves as innocents. The hard fact is that Hamas should be held directly responsible for the deaths of 10 or so innocent Palestinians in the most recent Israeli attack.

In any event, I may convert to Islam just so I can celebrate a Muslim wedding.

Greg Collins is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at gcollins@student.umass.edu.

Don't drink the Kool-Aid

Joshua H. Wilder

Look to your left, look to your right – drugs are all around you.

Ever since President Reagan spearheaded the "war on drugs" in the mid '80s, American police and government officials have worked hard to curb illicit drug use, with varying degrees of success, depending on who you talk to.

This weekend, President George W. Bush urged Congress to quickly pass legislation designed to end the illegal sale of highly addictive prescription drugs on the Internet.

Bush also explained his administration's goal of cutting youth drug use over the course of his final year in office. His new policy seeks a 10 percent cut in youth drug use by utilizing random student drug testing and community outreach.

According to Bush, there are an estimated 860,000 fewer young people using drugs today than when he took office in 2001, but one major problem is the misuse of prescription drugs.

There is no denying that highly addictive drugs such as OxyContin, which affects the brain and the body the same way heroin does, are harmful to all people, both young and old. The fact that someone could buy such drugs online is a serious issue that needs to be addressed.

According to John Walters, Bush's drug policy advisor, "rogue" Internet pharmacies often do not require prescriptions or allow prescriptions to be faxed, making it easier for customers to forge documents or use it at multiple pharmacies.

It is commendable that the president is intent on making a difference during his last year in office. Promoting a solid drug policy can be an effective way to do so. But the drug issue is a complex one, and there is a lot more than meets the eye.

While a good strategy is to focus on drugs that are already deemed illegal, that is just scratching the surface when it comes to our drug problem here in America. Bush mentioned prescription drugs, marijuana, methamphetamine and cocaine, but left out another serious offender: "Purple drank."

No, that is not the new Kool-Aid flavor of the month, but the street name for a drug that is taking many by surprise. Purple Drank is a recreational drug popular in the hip-hop community in many southern statesmany. Its main ingredient is prescription-strength cough syrup containing codeine and promethazine.

But the drug issue is a complex one, and there is a lot more than meets the eye.

The purple color found in Purple Drank comes from dyes in the cough syrup. Recently, the term has expanded to cover mixtures including over-the-counter cough syrup, according to an article by scholar Yolanda Walker.

While it may surprise many students here at UMass, apparently there is an entire Purple Drank culture that has become hard to miss. Houston, Texas, producer DJ Screw first popularized the drug concoction and helped launch the habit from the underground Houston rap scene to other southern states.

The drink provides the user with a hypnotic, euphoric and disorienting high that is apparently catching on down south.

Rapper Lil' Wayne is someone who frequently mentions his affinity for the drink, which is also commonly referred to as "syrup." A recent MTV article explained how the rapper is often seen with his Styrofoam cup, filled to the brim with what he calls his "Easter-pink Sprite."

While this does sound peculiar and hilarious to most rational people, the syrup is much more serious than that. The University of Texas recently found that 8.3 percent of secondary students in Texas have taken codeine syrup to get high. But the results can be fatal. Last December, rapper Pimp C died from an accidental overdose of syrup mixed with an existing sleep apnea condition.

Rapper Bun B recently said that the "Texas Tea" has become an "epidemic," and that anyone who uses it needs to "take a look at themselves."

This bizarre and unbelievable story illustrates the unpredictability of drug use in this country. Even though our government focuses billions of dollars, years of energy and time fighting illegal drug use, people are still finding other ways to get high and in the least likely of places.

It seems almost as though people have an unconscious desire to get high, no matter what they have to do. It raises some tough questions.

How do we go about reducing the abuse of legal drugs, or over-the-counter medications like cough syrup? What can you tell your kids to prevent them from doing the same thing? And compared to the negative effects of abusing the Purple Drank, such as vomiting and heart failure, is having a few hits off a joint really that bad?

Putting together a solid, understanding and flexible drug policy is obviously very important. But how can we prepare when drugs like the Purple Drank slip through the cracks? Policy makers have their Styrofoam cups full of that problem.

Josh Wilder is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached a jhwilder@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, MARCH 4, 2008 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Sorority rocks charity with 'Guitar Hero'

Iota Gamma Upsilon hosts fundraiser for Bayside Hospital

BY SARAH ALBERT
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

The Guitar Hero Challenge, held in the Student Union Ballroom at the University of Massachusetts last Sunday marked Iota Gamma Upsilon's very first charity event of the year.

The sorority held the event to raise money for the Baystate Hospital's Children's Wing, or more specifically, the Miracle Fund. This organization is made for children who have suffered from head traumas, cancers and other serious illnesses. After planning the event for many weeks, the girls were happy with the results.

To help make the day successful, they contacted many local restaurants and companies for donations and advertisements. Iota Gamma Upsilon sold raffle tickets for prizes such as gift certificates to Pasta y Basta, among others. CampusLive.com provided them with free advertisements on their Web site, and for the actual event, they ran a table with free T-shirts and information regarding their homepage.

Also present in the ballroom was the Student City table, with representatives from SpringBreak.com. They donated two free spring break trips as part of their contribution to the raffle, and also sold Rockstar Energy Drinks at a discount price to help promote the product.

The games began a little after 1 p.m., and after signing up for a specific level, those who were competing were sent to a certain section of the ballroom to start playing. The "easy," "medium" and "hard" levels all had a handful of gamers at each station, but the "expert" level drew the most Guitar Hero fans.

More than 30 people entered the hardest tier, only for the crowd to be whittled down to two. Amongst the competitors were college students, graduates and even one 11 year old, Sammy, from Haverhill, Mass. He arrived with his friend, David Hanger, 18, from Lowell, Mass. Both were lucky enough to advance to the third round, though Hanger just barely qualified with a 1,000 point lead that he claimed would have only measured to about four missed notes out of the hundreds played during one song.

He lost to his younger friend in the fourth round, but claiming a broken "whammy" bar was what cost him the win.

Besides broken equipment, other difficulties the players encountered were distractions from the crowd, other competitors, and even the other TVs that were running too closely to one another for the players to concentrate on their songs. One group had to stop at one point because the setting on the game was configured to "lag" in accordance with a High Definition TV. Despite all these minor distractions,, the players were fairly successful in battling in a fair manner.

Expert level players were required to score above 85 percent on "Paint it Black" by the Rolling Stones to advance to the next round. Everyone achieved this; however, the real challenge was the second song, the Guns 'N' Roses classic "Welcome to the Jungle," where a score of 95 percent or higher was necessary to continue.

As the elimination rounds proceeded in the expert level, many people were sent home empty-handed. Once the fourth rounds started, the Iota Gamma Upsilon sisters picked songs randomly for each pair of competitors.

The competition brought out players from all skill levels. Competing in the easy level was Nicole Szamrej, who had never played Guitar Hero before this event, testing her skills with "Sweet Child of Mine" by Guns 'N' Roses.

"I wanted to stop by Iota Gamma Upsilon's charity event because I really agree with the cause," said Szamrej, a Sigma Kappa sister. "The Baystate Hospital's Children's Miracle Fund is a great organization that I have helped in the past, and I wanted to show my support."

Although she did not make it to the final round, Szamrej said that the day was really successful because funds raised from the event went to a good cause.

Tasha Espandez, from Lawrence, Mass., was the final victor of the easy level. Espandez, a recent Clark University graduate, was visiting her sister for her birthday weekend, and had competed to try to win a prize. She received a gift certificate for dinner in town after beating her opponent in Lynyrd Skynyrd's "Freebird."

On the medium level, Espandez's brother, Carlos, took the win by again defeating "Freebird." Each final round was played on the large screen projector, and the crowd watched with anticipation as the players battled through the tough solo. He, too, received a gift certificate, and will enjoy dinner at Pioneer Valley Pizza.

During the hard-level final round, Peter Abruzzese was cheered on by his girlfriend in the competition's third and final playing of "Freebird." He won by a large percentage, however, and received $25 to Rolando's, the new restaurant in downtown Amherst.

The finals for the expert level were the most intense by far. "Through the Fire and Flames" was the last song of the day, an immensely difficult number by Dragonforce. Eric Feeley emerged as the UMass champion for 2008, and received a gift certificate for dinner at a local eatery.

The day concluded as the raffle winners were announced and the sorority thanked everyone for stopping by. They hope to make this an annual event and continue to help the Children's Miracle Fun for the Baystate Hospital in the future.

Sarah Albert can be reached at salbert@student.umass.edu

The ladies of the Iota Gamma Upsilon sorority hosted the "Guitar Hero" tournament last Sunday at the Student Union Ballroom to raise money for the Bayside Hospital's Children's Wing.

'Jumper' goes into free-fall

Christensen's acting dooms superhero-esque thrill ride

BY SHAYNA MURPHY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It's official. Hayden Christensen can't act.

Not only that, but his shoddy acting and excessive pouting bring down what could easily be considered one of the campiest films of the season.

It shouldn't come as much of a surprise. Not Christensen, I mean, even though fans of his cling stalwartly to the single, moderately-decent performance he gave back in 2004's "Shattered Glass." I mean about "Jumper." It should come as no surprise that the movie was destined to be subpar. After all, it's being released in February.

It's always possible to read a studio's expectations of a film by the release date set for it. If it's a movie being released on 4th of July weekend, chances are it's expected to be a smash. If it's released at the end of December, unless it's a horror movie slated for a Christmas release, it's probably got Oscar written all over it.

But not the poor, beleaguered "Jumper." Released in early February, affectionately known in Hollywood as the dead zone, this wannabe thrill ride is of the so-so variety. Where it succeeds is exactly where most would be compelled to crucify; it's over the top effects, non-existent dialogue, and wooden performances provide the perfect afternoon distraction for any of those brave enough to suspend disbelief for an hour and a half and just watch things get blown up.

If only it weren't for that damned Hayden Christensen.

Christensen stars as David Rice, a run-of-the-mill kid who discovers he has the ability to teleport around the world. Zipping through glitches in the space-time continuum, he soon discovers, is a great way to see the world and pick up girls. From Ann Arbor to Cairo (and into a few bank vaults along the way), he leads the life of a modern-day gentleman of leisure, until finally, someone starts to notice.

That someone is none other than bad ass du jour Samuel L. Jackson. Both he and his terrible, silver G.I. Joe crew cut have a bone to pick with David for his crimes against humanity. Further exploration reveals that Jackson isn't the only one on the outs with "jumpers," as people with David's ability are called; he belongs to a group that's been tracking down jumpers for centuries.

For reasons never quite explored, the Paladins go by a pretty simple philosophy of kill-or-be-killed in regards to the jumpers. Acting like neo-Spanish Inquisitors with dorkier 'dos, the Paladins seek out jumpers with the rigor of churchmen gone horribly awry. And, suffice it to say, they generally get the job done well. David escapes Samuel L. Jackson's clutches with a warning.

A brief encounter with imminent doom leaves David hankering for a bit of the past he left behind. Taking the opportunity to reunite with his middle-school sweetheart, Millie (Rachel Bilson, and I say middle school because the kid skipped town when he was like, 12), he also takes it as an opportunity to flex a few superpower muscles. While taking in Rome with Millie, he "jumps" to the restricted sections of the Colosseum for a private tour. As a result, imminent doom finds them both.

The film, helmed by director Doug Liman, is so ridden with absurdities that one must commit immediately to either hating or loving it, or run the risk of insanity. Liman, having spent the last greater half of the past decade in the shoot-em up action arena with "The Bourne Identity" and "Mr. & Mrs. Smith," knows his way around explosives. He lets his experience do the performing for most of the picture, filling up vacuous screen space formerly occupied by Christensen and Bilson with big booms and magnificent landscapes.

"Jumper" is the sort of film that moves quickly – to stay any longer would be to wear out its welcome – but what it does linger on unfolds with gusto. But there is still the matter of you-know-who to address.

Hayden Christensen, who in recent years has become something of a poster boy for snot-nosed, emo entitlement, is in full form here as the ne're do jumper. He should be perfect, even if he is bad, and it should be funny, right?

Wrong.

The schtick he shot to infamy with in the Star Wars prequels has been honed over a succession of crappy cinematic fares. Here, he appears before our very eyes as the very vision of jerkdom.

The problem isn't simply that he's a bad actor. The problem is that he's a dread actor trapped in character already snot-nosed, emo and entitled. It's emo jerk overload, made worse by the fact that the character he plays is supposed to be a protagonist. It doesn't take long before you start to think these Paladins may really be onto something.

The introduction of Jamie Bell as an insouciant, rouge jumper in time for the film's big finale injects vitality into the jumpers' much-withering case for survival.

Although not technically an entry in the superhero genre, "Jumper" fits the mold in franchise terms. If successful, it may go on to become a franchise similar to that of the Fantastic Four – a mediocre, family-friendly affair that audiences revisit in the hangover spell between better franchises. To its detriment, not having been spawned with the comic book pedigree of the latter, the franchise may fail to register at all in the realm of sequels.

Shayna Murphy can be reached at skmurphy@student.umass.edu.

The smug character that Hayden Christensen has perfected in his past film roles is taken too far in his latest film "Jumper." He plays a man of leisure who discovers he can teleport anywhere in the world, only to be hunted by a secret organization that, for unknown reasons, is trying to stop him.

Techno, dance and satire mix in new CD

BY HEATHER WAXMAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The quirky musical collaborations of the London-based quintet Hot Chip has reached their pinnacle in the band's third studio release. Having dropped only a few weeks ago, "Made in the Dark" is steadily receiving widespread praise and recognition not only in the United Kingdom, but also in the United States as well. SPIN dubbed the indie rockers "artists to look out for" in 2008.

Members Alex Taylor, Joe Goddard, Owen Clarke, Alex Doyle and Felix Martin released their first full-length album, "Coming on Strong," in 2004 and received much criticism. Their Simon and Garfunkel-channeled harmonies were suitably deemed lifeless and repetitious.

The band took the criticism and ran with it, channeling a sound similar to the British techno craze imploding the indie club scene. Maintaining an open mind, the guys pulled inspiration from various artists including fellow pals, LCD Soundsystem, of which Doyle is also a member. The result was a giant step forward for the group in terms of songwriting and production.

The 2006 release of their second album, "The Warning," brought in a Mercury Prize nomination in addition to an Album of the Year nod from Mixmag, the world's largest selling clubbing and dance music magazine. After six years as a band, their style has collectively evolved into a unique, edgier electro-rock sound, something to officially take pride in.

"The Warning" snowballed into Hot Chip's latest musical creation, "Made in the Dark." The band conserves their catchy dance-floor beats with the kick-off song, "Out at the Pictures." The track sets the stage with an eerie, one-minute synthesized introduction only to be followed by the creative up-tempo syncopated rhythms Hot Chips fans know and love.

Their anomalous explosions of sound encompass much of the album. "Ready for the Floor," the first single off the new release, is nothing short of contagious. The repeated homosexual innuendo, "You're my number one guy" is sure to keep listeners tuned in, never mind chuckling.

The somewhat risqué comedy shtick persists throughout the album, particularly in the song "Wrestlers." The knee-slapping lyrics are a comic strip all their own, continuing to keep listeners on their toes. Frontman Alex Taylor sings, "I've got a roll of coins, I'm aiming for your loins and I will never stop."

There is no need to be fooled by the band's monstrosity of outlandish wisecracks. Despite its perpetuation of solar-powered dance grooves, Hot Chip adds more ballads to this record than ever before. It's pleasant to the ear and develops an ideal counterbalance to their more upbeat songs.

The album's title track channels soul and blues with outstanding, heartfelt lyrics slightly reminiscent of 1970s great Jackson Browne. Frontman Alex Taylor's angelic vocals steal the song with a more passionate and sincere vibe than ever before in addition to impressive harmonies. He passionately croons, "Every night the motion must be fixed by glue but babe, be careful, what's fixed as one breaks in two."

Other ballads such as "Whistle for Will" and "In the Privacy of Our Love," are equally satisfying to the ear. Although the notion of having multiple ballads is something fairly new for Hot Chip, the addition of another serenade would have made for a nearly flawless album.

Impressively enough, no song on the record sounds the same. Each frenzy-filled techno ditty possesses its own distinct characteristics.

The band must be doing something right as "Ready for the Floor" is steadily climbing the U.K. singles chart. Each band member brings impressive skills to the table, generating an addicting melodramatic pop-rock commotion sound all their own.

Heather Waxman can be reached at hwaxman@student.umass.edu.

Learning at Springer U

Talk show host in middle of college tour

BY DAVID HILTBRAND
THE PHILADELPHIA INQUIRER

WEST CHESTER, Pa. Jerry Springer is in the midst of a college tour. Which is ironic because the whole purpose of going to college is to decrease your chances of ever appearing on Springer's syndicated sleazefest.

On this brittle February night, the P.T. Barnum of talk-show hosts is in Asplundh Concert Hall on the campus of West Chester University, addressing the student body.

The kids, who occasionally erupt into the familiar battle cry "Jerry! Jerry! Jerry! Jerry!" are getting the full dog and pony show. Literally.

One of the episodes shown is "I Married a Horse," during which a Shetland pony is led out onto the stage of Springer's Chicago studio to kiss a decrepit man in visored sunglasses. The host's on-air introduction: "Today we have a love story."

Earlier in the day at his hotel in Philadelphia, Springer, 64, sardonically distanced himself from this particular spectacle. "The guy who slept with his horse? I came out against it. I said it was wrong," he says with a smirk. "So let it never be said that I don't have a moral compass."

That's Jerry's shtick. He watches with amused astonishment his show's sick pageant of midgets, trannies and crackpots but he never steps into the slime pit himself.

"One of the reasons I work [in this role] is that people see me as a regular guy in the midst of the chaos," he says at the hotel. "My role is purely reactive. I don't know anything about the guests beforehand. All I have is a card with their name on it. Every segment always opens with me saying, 'So what's going on?' Then they tell me their story. And I ask them questions and make jokes."

That disingenuous blend of shock and mock has kept "The Jerry Springer Show" on the air for 16 seasons.

"If you aim a show at high school and college kids you can be on forever because there's always new kids coming along to watch," he says. "If you aim a show at a 30-year-old, by the time they're 33, they're bored with the show. But you always get new kids.

"I really think that explains our longevity," Springer says. "Because the show is mindless. It serves no purpose. But it stays on because of the giggle factor."

Later in West Chester, the students are shown a prepackaged clip reel, narrated by Matt Lombardo, the sports editor of the campus newspaper, who has been drafted as moderator.

It traces the arc of Springer's talk-show career, starting in 1991 when he was an earnest news anchor in Cincinnati trying to assume the mantle of Phil Donahue.

Another highlight is the 1997 episode "Klanfrontation," when militant members of the Jewish Defense League were brought on to "debate" robed and hooded Ku Klux Klan members.

To no one's surprise, a full-scale, chair-throwing riot broke out in the studio. The attendant controversy and ratings spike marked a turning point for the show.

The rest of the reel is sheer Springer bedlam: brawls, food fights, gender atrocities and romance gone terribly awry. You've never seen this many women in wedding gowns throwing haymakers.

• By the way, if you do choose to get married on "The Jerry Springer Show" by the in-house man-of-the-cloth, the seedy Rev. Shnorr, you may want to have the legitimacy of the ceremony checked by local officials.

After the clips, there's a brief Q&A session with the audience ("What keeps you interested?" "My bills"). Then Springer asks the crowd's forbearance for "four minutes to talk about what's going on in the world right now."

He delivers an impassioned case for universal health care, advising the kids to hold all the presidential candidates accountable. "You say to them, 'If we don't have national health insurance by the next election, you who I voted for will never get my vote again as long as I live.'"

Then comes the part of the evening that everyone came for, as Jerry moves to a side table and the kids line up to have their pictures taken with him by their friends with cell phones.

It's a perfectly modern moment, made peculiar only because Springer himself is something of a Luddite. "We've become subservient to the technology," he said at the hotel. "My staff always makes fun of me because I don't use a computer. It's not a world that I want to participate in. I have no e-mail. I have a cell phone with no numbers [programmed] on it."

That Jerry. He's all about irony. He insists that his goofy, outrageous program has, almost unwittingly, made the culture more tolerant. "The intent of the show is pure entertainment," he says. "But the effect is that we're more accepting, more open as a society."

Wait, are you trying to tell us that in a few years marriages between people and ponies will be commonplace?

Springer laughs. "We did a follow-up show," he says. "The horse left him. It's not as open as you think. Horses are so judgmental."

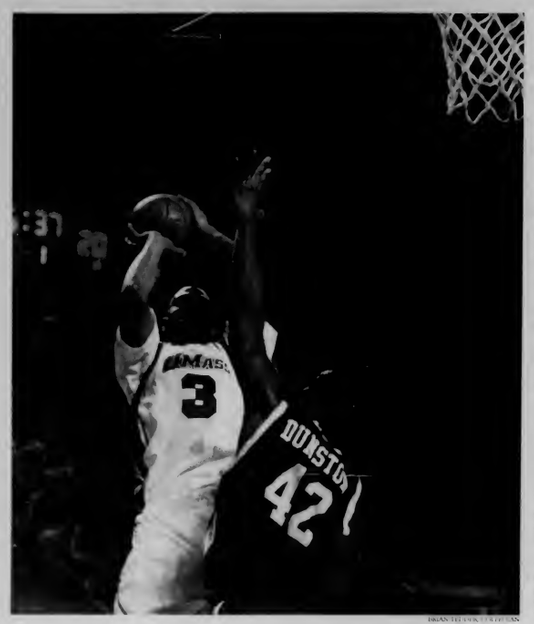
Jerry Springer has been touring colleges with film reel and question-and-answer sessions. Springer credits the high school and college kids towards whom his show is geared for keeping him on the air for 16 seasons.

Submit your beer related questions to arts@dailycollegian.com, so the Beer Dudes can answer your brew-related queries in the new Beer Dude podcast

VOTE!
VOTE!
VOTE!

STUDENT GOVERNMENT ASSOCIATION Elections

SGA President,
Trustee,
& Area Government
Officers



Wednesday - March 5
Thursday - March 6

10 a.m. - 2 p.m.
5 p.m. - 8 p.m.

All Dining Commons
& Campus Center

VOTE!
VOTE!

Xavier continues to be class of A-10

BRIAN FELTMAN/COLLEGIAN

Fordham senior forward Bryant Dunston averages a double-double for the Rams this season, leading the team with 15.8 points and 10 rebounds per game. He also ranks second in the Atlantic 10 with 73 blocked shots.

Musketeers climb in polls; Harris honored

BY SAM GROSSACK
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Xavier continues to rise in the polls, and has now broken the school record for wins in a season. The 66-56 victory for the Musketeers over George Washington marked the team's 25th win of the season, and their 11th straight win.

The Musketeers never trailed in the game, but almost blew an 18-point first-half lead late in the contest. Their 16-for-29 effort from the free-throw line allowed the Colonials to get back into it. This had been a trademark for the team the entire season, but it did not cost them the game as the Colonials were unable to get any closer than one point. Xavier was led by Jason Love's double-double of 12 points and 10 rebounds, and C.J. Anderson's team-high 15 points.

A-10 M. Hoops

The Colonials had been riding a three-game win streak heading into the contest. The loss drops them into a tie with Fordham for the 12th seed in the Atlantic 10 Conference standings, and a tie for the last spot in the conference tournament.

Junior forward Rob Diggs and his game-high 19 points led the way for the Colonials along with sophomore Johnny Lee's career-high 14 points. George Washington has two more games before the tournament, both of which it must win if it wants to claim the last spot; Thursday at Charlotte, and Saturday against UMass.

DUNSTON PADS LEAD

Fordham's senior forward Bryant Dunston added to his conference lead with his 14th double-double of the season, and his 39th time in his career on Saturday. It came in a 57-50 loss to Dayton.

Besides Dunston, the Rams got little help elsewhere, their only other player scoring in double figures was Brenton Butler, as the team never led and got outrebounded, 32-24. The Rams are tied with GW for the 12th seed but hold the tiebreaker, and will look to clinch the final seed in the A-10 tournament with wins at St. Bonaventure, and against Saint Joseph's to close out the regular season.

Brian Roberts scored 12 points, while Kurt Huelsman and Charles Little each scored 11 in the winning effort to lead Dayton. The Flyers came out shooting well, and played consistent throughout leading to their 18th win of the season.

BONNIES NAB FIRST ROAD WIN

En route to scoring a career-high 25 points, Tyler Relph shot 6-of-6 from behind the line and the Bonnies routed Saint Louis, 70-50, for their first win away from home this season.

A 16-3 run in the first half was enough to put the Bonnies up for good and put an end to a six-game losing streak, and 13-game road losing streak. Michael Lee added 16 points for the Bonnies, and D'Lancy Carter scored 12 to send the Billikens to a loss in their final home game of the season. It will be their last-ever home game in the Scottrade Center, as the Billikens will be opening a new arena next year. The win gives the Bonnies some upside to a disappointing season, as they have already been eliminated from the A-10 tournament.

In the losing effort, Kevin Lisch scored 19 points and got almost no help from anyone else as the team only shot 35 percent and got outrebounded, 31-21. Saint Louis travels to Duquesne on Saturday to end the regular season.

CONFERENCE AWARDS

Dan Geriot of Richmond and Ricky Harris of UMass were awarded the A-10 Player of the Week Honors. It is Geriot's first time winning the award and Harris' second.

Geriot averaged 23.5 points per game in his two contests and grabbed 7.5 rebounds. He scored a career-high 35 points on 13-of-17 shooting against St. Bonaventure on Saturday while also grabbing 13 boards.

Harris averaged 19 points on 14-of-24 shooting this past week including 5-of-7 shooting from behind the line in the Minutemen's two victories. He scored a game-high 24 points in Saturday's win against Richmond.

Richmond's Kevin Anderson won his league-leading fifth A-10 Rookie of the Week Honor, and third in a row. Anderson averaged 17.5 points per game and five assists per game as the Spiders went 1-1 on the week.

Sam Grossack can be reached at sgrossac@student.umass.edu.

ECAC strong in '08

ECAC LAX from page 8

TWO TEAMS IN TOP 20

Loyola and Rutgers are two teams included in the ECAC Nike Inside Lacrosse Men's Division I Poll this week. The No. 13 Greyhounds, (2-1, 0-0 ECAC) suffered a hard-fought loss in their season opener Notre Dame on Feb. 26.

Freshman goalie Jake Hagelin made 17 saves for the Greyhounds, who trailed by three at the half and tallied to tie the game in the third quarter. But Alex Wharton had the game-winner for ND with 3:33 left to play.

Loyola will open its ECAC schedule on March 15 at St. Johns, and will face Massachusetts a week later.

No. 19 Rutgers suffered a tough loss to No. 10 Delaware last Saturday, 10-8. Midfielder Justin Pennington notched a career-high five goals for the Scarlet Knights, who had their six-game home winning streak snapped by the Blue Hens. Rutgers will open its ECAC schedule against Fairfield on March 8.

The Stags, who were selected sixth in the New England Intercollegiate Lacrosse Association Coaches Preseason Poll, captured an overtime win against Providence on Feb. 23 and Dartmouth on March 1 to start the season at 2-0. Fairfield also had four players named to the preseason All-NILA team, and received 12 votes for the Nike-Inside Lacrosse Men's DI Media Poll this week.

LOYOLA'S TOOMEY GETS MULTI-YEAR DEAL

No. 13 Loyola head coach Charley Toomey received a multi-year contract extension effective immediately. The second-year coach has taken the Greyhounds to two ECAC second-place finishes and an NCAA Tournament appearance in 2007. The Loyola and former Greyhound assistant was also named 2006 ECAC Coach of the Year. Toomey also was a two-time All-American goalkeeper for the Greyhounds, and started the 1990 NCAA Championship Game. He was a part of seven NCAA tournament teams as a student athlete and coach.

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu.

Minutewomen off to 1-3 start

F. STASZEWSKI/COLLEGIAN

Junior attacker Julie Pasquantonio ranks second on the Minutewomen with five goals and six points this season. However, UMass has lost three straight games since winning its season opener against Holy Cross.

W LACROSSE from page 8

collegiate lacrosse player in the nation. Adding to her list of credentials, the Minutewoman captain has been named to the All A-10 squad twice and had a record six goals in a victory against Albany last year, along with a .520 shooting percentage.

Last June, Typadis was one of 98 players selected to compete for the United States Women's Lacrosse Developmental and Elite teams, which represent the highest level of women's lacrosse in the nation.

Typadis has started every game of her career and looks to become more consistent as the season goes on.

MCCORMICK CONTINUES STELLAR START

After redshirting all of last season with an ACL injury, midfielder Kaytlin McCormick has come back strongly, leading the team in goals (10), assists (four) and points (14).

The junior had a pair of goals in Saturday's loss to Harvard, despite being ejected in the second half. She also recorded a hat trick against No. 15 Boston University on Feb. 27 and leads the team in shots on goal. She is tied with midfielder Holly Drown with four free position goals.

As a freshman in 2006, McCormick played in every game and was the team's second-leading scorer. She was also among the team leaders in groundballs (39), draw controls (27) and caused turnovers (13). McCormick scored in 16-of-18 games played and netted four hat tricks in her rookie campaign.

"It feels great to be back," McCormick said after the Feb. 19 victory over Holy Cross.

LYONS NAMED A-10 ROOKIE OF THE WEEK

Midfielder Jaclyn Lyons was named Atlantic 10 Rookie of the Week, scoring in her first collegiate game in the Minutewomen's lone win against Holy Cross in the season-opener on Feb. 19. The freshman also had a big week, scoring two goals on three shots and collecting four groundballs and five turnovers in her first two collegiate games. She leads the team in groundballs and tumovers.

PASQUANTONIO STEPS UP

Before this season, junior Julie Pasquantonio had only played in 14 career games at UMass. But this season, the attacker has seen her minutes increase, and has already surpassed her career-high in goals and points. With five goals and six points through four games, she is second on the team in both categories.

VETERAN DEFENSE COMING UP BIG

The UMass defense returned all of its starting defenders this season, as Julie Papeleo, Jackie Rosenzweig and Ashley King have been impressive for the Minutewomen. Rosensweig has started every game of her career, while Papeleo enters her third year as a starter. The sophomore King started every game last year and was a 2007 Rookie All-American.

"They've been doing a good job of mentoring the younger kids and keeping everybody on the same page," UMass coach Alexis Venechanos said, early in the season. "They definitely [have been] helping out our goalies, [and] making sure they have the confidence they need to mesh on the defensive end."

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu.

CHECK OUT
The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Sports Podcasts
www.dailycollegian.com
EVERY WEDNESDAY THERE WILL BE NEW UMASS MEN'S BASKETBALL AND HOCKEY PODCASTS

Campus to Career
Who's Got Your Number?
Tuesday, March 4, 2008
5:30 p.m. in Memorial Hall
Chances are you don't give everyday check and credit card transactions a second thought—but someone else may!
With just a small amount of personal information, your identity can be stolen and cost you hundreds of dollars and many hours to correct.
Kathryn Bielunis '07 and William Dulchinos of Liberty Mutual will walk you through the steps you must take to protect yourself from identity theft.
FREE ADMISSION • FREE PIZZA • FREE REFRESHMENTS
To register for this FREE event, visit UMassAlumni.com/students
Liberty Mutual · Alumni Association · Student Alumni Association
Sponsored by the Alumni Association and the Student Alumni Association in partnership with Liberty Mutual.
For more information contact
Wesley J. Dunham '99, assistant director for Student and Alumni Programs at 545-3049 or wdunham@admin.umass.edu

Auto Express
Fast, Quality Service
Student Discount
10% off oil change

SUNDAY SPECIAL (Every Sunday from 10am to 4pm) | Full Service Oil Change $19.95
FREE WIRELESS INTERNET
Auto Express is your one stop for
MASS STATE INSPECTIONS
with extended hours for your convinence!
Monday, Wednesday & Friday 8 am to 6pm
Tuesday & Thursday 8am to 7pm
Saturday 8 am to 5 pm
Sunday 10 am to 4pm
Axels • Brakes • Batteries • Mufflers • Tune-Ups • Full Service Oil Changes
118 South East St. Amherst, MA 01002
413-253-0056
Bring this coupon in to donate 5% of your purchase to the Center for Popular Economics

Renting 101:
How to Rent Your First Apartment
RENTING 101
Come to a crash course in renting!
DOOR PRIZES
HELPFUL CHECKLISTS
EXPERT ADVICE FROM STUDENT LEGAL SERVICES OFFICE ATTORNEY LISA KENT
TUESDAY, MARCH 4
Berkshire Dining Hall
7:00-8:00pm
TUESDAY, MARCH 11
Franklin Dining Hall
7:00-8:00pm
UMassAmherst
This event is presented by the Student Legal Services Office in collaboration with Off Campus Housing and the Housing Assignment Office

BASKET BALLS!
comics@dailycollegian.com

Cowabunga!

		2					5
	9	1	5
			1	8				7
					5	4		6
3	6						9	8
4		8	6
9				6	1
					3	2	7
	3					9

QUOTE OF THE DAY

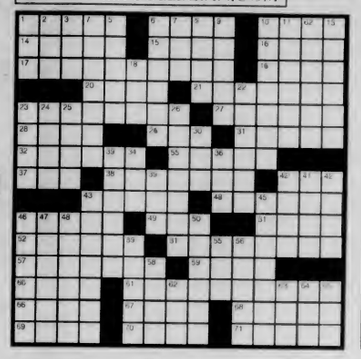
"Every line means something."

– Jean Michel Basquiat

ECOLOGY BY JEN FILL

PAUL BY BILLY O'KEEFE

ILLUSTRE BY HEATHER MAES



ACROSS
1 Used a broom
8 Lion's do
10 States further
14 Impatiently longing
15 In a short time
16 Bound forward
17 Self-assertive and forceful
19 Kent's girlfriend
20 New Mexican artist colony
21 Pungent gas
23 In a state of excited anticipation
27 Sleepyhead
28 Cher
29 Put in stitches
31 Blue ducks
32 Noisy turmoil
35 Secret cache
37 Asner and Ames
38 Put on, as clothes
40 Destiny
43 Run the sprinkler
44 Biochemical celeiysts
46 Inert gas
49 Yule mo.
51 Islands off Galway
52 Vandyke and goatee
54 Quantity of cargo
57 Ham it up
59 Part of U A R
60 Sub shop
61 "Desperate ___"
66 Cleveland's lake
67 Manufacture
68 Ingenuous
69 Min. parts
70 Lyric poems
71 Look scornfully

DOWN
1 Baltic or Bering
2 Witty individuel
3 Easter item
4 Make uneasy
5 Medicate
6 Large groups
7 Tropical cuckoo
8 ___ Scotia
9 Adversary
10 Permitted
11 Actress Durbin
12 Writer Dallos
13 Simple weapons
18 Drunkard
22 ___ of honor
23 U.S. tennis stadium honoree
24 Internecine conflict
25 Practical classes
26 Employs again
30 Came in first
33 Neighbor of Kenya
34 Wager
36 Wolfed down
39 Turner or Knight
40 Greek harp
41 Arabian sultanate
42 Hiking housing
43 Frets
45 Lusaka men
46 Dwellings
47 Midnight rider
48 Celtic language
50 Follows in pursuit
53 Stupid person
55 Anger
56 Hocks
58 Warty amphibian
62 4-stringed guitar
63 Compete
64 Actress Arden
65 Sun. talk

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Amanda and Nick—Rocking the crossword and looking slightly posessed while doing it.

Continuing & Professional Education
UMassAmherstOutreach
Summer Session 2008
Don't Wait- Jump Start Your Career This Summer
Session I: June 2 - July 10
Session II: July 14 - Aug 20
Online Gen Ed's
Small Classes
Great Faculty
PLAN AHEAD!
UMassULearn.net

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Intimidate your enemies as well as professors by wearing Braveheart-esque facepaint.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
In the currency of life, a smile is worth more than projectile vomit. As always, the Canadian dollar is worthless.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
You're more emotionally constipated than the guy in that comic on the bottom left.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
Everyone thinks that the friend standing close to you in your Facebook picture is your conjoined twin.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
Those pants are more overplayed than that lame song by One Republic. It's too late to apologize, the damage is done.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Lie naked on the floor and cleanse your body with a turkey baster. It will help you to stay cool amidst the heat of your life.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Don't freak out about applying for jobs. Suckling at the corporate teat is overrated and the milk inevitably turns sour.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Peter Pan lost his shadow but at least it got him some action with Wendy Moira Angela Darling.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Steal hot dogs from the DC and sell them in the library learning commons. Tubes of meat are essential to the learning process.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Soak up every moment of your day like a jumbo sized...paper towel.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
You're in your happy place. No one can stop you.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Your brain is more shriveled than a raisin. Water will not do the trick, you must hydrate with information and deep thought.

A spoonful of comics helps the medicine go down!
comics@dailycollegian.com

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Montreal Weekend
From $99 Complete.
Best Hotels.
Best Prices.
montrealexpress.net
781-979-9001

APT. FOR RENT

Center of Town 1,2,3 bedrooms. NOW SHOWING for June and Sept. NO FEES. Schedule a showing 253-7879 view apts. at www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

APT 4 RENT

EMPLOYMENT

ACCOUNTANT REPRESENTATIVE, SALES REPRESENTATIVE, STORE KEEPER, CLERK AND SECRETARY NEEDED: Requirement(Computer Literate, Along with CV.) for more information write us at: Gina Shoes Limited Email: gina.limited@gmail.com

Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

EMPLOYMENT

PART-TIME CAMPUS PROMOTER: Hand out fliers and set up posters. Average $9-20/hr plus residual income: innovativewebconcepts@yahoo.com.

TEXTBOOK BUYBACK STAFF NEEDED FOR $15/HR
Online textbook company needs 20 college students to staff textbook buyback events at local private high schools in May and June. 10-30 hrs/wk with flex hrs to fit your sched. Email resume to winnie.imperio@varsitybooks.com

HOUSE FOR RENT

28 Stockbridge St. 6 bedroom house- 2 baths, living room, eat in kitchen, pantry, $2,925+ www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

SERVICES

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906,1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthright.org.

SERVICES

Concerned About Your Eating?
Do you eat too little? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic, 577-5101

TAPESTRY HEALTH providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling &rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable, Safe. 413-548-9992. 27 Pray St. Amherst. www.tapestryhealth.org

SERVICES

School a Pain in your eyes?
Headache? Itchy eyes? Trouble reading? An eye exam can be the first step toward relief. Call Eye Care Services at UHS, 577-5383, to learn more.

TRAVEL

Montreal Weekend
From $99 Complete.
Best Hotels.
Best Prices.
montrealexpress.net
781-979-9001

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, MARCH 4, 2008 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Senior attacker Kathleen Typadis scored a school-record 52 goals last season; her outstanding performance earned her a tryout with 97 other players for the U.S. Lacrosse Development/Elite teams. Typadis has started the season slowly, scoring four goals in three games thus far.

Typadis off to slow start in new season

By David Brinch
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's lacrosse team was picked to finish second in the Atlantic 10 Conference, but has lost against some strong teams – including two ranked opponents – at home and has yet to play a conference game this season.

The Minutewomen (1-3) play six teams this year that are ranked in the Lacrosse Magazine Preseason Top 20, including Northwestern, Maryland and Yale. UMass has suffered three consecutive losses, and faces a challenge in its first road matchup at No. 13 Dartmouth tomorrow.

UMass W. LAX

It took UMass attacker Kathleen Typadis nearly 53 minutes to score against Harvard on Saturday afternoon, as the Minutewomen went on to lose, 20-11, to the Crimson. Typadis now has four goals this year, but is not nearly on pace to match the 52 goals she scored last season.

The senior had three shots on goal, but was relatively quiet during the course of the game. Typadis, who broke the single-season scoring record with 52 goals last year, will look to increase her recent output and try to come close to last year's totals.

She has scored in 45 consecutive games going into Wednesday's matchup with the Big Green and is the nation's No. 3 active goal scorer. Typadis needs just 36 more goals to set the career scoring record at UMass.

Typadis was one of 44 players nationally selected to the 2008 Tewaarton Watch List this season, an award given to the top

See W. LACROSSE on page 6

Boney, UMass drop match to BC, 7-0

By Ryan Fleming
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts tennis team lost to Boston College, 7-0, in Chestnut Hill on Feb. 28 in what was a makeup meet at the Flynn Recreations Complex.

The meet was originally scheduled for Feb. 1, but had to be moved due to inclement weather at the time.

With the win over the Minutewomen, the Eagles move to 13-2 all-time against UMass – a rivalry which began in 1975. UMass has now lost four consecutive meets this season, and have not won since defeating Binghampton on Feb. 15 in Ithaca, N.Y.

The Minutewomen struggled in both singles and doubles against BC.

All four doubles pairings for UMass dropped its matches, while the Minutewomen also succumbed to the Eagles in each of the six singles matches.

The best match of the day was in No. 2 singles, where Candynce Boney dropped a close first set to Dasha Cherkasov, 7-6 (2), before falling, 6-0, in the second set.

Lana Krasnopolsky defeated senior co-captain Masha Pozar at the No. 1 singles match, 6-1, 6-1. Other BC singles winners include No. 3 Lauren Cash, No. 4 Katherine Attwell, No. 5 Alison Wagner and No. 6 Alina Sullivan.

For the second time this season, the Minutewomen failed to score a point. Ivy League powerhouse Dartmouth posted a shutout against the Minutewomen on Feb. 20.

The Minutewomen have had a rough go of it as of late. Since the start of the spring season the Minutewomen have gone 2-6, which includes recent losses to non-conference opponents Army and Dartmouth.

If the Minutewomen hope to turn their fortunes around, they will have to avoid past history against their next opponent. Brown University currently holds a 13-0 all-time record over UMass since 1980. Brown, like Boston College, is one of UMass's oldest rivalries.

After the upcoming meet against Brown, the Minutewomen have to continue their road-warrior status as only three of their remaining 11 meets are at home. As a young team the Minutewomen could use this experience as an upside when they play in the Atlantic 10 Tournament next month in Pittsburgh, Pa.

The Minutewomen are back on the court this Friday against Brown in Providence, R.I., at 3 p.m.

Ryan Fleming can be reached at rfleming@student.umass.edu

Teams place well at NECs

Men's team finishes in 12th, women place one spot behind

By Sam Grossack
Collegian Correspondent

This past weekend, the members of the Massachusetts men's and women's track teams that qualified, competed in the New England Championships at Boston University.

Connecticut shined over the weekend as its athletes swept both sides by a decisive margin. The Minutewomen finished in 13th while the men finished in 12th.

UMass women's track and field coach Julie LaFreniere led her team to a 13th-place finish at the New England Championships.

On the men's side, Jesse Regnier and Andrew McCann were the top point-getters, each placing fifth in the 5,000 and 3,000-meter runs, respectively. Regnier finished his race with a time of 14 minutes, 50.90 seconds; just 13 seconds behind winner Curtis Wheeler of Southern Maine.

McCann finished the 3,000-meter in 8:28.05, qualifying him for the IC4A Championships. He finished 11 seconds behind Ahmed Haji of Providence, and only three seconds in front of the sixth-place finisher, fellow Minuteman Jonathan Pierce.

Other noteworthy Minuteman performances were put in by Tyler Cotto, who finished sixth in the 55-meter hurdles with a time of 7.70 seconds. Junior Josh Boone finished seventh in the 1,000-meter run with a time of 2:31.63. The men also had two relay teams that didn't score any points this week, but qualified for next week's IC4A Championships.

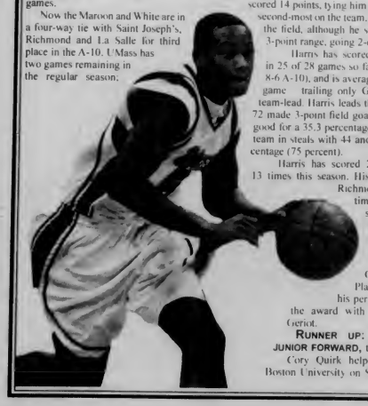
For the Minutewomen, Kristen Bakanowski was the top scorer, finishing second place in the pole vault and nabbing eight points for the team. This high finish just adds to her strong resume for the junior, as she is preparing for big things in her senior season.

The Minutewomen also received high points by Christina DeRosa and Shivi Zan, who finished third and eighth, respectively, in the 3,000-meter run. DeRosa finished 28 seconds behind leader Marisa Ryan of BU, who set a New England Championship record with her time of 9:15.63.

Danielle Bolt and Gina Perno turned in two other point-winning performances for the Minutewomen. Bolt finished seventh in the 55-meter dash with a time of 7.26, while Perno finished fifth in the 1,000 meter run.

It seems both the men and women's teams will look to improve next season and get more athletes into the qualifying championships, but before that there is still the IC4A Championships next week for the men, and the ECAC meet for the women taking place in Boston. The week after both teams will be participating in the NCAA Championships to close out the indoor season.

Sam Grossack can be reached at sgrossac@student.umass.edu.



COLLEGIAN SPORTS ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

Ricky Harris, shooting guard, men's basketball

Massachusetts men's basketball guard Ricky Harris had been mired in a rather long shooting slump – but the sophomore picked a good time for the Minutemen to break out of it.

Harris hit seven 3-pointers in the two games for UMass this past week, helping the Minutemen defeat St. Bonaventure and Richmond in key Atlantic 10 Conference games.

Now the Maroon and White are in a four-way tie with Saint Joseph's, Richmond and La Salle for third place in the A-10. UMass has two games remaining in the regular season.

Wednesday at home against the Explorers and on the road this weekend against George Washington. Wins in both would give UMass a bye in the first round of the A-10 Tournament.

Harris scored a game-high 24 points in the victory over the Spiders this past Saturday, connecting on 5-of-7 from 3-point territory. Harris was particularly strong in the first half, scoring 18 of his 24 points before halftime.

In a 23-point win over the Bonnies, Harris scored 14 points, tying him with Matt Glass for second-most on the team. He hit 5-of-11 from the field, although he struggled a bit from 3-point range, going 2-of-7.

Harris has scored in double figures in 25 of 28 games so far for UMass (19-9, 8-6 A-10), and is averaging 17.9 points per game – trailing only Gary Forbes for the team-lead. Harris leads the Minutemen with 72 made 3-point field goals on 204 attempts, good for a 35.3 percentage. He also leads the team in steals with 44 and in free-throw percentage (75 percent).

Harris has scored 20 or more points 13 times this season. His 24 points against Richmond marked the first time over 20 for him since he scored 21 against Duquesne on Jan. 30.

The sophomore guard was named Co-Atlantic 10 Player of the Week for his performances, sharing the award with Richmond's Dan Geriot.

Runner up: Cory Quirk, junior forward, ice hockey

Cory Quirk helped UMass defeat Boston University on Saturday, 5-1, with two goals and an assist. He scored the first goal of the game 3 minutes, 21 seconds into the first period against the Terriers, notching a power play goal off a pass from P.J. Fenton and Mike Kostka.

His second goal of the contest extended UMass's lead to 3-1 late in the second period. That goal was also on the power play and was assisted by Alex Berry. The two goals by Quirk gave him 10 on the season.

Quirk returned the favor to Berry in the final period, assisting on Berry's goal that gave UMass a 4-1 lead. The Minutemen would tack on a fifth goal en route to defeating the Terriers.

Quirk now ranks second on the team in both assists (15) and points, with 25. Only Fenton (109) has taken more shots than Quirk, who has attempted 107 this season.

ECAC continues to be elite conference

Georgetown, Penn State once again have strong teams in '08

By David Brinch
Collegian Staff

The Eastern College Athletic Conference has had at least two teams in the NCAA Tournament since 2001, thanks in part to schedules that feature in-conference matchups later on in the season.

Seven players from the ECAC were named to the 51-player Tewaarton Trophy watch list; the award is given to the top collegiate lacrosse player in the nation. Each player was nominated by coaches from Divisions I, II and III.

ECAC Lacrosse

Attack Brendan Cannon and defenseman Jerry Lambe are included on the list for a No. 9 Georgetown team that has only improved from their 2007 ECAC Championship campaign.

Cannon was the 2007 ECAC Offensive Player of the Year and led the Hoyas in scoring with 21 goals and 23 assists, while Lambe was the 2007 ECAC Defensive Player of the Year and was a semi-finalist for the Tewaarton Trophy last year.

Having the best offensive player and defensive player on the same team has worked in favor for the Hoyas, who rebounded from a tough loss to No. 6 Maryland in their season-opener to beat ECAC opponent Saint John's, 13-7, last Saturday.

Cannon had five points (four goals, one assist) against the Red Storm, who have yet to win a game this season.

Penn State goalkeeper Drew Adams was the only ECAC goalkeeper included on the list, and has been an All-ECAC selection as well as Goaltender of the Year in both of his first two seasons. The junior posted a 7.78 goals-against average in 13 collegiate starts for the Nittany Lions.

PSU is coming off back-to-back losses against No. 7 Notre Dame and No. 13 Loyola, and will face Ohio State on March 8.

The Greyhounds have two experienced offensive weapons on a young team, as midfielder Paul Richards and attackman Shane Koppens are also included on the list. Richards registered two goals in an NCAA Tournament game against Albany last year, while Koppens is a senior captain and Loyola's leading scorer.

See ECAC LAX on page 6

INSIDE: UMASS HOSTS LA SALLE IN KEY MATCHUP | PAGE 10

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

RAIN : HI: 48 LO: 39 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM WEDNESDAY, MARCH 5, 2008

Kuusisto backs out of race

By Devon Courtney
Collegian Staff

In an abrupt campaign move, Student Government Association presidential candidate Peter Kuusisto decided to withdraw himself from the election and give his support to SGA senator Devin Ashe.

"I feel that Devin and I possess the same characteristics, and he has a much better chance of winning," Kuusisto said.

"Devin has experience with the masses, as demonstrated through his administration of Humans vs. Zombies," Kuusisto said, in reference to the game that took place last Halloween.

"He also wants to strengthen RSOs," said Kuusisto.

Kuusisto's sudden resignation was finalized yesterday, the last day before the elections are scheduled to commence.

"People who have taken the time to listen to the debates and hear what I stand for will all come

See KUUSISTO on page 3

Strike proposal made

New changes to be on ballot

By Elizabeth Hawley
Collegian Staff

Students voting in the University of Massachusetts Student Government Association elections today and tomorrow will not only be deciding the next president and trustee.

Among other measures on the ballot, students will be voting to support or reject the proposal from the students and administration detailing changes to the school after last November's strike.

Students staged a two-day protest last November, presenting the administration with four demands: reduced student fees, increased funding for diversity programming on campus, removal of police from dorms and increased accessibility of space on campus for student groups. The strike was organized by the United Student Action Coalition.

The strike resulted in a three-month period of negotiations between school administrators and a team of student leaders. The proposal, released late Monday night, is the result of the negotiations and is endorsed by the USAC and the negotiating team. It does not feature a reduction of student fees, and in fact, the financial agreements depend on the Board of Trustees approving a fee hike.

However, the proposal does offer a $600,000 increase in financial aid, in an effort to increase the amount of need-based financial aid met by grants, rather than by loans or work study. It also allots $100,000 in additional aid for graduate student fellowships, and nine new teacher assistant positions will be created for new classes, especially classes focusing on diversity.

The proposal also provides financial support for a "Lobby Day," which would allow students and faculty to lobby at the Massachusetts State House to reduce the cost of public higher education. The Lobby Day funding is the one proposed financial agreement that does not hinge on the fee increase.

One of the demands was student control over student space. Students were angry over the cost to use space in the Campus Center and Student Union. Under the proposal, fees for audio and video equipment will be reduced.

Graduate Student Senate President Jeff Napolitano said that while he'd hoped for more, "the proposal represents real victories and real progress for the students," and marks a "180 degree" difference from the five-year period under former chancellor John Lombardi and former vice chancellor Michael Gargano.

Napolitano said that one of the most important aspects of the proposal is the introduction of the Diversity Advisory Council. The council would be made up of faculty, staff and students, and would advise the chancellor on diversity issues. Napolitano described the council as "cabinet level" and "definitely necessary."

In the realm of diversity programming, the proposal promises to apply for federal funding for TRIO programs. TRIO programs are federally funded programs designed to increase diversity among students on college campuses. These include Upward Bound programs and scholarships given to undergraduates to help with graduate school. These types of programs used to exist at UMass but have been cut in recent years.

The school will provide funds to fund a faculty advisor to the Student Bridges program, a student-created, student-funded program that does outreach into the Holyoke and Springfield communities. Napolitano said Student Bridges got started because students felt the administration was failing to support these kinds of programs and took things

See PROPOSAL on page 3

New student org. arrives at UMass

By Lisa Di Benedictis and Shruti Sehgal
Collegian Staff

A new non-profit and non-partisan student organization, Advancing Democracy, has emerged on campus.

The first University of Massachusetts organization of its kind, Advancing Democracy is designed to increase the political participation among students and improve the general well-being of the UMass student body. The organization was created by UMass junior and social thought political economy major Steve Hoeschele, and was first implemented as a Registered Student Organization this past September.

"A couple of years ago, when I was lobbying in the State House for more manageable fees, I came up with a plan for a political non-partisan organization," said Hoeschele. "In the course of studying the way elections are run and actually created, I realized the importance of money in politics and the way votes are counted. Too much of the election reform movement are old folks and this is a great way to influence a larger audience."

Hoeschele hopes to first spread the organization to other campuses, and eventually extend it state-wide.

Advancing Democracy is currently campaigning to pass the Election Day Registration Law in Massachusetts, which, if passed, will permit American citizens to register to vote on election days themselves.

"[The Election Day Registration Law] just got out of committee in the State House, and Advancing Democracy actually hired a lawyer to lobby on our behalf," said Hoeschele. "Massachusetts itself is home to so many educational institutions. It would really help students vote. Many are first-time voters, many are living away from home, and if students can show up, register and vote, it would make it so much easier. Plus, the nine states who do have election day registration have ten to twelve times higher voting turnout overall."

Senior communications major Rachel Siddiqi, another member of Advancing Democracy, added, "It is really hard for

See DEMOCRACY on page 3

SGA presidential candidates voice platforms before election

Derek Khanna will run alongside student trustee candidate Libby Protzman as one of the three presidential candidates this election.

By Pamela Lawn
Collegian Correspondent

Derek Khanna is one of the candidates running for president this Thursday in the Student Government Association election, and has announced his proposals for the post.

"I think students should vote for me because we have had the same people running the SGA for several years, they have just been changing chairs," he said. "It is time to change the status quo."

Khanna is the founding member of Pi Kappa Alpha, a fraternity less than a year old that prides itself on excellence in scholarship, leadership, athleticism and acting as gentlemen.

He has also been a senator for two years.

Khanna has said that he is the only senator to vote against the latest fee increase. However, SGA minutes show that he was not in office during the Oct. 5 vote on a

See KHANNA on page 4

By Ben Williams
Collegian Staff

Malcolm Chu was born and raised in Brooklyn, N.Y. He is currently a junior majoring in alternative public education and youth empowerment, and he wants to be the next Student Government Association president.

Chu is currently the SGA secretary of diversity, and was very involved with the strike last year as the outreach coordinator.

Chu is running with Lindsay McCluskey as his trustee running mate, and on a platform based on some very fundamental student issues that often side against the administration.

Chu claims that he and his running mate "understand the importance of direct action organizing on campus and across the state as a means of standing up to administrators and law makers that often do not hold students' interests at heart."

See CHU on page 4

Malcolm Chu plans to spread diversity if elected SGA president. Elections will be held today and tomorrow.

Flyer leaked to press

By Holly Seabury
Collegian Staff

Unapproved, controversial flyers were leaked to The Daily Collegian yesterday, and traced back to Student Government Association presidential candidate Derek Khanna.

The flyer, of which 300 copies were made – but allegedly never distributed by the Khanna campaign – included a picture taken from SGA presidential candidate Malcolm Chu's Facebook profile, and was manipulated with Khanna's handwriting.

The flyer was a screenshot of Chu's Facebook profile, and depicted a crude graph of ethnic demographics on campus in the shape of a hand giving the middle finger. The middle finger was meant to represent the overwhelming majority of white students on campus, which it listed at 14,110.

Written on the flyer, in Khanna's handwriting, was the phrase "Should he be president?" The flyer was not an approved campaign material.

At a meeting held last night in the Dukes Meeting Room in the Student Union, a judicial committee in charge of SGA campaigning met and decided that Khanna would be given a written warning for not getting approval for his flyer. Khanna's campaign would be allowed to continue, however, as it was allegedly never his intention to distribute the flyer on campus.

Khanna responded that he photocopied the original but was unaware of any distributive action, and said that it was possible one of his campaign workers may have given copies to The Collegian, though there is no evidence to confirm or deny this claim.

Because of the ambiguity of the situation, the committee was unable to vote on the levels of violation, which were whether or not the material was approved by the chancellor of election, whether or not the candidate was responsible for his campaign workers (there was no evidence to support a vote for this), and whether or not the material the candidate presented wrongfully represented another candidate.

The flyer did not support any specific candidate, including Khanna, and was only negative toward Chu.

After the committee voted to allow Khanna to continue his campaign with a warning restricting him from distributing any more flyers, he said in a statement that he apologized to Chu, but asked that he be reminded that Facebook is public.

"My campaign and I speak highly of the elections committee to take issues like this seriously," he said. "My campaign and I still agree, as we did last night [Monday, when the flyers were printed] that we would not put the flyers up. I agree wholeheartedly with the position of a warning."

Holly Seabury can be reached at hseabury@dailycollegian.com.

Ashe to promote funding

By Adam Coulter
Collegian Staff

Student Government Association Senator Devin Ashe is running for SGA president this week on a campaign of action and an honest student government.

Ashe, a Newton native, is a senior at the University of Massachusetts, double majoring in Chinese and political science, who also serves on the Ways and Means Committee of the SGA Senate and works for the Irish Student Union. He serves as senator for the SGA for commuters at UMass, and is co-creator of Humans vs. Zombies, a popular game from last semester.

One issues garnering strong debate among the presidential candidates this election is how to free up finances on campus. Ashe believes his work on the Ways and Means Committee is pivotal to finding ways to fairly free up money on campus, specifically for Registered Student Organizations.

"We look through the budgets step by step to see what was spent and allocated in the past to reach a fair money amount for the Capital Reserves Fund," he said. "The RSOs were hit with big cuts in the past, but now have begun to get level funding, thanks to the recent fee increase."

The issue of to what degree diversity organizations such as the ALANA caucus should be involved in student government is also a campus controversy. One presidential candidate has expressed his discontentment with past caucuses, while another one carries the endorsement of the present ALANA caucus. Ashe has taken a positive view concerning the issue.

"The ALANA and other organizations such as Student Bridges are wonderful examples of how students can band together," he said.

See ASHE on page 4

If elected as SGA president, Devin Ashe plans to free up finances on campus and help RSOs get more funding.

N-word discussed

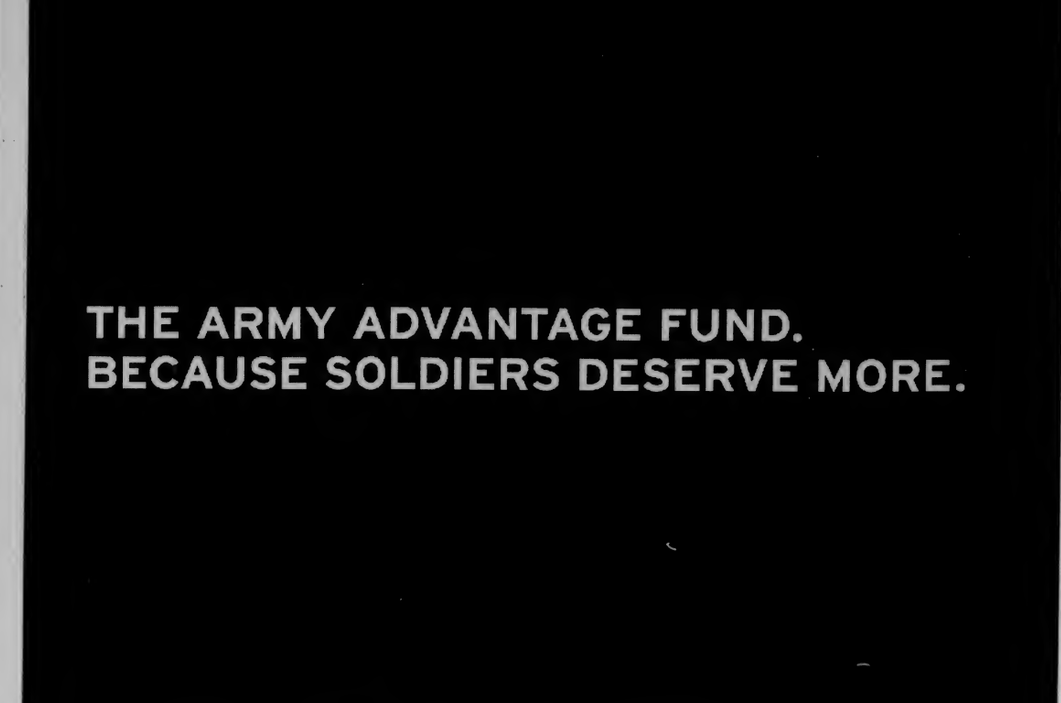
By Ginel Saillant
Collegian Staff

Last week, the Black Student Union dug deep into a word that excludes and bonds people together.

In the Kennedy tower, attendees made their way to "Real Talk: The n-word." This forum allowed attendees to voice their opinions and experiences about who, when and why should people use this word.

Getting off the elevator on the 19th floor of Kennedy, anyone could hear the music down the hall as the song "Sucka nigga," by the hip-hop group "A Tribe Called Quest," played. Casimir Maziarz, the event coordinator for BSU, welcomed the attendees, and told them, "This is real talk, keep it real and don't hold anything back."

Prior to the discussion, Casimir Maziarz showed a video of the interviews he conducted, questioning University of Massachusetts students how they felt about the n-word. After the interviews, Maziarz also showed an episode from "Boondocks," a show that airs on the Cartoon Network.



As the attendees laughed after watching the clip, Casimir used the

See REAL TALK on page 4

THE ARMY ADVANTAGE FUND.
BECAUSE SOLDIERS DESERVE MORE.

Now the Army gives you more choices for your future. Earn up to $40,000 to start the business of your dreams or buy the home you always wanted. Log onto goarmy.com/aaf to learn more about the Army Advantage Fund.

U.S.ARMY
ARMY STRONG.™

Students can vote to reject or accept

PROPOSAL from page 1

into their own hands.

Under the proposal, four undergraduate students will have a chance to advise the campus police about safety and police matters, as part of the Community/Police Advisory Board. The board will be made up of the four undergraduates, as well as two graduate students, three faculty members, the vice chancellor for student affairs and campus life, the dean of students, the director of housing and residential life and the chief of police.

The proposal states that random police patrols inside dormitories is not policy.

A statement released by the student negotiating team says the team "support[s] this agreement, understanding that it is only a first step to building increased student power and administrative accountability to the University's public mission. This agreement is a victory for us all, though it is not the end of the strike demands."

"The next step would be next year's negotiations," said Napolitano, who said that it was very important to the negotiating team that the discussion with the administration continues.

The statement from the student negotiation team says, "It shouldn't take student strikes and building takeovers to compel those who run the University to become more transparent; increase diversity, outreach efforts and affordability; and to secure the basic civil rights of students."

The statement begins, "After a period in UMass's history marked by a hostile administration, the dismantling of support services and large state budget cuts, we seem to be entering into a more positive period … At the very least, the power dynamics between those who administer the University and those who study and work here is beginning to change."

The statement concludes, "We urge you to vote in support of this Tentative Agreement, and to continue to mobilize with us to push for further gains moving into next year."

The release of the proposal was delayed twice as last minute negotiations continued. Students may read the proposal and the negotiating team's statement at www.unitedstudentaction.org.

Elizabeth Hawley can be reached at ehawley@student.umass.edu.

BSU hosts showcase

Students celebrate Black History Month

By Jasmine Renee Pina
Collegian Correspondent

The Black Student Union at the University of Massachusetts hosted a Black History Month showcase this February.

"It was a celebration of black history as a whole, it's not just a month," said Chantelle Ransome, the vice president of the BSU.

She said the BSU held the event to express different cultures and bring everyone together, not just African-Americans.

The vice president of the BSU thought the purpose of the show was to really educate people. It was a black history celebration, but different cultures were involved.

"The purpose was to bring African-Americans together in one area not for a party, but for something peaceful," said Malcolm Gray, the president of the BSU.

Ransome said there was good food, a full house, a wide range of cultures and all the performances tied into black history.

"The only thing I would have done differently was had more performances and a longer celebration," she said.

"I believe the show was a success," said Taleen Nazarian, a junior majoring in public health.

She was impressed by the amount of people who showed up without a party going on and felt it showed how much people care.

Nazarian expressed that one thing she would have changed about the show was the audience.

"The audience could have been more responsive. Everyone deserved the same amount of respect, but some performances were applauded more than others," she said.

The room was filled with people of all different races. The tables were covered with burgundy tablecloths, and in the center were lighted candles. Old school hip-hop, recent hip-hop and R&B music had everyone dancing.

There was a diverse range of performances; from the Cape Verdean Student Association, to the Gospel choir, to poetry from the Native American Student Association.

There were a few performances that caused a reaction throughout the audience.

The poem "Racism Don't Live Here No More," by Denise Daily, caused a huge reaction from the audience. Racism was discussed throughout her poem with specific events where racism is still portrayed. Loud applauses and cheers stormed throughout the room when she mentioned how racism is showed at UMass.

Daily discussed the way Central, Orchard Hill and Sylvan residential areas are described as "traditional style housing with grassy areas," while Southwest is described as the "urban field, the largest area that's lively and active."

The BSU made sure there were cultural dances and music to entertain all, but their objective was to educate the audience. The food from UMass catering included fried chicken, macaroni and cheese, collard greens, mashed potatoes, cornbread and fruit punch.

Jasmine Renee Pina can be reached at jpina@student.umass.edu

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 97

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Exter
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Michael Sarkes
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Roan McAskill
COMICS EDITOR Adam Staggin
EDITORIAL EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Rice
FEATURES EDITOR Dave Humphreys
PHOTO EDITOR Michael Phillis
WEB EDITOR James Hale
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Strymcsak
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Marsea Whooten
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Stephanie McPherron
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Skye McIntyre
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Brian Wood
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Gerber
ASSISTANT NEWS Michael King
ASSISTANT NEWS Kate Olesin
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Seabury
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Connors
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Meloni
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenwaike
ASSISTANT PHOTO Brian Tedder
ARTS WEB EDITOR Michelle Abbasciano
EDITORIAL WEB EDITOR Leif Walcutt
NEWS WEB EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS WEB EDITOR Steve Games

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
S.P. Sullivan

COPY EDITOR
Greg McCarthy

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Michael Sarkes

WEB EDITOR
Nick Bush

Advancing Democracy emerges at UM

DEMOCRACY from page 1

students to vote. We don't get a break; we can't really go home to vote. The way voting is set up right now, they don't really have to come down to our level. And, it is not necessarily in an incumbent politician's best interests to push for student voting because they cannot predict the vote. People pass it off as students being apathetic, but the way the system is set up, it is not that we don't care about politics, it is that no one cares about us and what we are concerned about."

On a more local level, Advancing Democracy has implemented two new ballot questions that UMass students can vote on in the SGA presidential election. The first is a waivable $3 fee per semester to fund Advancing Democracy's campaigning, lobbying, internships and jobs dedicated to election reform.

"Our first big goal is funding," said Hoeschele. "If we win this we will have enough to move to other campuses. Any student run organization, non-profit and non-partisan, can put it [a fee] up to a student body election. We wanted to go that route, public funding of elections. If every student on campus put in $3 a semester, we can create a lot of changes on campus. We are student run, we want to be student funded."

The second ballot question aims to allow the Your Campus Meal Plan (YCMP) swipes to be used at The People's Market, a student-run business and eatery located in the Student Union.

"Basically we see another non-profit, non-partisan, student-run organization," Hoeschele said. "There is no reason why they should not have YCMP; other student-run organizations have it. UMass has been extremely reluctant to help them out, and so we hope we can."

Although Advancing Democracy has no political affiliation or endorsements themselves, they have been endorsed by three SGA presidential candidates: Derek Khanna, Malcolm Chu and Devin Ashe.

"I think it is important that they bridge the research aspect of political science with students," said Khanna, a sophomore and Middle Eastern Studies, Political Science and History major, of Advancing Democracy.

"While racial diversity is extremely important, I want to also draw on the importance of intellectual diversity," continued Khanna. "This is the only group on campus capable of hosting a debate between all political SGA groups. There is really no other non-partisan group on campus. Right now I don't think there is enough link for political science students."

On his views of the ballot questions themselves, Khanna added, "I support the fee because it is waivable. It speaks to a larger problem within the SGA. They give you almost no help and unfortunately you have to prove yourself for a couple of years. As for the YCMP swipe, our meal plans are extremely restrictive. It is part of my campaign."

Many UMass students are supportive of Advancing Democracy as well.

"It sounds more predominately a political group involved with University issues than our country and world politics," said freshman John Frett, a Japanese major. "I think that it is a good idea because in general students are misrepresented and unrepresented. College has become more of a business entity rather than an educational one. I would not have time to join it, but I definitely support it."

"Look at what is the fundamental goal of government," concluded Hoeschele. "Democracy needs to be participatory. It requires more than voting. If people are not going to vote, we might as well not be a democracy. Two thirds of legislative races in Massachusetts run unopposed. Year after year we [Massachusetts] rank 49th in apathy. There is an overwhelming influence of money, and if you don't have competitive elections, can you really call that a democracy?"

Lisa DeBenedictis can be reached at ldebened@student.umass.edu and Shruti Sehgal can be reached at ssehgal@student.umass.edu out to support me," Ashe predicted.

Resigned candidate supports Ashe

KUUSISTO from page 1

Both Kuusisto and Ashe are taking strong measures to promote Ashe's newly-rejuvenated campaign.

"I'm encouraging people to put up posters in their personal spaces to endorse my campaign," said Ashe.

Students and faculty might see the half-red and half-white posters that Ashe refers to around campus, with "Vote Ashe" inscribed on them.

"People can check out my Facebook group, and learn about what I stand for," he said.

According to the group, Ashe plans to give support and opportunities for unification to Registered Student Organizations.

"Our government should both provide for RSOs and student activities on campus while also lobbying for students' needs," Ashe wrote.

Ashe plans to "prioritize the needs of RSOs first and foremost," according to his campaign Web site.

He also shared reasons why his campaign is different from those of the other two candidates.

"Our consolidation now bolsters the credibility of my claim … to build coalitions in order to get things done," he said. "We're unlike [SGA presidential candidate] Khanna, who has burnt a lot of bridges. His words in the senate have been contradicted in his campaign. We can't bring change without decisiveness, and I'm in this for the long haul."

The voting polls will be open today and tomorrow at each Dining Commons on campus.

Devon Courtney can be reached at dcourtne@student.umass.edu.

Peter Kuusisto (right), withdrew from the SGA race and endorsed presidential candidate Devin Ashe.

POLITICAL AWARENESS SUMMIT

Do You:

Have Questions or opinions about Campus Politics, specifically the SGA elections???

Want to Get More Politically Active On-Campus or locally???

Want to discuss the 2008 Presidential Elections and the importance of voting???

-Join us for an open and compelling dialogue-

THURSDAY, MARCH 6TH 2008
7PM
CAMPUS CENTER ROOM 101

Brought to you by the UMASS Republican Club

Contact Club President Brad DeFlumeri:
bdeflume@student.umass.edu

COLLEGE REPUBLICANS

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 5
Worcester,
Franklin,
Hampshire
DCs

MENU:
Maple Grain Pancakes
Maple French Toast
Maple Sausage Links
Maple Sticky Buns
Maple Nut Muffins
Maple Syrup
Maple Flavored Coffee
And more!

New England
MAPLE
BREAKFAST

from 7—11 am

ENTER TO WIN
a Basket of Local Maple Treats
Valued at $30.00

NORTH HADLEY SUGAR SHACK
2007 Grand Prize

DINING SERVICES
UMassAmherst
umass.edu/diningservices

Be A Local Hero
Buy Locally Grown

Food Management's BEST CONCEPTS

Maple Sugaring video provided by the Massachusetts Maple Producers Association

SGA presidential elections to begin today

ASHE from page 1

Citing the ingenuity of these programs he added, "They're good at passing policy, and if they take initiatives, real results follow."

Even though the ALANA caucus has endorsed another candidate in the race, Ashe said he would still work with them if elected.

Ashe believes his experience with the Ways and Means Committee of the SGA Senate have also prepared him for the position of president.

"A big thing we do is look through budget packets to assemble new ones, which really gives us a sense of what the RSOs go through," he said.

There is also some concern that the majority of the student body isn't interested in student politics. Ashe believes a cause of this is that promises are not being delivered on.

"My main philosophy is if we have a practical, realistic and honest student government, students will want to get involved," he said

The candidates have been given a $100 budget to be spent either at the print shop or the Craft Center for their campaigns. The elections for SGA president and trustee will be today and tomorrow.

Adam Coulter can be reached at apcoulte@student.umass.edu

KHANNA from page 1

proposed fee increase, and that two senators opposed it.

"It seems to me that raising fees should be the last option," he said. "More effort needs to be put into corporate ventures, streamlining programs and looking toward alternative funding."

Student Bridges is the only academic program that is funded by student fees. Khanna thinks it is an excellent program and should be expanded, but not at the expense of rising fees.

"All academic programs should be paid by the school," he said.

If elected, Khanna intends to improve the intellectual, class and racial diversity within the University of Massachusetts.

"Intellectual and class diversity are just as important as racial diversity," he said. "All three should be brought to the forefront of discussions."

"I think subjects like Caribbean Studies should be running on the curriculum at UMass," he said. "People should have the ability to be proud of their culture, language and history and, in turn, teach others about it."

Khanna also thinks it is time to change the daily running of the SGA.

"The student body can no longer control their own space ... we need to prove through actions that we are a trustworthy group that is able to run the union effectively," he said.

Some of these actions include better communications with the general student populations. Khanna thinks all presidents should be obliged to write a monthly column in The Massachusetts Daily Collegian.

"I think an e-mail system should be set up where students can contact us, even if it is for a problem as small as the laundry dryers taking your money," he said.

Khanna is running alongside Libby Protzman, one of the candidates for student trustee.

Pamela Lawn can be reached at plawn@student.umass.edu.

S.P. Sullivan contributed reporting to this article.

CHU from page 1

according to his Web site.

The platform includes six major points, all with proposed solutions, starting with increased funding and decreased student fees.

Chu also says on his Web site, "Many students are priced out of UMass Amherst, while others are accumulating unmanageable debt burdens and working excessive hours while in school full time."

Chu hopes to lower costs through exerting pressure on the administration by bringing together and working with two groups; Massachusetts Students Uniting and Public Higher Education Network of Massachusetts.

One of the planks in the platform that has become an increasingly hot topic in recent weeks is "fostering a safe and inclusive campus climate."

"Our campus should be a safe and welcoming space for all students," says Chu's Web site. "Racism, heterosexism and other forms of oppression are intolerable."

Chu hopes to spread diversity by bringing the "Diversity Dialogues" program in the Van Meter/Butterfield dorms to all students.

Chu also hopes to bring back the escort service once operated by UMass Police Department and funded by UMass, again by pressuring, and getting parents to pressure, the administration.

As the secretary of diversity, Chu is interested in supporting diversity programs at UMass.

His Web site says, "a report from the Education Trust that examines the failure of flagship campuses to serve low-income students and underrepresented minority students, recently gave UMass Amherst an 'F' for underrepresented minority access."

He hopes to rectify this situation by supporting programs like Freshmen Achieving More for Undergraduate Success and African, Latino/a, Native American, Asian and Pacific Islander (ALANA), and trying to get the University to fund outreach.

Other planks in Chu's platform include more freedom for student organizations and more control of student spaces by students, including optional first year housing, same room reservations and also getting police out of dorms.

Finally, Chu hopes to improve academic advising by working with the New Student Orientation program to re-structure the advising system and assigning permanent advisors to undeclared majors. More information is available at Chu's Web site, http://blogs.umass.edu/malcomc.

Ben Williams can be reached at bwilliam@student.umass.edu.

Student trustee candidates campaign for change

By Kaitlyn Silva
Collegian Correspondent

Despite being the only graduate student running in the upcoming Student Government Association elections, Augusta Mfuko feels she is the right choice for student trustee.

"I've experienced all of the issues," said Mfuko, of the School of Education at the University of Massachusetts. "I want to represent others going through the same."

Mfuko's platform calls for change within the UMass system. Her ultimate goal is to provide students with a more affordable, quality education because she has also struggled to pay for her education.

Involved with last November's general student strike, Mfuko is a staunch supporter of student rights, including diversity funding and the rollback of student fees.

"Most students don't know their rights," Mfuko said. "We held workshops about student rights during the strike because many students didn't know their rights and responsibilities."

Mfuko graduated from American International College in Springfield with a bachelor's degree in human services in 1992 and a master's degree in finance in 1998. She is currently pursuing a master's degree in multicultural education at UMass.

She serves as the treasurer of the Graduate Student Senate and president of the African Graduates and Scholars Association, an organization that advocates on behalf of African issues and research. She also sits as a member of the Graduate Student Senate's finance committee and Childcare Voucher Program committee.

Her activity in the local graduate community has made Mfuko believe she has gained the support of the graduate student population.

"They know their voice is my voice," she said.

Overall, Mfuko remains confident that the elections will go well. Though she is running for student trustee without a presidential candidate paired with her, Mfuko is not worried about the effects running independently may have on her chances for success.

"This is not the first time I'm running independently while others are running as couples," she said. "I ran alone for my job as treasurer of the Graduate Student Senate while others had partners. As long as you are the right candidate, you will get it."

Kaitlyn Silva can be reached at kmsilva@student.umass.edu

By Lucas Correia
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts junior Lindsay McCluskey, a candidate for student trustee of the Student Government Association, is determined to make an impact on student life at UMass.

She and her running mate, SGA presidential candidate Malcolm Chu, are taking on many issues they feel students are encountering regarding a UMass education. Their campaign platform, on their Facebook group "Malcolm Chu & Lindsay McCluskey for SGA President and Trustee," promises to increase UMass's affordability, campus safety and accessibility to underrepresented students.

"What is unique about Malcolm and I is the fact that we have already been organizing on and off campus around the issues that we would like to see the SGA address in the coming year," said McCluskey. "We have co-founded organizations, have organized rallies and have already been working to make concrete changes that will improve the lives of UMass students."

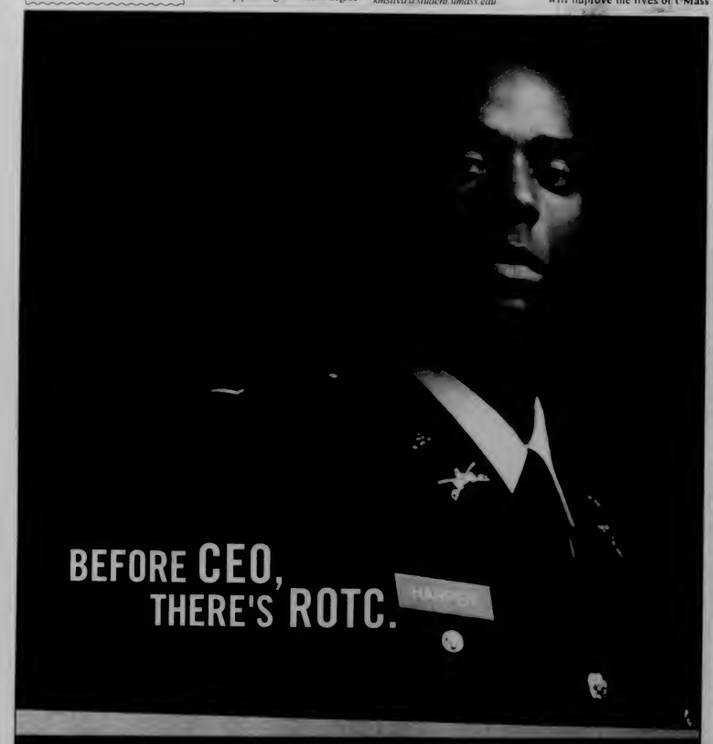
Their campaign also promises to lessen police presence in dorms, give Registered Student Organizations more authority, and improve academic advising.

McCluskey, a 21-year-old anthropology major, has been involved in organizing since the beginning of her sophomore year, when she ran for senate. The same year, she served on the Statewide Student Organization Committee and co-founded the Public Higher Education Network of Massachusetts.

PHENOM "is a statewide organization that brings students, faculty and staff together to advocate for a stronger system of public higher education in Massachusetts," said McCluskey.

She currently holds a seat on the organization's executive board.

McCluskey is also serving as the secretary of external affairs for the SGA. This year, she has used this position to work with students at other universities to advocate making colleges across the country more affordable and accessible.



In addition to PHENOM, McCluskey has co-founded Massachusetts Students Uniting, which currently brings students together from UMass Amherst, UMass Boston and Salem State College to advocate for increased need-based financial aid.

On a national level, she is serving as the New England Regional Chair of the United States Student Association, which teaches students across the country to develop effective issue-based campaigns.

"I believe that through the statewide organizing that I have been engaged in over the past two years, I have acquired the skills and knowledge needed to be student trustee. I have built connections with students at the other UMass schools, am well-versed on the issues of college affordability, and have been organizing students to take action on these issues, which I plan to continue in the coming year," said McCluskey.

More information on the campaign can be found on Chu and McCluskey's UMass blog at blogs.umass.edu/malcolmc, or via their campaign's Facebook group.

Lucas Correia can be reached at ljcorrei@student.umass.edu

Contact Major John Smolenski at 413-222-9870 or email jsmolens@acad.umass.edu.

Check out the Collegian news blog at

dailycollegian.blogspot.com.

BSU hosts lecture to discuss sensitive word

REAL TALK from page 1

episode as a foundation, asking the attendees, "Why is the n-word being used so much?"

"Rap," said a student from the back. And the deliberations began.

Attendees discussed that the word has become very mainstream in the media, in part because of hip-hop and rap music, saying that it has become part of everyone's vocabulary.

Jimmy Destin, a junior majoring in legal studies and communication, disagreed with this claim.

"I feel that it is far too convenient to just blame hip-hop and rap music," he said. "The word is transcending to the media like 'Boondocks.'"

The forum was torn between the attendees who expressed that the n-word at the core is a derogatory word for African-Americans and the others who believed that the n-word can be expressed in a positive way.

The students who felt the word still carried remnants of the oppressive history their ancestors endured believed the word should not be used.

"My grandmother would punch me dead in the face if she ever heard me say that; she did the marches and the boycotting," said Shanell Saunders, a junior. "It is disrespectful to her."

"When you call yourself a nigga, you don't use it in an intellectual, educational, positive way. There just has to be a conscious thought to take it out of the vocabulary," said Emanuel Adhanom, a senior at UMass majoring in electrical engineering.

The attendees expressed that the n-word can be said in a positive manner, depending on the context that is used.

"I do believe that there is a difference between nigger and nigga; the word was used in a negative light and we flipped it," said Octavia Farquharson, a freshman majoring in communications at UMass.

Mohamed, the secretary for BSU, asked the attendees, "Are only black people niggas?"

His question brought mixed feelings as some students claimed to be tolerant in allowing people to use the word.

"How are you going to change the meaning of a word if only one group of people can use the word? Then you are not really changing the meaning," said Jessie Brown-Martin, a senior double majoring in legal studies and African-American studies.

"Why do black people get so offended when other races say it?" said Kenisha Jackson. "You take it to the heart when a white person says it, but if you were Spanish or Asian, it would be okay."

Other students expressed their discomfort toward someone who is not African-American using the word.

"I always felt like, if I ever hear anybody say it that's not black, I just like freeze; I don't care if you are Asian or Spanish," said Destin.

Students discussed how the shade of skin color matters in determining who can say the n-word.

"I know plenty of darker-skinned Dominicans that use it, but it doesn't get on my nerves, but when I hear a light-skinned Dominican with straighter hair [say it], it pisses me off," said Maziarz.

The attendees agreed that, to some degree, skin tone is considered.

"In many countries it doesn't matter what race, is what you look like. You get privilege on the whiteness of your skin," said Kelly Lough, the resident director in Kennedy.

Maziarz directed the attention to the television screen where a picture of the rapper Nas' new album, titled "Nigger," was displayed. Reactions varied amongst the attendees.

"The name of the album totally like disgusted me, I think that's the worst idea he could have ever had; I heard his rationalizing behind it, but truthfully, I feel like it's just for shock value," Destin said.

Brandon Scamfer, a senior majoring in hotel and casino management, set up a scenario of him going to the record store and asking for the new Nas album.

"I'm white as they get, you hear me in there saying that word right there with a 'er' no 'na,'" said Scamfer. The attendees laughed at the scenario but realized that this situation can be misunderstood.

"For me, the day that white people can freely use this word is the day that the '60s and the whole entire thing is forgotten," said Scamfer.

Gisel Saillant can be reached at gsaillan@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 5, 2008

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
- Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

An election closer to home

Today marks the beginning of the Student Government Association elections. UMass students may or may not have noticed the ubiquitous campaign posters promising more or less the same things.

Taking their cues from the demands of last semester's student strike, SGA presidential and trustee candidates have all made nearly uniform promises to pursue interests parallel to those of the United Student Action Coalition. These promises include student control over student space, cops out of the dorms, increased diversity funding and a decrease in student fees. We all know the mantra.

The platforms of candidates of any student governing body on any college campus are bound to overlap dramatically. What makes a student government candidate stand out, therefore, is the minutia of their platform.

In addition to mirroring the rally-cry of the USAC, presidential candidate Derek Khanna seems to be taking the most pragmatic, change-oriented approach to the position. Khanna is the only candidate that – while acknowledging the good that came of last semester's strike – is willing to admit that it was not a complete success. Likewise, Khanna appears eager to address issues within the SGA infrastructure and to encourage better communication between the SGA and the student body. This is a particularly important position, seeing as there appears to be a distinct disconnect between what the student body considers relevant and what the SGA does.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian encourages its readers to vote. However, it is an unfortunate reality that most don't. It is no secret that voter turnout for SGA elections seldom reaches double-digits; therefore SGA members cannot consider themselves representative of the student body by virtue of their position. It is imperative that the SGA be engaged in a constant dialogue with the student body.

Although The Collegian editorialized in favor of last semester's strike, many members of the student body felt unrepresented – even embarrassed – by the SGA's actions, and took issue with having classes they paid for impeded for a cause they may or may not have agreed with.

Khanna's platform is punctuated with calls to eliminate the "status quo" in addition to the standard-issue, four-pronged demands of the USAC. Adding to promises of improving the campus experience for registered student organizations and underrepresented minorities, Khanna's platform seeks to encompass the whole of the student body. Among these initiatives are: wireless connections in dormitories, advocating student protection against Recording Industry Association of America lawsuits, protection of Collegian content sovereignty and a reestablishment of same room requests on housing applications, among others.

Khanna, however, has found himself in the midst of a campaign controversy as of last night, as reported today in The Collegian. While we condemn any attempt at violating campaign bylaws, a judicial board found no evidence of foul play on Khanna's part, and it would be imprudent for us to conclude otherwise.

SGA elections are taking place today and tomorrow in the Campus Center and Dining Commons across campus. Regardless of your political preferences, The Collegian encourages you to vote. All of the presidential candidates should be commended for their contributions to campus politics and for taking part in this very important process.

The choice is yours. We, however, endorse Derek Khanna for SGA president.

Unsigned editorials reflect the majority opinion of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian editorial board.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

DEAR EDITOR:

With Student Government Association elections in the air, the question arises of who we want speaking for us, representing us, in our governing body. What kind of SGA do we want? On a broader level, what kind of University do we want? And what will it take to build that sort of University?

As the former student trustee and as someone deeply committed to the future of UMass, I urge you to vote for Malcolm Chu for SGA president and Lindsay McCluskey for student trustee. Yet more importantly, I urge you to join them in their struggle for better UMass.

It was not long ago that SGA leadership was using Ku Klux Klan imagery to mock a Latino student, Eduardo Bustamante, who had won the SGA presidency (twice) after those same students, dubbed the "KKK9," threw out the election results due to a technicality.

It was also not long ago that the Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs, Mike Gargano, had supported these students, and was attempting to wreak havoc on student life – from instituting random police patrols in dorm hallways, to gutting funding for support services and outreach programs, to gentrifying UMass's admissions.

Nor was it long ago that Massachusetts legislators cut public higher education funding by 32.6 percent from 2001 to 2004 – a reduction greater than that faced by any other state. These budget cuts forced UMass to dismantle many student services and academic programs, while pushing costs for buildings and basic campus operations onto our families. Unfortunately it was not long ago that the SGA voted in support of these very budget cuts.

Up until recently, students had struggled to reauthorize the federal Higher Education Act (which controls financial aid, interest rates on student loans, etc.) with little success. Due in part to its neglect, student loan debt has continued to skyrocket (today exceeding an average of $19,000 per borrowing student), while in 2006 the entering freshman class at colleges across the country was the wealthiest in the past 35 years.

Yet due to the efforts of students at UMass Amherst and beyond, the times are changing.

For the past four years, our SGA has had progressive, outspoken leadership, and the SGA has been able to start a new outreach program (Student Bridges), spearhead statewide and federal organizing efforts, and to push for an accessible University where all students are treated with respect and dignity. Malcolm and Lindsay have been at the forefront of these initiatives as a solid, smart and committed presence – and as students, we are winning.

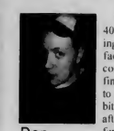
Coming out of last fall's student strike, the administration (devoid of Gargano) agreed to an impressive amount of student demands (including increased financial aid, unwarranted cops out of the dorms and funding for diversity initiatives, among others).

State funding for public higher education is on the upswing, and – due in part to Lindsay's organizing efforts – Massachusetts is now home to the nation's only statewide coalition of students, staff, faculty and alumni, the Public Higher Education Network of Massachusetts.

Alongside PHENOM, the SGA has also been working with students from UMass Boston, Salem State, Springfield Technical Community College, Framingham State and beyond to build Massachusetts Student Uniting, which recently organized a "study in" at the statehouse to advocate for increased state financial aid.

The SGA has also renewed membership for the United States Student Association, the nation's oldest and largest student association, and thanks to USSA's advocacy, the House just recently reauthorized the Higher Education Act after 10 long years.

The SGA is steadily becoming a powerful organizing body that unites us, as students, as a force that can shape our own experiences at the University, rather than have our experiences and education shaped by the University.



Yet this is not the only path that the SGA has taken. Rather than act as an organizing and advocacy force, the SGA can revert to a body designed to govern us, to serve as a layer to smooth relations between students and the administration, simply passing symbolic resolutions without mobilizing students to enforce such resolutions.

The choice is yours. Yet as someone who witnessed the old SGA, and who studied here through the years of Gargano's reign and the Romney budget cuts, I urge you to choose an SGA that walks outside the sideways, that understands that the only power we have as students comes from our ability to organize and to mobilize collectively.

I urge you to build with Malcolm and Lindsay. To build a vision of a high quality, affordable and accessible University governed by those who work and study here, to build a University that we can feel proud to graduate from. So here's to Malcolm and Lindsay, and here's to all of you who continue to struggle to build a better UMass for ourselves and for those who come after us.

Misby Leibum
UMass Graduate Student
Former SGA Student Trustee

A solid surveillance solution

Dan Nicastro

With roughly 40 lawsuits staring them in the face, phone companies are finally starting to breathe a little bit easier. Days after a press conference where President George W. Bush enthusiastically urged Congress to help the war on terror, it now looks as if the Democratically controlled Congress will reauthorize the Protect America Act. This law will, in addition to keeping the federal eavesdropping program legal, give retroactive immunity to companies who turned over phone records and helped the government monitor phone calls.

When the program started after 9/11, the federal government assured wary phone companies that they would not be sued for participation in the program. Only the telecom company Qwest declined to participate in the program, meaning every other major phone company was complicit in helping the federal government undermine many common conceptions of privacy.

Currently, there are around 40 lawsuits facing these companies for privacy violations. All of these cases would be dismissed if the Protect America Act were reauthorized.

While a renewal of this law may provide legal defense for these companies, it may not provide a satisfactory conclusion to shareholders or customers. How will these major corporations save face and explain their actions to their shareholders and customers?

It may seem as if the phone companies involved in this scandal won't really need to explain their actions because most people either don't know or don't care about what they did. Also, Qwest is the only phone company that did not turn over their phone records, meaning all other phone companies did.

This does not leave consumers with much of a choice about their phone service. None of this should matter, however, as the phone companies need to save face and preserve their public image. While they soon may not be legally obligated to monetarily compensate aggrieved customers, businesses that hope to keep their shareholders and customers happy need to make amends.

I'm not a business major, but even I know that betraying paying customers by giving a third party free reign to their personal information is a poor way to run a business. Therefore, I think the phone companies need to adopt a new business model that will universally apply to all those phone companies who sold their customers down the river.

I'm proposing this model follow two principal parts. First, these companies need to establish rewards to give to their customers, especially those who brought lawsuits against the phone companies. Second, businesses need to create incentives for customers who are willing to forgive and forget.

I know that betraying paying customers by giving a third party free reign to their personal information is a poor way to run a business.

Regardless of the reauthorization of this law, companies need to reward their customers for their loyalty (even though consumer devotion is necessary). Besides, when the Protect America Act is renewed and these lawsuits become moot, the phone companies should not ignore the claims of customers who have allegedly been wronged. As an act of good faith, former litigants will receive a small part of the actual United States Constitution, ripped directly from the original document in the National Archives.

Obviously the Constitution has been stretched thin over the last seven years, meaning there's not a lot of the document left to go around. This means each litigant will have to settle for intermittent words that appear throughout the document.

The federal government better make sure these litigants don't get together, however. Combining all these words creates an awfully powerful legal defense against the destruction of civil liberties.

The second phase of this business model would involve the creation of an incentive program. This would lead to businesses convincing their customers to do their dirty work for them. What American wouldn't give up a few Constitutional rights at the prospect of saving a few dollars on their phone bill?

Why should the federal government learn about unsubstantiated claims and wild rumors from impersonal Web sites such as "The Drudge Report," when the phone companies can obtain information that is just as accurate, much more personal and coming in at a much faster rate? Creating rebates and tax breaks for customers who are willing to rat out their neighbors and friends will certainly motivate people to "do the right thing."

With a little help from the federal government, the phone companies could really spice things up. Turning this program into a contest could solve a number of problems for many institutions. First, phone companies come out ahead by appearing patriotic, silencing critics who claim they are contributing to the degradation of civil liberties in America. Second, the federal government wins by roping up enough "suspected terrorists" to open up a second Guantanamo Bay, and by crowning the victor of the contest as the new director of homeland security. Everybody wins.

With a few changes and the adoption of a new business model, phone companies embattled by recent allegations of wrongdoing can soon put this sordid affair behind them and go back to doing what they do best: helping the federal government spy on American citizens. Click

Dan Nicastro is listening to your cell phone conversations in the Dining Commons. He can be reached at dnicastr@student.umass.edu

Safety is never guaranteed

Evan Powers

I turned on the TV recently and put CNN on to catch some news before class when I found that I was staring at the breaking news headline of another deadly shooting on a university campus. This time the tragedy occurred at Northern Illinois University, a mere 10 months after the Virginia Tech Massacre.

The first thing that went through my mind was, "This can't be happening again. Virginia Tech still feels like it was yesterday." I really couldn't believe that we had to face another tragedy of a school shooting and the loss of young people with their whole future ahead of them, but the more I thought about it, the more I realized that this is something that is always going to occur.

The sad truth of the matter is, as incredibly rare as it may be, school shootings are an inevitable thing in our society, and there is very little that can be done to prevent them.

In the days following the event in Illinois where Steven Kazmierczak entered a lecture hall and shot and killed five students and then himself, it was discovered that he used the same Web site to purchase the weapons for the incident as the Virginia Tech shooting perpetrator, Seung Hui-Cho. Unlike Cho, who was known around campus as an outcast, anti-social and had erratic behavior, Kazmierczak was described by his peers and the NIU administration as a "revered, award-winning student."

He was considered a committed student who was involved in after school activities and even wrote his graduate paper on peace and social justice. Kazmierczak simply stopped taking his medication, became erratic and ultimately took the lives of five people. Other than that, there were no warning signs.

A difficult thing that universities become involved in directly and in the following months of school shootings is the policy of campus security and campus safety. Kazmierczak hid his weapons in his guitar case for two days before he walked in the back door of the building where he ultimately committed the shooting.

As with the aftermath of Virginia Tech, questions arose: Should metal detectors be implemented in administrative buildings? In dorms? Should campus security be beefed up around campus to check on any strange behavior in students? Should classrooms be locked from the inside once classes begin to prevent people from entering? Should someone have seen the warning signs regarding Cho's and Kazmierczak's erratic behavior leading up to the shootings?

Ultimately, there is only so much that can be done, and it is never enough to fully erase and prevent future acts of violence occurring on campuses in colleges around the country. There's simply not enough money to fund safety features like metal detectors in dorms and administrative buildings and locks on doors. There's not enough manpower to up security around campus to monitor dorms and classrooms, and it's impractical to keep track of every single student who may be reported to be "behaving erratically," or check to make sure that they're keeping up on their medications.

It's also impractical to go through such dramatic changes because events that occurred at Virginia Tech and Northern Illinois are so rare that money can be better spent in other areas around the school. Unfortunately, as rare as school shootings are, they are going to happen.

Ultimately, there is only so much that can be done, but never enough to fully erase and prevent future acts of violence.

College campuses do everything they can in their power and their budget to make sure that their students are kept safe while they attend school. And for their part, 99 percent of the time they do an outstanding job of creating a safe and healthy environment.

I have never felt unsafe or fearful for my well-being during my years at the University of Massachusetts, and the same can be said for students who attend college all over the country. I'm sure the victims of Virginia Tech and Northern Illinois would have said the same thing all the way up to the fateful days at their schools, because while the threat is always there, it is so rare for a school shooting to occur that it's nothing worth worrying about.

In the end, it is the responsibility of one's own mental health and the appreciation for human life to make sure that college campus shootings do not happen. Seung-Hui Cho and Steven Kazmierczak chose to stop taking medication; they chose to disregard the help they needed and did not care about other people's lives.

They felt compelled to do what they did, and when someone is compelled to do something so drastic as to take a life away, there is little that anyone, including college campuses, can do to prevent it.

Evan Powers is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at epowers@student.umass.edu

"The Daily Collegian
UMass Yak-Back!"

STAY TUNED TO UVC AND THE EDITORIAL/OPINION PAGE

FOR THE RECORD: An opinion piece by the Radical Student Union (RSU) that ran in yesterday's Collegian should have been run as a letter to the editor. The Collegian cannot verify certain claims of hatespeech and physical assault made by the RSU against the Republican Club, and the opinions of RSU members do not neccesarily reflect those of The Collegian or its staff.

SGA presidential elections to begin today

ASHE from page 1

Citing the ingenuity of these programs he added, "They're good at passing policy, and if they take initiatives, real results follow."

Even though the ALANA caucus has endorsed another candidate in the race, Ashe said he would still work with them if elected.

Ashe believes his experience with the Ways and Means Committee of the SGA Senate have also prepared him for the position of president.

"A big thing we do is look through budget packets to assemble new ones, which really gives us a sense of what the RSOs go through," he said.

There is also some concern that the majority of the student body isn't interested in student politics. Ashe believes a cause of this is that promises are not being delivered on.

"My main philosophy is if we have a practical, realistic and honest student government, students will want to get involved," he said.

The candidates have been given a $100 budget to be spent either at the print shop or the Craft Center for their campaigns. The elections for SGA president and trustee will be today and tomorrow.

Adam Coulter can be reached at apcoulte@student.umass.edu

KHANNA from page 1

proposed fee increase, and that two senators opposed it.

"It seems to me that raising fees should be the last option," he said. "More effort needs to be put into corporate ventures, streamlining programs and looking toward alternative funding."

Student Bridges is the only academic program that is funded by student fees. Khanna thinks it is an excellent program and should be expanded, but not at the expense of rising fees.

"All academic programs should be paid by the school," he said.

If elected, Khanna intends to improve the intellectual, class and racial diversity within the University of Massachusetts.

"Intellectual and class diversity are just as important as racial diversity," he said. "All three should be brought to the forefront of discussions."

"I think subjects like Caribbean Studies should be running on the curriculum at UMass," he said. "People should have the ability to be proud of their culture, language and history and, in turn, teach others about it."

Khanna also thinks it is time to change the daily running of the SGA.

"The student body can no longer control their own space ... we need to prove through actions that we are a trustworthy group that is able to run the union effectively," he said.

Some of these actions include better communications with the general student populations. Khanna thinks all presidents should be obliged to write a monthly column in The Massachusetts Daily Collegian.

"I think an e-mail system should be set up where students can contact us, even if it is for a problem as small as the laundry dryers taking your money," he said.

Khanna is running alongside Libby Protzman, one of the candidates for student trustee.

Pamela Lawn can be reached at plawn@student.umass.edu.

S.P. Sullivan contributed reporting to this article.

Student trustee candidates campaign for change

By Kaitlyn Silva
Collegian Correspondent

Despite being the only graduate student running in the upcoming Student Government Association elections, Augusta Mfuko feels she is the right choice for student trustee.

"I've experienced all of the issues," said Mfuko, of the School of Education at the University of Massachusetts. "I want to represent others going through the same."

Mfuko's platform calls for change within the UMass system. Her ultimate goal is to provide students with a more affordable, quality education because she has also struggled to pay for her education.

Involved with last November's general student strike, Mfuko is a staunch supporter of student rights, including diversity funding and the rollback of student fees.

"Most students don't know their rights," Mfuko said. "We held workshops about student rights during the strike because many students didn't know their rights and responsibilities."

Mfuko graduated from American International College in Springfield with a bachelor's degree in human services in 1992 and a master's degree in finance in 1998. She is currently pursuing a master's degree in multicultural education at UMass.

She serves as the treasurer of the Graduate Student Senate and president of the African Graduates and Scholars Association, an organization that advocates on behalf of African issues and research. She also sits as a member of the Graduate Student Senate's finance committee and Childcare Voucher Program committee.

Her activity in the local graduate community has made Mfuko believe she has gained the support of the graduate student population.

"They know their voice is my voice," she said.

Overall, Mfuko remains confident that the elections will go well. Though she is running for student trustee without a presidential candidate paired with her, Mfuko is not worried about the effects running independently may have on her chances for success.

"This is not the first time I'm running independently while others are running as couples," she said. "I ran alone for my job as treasurer of the Graduate Student Senate while others had partners. As long as you are the right candidate, you will get it."

Kaitlyn Silva can be reached at kmsilva@student.umass.edu.

CHU from page 1

according to his Web site.

The platform includes six major points, all with proposed solutions, starting with increased funding and decreased student fees.

Chu also says on his Web site, "Many students are priced out of UMass Amherst, while others are accumulating unmanageable debt burdens and working excessive hours while in school full time."

Chu hopes to lower costs through exerting pressure on the administration by bringing together and working with two groups; Massachusetts Students Uniting and Public Higher Education Network of Massachusetts.

One of the planks in the platform that has become an increasingly hot topic in recent weeks is "fostering a safe and inclusive campus climate."

"Our campus should be a safe and welcoming space for all students," says Chu's Web site. "Racism, heterosexism and other forms of oppression are intolerable."

Chu hopes to spread diversity by bringing the "Diversity Dialogues" program in the Van Meter/Butterfield dorms to all students.

Chu also hopes to bring back the escort service once operated by UMass Police Department and funded by UMass, again by pressuring, and getting parents to pressure, the administration.

As the secretary of diversity, Chu is interested in supporting diversity programs at UMass.

His Web site says, "a report from the Education Trust that examines the failure of flagship campuses to serve low-income students and underrepresented minority students, recently gave UMass Amherst an 'F' for underrepresented minority access."

He hopes to rectify this situation by supporting programs like Freshmen Achieving More for Undergraduate Success and African, Latino/a, Native American, Asian and Pacific Islander (ALANA), and trying to get the University to fund outreach.

Other planks in Chu's platform include more freedom for student organizations and more control of student spaces by students, including optional first year housing, same room reservations and also getting police out of dorms.

Finally, Chu hopes to improve academic advising by working with the New Student Orientation program to re-structure the advising system and assigning permanent advisors to undeclared majors. More information is available at Chu's Web site, http://blogs.umass.edu/malcomc.

Ben Williams can be reached at bwilliam@student.umass.edu

By Lucas Correia
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts junior Lindsay McCluskey, a candidate for student trustee of the Student Government Association, is determined to make an impact on student life at UMass.

She and her running mate, SGA presidential candidate Malcolm Chu, are taking on many issues they feel students are encountering regarding a UMass education. Their campaign platform, on their Facebook group "Malcolm Chu & Lindsay McCluskey for SGA President and Trustee," promises to increase UMass's affordability, campus safety and accessibility to underrepresented students.

"What is unique about Malcolm and I is the fact that we have already been organizing on and off campus around the issues that we would like to see the SGA address in the coming year," said McCluskey. "We have co-founded organizations, have organized rallies and have already been working to make concrete changes that will improve the lives of UMass students."

Their campaign also promises to lessen police presence in dorms, give Registered Student Organizations more authority, and improve academic advising.

McCluskey, a 21-year-old anthropology major, has been involved in organizing since the beginning of her sophomore year, when she ran for senate. The same year, she served on the Statewide Student Organization Committee and co-founded the Public Higher Education Network of Massachusetts.

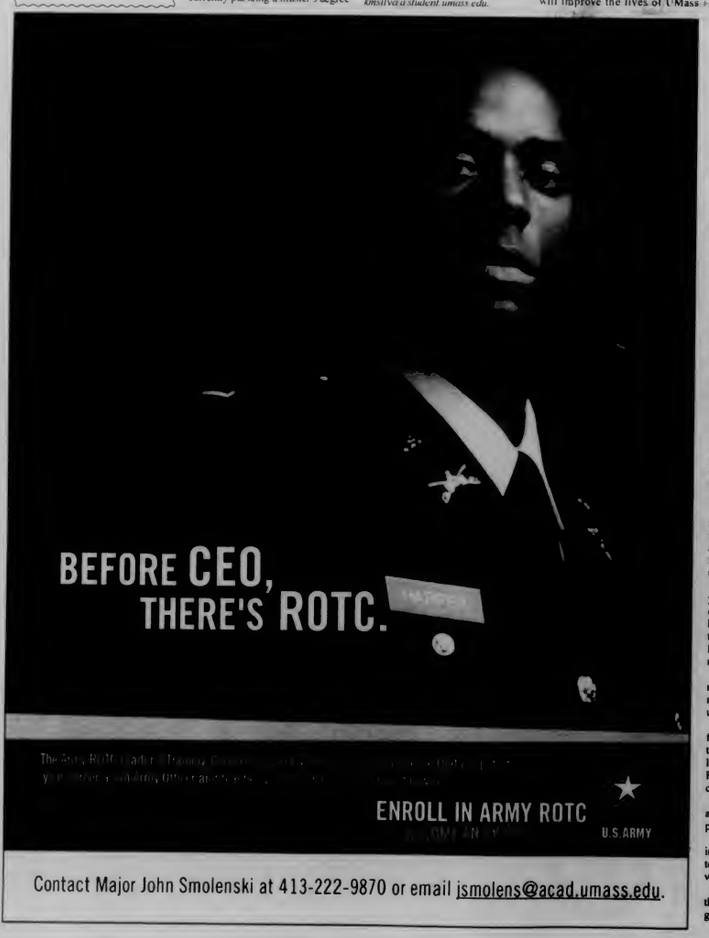
PHENOM "is a statewide organization that brings students, faculty and staff together to advocate for a stronger system of public higher education in Massachusetts," said McCluskey.

She currently holds a seat on the organization's executive board.

McCluskey is also serving as the secretary of external affairs for the SGA. This year, she has used this position to work with students at other universities to advocate making colleges across the country more affordable and accessible.

In addition to PHENOM, McCluskey has co-founded Massachusetts Students Uniting, which currently brings students together from UMass Amherst, UMass Boston and Salem State College to advocate for increased need-based financial aid.

On a national level, she is serving as the New England Regional Chair of the United States Student Association, which teaches students across the country to develop effective issue-based campaigns.



"I believe that through the statewide organizing that I have been engaged in over the past two years, I have acquired the skills and knowledge needed to be student trustee. I have built connections with students at the other UMass schools, am well-versed on the issues of college affordability, and have been organizing students to take action on these issues, which I plan to continue in the coming year," said McCluskey.

More information on the campaign can be found on Chu and McCluskey's UMass blog at blogs.umass.edu/malcolmc, or via their campaign's Facebook group.

Lucas Correia can be reached at ljcorrei@student.umass.edu

Check out the Collegian news blog at

dailycollegian.blogspot.com.

Contact Major John Smolenski at 413-222-9870 or email jsmolens@acad.umass.edu.

BSU hosts lecture to discuss sensitive word

REAL TALK from page 1

episode as a foundation, asking the attendees, "Why is the n-word being used so much?"

"Rap," said a student from the back. And the deliberations began.

Attendees discussed that the word has become very mainstream in the media, in part because of hip-hop and rap music, saying that it has become part of everyone's vocabulary.

Jimmy Destin, a junior majoring in legal studies and communication, disagreed with this claim.

"I feel that it is far too convenient to just blame hip-hop and rap music," he said. "The word is transcending to the media like 'Boondocks.'"

The forum was torn between the attendees who expressed that the n-word at the core is a derogatory word for African-Americans and the others who believed that the n-word can be expressed in a positive way.

The students who felt the word still carried remnants of the oppressive history their ancestors endured believed the word should not be used.

"My grandmother would punch me dead in the face if she ever heard me say that; she did the marches and the boycotting," said Shanell Saunders, a junior. "It is disrespectful to her."

"When you call yourself a nigga, you don't use it in an intellectual, educational, positive way. There just has to be a conscious thought to take it out of the vocabulary," said Emanuel Adhanom, a senior at UMass majoring in electrical engineering.

The attendees expressed that the n-word can be said in a positive manner, depending on the context that is used.

"I do believe that there is a difference between nigger and nigga; the word was used in a negative light and we flipped it," said Octavia Farquharson, a freshman majoring in communications at UMass.

Mohamed, the secretary for BSU, asked the attendees, "Are only black people niggas?"

His question brought mixed feelings as some students claimed to be tolerant in allowing people to use the word.

"How are you going to change the meaning of a word if only one group of people can use the word? Then you are not really changing the meaning," said Jessie Brown-Martin, a senior double majoring in legal studies and African-American studies.

"Why do black people get so offended when other races say it?" said Kenisha Jackson. "You take it to the heart when a white person says it, but if you were Spanish or Asian, it would be okay."

Other students expressed their discomfort toward someone who is not African-American using the word.

"I always felt like, if I ever hear anybody say it that's not black, I just like freeze, I don't care if you are Asian or Spanish," said Destin.

Students discussed how the shade of skin color matters in determining who can say the n-word.

"I know plenty of darker-skinned Dominicans that use it, but it doesn't get on my nerves, but when I hear a light-skinned Dominican with straighter hair [say it], it pisses me off," said Maziarz.

The attendees agreed that, to some degree, skin tone is considered.

"In many countries it doesn't matter what race, is what you look like. You get privilege on the whiteness of your skin," said Kelly Lough, the resident director in Kennedy.

Maziarz directed the attention to the television screen where a picture of the rapper Nas' new album, titled "Nigger," was displayed. Reactions varied amongst the attendees.

"The name of the album totally like disgusted me, I think that's the worst idea he could have ever had; I heard his rationalizing behind it, but truthfully, I feel like it's just for shock value," Destin said.

Brandon Scamfer, a senior majoring in hotel and casino management, set up a scenario of him going to the record store and asking for the new Nas album.

"I'm white as they get, you hear me in there saying that word right there with a 'er' no 'na,'" said Scamfer. The attendees laughed at the scenario but realized that this situation can be misunderstood.

"For me, the day that white people can freely use this word is the day that the '60s and the whole entire thing is forgotten," said Scamfer.

Gisel Saillant can be reached at gsaillan@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 5, 2008

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
- Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

An election closer to home

Today marks the beginning of the Student Government Association elections. UMass students may or may not have noticed the ubiquitous campaign posters promising more or less the same things.

Taking their cues from the demands of last semester's student strike, SGA presidential and trustee candidates have all made nearly uniform promises to pursue interests parallel to those of the United Student Action Coalition. These promises include student control over student space, cops out of the dorms, increased diversity funding and a decrease in student fees. We all know the mantra.

The platforms of candidates of any student governing body on any college campus are bound to overlap dramatically. What makes a student government candidate stand out, therefore, is the minutia of their platform.

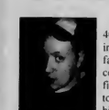
In addition to mirroring the rally-cry of the USAC, presidential candidate Derek Khanna seems to be taking the most pragmatic, change-oriented approach to the position. Khanna is the only candidate that – while acknowledging the good that came of last semester's strike – is willing to admit that it was not a complete success. Likewise, Khanna appears eager to address issues within the SGA infrastructure and to encourage better communication between the SGA and the student body. This is a particularly important position, seeing as there appears to be a distinct disconnect between what the student body considers relevant and what the SGA does.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian encourages its readers to vote. However, it is an unfortunate reality that most don't. It is no secret that voter turnout for SGA elections seldom reaches double-digits; therefore SGA members cannot consider themselves representative of the student body by virtue of their position. It is imperative that the SGA be engaged in a constant dialogue with the student body.

Although The Collegian editorialized in favor of last semester's strike, many members of the student body felt unrepresented – even embarrassed – by the SGA's actions, and took issue with having classes they paid for impeded for a cause they may or may not have agreed with.

Khanna's platform is punctuated with calls to eliminate the "status quo" in addition to the standard-issue, four-pronged demands of the USAC. Adding to promises of improving the campus experience for registered student organizations and underrepresented minorities, Khanna's platform seeks to encompass the whole of the student body. Among these initiatives are: wireless connections in dormitories, advocating student protection against Recording Industry Association of America lawsuits, protection of Collegian content sovereignty and a reestablishment of same room requests on housing applications, among others.

Khanna, however, has found himself in the midst of a campaign controversy as of last night, as reported today in The Collegian. While we condemn any attempt at violating campaign bylaws, a judicial board found no evidence of foul play on Khanna's part, and it would be imprudent for us to conclude otherwise.



SGA elections are taking place today and tomorrow in the Campus Center and Dining Commons across campus. Regardless of your political preferences, The Collegian encourages you to vote. All of the presidential candidates should be commended for their contributions to campus politics and for taking part in this very important process.

The choice is yours. We, however, endorse Derek Khanna for SGA president.

Unsigned editorials reflect the majority opinion of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian editorial board.

A solid surveillance solution

Dan Nicastro

With roughly 40 lawsuits staring them in the face, phone companies are finally starting to breathe a little bit easier. Days after a press conference where President George W. Bush enthusiastically urged Congress to help the war on terror, it now looks as if the Democratically controlled Congress will reauthorize the Protect America Act. This law will, in addition to keeping the federal eavesdropping program legal, give retroactive immunity to companies who turned over phone records and helped the government monitor phone calls.

When the program started after 9/11, the federal government assured wary phone companies that they would not be sued for participation in the program. Only the telecom company Qwest declined to participate in the program, meaning every other major phone company was complicit in helping the federal government undermine many common conceptions of privacy.

Currently, there are around 40 lawsuits facing these companies for privacy violations. All of these cases would be dismissed if the Protect America Act were reauthorized.

While a renewal of this law may provide legal defense for these companies, it may not provide a satisfactory conclusion to shareholders or customers. How will these major corporations save face and explain their actions to their shareholders and customers?

It may seem as if the phone companies involved in this scandal won't really need to explain their actions because most people either don't know or don't care about what they did. Also, Qwest is the only phone company that did not turn over their phone records, meaning all other phone companies did.

This does not leave consumers with much of a choice about their phone service. None of this should matter, however, as the phone companies need to save face and preserve their public image. While they soon may not be legally obligated to monetarily compensate aggrieved customers, businesses that hope to keep their shareholders and customers happy need to make amends.

I'm not a business major, but even I know that betraying paying customers by giving a third party free reign to their personal information is a poor way to run a business. Therefore, I think the phone companies need to adopt a new business model that will universally apply to all those phone companies who sold their customers down the river.

I'm proposing this model follow two principal parts. First, these companies need to establish rewards to give to their customers, especially those who brought lawsuits against the phone companies. Second, businesses need to create incentives for customers who are willing to forgive and forget.

I know that betraying paying customers by giving a third party free reign to their personal information is a poor way to run a business.

Regardless of the reauthorization of this law, companies need to reward their customers for their loyalty (even though consumer devotion is necessary). Besides, when the Protect America Act is renewed and these lawsuits become moot, the phone companies should not ignore the claims of customers who have allegedly been wronged. As an act of good faith, former litigants will receive a small part of the actual United States Constitution, ripped directly from the original document in the National Archives.

Obviously the Constitution has been stretched thin over the last seven years, meaning there's not a lot of the document left to go around. This means each litigant will have to settle for intermittent words that appear throughout the document.

The federal government better make sure these litigants don't get together, however. Combining all these words creates an awfully powerful legal defense against the destruction of civil liberties.

The second phase of this business model would involve the creation of an incentive program. This would lead to businesses convincing their customers to do their dirty work for them. What American wouldn't give up a few Constitutional rights at the prospect of saving a few dollars on their phone bill?

Why should the federal government learn about unsubstantiated claims and wild rumors from impersonal Web sites such as "The Drudge Report," when the phone companies can obtain information that is just as accurate, much more personal and coming in at a much faster rate? Creating rebates and tax breaks for customers who are willing to rat out their neighbors and friends will certainly motivate people to "do the right thing."

With a little help from the federal government, the phone companies could really spice things up. Turning this program into a contest could solve a number of problems for many institutions. First, phone companies come out ahead by appearing patriotic, silencing critics who claim they are contributing to the degradation of civil liberties in America. Second, the federal government wins by roping up enough "suspected terrorists" to open up a second Guantanamo Bay, and by crowning the victor of the contest as the new director of homeland security. Everybody wins.

With a few changes and the adoption of a new business model, phone companies embattled by recent allegations of wrongdoing can soon put this sordid affair behind them and go back to doing what they do best: helping the federal government spy on American citizens. Click.

Dan Nicastro is listening to your cell phone conversations in the Dining Commons. He can be reached at dnicastr@student.umass.edu

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

DEAR EDITOR:

With Student Government Association elections in the air, the question arises of who we want speaking for us, representing us, in our governing body. What kind of SGA do we want? On a broader level, what kind of University do we want? And what will it take to build that sort of University?

As the former student trustee and as someone deeply committed to the future of UMass, I urge you to vote for Malcolm Chu for SGA president and Lindsay McCluskey for student trustee. Yet more importantly, I urge you to join them in their struggle for better UMass.

It was not long ago that SGA leadership was using Ku Klux Klan imagery to mock a Latino student, Eduardo Bustamante, who had won the SGA presidency (twice) after those same students, dubbed the "KKK9," threw out the election results due to a technicality.

It was also not long ago that the Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs, Mike Gargano, had supported these students, and was attempting to wreak havoc on student life – from instituting random police patrols in dorm hallways, to gutting funding for support services and outreach programs, to gentrifying UMass's admissions.

Nor was it long ago that Massachusetts legislators cut public higher education funding by 32.6 percent from 2001 to 2004 – a reduction greater than that faced by any other state. These budget cuts forced UMass to dismantle many student services and academic programs, while pushing costs for buildings and basic campus operations onto our families. Unfortunately it was not long ago that the SGA voted in support of these very budget cuts.

Up until recently, students had struggled to reauthorize the federal Higher Education Act (which controls financial aid, interest rates on student loans, etc.) with little success. Due in part to its neglect, student loan debt has continued to skyrocket (today exceeding an average of $19,000 per borrowing student), while in 2006 the entering freshman class at colleges across the country was the wealthiest in the past 35 years.

Yet due to the efforts of students at UMass Amherst and beyond, the times are changing.

For the past four years, our SGA has had progressive, outspoken leadership, and the SGA has been able to start a new outreach program (Student Bridges), spearhead statewide and federal organizing efforts, and to push for an accessible University where all students are treated with respect and dignity. Malcolm and Lindsay have been at the forefront of these initiatives as a solid, smart and committed presence – and as students, we are winning.

Coming out of last fall's student strike, the administration (devoid of Gargano) agreed to an impressive amount of student demands (including increased financial aid, unwarranted cops out of the dorms and funding for diversity initiatives, among others).

State funding for public higher education is on the upswing, and – due in part to Lindsay's organizing efforts – Massachusetts is now home to the nation's only statewide coalition of students, staff, faculty and alumni, the Public Higher Education Network of Massachusetts.

Alongside PHENOM, the SGA has also been working with students from UMass Boston, Salem State, Springfield Technical Community College, Framingham State and beyond to build Massachusetts Student Uniting, which recently organized a "study in" at the statehouse to advocate for increased state financial aid.

The SGA has also renewed membership for the United States Student Association, the nation's oldest and largest student association, and thanks to USSA's advocacy, the House just recently reauthorized the Higher Education Act after 10 long years.

The SGA is steadily becoming a powerful organizing body that unites us, as students, as a force that can shape our own experiences at the University, rather than have our experiences and education shaped by the University.

Yet this is not the only path that the SGA has taken. Rather than act as an organizing and advocacy force, the SGA can revert to a body designed to govern us, to serve as a layer to smooth relations between students and the administration, simply passing symbolic resolutions without mobilizing students to enforce such resolutions.

The choice is yours. Yet as someone who witnessed the old SGA, and who studied here through the years of Gargano's reign and the Romney budget cuts, I urge you to choose an SGA that walks outside the sideways, that understands that the only power we have as students comes from our ability to organize and to mobilize collectively.

I urge you to build with Malcolm and Lindsay. To build a vision of a high quality, affordable and accessible University governed by those who work and study here, to build a University that we can feel proud to graduate from. So here's to Malcolm and Lindsay, and here's to all of you who continue to struggle to build a better UMass for ourselves and for those who come after us.

Misby Leiblum
UMass Graduate Student
Former SGA Student Trustee

Safety is never guaranteed

Evan Powers

I turned on the TV recently and put CNN on to catch some news before class when I found that I was staring at the breaking news headline of another deadly shooting on a university campus. This time the tragedy occurred at Northern Illinois University, a mere 10 months after the Virginia Tech Massacre.

The first thing that went through my mind was, "This can't be happening again, Virginia Tech still feels like it was yesterday." I really couldn't believe that we had to face another tragedy of a school shooting and the loss of young people with their whole future ahead of them, but the more I thought about it, the more I realized that this is something that is always going to occur.

The sad truth of the matter is, as incredibly rare as it may be, school shootings are an inevitable thing in our society, and there is very little that can be done to prevent them.

In the days following the event in Illinois where Steven Kazmierczak entered a lecture hall and shot and killed five students and then himself, it was discovered that he used the same Web site to purchase the weapons for the incident as the Virginia Tech shooting perpetrator, Seung Hui-Cho. Unlike Cho, who was known around campus as an outcast, anti-social and had erratic behavior, Kazmierczak was described by his peers and the NIU administration as a "revered, award-winning student."

He was considered a committed student who was involved in after school activities and even wrote his graduate paper on peace and social justice. Kazmierczak simply stopped taking his medication, became erratic and ultimately took the lives of five people. Other than that, there were no warning signs.

A difficult thing that universities become involved in directly and in the following months of school shootings is the policy of campus security and campus safety. Kazmierczak hid his weapons in his guitar case for two days before he walked in the back door of the building where he ultimately committed the shooting.

As with the aftermath of Virginia Tech, questions arose: Should metal detectors be implemented in administrative buildings? In dorms? Should campus security be beefed up around campus to check on any strange behavior in students? Should classrooms be locked from the inside once classes begin to prevent people from entering? Should someone have seen the warning signs regarding Cho's and Kazmierczak's erratic behavior leading up to the shootings?

Ultimately, there is only so much that can be done, and it is never enough to fully erase and prevent future acts of violence occurring on campuses in colleges around the country. There's simply not enough money to fund safety features like metal detectors in dorms and administrative buildings and locks on doors. There's not enough manpower to up security around campus to monitor dorms and classrooms, and it's impractical to keep track of every single student who may be reported to be "behaving erratically," or check to make sure that they're keeping up on their medications.

It's also impractical to go through such dramatic changes because events that occurred at Virginia Tech and Northern Illinois are so rare that money can be better spent in other areas around the school. Unfortunately, as rare as school shootings are, they are going to happen.

Ultimately, there is only so much that can be done, but never enough to fully erase and prevent future acts of violence.

College campuses do everything they can in their power and their budget to make sure that their students are kept safe while they attend school. And for their part, 99 percent of the time they do an outstanding job of creating a safe and healthy environment.

I have never felt unsafe or fearful for my well-being during my years at the University of Massachusetts, and the same can be said for students who attend college all over the country. I'm sure the victims of Virginia Tech and Northern Illinois would have said the same thing all the way up to the fateful days at their schools, because while the threat is always there, it is so rare for a school shooting to occur that it's nothing worth worrying about.

In the end, it is the responsibility of one's own mental health and the appreciation for human life to make sure that college campus shootings do not happen. Seung-Hui Cho and Steven Kazmierczak chose to stop taking medication; they chose to disregard the help they needed and did not care about other people's lives.

They felt compelled to do what they did, and when someone is compelled to do something so drastic as to take a life away, there is little that anyone, including college campuses, can do to prevent it.

Evan Powers is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at epowers@student.umass.edu

"The Daily Collegian
UMass Yak-Back!"

STAY TUNED TO UVC AND THE EDITORIAL/OPINION PAGE

FOR THE RECORD: An opinion piece by the Radical Student Union (RSU) that ran in yesterday's Collegian should have been run as a letter to the editor. The Collegian cannot verify certain claims of hatespeech and physical assault made by the RSU against the Republican Club, and the opinions of RSU members do not necessarily reflect those of The Collegian or its staff.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 5, 2008 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Five College festival highlights local filmakers

BY SHAYNA MURPHY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Despite heavy snowfall, the 14th Annual Five College Film & Video Festival was held as planned this past Friday. The festival, a collaborative effort sponsored by the Five College Film Council, is a competitive showing of films produced by students belonging to the area. At this year's festival, held at Smith College, over twenty student-produced films were shown. Entries ranged from narrative to animated, and were judged accordingly.

Since its inception in 1994, the festival has prided itself on the ingenuity of its participants. The venue challenges students to delve beneath the surface, exploring themes of diversity, identity and self-expression while dispersed through the medium of cinema. The festival also aspires to provide students with a community to meet and share their experiences, in the hopes that the community will not only coddle creativity, but drive it further.

As a condition of the entry requirements, each film contains the original work of currently enrolled and recently-graduated students from within the Five College area. Films surpassing the twenty minute time limit are used in excerpt if selected, while films within the time limit are shown in their entirety. Students are encouraged to submit up to two entries for potential admittance into the festival, for the cost of a small fee.

Each film is evaluated by a panel of student and faculty judges, each selected for their involvement in the Five College area. At the close of the evening, a winning film is selected from each category, and also, from each of the Five Colleges. A final, top prize of the evening is awarded to the best entry of the night.

Traditionally, the festival is conducted under the cooperation of a faculty advisor and a student director. Past pairings have alternated within the Five Colleges, depending on the hosting college. For this year's festival, student director Lizz Lyons, an undergraduate of Smith College, worked in tandem with Hampshire College professor Baba Hillman to arrange the festival's proceedings.

A few UMass entries were found littered amongst the festival's entrance categories, although none acquired the top prize of the night. Paula Lavalle premiered first for her "Untitled" animation short, while Alex Ezorsky-Lie's "Scratch of Death" rounded out a competitive race in the experimental category. Ben Leonberg was also present in the narrative race for his work on "Apples to Ice Cream."

Nathanial R. Brown's "Roustabout," a compelling documentary about the unsung heroes who make traveling carnival troupes possible, had the misfortune of skipping during its playback. Nevertheless, its brief showing made an impact on audience members, who clamored for its return.

While several of the entries were arresting, both visually and in narrative, few commanded as much attention as "In My Genes," a full-length documentary submission by Lupita Nyong'o. The eye-opening documentary lingered on the psychological repercussions of albinism in African communities. Nyong'o, a recent graduate of Hampshire College, was also awarded at last year's festival for her work on "Decolonizing the Mind."

Other notable entries included Margaret Piacenza's "One Day," the lone entry in the dance on camera category, and Dawna Sirard's "Neshomeleh," a tale of sweet love set to the grave. Both women attend Smith College.

The submissions were hardly trite, where at best they could be ranked as sophisticated works of introspection and intelligence. At worst, they could sometimes be a little heavy-handed. Each category was varied, yet a sense of macabre permeated the experimental. Even Alex-Davis Lawrence's slick mix-up of cartoon imagery, "Priming," was markedly morbid in direction, despite the seemingly innocuous inclusion of clips from Disney classics.

Current students interested in getting involved, either with the Festival or with the Five College Film community, will find things fairly accessible. All screening events sponsored by the Five College Film Council are free and open to the public, and occur on a rolling basis throughout the semester. For upcoming events, and also for details about the Five College Film & Video Festival, students are encouraged to visit www.fivecolleges.edu/sites/film or the Department of Interdisciplinary Film Studies in the Herter Annex for further information.

Shayna Murphy can be reached at skmurphy@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY SMITH.EDU

Students from the Five College area competed in a number of categories at the 14th annual Five College Film & Video Festival last Friday. Several current UMass students' original works were featured at the event.

Poor lyrics dampen CD

COURTESY TEAM LOVE RECORDS

Portland's A Weather's debut release "Cove" fails to leave a lasting impression. Troubled by bleak arrangements and a lack of variation, the album's lyrics can be described as "mind-numbing."

BY JOE STAHL
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Soft as the warm mist on the waters of Portland on a summer evening, A Weather integrates boy-girl vocals with tranquil sounds on their debut album, "Cove," released March 4 on Team Love Records.

The members of A Weather are relative newcomers to the music scene, with "Cove" being their first full-length album. Last year, the band did release a two-track E.P. which was also recorded through its current label. Despite their short repertoire, A Weather has shared the stage with Saddle Creek Records' heavyweight Bright Eyes and other notable bands in their hometown of Portland.

Aaron Gerber (lead vocals) and counterpart, Sarah Winchester (secondary vocals and percussion) serve as A Weather's primary contributors on the instrumentally-hushed album. Both Gerber and Winchester plant fragility in their hushed voices, while managing to keep vocal restraint. Gerber has a monotonous voice that is similar to Jimmy Tamborello of Dntel, while on the other side of the vocal paradigm, Winchester owns an emotive alto voice that is comparable to Stereolab's Laetitia Sadier.

As Gerber carries the harmonies on the nine-track LP, Winchester blends her voice exceptionally well with Gerber's. She softens his stagnant voice, elevating the overall product to a more dynamic and textured sound. Winchester's dulcet vocals gets ample exposure on "Cove," but it is unfortunate that the crooner was not featured on some ballads of her own.

Accompanying the soft vocals scattered throughout "Cove" is equally soft instrumentation. The organs, strings and percussion that comprise the majority of the music on this album are merely overtones for the most part. With their chosen style, the lyricism is extra articulated and warmly layered.

"Cove" is a sparse and uncomplicated effort with slow tempo melodies. The meandering guitars and minimal percussions (which only consist of Winchester using an upturned bass drum, a snare and a cymbal) on songs like the dark "Spiders, Snakes" and the enlightening highlight track, "It's Good To Know" are quietly reflective, which leaves between time for dreamy thoughts and imagery.

In "Hanging Towers of Baltimore," the band crafted a song that closely resembles the style of early Rilo Kiley, with the drums of Winchester and a twangy guitar carrying the tune. Here, the instruments play just as large a part as the singers. The instruments become more increasingly emphasized, but are ultimately still pinned down to prevent the track's quiet vocals being drowned out.

While listening to "Cove," a pronounced sense of anticipation builds throughout, leaving one yearning for something more daring or startling to arise. Unfortunately on "Cove," this is a rare find, which ultimately is A Weather's most glaring drawback. With alarming regularity, filler tracks on the album, like "Pilot's Arrow," are daunting with dull guitar riffs and snoozing refrains.

Ultimately, "Cove" is a safe album, troubled by its bleak arrangements to lack of variation. While "Cove" may be a pleasant listen for folk fans musically, teenage love songs about ultimatums like "Small Potato" never realize their potential, featuring mediocre lyrics like "If I can't have this forever I don't want it at all." A Weather's lyrics are often mind-numbing, which is detrimental on any album in the singer-songwriter genre.

A Weather sticks to a particular folk-pop inspired sound but happens to fall short of delivering anything life changing due to its uninspiring lyrics. The band may own its own unique style, but "Cove" is not a release that will be leaving memorable impressions.

Joe Stahl can be reached at jstahl@student.umass.edu.

"COVE"
A WEATHER
TEAM LOVE RECORDS
2/5

'Bash' brings dark humor to Mt. Holyoke's Rooke Theatre

BY DAN MCNAMARA
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

If you go to see Neil LaBute's "Bash" at Mt. Holyoke College this weekend expecting a safe and predictable play, prepare to be knocked out of your seat. "Bash" is not for the faint of heart, and is a presentation saturated with very dark subject matter.

"Bash" is a compilation of three separate one-act plays with similar themes. The first play is called "Iphigenia in Orem," and is a sixteen-page monologue performed by UMass student Bobby Ringuette. It takes place in a hotel room where he tells a tragic tale of family loss. Alone onstage, Ringuette delivers his dialogue directly to the audience.

When interviewed on the play's unique format, Ringuette noted "in any show, the audience is always part of it, because if it weren't for them there would not be a show. In this one, we are directly playing to them, letting the audience in on our secrets."

"Bash" is being presented by Annie Langer and Cassie Cushman as a senior thesis project and is being sponsored by the Mt. Holyoke faculty. Langer directs the production while Cushman stars. The other two roles are played by Ringuette and Amherst College student Taylor Downs.

The second piece, "A Gaggle of Saints," features Cushman and Downs as a couple giving two perspectives on an overnight trip to New York City. Similarly to the first act, the performers speak directly to the audience, as does Cushman in "Medea Redux," the play's third installment. She is in an interrogation room recounting a sad relationship that has shaped her life.

Each of the three scenes builds to a dark, twisted climax which aims to leave audience members awestruck. The secrets that the characters share with the audience make for uncomfortable, non-traditional conclusions. While there are certainly comedic moments, the humor can best be described as dark. "There is something lingering underneath all of these scenes," said Ringuette.

Neil LaBute is a director and writer of American films and plays. His first movie "In the Company of Men" (adapted from his play by the same title) received praise at several film festivals (including Sundance) in 1997. While studying at Brigham Young University, LaBute became a Mormon, a life occurrence that had a clear influence on "Bash." The characters in "Bash" are also Mormon, and, due to the controversial nature of the show, LaBute was disfellowshipped from the Church of Latter Day Saints.

"Bash" originally premiered on Broadway in 1999 and starred Ron Eldard in "Iphigenia in Orem" and Paul Rudd in "A Gaggle of Saints," with Calista Flockhart also in "Medea Redux."

"If you are someone who likes to be shocked, see this show," said Ringuette. "If you are someone who wants to see something dark, see this show."

This is an intense play, and the twisted characters presented in it certainly make for a captivating story. Each of them is extremely deep and interesting, and emotions will be running high.

"Bash" will be presented in the Rooke Theatre at Mt. Holyoke College from March 6-8 at 8 p.m. and on March 9 at 2 p.m. The cost of admission is $3 for students and $5 general admission. The show runs under 2 hours. To make reservations for the play, call 413-538-2406.

Dan McNamara can be reached at dmcnamar@student.umass.edu

"BASH"
ROOKE THEATRE AT MT. HOLYOKE COLLEGE
MARCH 6-8
$3 STUDENTS
$5 GENERAL

COURTESY RUBIE

Playwright Neil LaBute's "Bash" will be performed at the Rooke Theatre at Mount Holyoke College March 6-9. The play incorporates occasional laughs with rather dark subject matter.

Since the student strike last November,
10 elected students have been negotiating with the interim Chancellor and various administrators every week.
Last Friday, the student committee reached a tentative agreement with the administration
–the first of its kind since the Goodell Building Take Over in 1997.

YOU will have a chance to vote this Wed. and Thurs. to make this agreement official

WHAT DID WE WIN FROM THE GENERAL STUDENT STRIKE?

1. Over half a million dollar increase in financial aid
2. Official end to random, unwarranted police patrols in dormitories & an agreement to send an all-student email detailing students' rights
3. Community/Police Advisory Board to make the UMass Police Department more accountable to students and to support campus safety
4. 80% reduction of charges for AV equipment for student organizations
5. Student control of Student Union & Campus Center space through the CC/SU Commission
6. Support for a "Higher Education Lobby Day" this April
7. Amending the Picketing Code so that students cannot be expelled for assembling
8. A new Diversity Advisory Council to increase administrative accountability
9. Funding for graduate student fellowships & for TAs for diversity and/or community service learning courses
10. Commitment to review funding for Everywoman's Center, Stonewall Center and the ALANA Success Centers & to apply for federally-funded college pathway programs (such as Upward Bound)
11. Funding for community outreach and college access activities
12. Commitment to continued meetings between students & the administration - the first arrangement of its kind in recent history on any college campus

IF YOU WOULD LIKE TO SEE THE ADMINISTRATION IMPLEMENT THESE PROPOSALS, WE URGE YOU TO VOTE YES

TO THIS TENTATIVE AGREEMENT AS PART OF THE SGA ELECTIONS

THIS WEDNESDAY 3/5 AND THURSDAY 3/6

The polls will be open from 10am – 2pm and 5pm – 8pm in all DCs and the Campus Center Concourse. All undergraduates and graduates can vote –just show your student ID.

This agreement is a victory for us all, and we urge you to vote YES. Though it does not address all the strike demands, those that we have won are significant and in some cases unprecedented. We invite you continue to mobilize with us to meet the remainder of the demands.

UNITED STUDENT ACTION
"From the folks who brought you the UMass Strike"

UNITEDSTUDENTACTION.ORG

Harris's face off in A-10

M. BASKETBALL from page 10

Meanwhile, Senior Night could be extra special for Gary Forbes, who needs six points to reach 1,000 for his career. Since the captain leads the league in scoring (20.1 points per game), there's a good chance he will reach the milestone against the Explorers.

But the Minutemen need Forbes' scoring production. Though sophomore shooting guard Ricky Harris ranks sixth in the A-10 in scoring, Harris has experienced periods of inconsistency this season.

Tonight's game will also be special Harris, as he's facing a player of similar style and namesake that he also played back in high school in Darnell Harris.

Similar to Ricky, Darnell ranks among the top scorers in the league. However, La Salle's Harris does most of his damage from beyond the arc. The senior has made far-and-away the most 3-pointers of anyone in the A-10. Yet he also ranks second in 3-point percentage, as he's connected on 49 percent of his attempts this season.

"They are two very good two guards and they'll be matched-up at times," Ford said. "Darnell is a very good veteran basketball player."

Tonight's contest will also have significant implications in the conference standings. UMass still has a chance to earn the second seed for the A-10 tournament. However, that scenario requires the Minutemen to win their final two regular season games and for Temple (16-12, 9-5 A-10) to lose its final two.

As long as the Maroon and White finish among the top four, the team will earn a bye into the quarterfinals of the tournament.

Michael King can be reached at mking@dailycollegian.com.

Senior Night at Mullins Center

Nana Ampim	Four-year walk-on ... seen three minutes this year
Etienne Brower	Averaging 12.8 points and 6.6 rebounds this season
Gary Forbes	Leads team in points and rebounds (20.1 and 7.9)
Dante Milligan	Tied for team-lead with 45 blocked shots
Matt Pennie	Graduate student who has played three minutes this season

Junior can help offense thrive

PASQUANTONIO from page 10

help the Minutewomen, as she's emerged as the fourth scoring threat behind McCormick, senior captain Kathleen Typadis and freshman attack Jackie Lyons.

Venechanos knows that Pasquantonio can split defenders and score, especially around the eight-meter line, but more often than not, she will use Pasquantonio to feed or spell the aforementioned attacks during the game.

Pasquantonio coming off the bench is not because she is an inferior player. In terms of need, she is better suited to come off the bench and gain experience while working with different units.

The Minutewomen are a young team right now, and one of the biggest issues they're dealing with is team chemistry. A freshman is seeing significant time at every position and the Maroon and White need time to get everything to click.

Venechanos feels that Pasquantonio is more suited for the transition game, as opposed to starting the action.

"We think she does well coming out of some transition situations and some set [plays]," Venechanos said. "That's her strength right now. When she's in there at attack, we think that we're pretty dynamic and multi-dimensional."

Pasquantonio is a physical player who is elusive and quick. She is an important role player on the team and Venechanos is grooming many other players to play such roles as well.

Pasquantonio is a well-rounded player that makes her perfect for the utility role that she plays on the team.

She will have to work on cutting down her turnovers, but another person with many turnovers is the team's leading-scorer, McCormick. Both are intense players who have their share of yellow cards.

Venechanos is an offensive-minded coach and preaches moving the ball around in order to create openings, instead of running over opposing defenders. Pasquantonio is a great player in this style of offense because she is very selfless and will find her teammates instead of attacking the goal.

Pasquantonio will put her skills to use today during the team's first away game against Dartmouth.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu.

Merritt Cosgrove is tied for fourth on the team with three goals this season, including one in the team's recent loss to Harvard.

HOCKEY EAST STANDINGS

	Hockey East				Overall
Team	W	L	T	Pts.	W	L	T
1 New Hampshire	18	4	3	39	22	7	3
2 Boston University	13	9	3	29	15	15	4
Vermont	12	8	5	29	13	12	7
4 Providence	11	9	5	27	14	13	5
Boston College	10	8	7	27	16	10	8
6 UMass Lowell	10	11	4	24	15	13	4
Northeastern	11	12	2	24	14	15	3
8 Massachusetts	7	13	5	19	12	14	6
9 Maine	7	15	3	17	11	18	3
10 Merrimack	6	16	3	15	12	16	4

Big Green to provide test

W. LACROSSE from page 10

"Looking from the last four games we have a lot to improve on, and that's a good thing," said Venechanos. "We have been doing the same things inconsistently."

The Maroon and White have had a tough early schedule, but it has helped them improve and know what they need to work on. The Minutewomen have learned their roles on and off the field and are growing with their team and their system.

"Playing weaker competition [early on] would have been like fool's gold on how we're doing," said Venechanos.

The losses have had "bright spots," according to Venechanos. The Minutewomen have learned a lot about themselves since the start of the season. They have been getting good opportunities and learning from the mistakes they have been making. In the Harvard game they got over 40 shots, which is one of the only times in program history.

They have had chances to put themselves in good positions, but other times hav made bad decisions, according to Venechanos. They need to continue taking care of the ball, taking good shots and making good decisions while remaining disciplined.

Lately, the Minutewomen have had trouble being a little too aggressive and being called for fouls, causing them to play down a player for 10 minutes last Saturday. During practices they have worked on how to control themselves a little better.

"I like us being aggressive; unfortunately, when you play aggressive, there are tendencies to foul," said Venechanos.

They are going into today's game knowing they need to play to their own strengths and weaknesses instead of the other way around. Combining all of this, they are hoping to have better success with Dartmouth than they have in the past.

"We're just happy to have another game to play UMass lacrosse," said Venechanos.

Melissa Turtinen can be reached at mturtine@student.umass.edu.

Radja honored as best player

HOCKEY EAST from page 10

faced off against Massachusetts (12-14-6, 7-13-5 Hockey East) in a home-and-home series.

Friday night BU goaltender Brett Bennett stopped all 20 shots that he faced in a 3-0 win. Terrier center Nick Bonino tallied three points which included two third period goals, his 12th and 13th of the season.

Saturday's contest was a different story. The Minutemen unloaded on BU, beating them 5-1. UMass center Cory Quirk scored the first and third UMass goals and posted an overall three-point effort. Minuteman goalie Paul Dainton stopped 27 shots to improve his record to 10-12-6.

Monthly honors

UNH senior forward Matt Radja received CCM/RBK Hockey Player of the Month honors.

In UNH's eight games of that month, in which they went 7-0-1, Radja scored at least one point in all eight and scored at least two points or more in five. His totals for the month of February were five goals and 11 assists. He averaged two points per game.

This month's ITECH Goaltender of the Month award goes to another Wildcat, senior Kevin Regan. In February, Regan posted 1.24 goals against average and a .962 save percentage. On Feb. 22 against BC, Regan stopped a career-high 52 shots in a 1-1 tie against Providence. In seven of the eight starts he made at least 25 saves, while posting a 7-0-1 record for the month.

Colin Wilson won the Rookie of the Month honor. Wilson is a forward for BU and posted a 10-point month, scoring five goals and five assists. He scored two game-winning goals: one against Maine in overtime and the other coming against Northeastern. Wilson also had two three-point outings, one coming against NU in the Beanpot consolation game.

The Terriers posted an 8-1-0 record for the month of February and are currently tied with Vermont for second place in Hockey East.

Notes

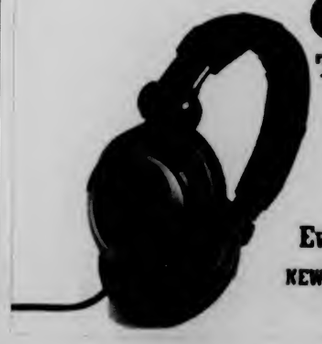
This weekend is the last scheduled week for games before the Hockey East Tournament starts on March 13.

The NCAA Tournament starts on March 28 in four regional locations before moving to the Pepsi Center in Denver, Colo. for the Frozen Four on April 12th and 14th.

Ryan Fleming can be reached at rfleming@student.umass.edu.

Important Announcement
Registration for Spring 2008

The Writing Program Placement Test



will be offered on:

Thursday, March 6 at 7 p.m. in Bartlett 202

You must take this exam to qualify for enrollment in EnglWrit112 (College Writing)

This test may be taken only once.

Students do not need to register for the test.

Check Out
The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Sports Podcasts
www.dailycollegian.com
Every Wednesday there will be new UMass Men's Basketball and Hockey Podcasts

Seven O's
Every Wednesday
Karaoke
* * * * * *
Live Band
Saturday, 3/8/08
Evolution

Looking for exposure? Student Bands welcome to play at Seven O's
Looking for a place to have a private event/party?
Call 413-530-6996
Route 116, 330 Amherst Rd Sunderland, MA 01375 (413) 665-6766
3 PM to 1 AM M-F
1 PM to 1 AM Sat&Sun
Next To Cliffside Apts.

Guacamole socks.

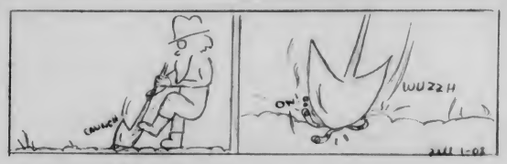
	9
6		7	4	1
			9		6		4
5			1	9	2	3
	2					7
		8	7	5	3			4
	1		5		4
				6	1	9		2
							8

ACROSS
1 "__ Gun for Hire"
5 Bucolic
10 Gives it in neutral
14 Coarse file
15 Ham it up
16 COO, for one
17 First lady of scat
18 Sudden flow
19 Mandlikova of tennis
20 Reluctant
22 Spoil
23 Hebrew month
24 Perceives
26 Allied by kinship
28 __ Ani
30 Patriotic org
31 More horrifying
38 Sacred song
40 Retirees' org
41 Church leader
43 Inter __ (among others)
44 Skirt fold
48 Woman behind the counter
49 Tuck's partner
50 Draw breath
51 Docs
55 Revealing
60 Katmandu's place
61 That woman
63 Oakland team
64 Arcturus or Rigel
65 Warren and Scruggs
67 PC command
68 Transmit
69 Band together
70 Friend's address
71 Memorable times
72 Splits apart
73 Classify

DOWN
1 Tire feature
2 Divide in two
3 Small landmass
4 Bowler's conversion
5 Populate again
6 Ref's cohort
7 Wander
8 __ of roses
9 Looked with lust
10 Dry run
11 Praise
12 Locale
13 Burn with steam
21 Ella's forte
25 Gets dirty
27 Once around the track
29 Good Conduct, for one
31 Disparity
32 Actor Linden
33 Exist
34 Men from Madrid
35 Kindled again
37 In the style of
38 Cover
39 Has permission to
42 Setbacks
45 __-tac-toe
47 Actress Ward
49 Affected person
51 Billiards shot
52 Organic compound
53 Ross or Rigg
54 Alan Ladd film
56 Itemizations
57 Pocatello's place
58 Word of defiance
59 Welcome
62 Actress Moran
66 Inc. in Great Britain

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Caption Contest!

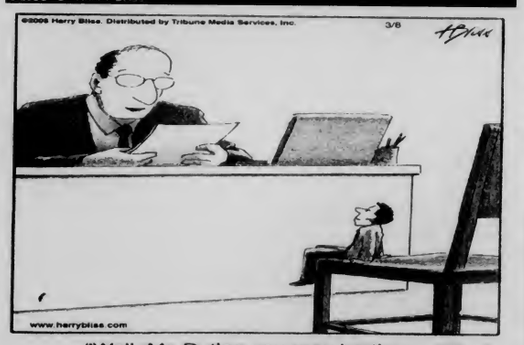


Submit captions and see the picture in color at:
www.dailycollegian.com/caption
This week's winner gets an actual prize: two movie passes

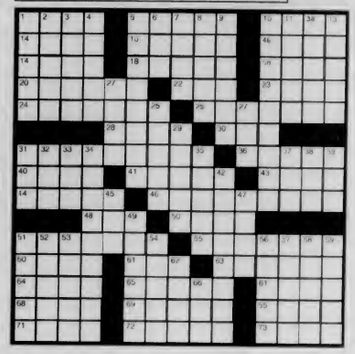
Quote of the Day

"Sometimes the only sane answer to an insane world is insanity."

-David Duchovny as "Fox Mulder"



Ecology By Jen Fill



Wondermark By David Malki!

Bliss By Harry Bliss

"Well, Mr. Butler, you may be tiny, but you sure have been busy."

Continuing & Professional Education
UMassAmherstOutreach
Summer Session 2008
Don't Wait- Jump Start Your Career This Summer
Session I June 2 - July 10
Session II July 14 - Aug 20
Online Gen Ed's Small Classes Great Faculty
PLAN AHEAD!
UMassULearn.net

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Don't date people who could be mistaken for your sibling.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
You must be as the whipped cream perched atop a cauldron of hot chocolate; fluffy, delicious and always ready to melt.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Before bed, add closure to your day by reading yourself a bedtime story and drinking a bottle of Nyquil.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Your hands are freakishly strong. Go into business as a pickle jar opener for old arthritic folks.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Plan a camping trip with your friends. You might not be outdoorsy, but at least you'll all be together when bears eat you.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
There is no shame in gently asking your friend to cut the crusts off your sandwich. Crust is yucky.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
You have isolated the perfect position on the spectrum ranging from youthful exuberance to philosophical wisdom.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Straight up, Fall Out Boy is catchier than the Bubonic Plague. When you can admit that, you will find peace.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
If people think you're younger than you are, try growing a beard. No one cares about the age of a bearded woman.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
She's a rebound girl and you're Dennis Rodman. Start crossdressing and go for it.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Playing the pity card might get you swiped into the DC, but it's not going to get you laid.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
To be a true player, replace your entire skeletal structure with platinum. You'll be blinging internally, and that's what matters.

Make way for ducklings... as well as comics.

comics@dailycollegian.com

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Announcements

Montreal Weekend
From $99 Complete.
Best Hotels.
Best Prices.
montrealexpress.net
781-979-9001

Apt. for rent

Center of Town 1,2,3 bedrooms. NOW SHOWING for June and Sept. NO FEES. Schedule a showing 253-7879 view apts. at www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

Apt 4 rent

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

Hobart Condos 3 Bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, phone (internet access), in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for June and September. No FEES. 253-7879 www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

Employment

ACCOUNTANT REPRESENTATIVE, SALES REPRESENTATIVE, STORE KEEPER, CLERK AND SECRETARY NEEDED: Requirement(Computer Literate, Along with CV.) for more information write us at: Gina Shoes Limited Email: gina.limited@gmail.com

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

Employment

Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

Services

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906,1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthright.org.

Concerned About Your Eating?
Do you eat too little? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic, 577-5101

Services

TAPESTRY HEALTH providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling &rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable, Safe. 413-548-9992. 27 Pray St. Amherst. www.tapestryhealth.org

School a Pain in your eyes?
Headache? Itchy eyes? Trouble reading? An eye exam can be the first step toward relief. Call Eye Care Services at UHS, 577-5383, to learn more.

Travel

Montreal Weekend
From $99 Complete.
Best Hotels.
Best Prices.
montrealexpress.net
781-979-9001

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 5, 2008 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Ricky Harris and the Minutemen will try to improve their NCAA Tournament chances when they host La Salle tonight at the Mullins Center. Harris is second on the team with 17.9 points per game.

UMass hosts La Salle

Win would help Minutemen's chances at NCAA tourney bid

By Michael King
Collegian Staff

Last season the Massachusetts men's basketball team sent its seniors out in a unique style. The Minutemen routed La Salle by 39 points in their last home game, and the emphatic victory put the team within one win of clinching a share of the regular season Atlantic 10 title in 2007-08.

Additionally, then-senior forward Stephane Lasme became the third player in NCAA history to register four triple-doubles in a single season, with a 17-point, 10-rebound and 10-block performance.

Lasme was on campus yesterday afternoon and is expected to make a Senior Night appearance.

UMass coach Travis Ford hopes for a similar Senior Night performance from his upperclassmen this time around, but the Minutemen (19-9, 8-6 Atlantic 10) are not taking the Explorers (14-14, 8-6 A-10) lightly in tonight's matchup at the Mullins Center.

"They're a young team led by a senior, which is a decent scenario," Ford said. "But their younger guys have gotten better and better, and that's the reason for their success. It's a true case of just gaining experience."

The Explorers feature a roster laden with underclassmen. The inherent inexperience that comes with coaching young players translated into a second-to-last predicted order of finish in the preseason coach's poll.

Like many of its Atlantic 10 opponents, La Salle has surprised many in the league with its current tied-for-third standing. The Explorers stumbled through their non-conference schedule, but managed to improve during A-10 play.

In fact, La Salle has played spoiler in the A-10 this year, notching victories over then-NCAA tournament hopefuls Dayton, Duquesne, Rhode Island and Saint Joseph's. Yet the Explorers have little chance to receiving an at-large bid to the tournament.

A continual theme of the season for the Minutemen has been the rebounding battle. La Salle is one of the better rebounding teams in the league, especially on the offensive glass. At times, the Minutemen have struggled to hold their own in the paint, as centers Dante Milligan and Luke Bonner have experienced bouts of foul trouble throughout the season.

"We need to make sure we do our job on the glass," Ford said. "Obviously we want our rebounding to ignite our fast break – you can't get out on the break unless you rebound. It's something that we've gotten better at, but it's also been a weakness at times. If we don't defensive rebound, I don't think we have a chance to win."

Since both teams like to play at a fast pace, it will be junior point guard Chris Lowe's responsibility to set the tempo for the Minutemen. The Maroon and White excel at turning an opponent's missed opportunity into an easy basket at the other end of the court.

See M. BASKETBALL on page 8

Minutewomen head to N.H.

Dartmouth nationally ranked

By Melissa Turtinen
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's lacrosse team will play No. 13 Dartmouth this afternoon in Hanover, N.H., for its first away game of the season.

The first game on the road isn't fazing the Minutewomen. They were fortunate enough to have games on the road last fall and also traveled to Florida last month. They are excited to have the opportunity to play – they don't care where, according to UMass coach Alexis Venechanos.

Today's game against Dartmouth (2-1) is another addition to UMass's difficult schedule. Last year the Minutewomen lost to the Big Green, 11-5. In the all-time series Dartmouth is up, with a record of 19-8. The last time the Minutewomen defeated the Big Green was in 1998 – since then they have had 11 straight losses.

"Dartmouth is one of the top teams in the area, if not the top," said Venechanos. "We're looking forward to that challenge, and as a team, we rise to challenges."

Dartmouth has a strong defense, disciplined team on attack and is very aggressive with the ball. They are very successful when it comes to working well together as a team, and that will make the game even more difficult for the Minutewomen.

UMass (1-3) has been struggling getting wins on the board. They are currently stuck in a three-game losing streak. Most recently was a 20-11 loss to Harvard on Saturday. Although the Minutewomen were unable to beat the Crimson, they did outshoot them, 41-32.

See W. LACROSSE on page 8

Kaylin McCormick leads the Minutewomen with 10 goals. UMass will try and snap its three-game losing streak against Dartmouth.

Pasquantonio bench weapon

Junior provides her team with multiple skill sets on the field

By Mike Gillmeister
Collegian Staff

For someone who played in just 14 games for the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team coming into this season, junior attack Julie Pasquantonio is quietly emerging as a weapon off the bench for UMass coach Alexis Venechanos.

Pasquantonio is a unique player. She is a hybrid attack that can play on draw units, attack units and defensive units.

In lacrosse, there are no "starters," there are lineups that are used for different situations. According to Venechanos, Pasquantonio is useful at reading the offense from behind the goal. She also has one of the best sticks on the team; Pasquantonio is second on the team to junior attack Kaytlin McCormick (15) in shots-on-goal with 11.

Her one assist is not a telling statistic because it is early in the season. Venechanos believes Pasquantonio is one of the team's best players on the ball.

"Certain teams need certain lifts," Venechanos said of Pasquantonio's ability to find open teammates on the field. "She moves the ball well and a lot of the things that she does are very important and vital to our team's success and we've been very pleased with her stepping up to that role."

Pasquantonio hasn't reached the sort of notoriety to make opposing teams plan for her, but this can only

See PASQUANTONIO on page 8

Boston University goaltender Brett Bennett holds a 13-9-3 record this season. The Terriers are currently tied for second place in Hockey East with Vermont.

UNH remains atop Hockey East; PC moves up, BC down

Wildcats lead conference by 10 points

By Ryan Fleming
Collegian Staff

Tuesday afternoon, the latest USCHO.com/CSTV Division I Men's Hockey Poll was released.

The recent poll includes four Hockey East teams in the Top 20.

At the No. 3 spot stands UNH (22-7-3, 18-4-3 Hockey East). Last week UNH played conference rival Merrimack (12-16-4, 6-16-3 Hockey East) in a home-and-home series.

The Wildcats hosted the Warriors in the first game and escaped, 2-1. Defenseman Craig Switzer tallied two points (goal, assist) in a winning effort.

In Saturday night's game, UNH and Merrimack skated to a 1-1 tie before a crowd of 3,000.

UNH also received one first-place vote.

Boston College (16-10-8, 10-8-7 Hockey East) fell two spots in this week's poll to No. 10. This past weekend in a home-and-home series against Hockey East opponent Providence (14-13-5, 11-9-5 Hockey East), the Eagles tied one game and lost the other.

Hockey East

In Friday night's game in Boston, the Friars made the most of their limited opportunities, scoring twice quickly in the first and holding BC off late to preserve the 3-2 victory. Providence left winger Jordan Kremyx scored twice in the winning effort.

The two teams skated to a 2-2 tie in Saturday's contest.

Providence moved up two spots from last week's poll to No. 17.

Boston University (15-15-4, 13-9-3 Hockey East) remained at No. 16 in the polls.

This past weekend the Terriers

See HOCKEY EAST on page 8

UM must win away from home

Dacko's team struggles when not playing at Mullins Center

By Mike Connors
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's basketball team won't be on the road in the first game of the Atlantic 10 Tournament at the Saint Joseph's Alumni Memorial Fieldhouse in Philadelphia – however, they also won't be playing at home.

UMass W. Hoops

The Minutewomen (13-16, 5-9 A-10) enjoyed a successful regular season at the Mullins Center, finishing 11-3. When they played away from home, it was an entirely different story.

UMass won two games in 15 attempts away from home. The two wins came against Wagner and La Salle, the former finished with a 7-22 record while the latter failed to qualify for the A-10 Tournament.

One thing working in the favor of UMass is a familiarity with its first round opponent. The Minutewomen defeated Dayton, 56-46, at the Mullins Center on Feb. 23, behind 23 points and 10 rebounds from Kate Mills.

The Dayton players couldn't match the size of UMass and if the Minutewomen can get the ball in the post to Mills, they'll have a good chance to replicate the success of their first victory over the Flyers.

Teya Wright could also play an important factor in the game. She recorded seven rebounds in the first meeting and should receive plenty of open looks down low, since Dayton will likely make another player besides Mills beat them.

Assists important

Though struggling with turnovers this season, the Minutewomen have excelled when sharing the ball.

The team's turnovers have been consistently high this season but when the Minutewomen share the ball they have the ability to make up for some of these miscues.

In its regular-season finale loss against Temple, UMass assisted on 11 baskets while turning the ball over 13 times. It will be vital that the Minutewomen have a better assist-to-turnover ratio if they hope to make a deep run in the conference tournament.

A first-round victory against Dayton would set up a rematch against Charlotte. The Minutewomen fell to the 49ers, 53-44, on Jan. 15.

One key factor in the game was turnovers. UMass turned the ball over 28 times while assisting on 11 baskets.

Mills' block record

The forward had eight blocks against St. Bonaventure one week ago, giving her 189 for her career. The previous block record at UMass was set by Melissa Gurule during the 1992/93 season.

Mills is third in the conference with an average of 17.4 points per game and her 6.9 rebounds per contest rank ninth in the A-10. Mills is also fifth in field goal percentage, second in free-throw percentage and third in blocks a game.

Mike Connors can be reached at mjconnor@student.umass.edu.

Teya Wright and the Minutewomen will look to defeat Dayton for the second time this season when they take on the Flyers in the first round of the Atlantic 10 Tournament in Philadelphia.

INSIDE: LEWIS BLACK GOES BACK TO HIS 'ROOTS' | PAGE 5

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

MOSTLY SUNNY : HI: 51 LO: 27 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM THURSDAY, MARCH 6, 2008

SGA resolves to fix campus roads

By Mike Fox
Collegian Staff

The Student Senate voted to pass a resolution asking the administration to fix the many pot holes plaguing the University of Massachusetts Amherst campus last night.

The measure was first proposed by Senators Derek Khanna and Libby Protzman during last weeks meeting, but Speaker of the Senate Carla Dominguez tabled the motion due to the wording of the resolution.

Khanna and Protzman are running for SGA president and student trustee respectively.

Patrick Daly, Director of the UMass physical plant explained the condition of the roads during a presentation before the entire senate.

According to Daly, potholes are a natural part of winter and that the paving plants for the roads are closed from November to April.

In April, the physical plant plans to repave parts of campus. According to Daly, the same crew that fills in pot holes plows snow adding a level of difficulty to the process, and that the construction traffic on campus presents a challenge in maintaining the roads.

According to Daly, all of the roads would be repaired by commencement.

Commuter Area Senator Jordan Stein also spoke in front of the senate stating the danger that the potholes posed to commuters on bicycles. According to Stein, the danger posed to road bikers is much greater than that posed to mountain bikers.

"While some scoffed and laughed at the proposal, what was accomplished tonight by introducing Mr. Daly and drafting a resolution was essential," said Protzman. "Derek and I took the initiative to keep our roads safe."

The resolution will now be brought to the Chancellor and Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs at the recommendation of the Student Government Association. However, the resolution is not legally binding.

Mike Fox can be reached at mgfox@student.umass.edu.

The Undergraduate Student Senate voted to pass a resolution proposed by Derek Khanna and Libby Protzman asking the administration to repair potholes across campus.

UM student under arrest

Seth D. Steinberg, 20, of 171 East 84th Street New York, NY, was arrested early Tuesday morning at the Cumberland Farms located at 21 Montague Road.

Steinberg, a student at the University of Massachusetts has been charged with unarmed robbery, larceny, intimidation of a witness, and assault & battery.

The investigation is ongoing.

At 2:41 A.M. on Tuesday March 5, Amherst police responded to a 911 call from a Cumberland Farms clerk who said the store was being robbed.

Steinberg, a former employee of Cumberland Farms, attempted to hide his identity by tying a white T-shirt over his head. The clerk, a male whose name has not been released, reportedly walked to the back of the store and caught Steinberg taking money out of the store's safe.

Steinberg attempted to run out of the store and a physical fight ensued. During the fight, the suspect attempted to swipe the clerk's cell phone out of his hands which resulted in an intimidation charge. Neither the clerk nor Steinberg were injured.

Police were able to recover the stolen money stuffed into Steinberg's shirt and pants. The amount of money has not been disclosed, but is confirmed to be more than $250.

Lucas Correia

North Pleasant St. due for renovation

By Erik Taber
Collegian Staff

The Faculty Senate of the University of Massachusetts paved the way to the future of the North Pleasant Street corridor during last Thursday's meeting.

The Senate hoped to assemble a broad array of perspectives and hear a number of different voices during the discussion.

The area of interest runs alongside a town-owned road, which bisects the campus and acts as a major conduit for vehicular and pedestrian travel through campus.

The University is currently constructing the Integrated Science Building on one end of North Pleasant St. and has just recently finished the studio art building on the other.

According to Ernest May, the senate's secretary, questions have arisen from constituencies regarding how to coordinate the area visually and functionally in ways that enhance public safety and are responsible to the environment.

"It's an opportunity for the campus planners to put their ideas out in public and to get a response from the community," said Ernest May. "And the community has some pretty diverse interests; we are looking at the aesthetics of the area, its functionality, the sometimes conflicting needs of pedestrians and vehicles, how development affects the campus as an arboretum, issues of historic preservation, budget constraints, being 'green', and the possibility of developing an 'alumni walk' through the area."

"Obviously not all of these interests will be fully served, but everyone needs to be heard. This is the administration's project; the senate is just the advisory, but by getting everyone together, we hope to balance out these considerations."

Jim Cahill, director of Facilities Planning, and Patrick Daly, director of Physical Plant, presented the issues and current plans for the street. Respondents included Barbara O'Connor, Chief of Police (public safety); Bryan Harvey, associate provost for Academic Planning and Assessment; W. Brian O'Connor, head of biology, who has an office along the corridor; Jack Ahern, professor of Landscape Architecture and Regional Planning; and Stephen Schreiber, program director of Art and Design. Roger Rideout, chair of the Campus Physical Planning Committee, was the moderator for the discussion.

Erik Taber can be reached at etaber@student.umass.edu.

Observers sought for student assemblies

Faculty needed for impartial witnesses during campus events

By Kristen Healy
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts has asked the Ombuds Office to make a list of faculty willing to volunteer time as impartial observers at on campus events with police present.

These observers are not a new addition to UMass protocol; the Ombuds Office has been building a list of observers for five years. Before the Ombuds Office took on the responsibility, another office on campus handled the observers.

According to ombudsperson, Catherine Porter, the purpose of the observers is to act as an impartial third-party in the case that an incident should occur involving the police and students interacting.

"In no case would an observer participate in any part of the activity," said Porter. "This system of observers is in place to assure fairness and accuracy in reporting what transpired."

In essence, the role of the observer would be to stand quietly at the event and in no way intervene with the situation.

"It seems that police word often has more power over students' when it comes to explaining the details of an incident, and therefore having an impartial person recall the details would provide equality to both the students and the police officers," said sophomore Nicole Bowker-Kelly.

The recent student strike is an example of an event where observers were present due to the fact that so many students were involved and there was the potential for interaction among police and students.

The position is on a volunteer basis by faculty and staff and is not a requirement of their position within the University.

Speaking about the position in past experience, Porter said, "I believe we served the purpose for which we were intended, to assure that neither the students nor the police were falsely accused of violating each others rights. Our role is to observe and should something occur, we would report what we saw and heard. Essentially, we are there to see that the record of an event is accurate."

Porter is confident that this system allows for more equal representation of both police and student perspectives. According to her, in the case of disruption an observer would be able to assure that either side did not make false claims regarding conduct.

Kristen Healy can be reached at student.umass.edu.

The Ombuds office is asking for faculty to serve as third-party observers to ensure equal representation of police and student perspectives.

Minutemen roll over Explorers on Senior Night

Lowe, Forbes shine for UMass in win

By Michael King
Collegian Staff

With the Massachusetts men's basketball team's rout of La Salle nearly complete, UMass coach Travis Ford took senior forward Gary Forbes out of the game for a standing ovation in his last game at the Mullins Center.

UMass	100
La Salle	63

Forbes capped his UMass career at home with a 26-point, 11-rebound performance. He also scored his 1,000th point as a member of the Maroon and White in the first half.

For the final two minutes, UMass's younger players finished a 37-point domination of the Explorers on Senior Night for a 100-63 victory.

"I didn't see that coming," Ford admitted after the game. "We played hard and made plays for ourselves from steals, rebounds and loose balls – we didn't sit back. We received great play from all of our seniors."

But it was junior point guard Chris Lowe who overshadowed each of his senior teammates. The junior registered the sixth triple-double in UMass history with 14 points, 14 assists and 10 rebounds. Lowe became the third player in school history to achieve the accomplishment after Stephane Lasme and Al Skinner.

"Chris Lowe's play is contagious," Ford said. "When you're passing the basketball and creating open shots, everyone else wants to be a part of it. He played phenomenal basketball tonight."

See BASKETBALL on page 8

Gary Forbes drives to the basket during last night's 100-63 win over La Salle. Forbes led all scorers with 26 points on Senior Night.

Similarities nothing new for swingmen

By Eli Rosenswaike
Collegian Staff

Ricky Harris practically dared Darnell Harris to take it.

Darnell, La Salle's version of a 6-foot-1, 3-point-shooting swingman from Baltimore, Md., was about 40 feet from the basket – with his feet nearly on the "U" in the UMass logo at center court.

Having swished his two previous long-range shots, Darnell launched the shot over Ricky – a 6-foot-2 shooting guard from Baltimore, who just happens to be a good 3-point shooter in his own right – just as he had the two times before. The result this time was another perfect swish, and an Atlantic 10 tying record with 331 career 3-pointers.

"Man, he can shoot the ball," Ricky said after the game.

"I didn't think he was going to shoot it. I was right in his face, hands up, everything. Oh, man."

You can be sure Darnell will mention that shot to his old high school buddy next time they talk, but it will be Ricky that gets the last laugh. Darnell ended his night with 13 points and four made 3-pointers, but Ricky (21 points, five 3-pointers) and the Minutemen surpassed Darnell's totals, and La Salle's.

Darnell was frustrated with his team's performance, but was quick to acknowledge how well Ricky played after the game.

"Ricky is definitely coming a long way. He definitely worked on his game and got better," Darnell said. "I think he has a real [versatile] game; he can take it to the

See BASKETBALL on page 8

Honors program presents challenge

By Sara Afzal
Collegian Staff

At the cost of a heavy class workload students joining Commonwealth College, the University's honors program have the opportunity to engross themselves in their undergraduate academics and graduate with honors.

According to Cory Pols, Director of Advising and Student Programs, "It is best to join if a student is interested in the intrinsic awards of the research, learning, and camaraderie with other students and faculty who are interested in academics."

The honors credit requirements deter some students from joining Commonwealth College.

The requirements range from taking honors general education classes, three levels of the Dean's Book course, other honors courses and maintaining a minimum grade

See HONORS on page 3

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 90
113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Exter
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Michael Sarkes
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Ryan McAskill
COPIES EDITOR Adam Szajgin
EDITORIAL EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Rice
FEATURES EDITOR Dave Humphreys
PHOTO EDITOR Michael Phillis
WEB EDITOR James Hale
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Szymczak
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Marsea Whooten
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Stephanie McPherson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Skye McIntyre
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Brian Wood
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Garber
ASSISTANT NEWS Michael King
ASSISTANT NEWS Kate Olesin
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Seabury
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Connors
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Meloni
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenswaike
ASSISTANT PHOTO Brian Tedder
ARTS WEB EDITOR Michelle Abbasciano
EDITORIAL WEB EDITOR Leil Walcutt
NEWS WEB EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS WEB EDITOR Steve Gaines

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SCHEDULE. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SCRAPS IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1936. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL AFTERNOONS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 5:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Nicholas Belanger

COPY EDITOR
Sarah Belanger

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Michael Sarkes

WEB EDITOR
Michelle Abbasciano

Across the Nation Around the World

Upcoming steam plant tests to leave campus in the dark

BY MICHAEL KING
COLLEGIAN STAFF

As a part of the testing process for its new central heating plant, the University of Massachusetts will experience power outages later this month when the campus is vacated for spring break.

"We're nearing the end of the construction period," said Jim Cahill, Facilities and Campus Planning (F&CP) director. "We're currently involved in the commissioning of the plant, which involved starting up and testing the systems.

The first round of tests will take place on March 15, the official beginning of spring break. The campus will experience a 12-hour period of intermittent power outages from 7 p.m. to 7 a.m. the next morning.

"All of the machinery is brand new and it needs to go through a lengthy shakedown process to make sure it all works," said Jim Hunt, F&CP communications director.

However, if the first round of testing is inconclusive, another series of tests will be required. These power outages would take place overnight from Monday March 17 to the early morning hours of March 18.

"It's a complicated process since we have to run smaller tests before we can test the entire system," Cahill said. "We have to plan shutdowns on the campus well ahead of time, before we even know if the equipment will perform close to as expected."

The UMass Office of Facilities and Campus Planning outlined the details of the planned power outages in a mass e-mail message to students, faculty and staff over the weekend.

Though the student body will not be on campus during the scheduled outages, the temporary loss of electricity will still effect some departments and offices. For example, research and laboratory equipment, freezers and computer servers will be affected.

One of the goals of the testing process is verify that the facility can shed electric loads that are produced instantaneously if the gas turbine generators were to shut down. Otherwise a power outage could leave the campus powerless.

MICHAEL PHILLIS/COLLEGIAN
During a 12-hour period on March 15 Facilities and Campus Planning will test the machinery inside the new campus steam plant.

Tests of the of the plant's heat production capabilities began several weeks ago and have been characterized by a loud whistling noise and perpetual ejection of steam into the atmosphere.

Barring any significant snags during the testing phase and approval from environmental officials, the new plant should take over production shortly after commencement.

"We didn't count on using the plant this heating season," Cahill said. "Hopefully some time this summer we'll have it up and running."

But before that can happen, the contractor needs to run the plant for 30 days as a part of a reliability test. If the facility performs to expectations, the University will take over operations at the end of the period.

The $50 million facility will handle all of the campus' steam heating needs, as well as the vast majority of the University's electricity needs.

Part of the project will allow the campus to demolish the existing plant, currently located near the Campus Center parking garage.

"That will be a lengthy process. We want to be able to recycle as many materials as possible," Hunt said. "They are a few plans floating out there, but none of them have any more credence than any other. Whatever it becomes, it will look a lot better than it does now."

Some of the proposed ideas include making the area into a green space, expanding the parking garage or constructing an academic building, according to Cahill.

But both of the processes are far enough down the road that the campus does not have a current timeline for this portion of the project.

Hunt said that the University is in the process of developing a facilities master plan for the campus that would dictate future improvements.

Michael King can be reached at mking@dailycollegian.com

Professor discusses U.S. politics abroad

BY CAITLIN QUINN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Dr. Michael Hannahan, Director of the University of Massachusetts Civic Initiative, returned Saturday from a two-week stay in Indonesia, where he traveled to major cities speaking about the current U.S. elections.

The U.S. State Department, which sponsored the trip, chose the topic due to the interest in U.S. elections that Indonesian groups have expressed.

"Indonesians are interested in the election, they're interested in the United States," says Hannahan.

"They like aspects of our system like campaign finance reporting. They don't have anything like that," he explained. According to Hannahan, Indonesians look at the U.S. as a model for their ten year old democracy.

Hannahan told his audiences that our election system is one that we have made our own and they must come up with one that works best for their country.

While Indonesians have a positive attitude towards some aspects of the States, Hannahan describes the Indonesian attitude towards America as "almost schizophrenic," a combination of hope and blame.

"They like individual Americans. They don't like Bush and they think policy towards the Middle East is negative," says Hannahan.

One factor in the current U.S. presidential elections that Indonesians do feel positively about is Barack Obama.

"They love Obama," said Hannahan. "They'd like to see someone from Indonesia become president. People would applaud when I mentioned his name."

Senator Obama lived in Indonesia as a child for four years, according to CNN.

In the capital city of Jakarta, Hannahan spoke at the University of Indonesia, a public University and Al Azhar University.

In the blog Hannahan kept during his trip, he writes that the students at these Universities were "genuinely interested" in what he had to say, and asked excellent questions. Their inquiries ranged from U.S. foreign policy, to who is likely to win the current election and why Americans own guns.

According to Hannahan, Indonesian students' clothing resembles that of American students and they are very tuned into pop culture. Indonesian students immediately recognized Chuck Norris in Mike Huckabee campaign ads that he showed, something UMass students can relate to.

Despite these similarities, Hannahan said there were still noticeable differences between Indonesian and American students.

"I think the biggest difference is a cultural difference. In the U.S., you're 18 and you're living on your own. Indonesians stay with their families for a lot longer," he said. "Women often stay with their families until they are married and many men do also. They look at it more as a privilege. They feel lucky to be at a University."

Alumni from the Civic Initiative's Institute for Indonesian Secondary Educators served as Hannahan's companions and guides during his trip. The 2006 program was a six week long course on educational systems in the U.S. that took place mainly on the UMass campus.

Hannahan visited the cities of Jakarta, Denpasar, Singaraja, Surabaya and Pekanbaru. The groups he spoke to included government officials, political party organizations, community leaders, business groups, and academics.

The UMass Amherst Civic Initiative creates educational research programs that work towards advancing democracy. It is a program of the UMass Donahue Institute, which is the public service, outreach and economic development unit of the UMass President's office.

Caitlin Quinn can be reached at cquinn@student.umass.edu.

Michigan farmer's hog pigs out on crop-threatening beetle

BY JAMES PRICHARD
ASSOCIATED PRESS

Jim Koan has gone hog-wild in his battle against a beetle that threatens his 120-acre organic apple orchard.

As part of a research experiment believed to be among the first of its kind, Koan is using pigs to help protect his fruit from the plum curculio, a tiny insect that is among the most destructive apple pests.

More than two dozen porkers patrol his orchard, gobbling down fallen, immature apples containing the beetle's larvae. After a successful trial run late last spring, he and some researchers at Michigan State University are preparing for year two of the experiment at AlMar Orchards and Cidery in eastern Michigan.

They hope their work will someday help fruit growers throughout the world reduce the use of pesticides while diversifying their agricultural operations, as he is doing. He plans to periodically sell off the offspring of his four original hogs, keeping only those he needs.

"I'm not ready to say that everybody should run out and do this but I'll tell you, after the first year, I'm a whole lot more optimistic and excited by the possibilities," said Dave Epstein, a tree fruit pest-management specialist at the university and the project's lead researcher.

The quarter-inch-long plum curculio is particularly difficult for growers like Koan to control because no good organic controls have been developed for them. The beetle can be controlled conventionally, often with the pesticide azinphos-methyl. But the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency is phasing out the powerful pesticide, marketed under the trade name Guthion, because of the risks it poses to farm workers and to the environment.

Adult female curculios cut crescent-shaped flaps in the skin of newly formed apples and lay their eggs inside, where they hatch. The beetle larvae burrow into the center of the young fruit, making it drop prematurely in late June or early July.

After spending about two weeks inside, the larvae migrate from the fallen fruit into the soil, where they pupate for 10 to 12 days before emerging as adults to attack the remaining fruit and start the cycle all over again.

Koan decided to try to find an animal that would eat the fallen apples as they lay beneath the trees, before the bugs became adults, but he had a few misses before he settled on pigs.

First, he tried using some chickens.

"All they did all summer long was lay around under the trees when it was hot and just sunbathe, you know, kind of like on the beach," he said.

Then a neighbor's dogs got to the birds. "So that was a bad idea."

He next tried guinea fowl, an energetic wild chicken. They did a "fantastic job" — until some birds of prey discovered them at the orchard.

Then Koan remembered how his grandfather would drive his pigs into his orchard so they could feed on fallen apples.

So Koan obtained some Berkshire pigs, with the idea of breeding them not only so they would eat the fallen apples and kill the beetle larvae but also for slaughter as organically raised meat. He bought a boar and three sows, and now has 27 pigs.

When the infested apples fell in June, the pigs were released into three one-acre sections of the orchard. The researchers compared those three plots with three other one-acre plots where the swine didn't go, and found that the pigs did even better than expected.

Left in the orchard for three days, the pigs gobbled down 98 percent of the fallen apples. Tests showed virtually all the larvae were digested.

"The little guys moved through like a pack of Hoover vacuums," Epstein said.

The researchers found that in the plots where no pigs were allowed, five times as many plum curculios were counted.

Epstein got a one-year grant from the U.S. Department of Agriculture to study the effect of the pigs on the orchard last year and has applied for a four-year grant.

Koan, 60, took over the farm in Clayton Township, near Flint, from his parents. In the past 15 years or so, while trying to diversify his business, he has moved into organic production, phasing out most chemicals to fight off the pests, weeds and diseases that could harm his fruit.

"I think if my granddad was alive today and he saw how excited I am about doing this and this information that we're gaining on this," said Koan, "he would just look at me and say, 'Jeez, you're stupid. You didn't know that?'"

SUMMER SESSION 2008

EARN EXTRA CREDIT
THIS SUMMER AT NORTHEASTERN

Summer Session at Northeastern is your opportunity to get ahead. Whether you want to transfer credits into your current degree program, stock up on science courses, or enroll in a master's degree program, we have over 300 graduate and undergraduate courses to fit your needs.

- 8- & 4-week flexible course formats
- Courses offered in Boston, Burlington & Online

EVENING, WEEKEND & ONLINE courses start JUNE 2, JULY 7 & AUGUST 4.

For more information, please visit www.spcs.neu.edu/summersession or call toll free 877.6NU.SPCS.

Northeastern

Lincoln Real Estate
[illegible] N. Pleasant St • 413-[illegible]
PROVIDING THE BEST OFF CAMPUS LIVING EXPERIENCE
24 HOUR MAINTENANCE
SAFE APARTMENTS
FRIENDLY STAFF
TWO GREAT LOCATIONS:
AMHERST CENTER AND HOBART LANE
WE START SHOWING APARTMENTS
FEB. 6TH FROM 11:30AM – 4:30PM M-F

I am not the editor of a newspaper and shall always try to do right and be good so that God will not make me one
-Mark Twain

The man used a fake name. Enough said.

dailycollegian.blogspot.com

Students debate merits of com. college point average of 3.2. The final step in attaining full honors credit is the Capstone Experience, a thesis or project culminating in an oral presentation.

HONORS from page 1

On top of a full course load, honors requirements can be difficult to fulfill.

"I thought it was too time consuming in the beginning," said sophomore biology major Winson Wong. "Now I am going to join. I want to graduate with honors and it will look good for medical school."

In the competitive application process for graduate school, graduating with honors is helpful.

"I think it is definitely a benefit to be able to graduate with honors and completing a thesis is good practice for graduate school," said junior nutrition major and honors student Katelyn Russell.

Students who plan on joining the over 3,500 students in Commonwealth College are awarded with an academically vigorous undergraduate education.

"The four most significant experiences of students are faculty mentoring, studying abroad, community service learning, and the Capstone Experience," explained Pols.

Not all students are able to join Commonwealth College with their intensive major requirements.

"I have a lot of requirements for chemical engineering," said sophomore Kevin Chen. "I considered joining, but I don't have the time to do all that honors work."

For honors credit, students' final GPA and overall grade for the Capstone Experience determines the level of honors on their transcript. The different levels of honors, from highest to lowest, include summa cum laude requiring a 3.8 GPA or higher, magna cum laude 3.5 GPA or higher, or cum laude a 3.2 GPA or higher. The final grade for the Capstone is based on the students' performance on the thesis and oral presentation.

During the capstone process, students in their senior year choose between a self-initiated independent capstone or a faculty initiated course capstone.

The independent capstone requires the student to pursue a self-interest research topic, produce a project and present an oral defense to faculty mentors. The course capstone has more structure since projects are developed in a classroom setting and students present their work to classmates.

"When our alumni return or complete surveys, they report that the Capstone Experience prepared them more than anything else they accomplished," said Pols.

Most students start thinking about their capstone in their junior year and are required to complete the capstone by the end of their senior year.

"I am doing an independent capstone. I think it allows me to get more out of it," said Russell. "I am expanding on my research from an internship I did at Tufts where I collected scientific data and drew conclusions."

Tracy Morris, senior communications major and former honors student could not complete her independent capstone.

"Due to its time commitment, I was frustrated that I could not pursue other interests like my internship."

Instead of completing the independent capstone, Morris is spending her senior year taking journalism classes like Women in Journalism and interning at the TV News Station ABC 40. Morris will not be graduating with honors, however.

"I am very happy with my decision. I am exposing myself to real hands on experience," said Morris.

Attaining full honors credit requires students to have time management and academic dedication. Students in Commonwealth College are academically challenged in small intensive classes with other student scholars.

"I wanted to be in harder classes that looked good on my transcript," said Emma Lifvergren, sophomore honors student and journalism major. "I wanted to be around people who care about school."

Sara Afzal can be reached at safzal@student.umass.edu

Clinic reuses vials, leaves patients sick

BY KATHLEEN HENNESSEY
ASSOCIATED PRESS

Nearly 40,000 people learned this week that a trip to the doctor may have made them sick.

In a type of scandal more often associated with Third World countries, a Las Vegas clinic was found to be reusing syringes and vials of medication for nearly four years. The shoddy practices may have led to an outbreak of the potentially fatal hepatitis C virus and exposed patients to HIV, too.

The discovery led to the biggest public health notification operation in U.S. history, brought demands for investigations and caused scores of lawyers to seek out patients at risk for infections.

Thousands of patients are being urged to be tested for the viruses. Six acute cases of hepatitis C have been confirmed. The surgical center and five affiliated clinics have been closed.

"I find it baffling, frankly, that in this day and age anyone would think it was safe to reuse a syringe," said Michael Bell, associate director for infection control at the national Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

One of the infected patients is retired airplane mechanic Michael Washington, 67, who was the first to report his infection. On the advice of his doctor, he received a routine colon exam in July at the Endoscopy Center of Southern Nevada.

In September, he started to get sick. He was losing weight fast. His urine turned dark. His stomach hurt. By January, it was clear what had happened.

Washington describes his virus as a "creeping death sentence" and worries that others will hear his story and think twice before getting preventive care they need.

In letters that began arriving this week, patients who received injected anesthesia at the endoscopy center from March 2004 to mid-January were urged to get tested for hepatitis B and C, and HIV.

Because all three viruses are transmitted by blood, they could have been passed from one patient to the next by the unsafe practices at the clinic.

The mass notification is the result of a health district investigation that began in January when officials linked an uptick of unusual hepatitis C cases to the clinic.

Health officials say they are most worried about the spread of hepatitis C, which targets the liver but shows no symptoms in as many as 80 percent of infections.

Hepatitis C results in the swelling of the liver and can cause stomach pain, fatigue and jaundice. It may eventually result in liver failure. Even when no symptoms occur, the virus can slowly cause damage to the liver.

Officials estimate that 4 percent of the patients already had the virus when they entered the clinic, compared with 0.5 percent for hepatitis B and less than 0.5 percent for HIV. Hepatitis C also is easier to transmit than HIV, they said.

"You put the two together and hepatitis C is really our big concern," said Brian Labus, senior epidemiologist at the Southern Nevada Health District.

Health inspectors say they observed clinic staff using the same syringe twice to extract anesthesia from a single-dose vial, which was then used to treat more than one patient. The practice allows contaminated blood in a used syringe to taint the vial and infect the next patient.

Of the six patients so far diagnosed with acute hepatitis C, five received treatment at the clinic on the same day in late September.

Since 1999, the CDC counts 14 hepatitis outbreaks in the U.S. linked to bad injection practices.

The largest outbreak occurred in Fremont, Neb., where 99 cancer patients were infected at an oncology center from 2001 to 2002. At least one died. The doctor involved in the case acknowledged reusing syringes and settled scores of lawsuit. But he never explained why the syringes were reused.

Bell said such improper procedures appear to be more common in outpatient surgical centers like the endoscopy center. Unlike hospitals, such centers often do not have employees whose sole responsibility is to monitor and educate staff on best practices.

In Las Vegas, clinic staff told inspectors they had been ordered by management to reuse the vials and syringes. Labus described the practice as an unwritten, but long-practiced policy.

Investigators were told the practice was an attempt to cut costs, according to a letter of complaint from the city, which revoked the facility's business license Friday. Five other facilities affiliated with the Endoscopy Center of Southern Nevada also had their licenses revoked.

The clinic's majority owner, Dipak Desai, a political contributor and member of the governor's commission on health care, has refused to comment on the allegations.

He released a statement expressing concern for the patients and assuring the public the problems had been corrected. He later took out a full-page ad in Sunday's edition of the Las Vegas Review-Journal insisting that needles had not been reused and that the chances of contracting an infection at the center in most of the last four years were "extremely low."

Copyrighted notes new trend for profs.

BY LESLIE PRESNALL
THE DAILY REVEILLE (LSU)

(U-WIRE) BATON ROUGE, La. — In recent years, slacking college students have been able to find notes from missed classes on commercial note-trading Web sites.

This type of service is springing up all over the Internet, but one problem arises with this occurrence - copyright infringement.

Because of these new note-sharing trends, some University professors are beginning to copyright their lecture notes, Microsoft Powerpoint presentations and outlines to curb online note sharing.

Federal copyright law only protects works that are "fixed" in a tangible means of expression. This includes works that are written and concrete such as written notes and Powerpoint presentations.

But a lecture is not "fixed" because it is only the professor speaking and is not concrete. Common copyright law protects "unfixed" works, such as lectures as long as a professor can prove he or she is the author, and the state will protect the work.

One popular Web site, NoteSwap.com, allows students to upload lecture notes in return for other students' notes.

Some students say they rely solely on services like NoteSwap and never attend class. Others say they use these sites to simply add to their own notes.

Mass communication professor Laura Lindsay copyrights her lecture notes and opposes Web sites such as NoteSwap.

Lindsay said professors usually collect their notes from a variety of sources, and lectures are usually taken from published articles or scholarly journals.

"If the note taker misses this, it creates some ethical problems with attribution," Lindsay said. "These errors are then duplicated and sold." Eric Norman, University associate dean of students and director of Judicial Affairs, said a student's punishment for posting copyrighted notes as their own depends on the context and situation of the misused work.

Norman said any student can be charged with academic misconduct under the Code of Student Conduct if he or she violates University policies and copyright laws.

The University policy states that publication in electronic format does not change the copyright issue. Students are responsible for being familiar with copyright laws and the University's policies.

The policy says that any copyrighted information may not be posted without permission of the copyright's owner.

Professors said these note-sharing services also affect class attendance.

"Missing a class and relying on notes eliminates the context of the discussion," Lindsay said. "It's easy to spot the students who do this, and it shows in their performance."

Mass communication professor Felicia Song also copyrights her lecture outlines. She agreed the problem with note-trading Web sites is that students use them to replace class.

Song said she is protecting her intellectual property from cyberspace and from other professors.

"In many ways I'm not concerned with students violating copyright if it's for another student," Song said. "I'm more concerned about professors picking it up as their own."

Robert Selig, business management senior and NoteSwap user, said copyrights are unfair, especially with today's technology.

"I understand they're promoting going to class," Selig said. "But today, students don't have to go to class and take notes themselves."

Some students see trading notes as a way of filling in the gaps in their notes.

Evan Kolupski, construction management sophomore, said he does not think professors copyrighting their notes is a positive strategy to make students attend class.

"[NoteSwap] is another study tactic," Kolupski said. "You could learn something from someone else's notes that could help you understand better."

Norman said in the end, it is the professor's final decision what he or she believes should be the proper punishment for the student who violated the copyright law and University policy.

NoteSwap states that any discovery of copyrighted materials will be removed from the Web site and may result in termination of the user's account.

Anthropologists dig UMass conference

BY FRANK VITALE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

This weekend, over two hundred anthropologists from across the globe will converge at the University of Massachusetts for the 48th Annual Meeting of the Northeastern Anthropological Association.

They hail from more than 50 institutions and 11 states, with some traveling from as far away as Spain to present their work to their peers.

This is the first time since 1987 that UMass has hosted the NEAA Annual Meeting. The meeting was last held at Ithaca College in New York, when the theme was "New Visions for a Collaborative and Engaged Anthropology: The New Adventures of Old Anthropology."

This year's theme is "Anthropology Comes Home: The Enduring Promise of a Holistic Discipline."

"North American anthropology today finds itself at a crossroad," event organizer and UMass professor Ventura Perez wrote on the conference web site. "Many departments are fissioning into sub disciplines and separate departments, and many newly minted Ph.D.s in anthropology come from graduate programs with only token courses in other subfields. The underlying theme of this conference is clear: a celebration of the four-field approach to anthropology. An approach to which the Department of Anthropology at UMass Amherst is fully committed."

With 39 sessions and 182 or more individual presentations, a wide span of anthropological issues and topics will be covered, ranging from local archaeological finds to Madagascan lemurs, from the archaeology of sex to the effects of the Internet and cell phones on human language and creativity.

Undergraduates may be especially interested in sessions on archaeological field school and career and graduate school advice for anthropology major.

Perez describes the conference as a "once in a lifetime opportunity" for undergraduates to access such a large bank of respected anthropological scholars without even leaving campus.

"The NEAA meeting is a great opportunity for students at the UMass Amherst campus who are interested in anthropology to learn from and network with undergraduates, graduate students and faculty from our department, as well as from institutions and professional organizations across the region," he said.

Frank Vitale can be reached at fvitale@student.umass.edu

Up Late Saturday Night?
1pm Sunday Worship
MERCYhouse :: knowmercy.org

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
POTTER'S
AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
Insurance Replacement Rates
FREE PICK-UP
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates
Potter's Collision Repair
at North Amherst Motors
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.pottersauto.com
(One mile North of UMass - on bus route)
Collision Repair & Glass Replacement

Important Announcement
Registration for Spring 2008

The Writing Program Placement Test

will be offered on:

Thursday, March 6 at 7 p.m. in Bartlett 202

You must take this exam to qualify for enrollment in EnglWrit112 (College Writing)

This test may be taken only once.

Students do not need to register for the test.

FOUR Seasons
WINE • LIQUOR • CIGARS
WE HAVE ICE LUGES!!!
CIGAR SALE!!!
NOW CARRYING PIPES!!! & PIPE TOBACCO & SUPPLIES!!!

Hennessy Cognac X.O. 750 ml. $122.99	Tanqueray Gin 1.75 liter $33.99	Jose Cuervo Flavored Tequila* 1.0 liter $20.99
Grand Marnier 100yr Centenaire 750 ml $109.99	Hennessy Cognac V.S.O.P. 750 ml $44.99	*Citrico, Tropino, Oranjo
Crown Royal Cask 16 Whiskey 750 ml $94.99	Grand Marnier Cordon Rouge 750 ml $33.99	Smirnoff Vodka 80° 1.75 liter $19.99
Glenmorangie Burgundy Wood Finish 750 ml $49.99	Hennessy Cognac V.S. 750 ml $28.99	Jose Cuervo Gold 750 ml $18.99
Jose Cuervo Platino Tequila 750 ml $49.99	Belvedere Pure Vodka 750 ml $27.99	Myer's Platinum Rum 1.75 liter $18.99
Glenmorangie Madiera Wood Finish 750 ml $49.99	10 Cane Rum 750 ml $26.99	Captain Morgan Parrot Bay Rum* 1.0 liter $17.99
Ardbeg 10yr Islay Single Malt Scotch 750 ml $47.99	Chopin Polish Vodka 750 ml $27.99	*Including Coconut, Mango, Pineapple, Passion Fruit
Bailey's Original Irish Cream 1.75 liter $35.99	Bailey's Flavored Irish Cream* 750 ml $20.99	Captain Morgan Spiced Rum 750 ml $14.99
	Mint Chocolate and Caramel	Smirnoff Twist Flavored Vodka 750 ml $11.99
		*Including Strawberry, Watermelon, Raspberry, Black Cherry

WINE 10% OFF 6 BOTTLES* OF WINE EVERYDAY MIX & MATCH
Sale 2-28 - 3-2
333 Russell St., Rte. 9, Hadley, MA
584-8174 • Mon.-Sat. 9AM-11PM • Sun. Noon-11PM

YES COMPUTERS
Apple Specialist
Your local Apple-authorized sales and service center.
Conveniently located in downtown Northampton.
A Big Deal for a Little Laptop
The ASUS Eee PC
●Ultraportable: 7 inches and 2 pounds.
●Over 40 built-in programs, including a full office suite.
●Rugged, shock-resistant design.
●Simple, intuitive, Linux-based operating system.
●Built-in wireless Internet.
Present this coupon for $50 OFF
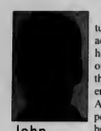
Any Asus Eee PC
expires 3/07/08
$395!

Yes Computers | 38 Pleasant St | 413-585-0007

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN



EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, MARCH 6, 2008

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
- Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

No need for gov't financial band-aid

John Glaser

Fed up with college tuition prices? Feel taken advantage of by the higher-than-ever costs of attending a university that you and/or your parents are forced to pay? Are you outraged? Well, perhaps you should be, but maybe not for the reasons you expect, or at the people you most likely blame.

Among the millions of flyers we see around campus, one of them caught my eye just recently. This flyer, put up by the group MASSPIRG, proclaimed the efficacy of the College Cost Reduction Act, passed just last year, and boasted about convincing government to deal with the costs of higher education; "making higher education affordable since 1972."

Really, UMass?

MASSPIRG claims that "by cutting student loan rates, increasing the amount of need-based grant aid, and capping the percentage of income that can go to repaying student loans," the government can wave its Commie wand at America's colleges and universities and magically cut the cost of education altogether.

Now, for one thing, if all these morons running around causing property damage after ball games, those stabbing and beating fellow students, and the idiots writing threats on the walls of our buildings would grow up, perhaps the cost of our tuition would sharply decline. I digress though, as this is not a column regarding the recent newsworthy events of misdirected testosterone and pent up immaturity on this campus.

It's true, college costs a lot. For significant parts of the last 20-30 years tuition costs have risen faster than the rate of inflation. Tuition is now costlier than ever. But is this really something the government can fix by control? Are these circumstances really due to what groups like MASSPIRG say is a lack of government aid and red tape?

Actually, no. First of all, the state and federal government has been anything but negligent on the issue. There are various government initiatives addressing this. Direct student aid, for example, comes in the form of Perkins Loan Programs, Pell Grants, Federal Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grants, Federal Work Study Programs, the Federal Direct Student Loan Program, Federal Family Educational Loans, The Federal Trio Program and on and on. Currently, 60 percent of undergraduates receive some sort of aid.

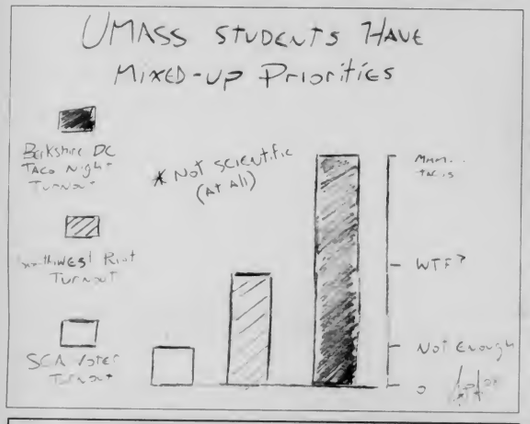
Gary Wolfram of the Cato Institute explains that these programs have only been growing: "Perkins Loans rose in current dollars from $892 million in 1993 to $1.263 billion in 2004" and "Federal Direct Student Loan Program and Federal Family Educational Loans in current dollars went from $12.539 billion in 1993 to $52.197 billion in 2004."

Yet, college tuition costs are still higher than ever. How could this be? Isn't the government a flawless, altruistic God-send here to save our lives from every social ill at the drop of hat? No, it's the very opposite. The truth is, government's excessive meddling in our affairs is exactly what has been driving the cost of tuition straight upwards.

The truth is, government's excessive meddling in our affairs is exactly what has been driving the cost of tuition straight upwards.

Wolfram points out the correlations: "Private four year colleges increased listed tuition prices by more than two dollars for each dollar increase in Pell Grants, and public four-year colleges increased their listed tuition by 97 cents for every dollar increase." Should this not at least raise some questions about how effective these government programs are?

Governmental regulations and weighty subsidies have increased demand for higher education, which then increases tuition costs, which then results in political pressure to expand the already existing (and counterproductive) programs, which in turn further increases prices and on and on the cycle goes.



Think about it, where do things cost the least? In places where the government imposes price controls? Heavily regulated markets? No way. Things are the cheapest at places like Wal-Mart, that bastion of greedy capitalism.

Take cell phones, the cornerstone of our modern, technological information age. You can buy simple cell phones for $30. You can buy ones with video cameras in them, with texting capabilities and all the rest for $60. Why? It's because the free market competes for consumer satisfaction. You think cell phones would be as amazing (and as amazingly cheap) if the government told companies how much they could sell them for? Or if they handed people subsidies, or stamped down miles of red tape? Of course not.

I often wonder when people might begin to realize that the government can't organize life the way we might wish it to be. It's fascinating to me how any time people perceive a problem it is by virtue of this perception alone that legitimates it as a government prerogative. How much monster government do we need? I feel like eventually we'll all have government mandated toilets with automated robotic hands, so we can scrap the figurative hyperboles and actually have the government wipe our asses for us.

Government can't fix tuition costs. It's disconcerting that so many people willfully ignore and dismiss these uncon-cealed negative consequences perpetrated by our government's ambitious schemes. We should just admit that freedom works better than government control, instead of defaulting to the force that government exacts on us, and garnering every bit of trust and good will towards centralization, regardless of how little it actually deserves.

John Glaser is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at jwglaser@student.umass.edu.

Athlete identities

Nicholas O'Malley

In belated honor of Black History Month, it may be necessary to look back on the number of interactions and conversations that many of us did not have with the group that was honored in the past month. In comparison to some parts of America, UMass is as white as a marshmallow on a paper plate in the middle of a snowstorm.

Celebrating racial equality and ethnic diversity in our culture is a wonderful thing, especially in remembrance of past prejudices. It is sometimes hard to acknowledge such things when a number of people simply do not know a great deal of people that are African American.

One would expect to see more diversity among students on the University of Massachusetts campus given the dense population.

The truth is, the number of UMass students that call themselves black or African-American is only 814 or roughly 4.7 percent. This means that unless you went to school in the city, the racial composition of this campus is not unlike that of your predominantly white suburban high school.

If you're part of the student population that lacks the diversity that is always present in the UMass advertisements, it's not your fault.

For those of you that are African-American, this doesn't mean that we don't like you. There simply aren't enough of you to go around. So if you are part of the student population that lacks the diversity that's always present in the UMass advertisements, it's not your fault.

The segment of the population that is not the diversity hodgepodge that the university tries to portray is limited to what they see in the mass media – especially television. But since most television shows can be limited to a "token black guy," or be devoid of any minorities, the primary source of African American exposure in America is in the realm of sports.

With the major sports, baseball, football, and basketball (sorry hockey, no one watches) dominated by African-American players, a great deal of media figures of the same race can be found on various playing fields. For example, Tiger Woods and David Ortiz are both prominent media figures and top African- American athletes known for their on field successes and off-field popularity. Or are they?

Within the world of African- American athletics lays another topic: Sports figures who are simply placed under that label. Of the athletes listed above, only one is primarily African- American.

This of course raises the question, what defines a person's race? In the case of Ortiz, a fan-favorite member of the Boston Red Sox, his dark skin color immediately marks him as a black athlete. Ortiz was born in the Dominican Republic, a Spanish speaking country in the Carribean and a hotbed of potential baseball prospects.

While Ortiz's skin may mark him as one race, his original language and pride for his country of birth (shown by his participation for the Dominican Republic in the 2006 World Baseball Classic) prevent him from being considered African American.

In contrast to Ortiz, Woods, the man who is considered to be the world's best golfer and an icon for African-Americans, is indeed African- American, but just how black is he?

Eldrick "Tiger" Woods is not fully African – American. Tiger, the world's premier "black athlete" is a quarter black, a quarter Chinese, a quarter Thai, an eighth white and an eighth Native American. Woods' multiracial background forced him to coin a unique term for his ethnicity, "cablinasian."

It's difficult to label Woods as African- American, an ethnicity he refuses to identify with. A great deal of determining the ethnic background of an individual is taking into account the group that an individual identifies with. Much like Ortiz, with his Hispanic origins, the fact that Woods does not consider himself a black athlete should factor into whether he is viewed as an icon among true black athletes.

This is not to say that African- Americans athletes are not prominent figures in America. Basketball players such as Michael Jordan have helped win gold medals at the Olympics. Tennis players such as Serena and Venus Williams have reached number one rankings in the world of tennis.

There is an issue, however, when individuals of different ethnicities are labeled as black, as opposed to the identity that they truly wish to take. It is about time we begin to acknowledge some icons that are "cablinasian" for a change.

Nicholas O'Malley is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at nomalley@student.umass.edu.

DAILY COLLEGIAN READER POLL

Who is your pick for SGA president?

☐ Devin Ashe
☐ Malcolm Chu
☐ Derek Khanna
☐ I'm not voting
☐ No confidence
☐ There was an election?

Cast your vote online at www.dailycollegian.com!

*COLLEGIAN READER POLLS are unscientific and may not reflect the opinions of the campus community.

Did you kn
... that Collegia
and columnists lucratively?*

*an experience

It's high time to issue an overdue apology

Nick Milano

On Monday, the Senate passed the Indian Health Care Improvement Act which updated health care opportunities for Indians due to treaties signed with many tribes. Some 1.9 million Native-Americans rely upon the federal government for their medical care.

The bill attracted attention due to an official apology included from the federal government addressed to Native-Americans for decades of mistreatment. With this, an important recognition by the government for past evils, the Senate demonstrated that it still has the fortitude to confess to a mistake and take blame for it.

This does not mean the Senate can rest easy nor pat itself on the back and call it a day. There is plenty of work left to be done whether it is through oversight of the Executive Branch or with the passing of important legislation. But one act that should be considered and is long overdue is an apology to African-Americans for hundreds of years of slavery, segregation and racism.

The enslavement of Africans from the beginning of colonization of the New World through the American Civil War helped the United States to take many steps towards developing a stable economy and government. Once slavery came to a long-awaited end, African-Americans were incredibly disadvantaged.

The US government never apologized for this enslavement and killing of millions of Africans who were stolen from their homeland.

Following the Civil War, a brief era of hope in the form of Reconstruction came to a crashing halt when the federal government again abandoned African-Americans in the name of states' rights.

Born out of the failed Reconstruction, Jim Crow reared its ugly head for many decades, even winning approval by the Supreme Court. The plaintiff in that case was Homer Plessy, a man who was only one-eighth black, but because of the one-drop rule in most Southern states, it did not matter. In addition to the laws that were blatantly and arrogantly race-based, there were also many social programs designed to help everyone left out.

The G.I. Bill is widely credited with creating the modern middle class. Hand in hand with the Federal Housing Administration, it helped guarantee mortgages on new homes for millions of Americans. In regard to the G.I. Bill, many African-Americans from the South were unable to navigate the bureaucracy to claim their benefits and even those who could had to attend schools that severely lacked in comparison to schools that did not open their doors to African-Americans. In regard to the FHA, there were provisions that blocked African-Americans from obtaining the very low interest rates that gave birth to suburbia. Once again, as many times before, African-Americans were left behind, forced to fend for themselves despite massive infusions of aid for white Americans and subjected to years of dehumanizing segregation and racism; they were given a most unequal opportunity for life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.

The United States government never apologized for this enslavement and killing of millions of Africans stolen from their homeland.

More disappointing than all of this is the fact that there are still signs of racism very much alive in the US today. Even with Senator Obama, a major contender for the Democratic nomination, hate crimes are prevalent with 5,020 racially motivated crimes last year alone, according to the FBI's official statistics.

The vast majority of these were committed against African-Americans. Even at this most liberal college in the hippy hamlet of Amherst, a hate crime occurred this past month. The root of this hatred against African-Americans can be traced back to slavery; government has seldom done enough to fight notions of racism. An apology is the least that can be done; yet, no such act has occurred.

As the Senate's actions on Monday showed, and when combined with apologies to both Japanese-Americans and Hawaiians, there is strong precedent for unilateral apologies for past errors and misjudgments. Reparations, an understandably controversial idea, were even granted to interned Japanese-Americans (noteworthy is that the two laws associated with reparations for and an apology to the Japanese were signed by Ronald Reagan and George W. Bush, two of the most conservative leaders this nation has ever seen. In essence, there is a strong case for an apology to be made to African-Americans. Only Native Americans can claim to have been hurt more by the actions of the US government.

Of course, an apology will not heal all the scars. One does not kick somebody for a lifetime, then apologize and expect an immediate friendship. African-Americans have been the recipients of programs like affirmative action designed to help foster advancement, and though they are being terminated prematurely, such polices have to boost the proportion of African-Americans in the workforce and higher education.

Still, the US government has yet to apologize. In this Christian nation, in this time of Lent and Easter, asking for forgiveness for centuries of abuse and neglect should be a given. Why has it taken so long?

Nick Milano writes on Thursdays. He can be reached at nmilano@student.umass.edu.

Can Obama fulfill great expectations?

Michael Phillis

Wherever there is hope, there is the possibility of disappointment. The past eight years of President Bush has resulted in an impressively low presidential approval rating (about 31 percent) and a new height of public distrust for the government. The country is searching with heightened enthusiasm for a replacement and a quick fix to a wide array of problems.

The Democrats are closing in on their answer. The answer packages a young man with what some describe as a cult following that has propelled a no-name candidate past arguably the biggest household name in politics: Clinton.

Barack Obama has attached his candidacy and presidential hopes to an idea of renewed hope. His lofty campaign ideas describe some of the most smiled-upon political personas in American history, John F. Kennedy and Martin Luther King Jr.

With sights set so high for a possible Obama presidency, the thoughts of the past eight years continue to ring loudly in the ears of Americans. However, what happens if Obama does not fulfill those promises. People must be reminded of just how lofty his goals are.

From defeating partisanship, fixing the health care system, ending the war in Iraq, pulling the economy out of a recession, and uniting a divided America, Obama's not only promising he will hit a home run but he is pointing to where the ball is going to land before the pitch is even thrown.

While Obama's charisma may in fact exceed the political genius of Bill Clinton, he will be leading a nation in unnaturally delicate times.

To heal the wounds that have ripped through the middle class, causing anger and mistrust will be difficult. John Edwards, during his latest presidential run brought up a valid criticism when he faulted Obama for an unwillingness to fight.

Maureen Dowd of the New York Times dubbed Obama "Obambi" during some of the earlier months of the campaign. Dowd knew that for Obama to fix the problems that he promised to correct he would have to confront such embedded Washington interests and that a simple everyone-should-get-along approach would not be enough.

Lately Obama has shown an ability that John Kerry in 2004 never demonstrated – the political backbone to defend his character in the face of attacks. The subtle comebacks and quips during the debates give the electorate hope that Obama will not simply accept the status-quo.

If Obama does succeed, and Jan 20, 2009 is the day America watches the candidate of hope become the 44th President of The United States, there will be an incredible excitement before the sobering experience of a president's first one-hundred days in office.

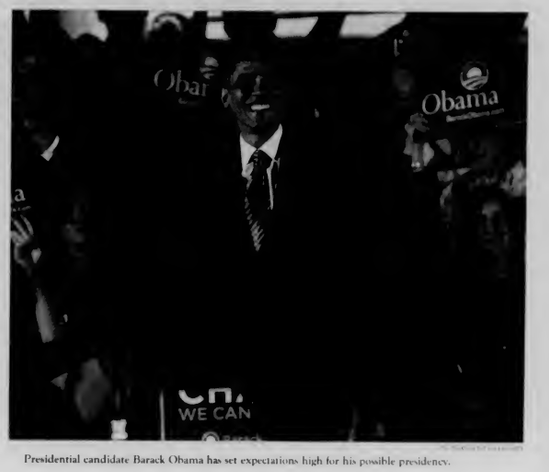
Undoubtedly legislation will be placed on the desks of the members of Congress and debate will ensue. The Republicans, however, may – even though there power has considerably been weakened – put up a determined fight to make Obama a lame duck.

The Republican Party knows how to press pause on a democratic presidency and if the GOP were to lose two branches of government the animosity of the right may boil over.

Bills will be shot down, compromises ignored and parliamentary procedures abused in order to make the public view an Obama presidency as a failing one. These were the tactics that were used against a moderate Democrat like Bill Clinton throughout his entire tenure as commander in chief.

Budgets were overly haggled over, minor scandal after minor scandal was unearthed and investigated past the extent of the scandal and a demonization effort by the right was used to turn a public hostile towards the Clintons. These tactics are largely the reason that Hillary Clinton entered the presidential race with disapproval rating that approached 45 percent throughout the country.

While Obama's charisma may in fact exceed the political genius of Bill Clinton, he will be leading a nation in unnaturally delicate times against a bitter party that he is doubtful to find corporative. History has shown that in politics, after a crisis or disappointment, the leader who promises the most, whether possible or not, is often elected.



If elected, however, the question comes down to whether or not Obama will be able to do what every presidential candidate promises to some extent during their election campaign, to create a mandate of the people to pressure Congress into enacting their political agenda into law.

Obama has promised to follow this method, to apply pressure to make change by uniting America through a message of hope towards a better tomorrow.

However, if he goes down the path, even if just slightly, of president Bush and begins pressuring politicians in smoke-filled rooms to further his political agenda, his presidency is bound to be a failure.

If Obama promises greatness and can only produce a slightly-above-average presidency, will the change from his campaign promises to reality make his time in office a disappointment?

Michael Phillis is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mphillis@dailycollegian.com

Presidential candidate Barack Obama has set expectations high for his possible presidency.

Confronting the political-correctness fixation

Brad Leibowitz

Screw everyone who feels the need to be politically correct all the time. I am sick and tired of everyone who is afraid to call certain people and events exactly what they are. From religion, to race, to sexual preference, to looks, this country is too politically correct. So, here is an article which is not.

Now, you might be saying to yourself, "But Brad, aren't you worried that you'll offend someone with a certain comment or choice phrase? In every situation you must aim to cover all bases so you can effectively communicate with people in a moral way."

Note one: I don't share your morals. Note two: As such, I don't care if my morals or comments offend you because neither you nor I know if our chosen morals are correct. Note three: Some issues, no matter how touchy, need to be discussed seriously for what they are.

First of all, anyone who peddles their religion as the highest and only moral path to life is simply a bigot. I have absolutely no problem with your opinions and what you hold to be true. However, when you tell me your opinions are correct because they come from a book written by an invisible being who lives in the sky, you sir, are living your life by the guidelines of a fairy tale. You have no right to consider your morals higher than mine because your morals come from the tablets of a man who parted the Red Sea after frogs fell from the sky and the rivers turned to blood.

Now, I'm not a practicing Christian, but why are Christians always telling me I'm being led astray? Why are they always telling me

I don't care if my morals or comments offend you because neither you nor I know if our chosen morals are correct.

I need to find Jesus as if Jesus were lost. Furthermore, just a random thought, but if God is everywhere and in everything, why is He in the church but not in the brothel? If He is in both, why do you or I ever have to go to church?

This might offend you and make you say, "Brad, you're going to hell." Well, through the use of science we have discovered what lies under our feet, the mantle, the asthenosphere and in inner and outer core. I'm sorry, but there is no gaping chasm in which the devil will burn me for all time.

Secondly, I am sick and tired of everyone who talks about homosexual relations through their hat and at the same time hold homosexuals at arms length. Anyone who lays claim that homosexuality is wrong because it's a choice is simply a fool. Homosexual behavior is seen and observed in all natural life. From bats, to bears, to humans, homosexual behavior is natural and deserves to hold a place within society as an acceptable life style.

I am infuriated with everyone who says things like, "Well, can't you just try being another way?" Or, "What's wrong, you can have civil unions, isn't that good enough?" The resounding answer: No, it's not good enough and no, a person shouldn't have to be any other way. When you say things like this, you come off as a snob, considering yourself morally higher than the person you're talking down to, in other words, a bigot.

My third point rests on the issue of looks. Why is it when you call someone skinny it isn't taken as an insult, however, when you call someone fat it is? Calling someone fat isn't an insult if that person is indeed fat.

In general, people are self-conscious regarding their appearances. However, if you can't accept another person stating a simple truth about you, it is a sign that says you need to take matters into your own hands so next time, your not offended. Some of us are skinny, some of us are fat, get over it.

Same goes for race. I understand the need to sound academic, but calling someone black or white, instead of African- American or Caucasian isn't an insult, it's just another way of stating a fact. Since when did stating an obvious truth become looked down upon in our society? Since when did using simple language to describe something or someone become an outdated practice?

In 2002, Bill Maher, then host of Politically Incorrect, got fired because he said the following regarding 9-11: "We have been the cowards lobbing cruise missiles from 2,000 miles away. That's cowardly. Staying in the airplane when it hits the building, say what you want about it, it's not cowardly. Stupid maybe, but not cowardly." He said this on a show titled Politically Incorrect. Need I say more?

Here's the punch line. In the end no one knows anything. In life we are all connected by one immutable truth. All of us are guessing in the dark and as such, no one holds the corner of truth on anything. So as it goes, either we are all wrong or we are all right. No matter the answer, your opinions hold no more value then mine. So, if this article offended you, realize, you are annoyed at the thoughts of a guy who admits to knowing nothing.

I hope I get hate mail.

Brad Leibowitz has no scruples. He can be reached at bleibowi@student.umass.edu

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Editorial@DailyCollegian.com

WE NEED NEW BLOOD

Dear editor:

Re: "ALANA's promise," Shaun Robinson, Ed/Op, Mar. 3, 2008

The success of any political party, national or local, is the extent to which it is able to improve the lives of its constituents. It isn't how many slogans you chant or how loudly you chant them as much as what you can actually get done. The ALANA Caucus is a well-funded political coalition on campus and it has been in power for the past four years and what exactly has it accomplished?

The fees are every bit as high as they always were, in fact a proposal to further increase them will be discussed tomorrow in Boston. The roofs still leak, the classrooms are still overcrowded and we all still shlep around dodging potholes and snow banks. The administration still treats us with unveiled contempt and we won't even discuss the local constabulary or why I think that Charlie Scherpa should be indicted for war crimes.

So we had a strike, so we huffed and puffed and wasted a whole lot of student fee money photocopying fists. We are going to miss a day of school next month so we can go to Boston and say that people already receiving six-figure salaries should get more of our money? We are going to use student fee money (that should go to RSOs) to subsidize the Office of Admissions, what is next, using it to fix sidewalks?

ALANA couldn't even get rid of a lame-duck Michael Gargano. I, personally, did far more to encourage his departure.

It is time for a cold reboot. It is time to start over with new people and see if we can actually accomplish some of the things we are chanting about. All of the candidates running have essentially identical platforms and question thus becomes one of having the same leadership cadre or new people.

I disagree with Libby Protzman on perhaps just about everything. The difference between her and everyone else is that she is an outsider, she is someone new. And a new coalition, at least for the first year, will have to be honest because their political opponents will be watching for the first misstep. And Libby strikes me as an honest leftist, who unlike others, will actually show up.

So too with Derek Khannah. I have disagreed with him, disagreed with him quite vehemently on issues of some significance. Politically I disagree with him on almost as many things as I disagree with Libby Protzman – but I still think he would make a fine SGA President. I think that ALANA would be well served by having him as President.

I have not been impressed with the past few generations of SGA leaders. There is a lot that I can't discuss but in many circles, the SGA's reputation is nonexistent. I say give Khannah/Protzman a try because they simply can't screw things up any worse than the current cadre already has – and would continue to do if left in power. The whole organization is a legacy of hand-picked successors dating back decades and it is time for new blood.

Ed Cutting
Graduate student
School of Education

WIRE TAPPED-OUT

Dear editor:

Re: "A solid surveillance solution," Dan Nicastro, Ed/Op, Mar. 5, 2008

Dan Nicastro's column about wiretapping is so far from the mark of actual fact that it's surprising his fear mongering doesn't raise the ire of his fellow students. But then, that's what you get for reading press releases from the American Civil Liberties Union and citing them without, you know, doing due diligence to check them out.

Nicastro would have the email that Achmed in Damascus sent to Abdul in Baghdad that – coincidentally – gets routed through Hoboken, NJ have the same Fourth Amendment protections as American citizens.

In case Nicastro hasn't noticed, there's a war on. Intelligence is a part of that war. By his standards, a listening station in Hawaii in WWII could not have listened to Japanese transmissions because the radio waves went over U.S. territory.

As to the telecoms: The courts have consistently ruled that your phone records are not your property, they are the company's. They aren't listening to you and Aunt Matilda, they're looking for patterns. And the lack of immunity to their helping our government find and stop terrorist attacks is a great big wet kiss to the Trial Lawyers – the Democrats' biggest contributors.

After 9/11, the left excoriated President Bush for not connecting the dots. Now, the Left wants to keep anyone from even seeing them ... until, of course, the next attack when the left will – like clockwork – ask how we didn't see it coming.

David Hunt
Class of 1990

THE HEAT IS ON

Dear Editor:

As a concerned student and member of the UMass-Amherst community, worries about climate change and the environment are pressing in my life. That is why I am so glad to see our state taking a positive step forward with the Global Warming Solutions Act, filed by Senator Pacheco.

The Global Warming Solution Act aims to have the Commonwealth reduce its global warming emissions by 20 percent by 2020 and 80 percent by 2050 – which most scientists agree is necessary to prevent the worst impacts of global warming.

I urge our state senators to use this opportunity to help us keep our world safe and healthy by supporting a strong Global Warming Solutions Act.

Kaitlyn Gorman
UMass MASSPIRG

THE DEBATE NO LONGER GREAT

Dear editor:

Personally, I am quite tired of hearing several members of the UMass Republican Club repeat the phrase "real men protect children" in defense of their embarrassingly petty and irrelevant protest.

If it's really "that simple," what exactly is the UMass Republican Club doing to protect children? Thousands of children suffer abuse and neglect every year in Massachusetts alone, one in every six hundred children will develop cancer before the age of fifteen, and several hundred children are killed every year by drunk drivers.

Yet somehow, these issues have been overlooked by the "real men" of the UMass Republican Club. They aren't volunteering at shelters, raising money for hospitals or educating the public about the dangers of drunk driving.

Under the guise of protecting children, they are simply looking for attention and attempting to salvage what is left of their crumbling student organization, driven into the ground by Mr DeFlumeri and his hypocritical debauchery.

Let's face it: the only children these members of the UMass Republican Club have protected all year are themselves.

Kasara Martin
U Mass student

Dear editor:

Re: The RSU [illegible] Rules of Student Unity, Ed/Op, Mar. 3, 2008

As a liberal I am an ardent advocate of free and unfettered speech, moreso than most people, and someone who thinks sexual education is important. Yet I find what the RSU is doing irresponsible and reactionary.

Young children go through the student union all the time; tour guides bring prospective students and their families through it, yet they claim it is due to "homophobia and racism" that the brochure is being taken down. It is obvious to most people that this is not the case.

The administration is fighting allegations of UMass as a crazy party school and they (for obvious reasons) do not want pictures of two guys doing it in one of the most travelled places on campus. Since they control the space they get to say what goes, because contrary to what the RSU may believe the University is, in fact, owned by the state and managed by the administration, not them.

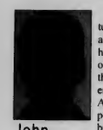
Sure, the current Republican Club is the last group that should be making charges of indecency, but regardless, the responsible, adult thing to do would be to take the brochures, which the RSU failed to do.

The RSU needs to get over itself.

Derek A Newhall
UMass student

The Daily Collegian encourages reader responses. Letters to the editor should be no longer than 550 words and can be sent to editorial@dailycollegian.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN



EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, MARCH 6, 2008

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
– Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

No need for gov't financial band-aid

John Glaser

Fed up with college tuition prices? Feel taken advantage of by the higher-than-ever costs of attending a university that you and/or your parents are forced to pay? Are you outraged? Well, perhaps you should be, but maybe not for the reasons you expect, or at the people you most likely blame.

Among the millions of flyers we see around campus, one of them caught my eye just recently. This flyer, put up by the group MASSPIRG, proclaimed the efficacy of the College Cost Reduction Act, passed just last year, and boasted about convincing government to deal with the costs of higher education; "making higher education affordable since 1972."

Really, UMass?

MASSPIRG claims that "by cutting student loan rates, increasing the amount of need-based grant aid, and capping the percentage of income that can go to repaying student loans," the government can wave its Commie wand at America's colleges and universities and magically cut the cost of education altogether.

Now, for one thing, if all these morons running around causing property damage after ball games, those stabbing and beating fellow students, and the idiots writing threats on the walls of our buildings would grow up, perhaps the cost of our tuition would sharply decline. I digress though, as this is not a column regarding the recent newsworthy events of misdirected testosterone and pent up immaturity on this campus.

It's true, college costs a lot. For significant parts of the last 20-30 years tuition costs have risen faster than the rate of inflation. Tuition is now costlier than ever. But is this really something the government can fix by control? Are these circumstances really due to what groups like MASSPIRG say is a lack of government aid and red tape?

Actually, no. First of all, the state and federal government has been anything but negligent on the issue. There are various government initiatives addressing this. Direct student aid, for example, comes in the form of Perkins Loan Programs, Pell Grants, Federal Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grants, Federal Work Study Programs, the Federal Direct Student Loan Program, Federal Family Educational Loans, The Federal Trio Program and on and on. Currently, 60 percent of undergraduates receive some sort of aid.

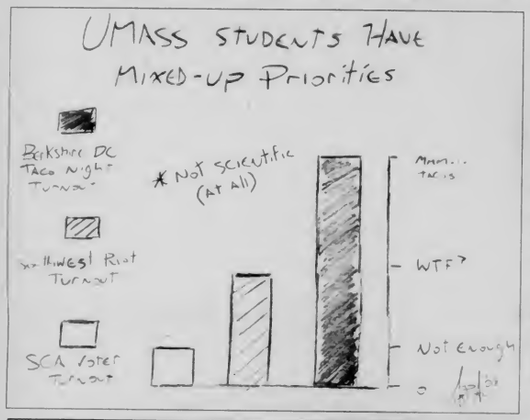
Gary Wolfram of the Cato Institute explains that these programs have only been growing: "Perkins Loans rose in current dollars from $892 million in 1993 to $1.263 billion in 2004" and "Federal Direct Student Loan Program and Federal Family Educational Loans in current dollars went from $12.539 billion in 1993 to $52.197 billion in 2004."

Yet, college tuition costs are still higher than ever. How could this be? Isn't the government a flawless, altruistic God-send here to save our lives from every social ill at the drop of hat? No, it's the very opposite. The truth is, government's excessive meddling in our affairs is exactly what has been driving the cost of tuition straight upwards.

The truth is, government's excessive meddling in our affairs is exactly what has been driving the cost of tuition straight upwards.

Wolfram points out the correlations: "Private four year colleges increased listed tuition prices by more than two dollars for each dollar increase in Pell Grants, and public four-year colleges increased their listed tuition by 97 cents for every dollar increase." Should this not at least raise some questions about how effective these government programs are?

Governmental regulations and weighty subsidies have increased demand for higher education, which then increases tuition costs, which then results in political pressure to expand the already existing (and counterproductive) programs, which in turn further increases prices and on and on the cycle goes.



Think about it, where do things cost the least? In places where the government imposes price controls? Heavily regulated markets? No way. Things are the cheapest at places like Wal-Mart, that bastion of greedy capitalism.

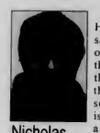
Take cell phones, the cornerstone of our modern, technological information age. You can buy simple cell phones for $30. You can buy ones with video cameras in them, with texting capabilities and all the rest for $60. Why? It's because the free market competes for consumer satisfaction. You think cell phones would be as amazing (and as amazingly cheap) if the government told companies how much they could sell them for? Or if they handed people subsidies, or stamped down miles of red tape? Of course not.

I often wonder when people might begin to realize that the government can't organize life the way we might wish it to be. It's fascinating to me how any time people perceive a problem it is by virtue of this perception alone that legitimates it as a government prerogative. How much monster government do we need? I feel like eventually we'll all have government mandated toilets with automated robotic hands, so we can scrap the figurative hyperboles and actually have the government wipe our asses for us.

Government can't fix tuition costs. It's disconcerting that so many people willfully ignore and dismiss these unconcealed negative consequences perpetrated by our government's ambitious schemes. We should just admit that freedom works better than government control, instead of defaulting to the force that government exacts on us, and garnering every bit of trust and good will towards centralization, regardless of how little it actually deserves.

John Glaser is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at jwglaser@student.umass.edu.

DAILY COLLEGIAN READER POLL



Who is your pick for SGA president?

- ☐ Devin Ashe
- ☐ Malcolm Chu
- ☐ Derek Khanna
- ☐ I'm not voting
- ☐ No confidence
- ☐ There was an election?

Cast your vote online at www.dailycollegian.com!

*COLLEGIAN READER POLLS are unscientific and may not reflect the opinions of the campus community.

Athlete identities

Nicholas O'Malley

In belated honor of Black History Month, it may be necessary to look back on the number of interactions and conversations that many of us did not have with the group that was honored in the past month. In comparison to some parts of America, UMass is as white as a marshmallow on a paper plate in the middle of a snowstorm.

Celebrating racial equality and ethnic diversity in our culture is a wonderful thing, especially in remembrance of past prejudices. It is sometimes hard to acknowledge such things when a number of people simply do not know a great deal of people that are African American.

One would expect to see more diversity among students on the University of Massachusetts campus given the dense population.

The truth is, the number of UMass students that call themselves black or African-American is only 814 or roughly 4.7 percent. This means that unless you went to school in the city, the racial composition of this campus is not unlike that of your predominantly white suburban high school.

If you're part of the student population that lacks the diversity that is always present in the UMass advertisements, it's not your fault.

For those of you that are African-American, this doesn't mean that we don't like you. There simply aren't enough of you to go around. So if you are part of the student population that lacks the diversity that's always present in the UMass advertisements, it's not your fault.

The segment of the population that is not the diversity hodgepodge that the university tries to portray is limited to what they see in the mass media – especially television. But since most television shows can be limited to a "token black guy," or be devoid of any minorities, the primary source of African American exposure in America is in the realm of sports.

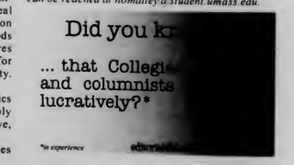
With the major sports, baseball, football, and basketball (sorry hockey, no one watches) dominated by African-American players, a great deal of media figures of the same race can be found on various playing fields. For example, Tiger Woods and David Ortiz are both prominent media figures and top African- American athletes known for their on field successes and off-field popularity. Or are they?

Within the world of African- American athletics lays another topic: Sports figures who are simply placed under that label. Of the athletes listed above, only one is primarily African- American.

This of course raises the question, what defines a person's race? In the case of Ortiz, a fan-favorite member of the Boston Red Sox, his dark skin color immediately marks him as a black athlete. Ortiz was born in the Dominican Republic, a Spanish speaking country in the Carribean and a hotbed of potential baseball prospects.

While Ortiz's skin may mark him as one race, his original language and pride for his country of birth (shown by his participation for the Dominican Republic in the 2006 World Baseball Classic) prevent him from being considered African American.

In contrast to Ortiz, Woods, the man who is considered to be the world's best golfer and an icon for African-Americans, is indeed African- American, but just how black is he?



Eldrick "Tiger" Woods is not fully African – American. Tiger, the world's premier "black athlete" is a quarter black, a quarter Chinese, a quarter Thai, an eighth white and an eighth Native American. Woods' multiracial background forced him to coin a unique term for his ethnicity, "cablinasian."

It's difficult to label Woods as African- American, an ethnicity he refuses to identify with. A great deal of determining the ethnic background of an individual is taking into account the group that an individual identifies with. Much like Ortiz, with his Hispanic origins, the fact that Woods does not consider himself a black athlete should factor into whether he is viewed as an icon among true black athletes.

This is not to say that African- Americans athletes are not prominent figures in America. Basketball players such as Michael Jordan have helped win gold medals at the Olympics. Tennis players such as Serena and Venus Williams have reached number one rankings in the world of tennis.

There is an issue, however, when individuals of different ethnicities are labeled as black, as opposed to the identity that they truly wish to take. It is about time we begin to acknowledge some icons that are "cablinasian" for a change.

Nicholas O'Malley is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at nomalley@student.umass.edu.

It's high time to issue an overdue apology

Nick Milano

On Monday, the Senate passed the Indian Health Care Improvement Act which updated health care opportunities for Indians due to treaties signed with many tribes. Some 1.9 million Native-Americans rely upon the federal government for their medical care.

The bill attracted attention due to an official apology included from the federal government addressed to Native-Americans for decades of mistreatment. With this, an important recognition by the government for past evils, the Senate demonstrated that it still has the fortitude to confess to a mistake and take blame for it.

This does not mean the Senate can rest easy nor pat itself on the back and call it a day. There is plenty of work left to be done whether it is through oversight of the Executive Branch or with the passing of important legislation. But one act that should be considered and is long overdue is an apology to African-Americans for hundreds of years of slavery, segregation and racism.

The enslavement of Africans from the beginning of colonization of the New World through the American Civil War helped the United States to take many steps towards developing a stable economy and government. Once slavery came to a long-awaited end, African-Americans were incredibly disadvantaged.

The US government never apologized for this enslavement and killing of millions of Africans who were stolen from their homeland.

Following the Civil War, a brief era of hope in the form of Reconstruction came to a crashing halt when the federal government again abandoned African-Americans in the name of states' rights.

Born out of the failed Reconstruction, Jim Crow reared its ugly head for many decades, even winning approval by the Supreme Court. The plaintiff in that case was Homer Plessy, a man who was only one-eighth black, but because of the one-drop rule in most Southern states, it did not matter. In addition to the laws that were blatantly and arrogantly race-based, there were also many social programs designed to help everyone left out.

The G.I. Bill is widely credited with creating the modern middle class. Hand in hand with the Federal Housing Administration, it helped guarantee mortgages on new homes for millions of Americans. In regard to the G.I. Bill, many African-Americans from the South were unable to navigate the bureaucracy to claim their benefits and even those who could had to attend schools that severely lacked in comparison to schools that did not open their doors to African-Americans. In regard to the FHA, there were provisions that blocked African-Americans from obtaining the very low interest rates that gave birth to suburbia. Once again, as many times before, African-Americans were left behind, forced to fend for themselves despite massive infusions of aid for white Americans and subjected to years of dehumanizing segregation and racism; they were given a most unequal opportunity for life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.

The United States government never apologized for this enslavement and killing of millions of Africans stolen from their homeland.

More disappointing than all of this is the fact that there are still signs of racism very much alive in the US today. Even with Senator Obama, a major contender for the Democratic nomination, hate crimes are prevalent with 5,020 racially motivated crimes last year alone, according to the FBI's official statistics.

The vast majority of these were committed against African-Americans. Even at this most liberal college in the hippy hamlet of Amherst, a hate crime occurred this past month. The root of this hatred against African-Americans can be traced back to slavery; government has seldom done enough to fight notions of racism. An apology is the least that can be done; yet, no such act has occurred.

As the Senate's actions on Monday showed, and when combined with apologies to both Japanese-Americans and Hawaiians, there is strong precedent for unilateral apologies for past errors and misjudgments. Reparations, an understandably controversial idea, were even granted to interned Japanese-Americans (noteworthy is that the two laws associated with reparations for and an apology to the Japanese were signed by Ronald Reagan and George W. Bush, two of the most conservative leaders this nation has ever seen. In essence, there is a strong case for an apology to be made to African-Americans. Only Native Americans can claim to have been hurt more by the actions of the US government.

Of course, an apology will not heal all the scars. One does not kick somebody for a lifetime, then apologize and expect an immediate friendship. African-Americans have been the recipients of programs like affirmative action designed to help foster advancement, and though they are being terminated prematurely, such polices have to boost the proportion of African-Americans in the workforce and higher education.

Still, the US government has yet to apologize. In this Christian nation, in this time of Lent and Easter, asking for forgiveness for centuries of abuse and neglect should be a given. Why has it taken so long?

Nick Milano writes on Thursdays. He can be reached at nmilano@student.umass.edu.

Can Obama fulfill great expectations?

Wherever there is hope, there is the possibility of disappointment. The past eight years of President Bush has resulted in an impressively low presidential approval rating (about 31 percent) and a new height of public distrust for the government. The country is searching with heightened enthusiasm for a replacement and a quick fix to a wide array of problems.

Michael Phillis

The Democrats are closing in on their answer. The answer packages a young man with what some describe as a cult following that has propelled a no-name candidate past arguably the biggest household name in politics: Clinton.

Barack Obama has attached his candidacy and presidential hopes to an idea of renewed hope. His lofty campaign ideas describe some of the most smiled-upon political personas in American history, John F. Kennedy and Martin Luther King Jr.

With sights set so high for a possible Obama presidency, the thoughts of the past eight years continue to ring loudly in the ears of Americans. However, what happens if Obama does not fulfill those promises. People must be reminded of just how lofty his goals are.

While Obama's charisma may in fact exceed the political genius of Bill Clinton, he will be leading a nation in unnaturally delicate times.

From defeating partisanship, fixing the health care system, ending the war in Iraq, pulling the economy out of a recession, and uniting a divided America, Obama's not only promising he will hit a home run but he is pointing to where the ball is going to land before the pitch is even thrown.

To heal the wounds that have ripped through the middle class, causing anger and mistrust will be difficult. John Edwards, during his latest presidential run brought up a valid criticism when he faulted Obama for an unwillingness to fight.

Maureen Dowd of the New York Times dubbed Obama "Obambi" during some of the earlier months of the campaign. Dowd knew that for Obama to fix the problems that he promised to correct he would have to confront such embedded Washington interests and that a simple everyone-should-get-along approach would not be enough.

Lately Obama has shown an ability that John Kerry in 2004 never demonstrated – the political backbone to defend his character in the face of attacks. The subtle cornebacks and quips during the debates give the electorate hope that Obama will not simply accept the status-quo.

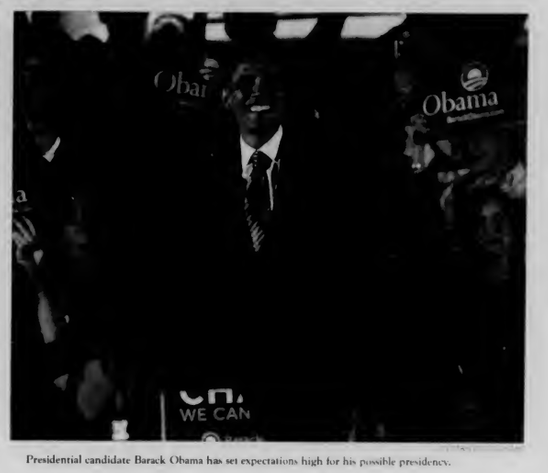
If Obama does succeed, and Jan 20, 2009 is the day America watches the candidate of hope become the 44th President of The United States, there will be an incredible excitement before the sobering experience of a president's first one-hundred days in office.

Undoubtedly legislation will be placed on the desks of the members of Congress and debate will ensue. The Republicans, however, may – even though there power has considerably been weakened – put up a determined fight to make Obama a lame duck.

The Republican Party knows how to press pause on a democratic presidency and if the GOP were to lose two branches of government the animosity of the right may boil over.

Bills will be shot down, compromises ignored and parliamentary procedures abused in order to make the public view an Obama presidency as a failing one. These were the tactics that were used against a moderate Democrat like Bill Clinton throughout his entire tenure as commander in chief.

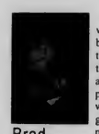
Budgets were overly haggled over, minor scandal after minor scandal was unearthed and investigated past the extent of the scandal and a demonization effort by the right was used to turn a public hostile towards the Clintons. These tactics are largely the reason that Hillary Clinton entered the presidential race with disapproval rating that approached 45 percent throughout the country.



While Obama's charisma may in fact exceed the political genius of Bill Clinton, he will be leading a nation in unnaturally delicate times against a bitter party that he is doubtful to find corporative. History has shown that in politics, after a crisis or disappointment, the leader who promises the most, whether possible or not, is often elected.

If elected, however, the question comes down to whether or not Obama will be able to do what every presidential candidate promises to some extent during their election campaign, to create a mandate of the people to pressure Congress into enacting their political agenda into law.

Obama has promised to follow this method, to apply pressure to make change by uniting America through a message of hope towards a better tomorrow. However, if he goes down the path, even if just slightly, of president Bush and begins pressuring politicians in smoke-filled rooms to further his political agenda, his presidency is bound to be a failure.



If Obama promises greatness and can only produce a slightly-above-average presidency, will the change from his campaign promises to reality make his time in office a disappointment?

Michael Phillis is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mphillis@dailycollegian.com

Presidential candidate Barack Obama has set expectations high for his possible presidency.

Confronting the political-correctness fixation

Brad Leibowitz

Screw everyone who feels the need to be politically correct all the time. I am sick and tired of everyone who is afraid to call certain people and events exactly what they are. From religion, to race, to sexual preference, to looks, this country is too politically correct. So, here is an article which is not.

Now, you might be saying to yourself, "But Brad, aren't you worried that you'll offend someone with a certain comment or choice phrase? In every situation you must aim to cover all bases so you can effectively communicate with people in a moral way."

Note one: I don't share your morals. Note two: As such, I don't care if my morals or comments offend you because neither you nor I know if our chosen morals are correct. Note three: Some issues, no matter how touchy, need to be discussed seriously for what they are.

First of all, anyone who peddles their religion as the highest and only moral path to life is simply a bigot. I have absolutely no problem with your opinions and what you hold to be true. However, when you tell me your opinions are correct because they come from a book written by an invisible being who lives in the sky, you sir, are living your life by the guidelines of a fairy tale. You have no right to consider your morals higher than mine because your morals come from the tablets of a man who parted the Red Sea after frogs fell from the sky and the rivers turned to blood.

Now, I'm not a practicing Christian, but why are Christians always telling me I'm being led astray? Why are they always telling me

I need to find Jesus as if Jesus were lost. Furthermore, just a random thought, but if God is everywhere and in everything, why is He in the church but not in the brothel? If He is in both, why do you or I ever have to go to church?

This might offend you and make you say, "Brad, you're going to hell." Well, through the use of science we have discovered what lies under our feet, the mantle, the asthenosphere and in inner and outer core. I'm sorry, but there is no gaping chasm in which the devil will burn me for all time.

Secondly, I am sick and tired of everyone who talks about homosexual relations through their hat and at the same time hold homosexuals at arms length. Anyone who lays claim that homosexuality is wrong because it's a choice is simply a fool. Homosexual behavior is seen and observed in all natural life. From bats, to bears, to humans, homosexual behavior is natural and deserves to hold a place within society as an acceptable life style.

I don't care if my morals or comments offend you because neither you nor I know if our chosen morals are correct.

I am infuriated with everyone who says things like, "Well, can't you just try being another way?" Or, "What's wrong, you can have civil unions, isn't that good enough?" The resounding answer: No, it's not good enough and no, a person shouldn't have to be any other way. When you say things like this, you come off as a snob, considering yourself morally higher than the person you're talking down to, in other words, a bigot.

My third point rests on the issue of looks. Why is it when you call someone skinny it isn't taken as an insult, however, when you call someone fat it is? Calling someone fat isn't an insult if that person is indeed fat.

In general, people are self-conscious regarding their appearances. However, if you can't accept another person stating a simple truth about you, it is a sign that says you need to take matters into your own hands so next time, your not offended. Some of us are skinny, some of us are fat, get over it.

Same goes for race. I understand the need to sound academic, but calling someone black or white, instead of African- American or Caucasian isn't an insult, it's just another way of stating a fact. Since when did stating an obvious truth become looked down upon in our society? Since when did using simple language to describe something or someone become an outdated practice?

In 2002, Bill Maher, then host of Politically Incorrect, got fired because he said the following regarding 9/11, "We have been the cowards lobbing cruise missiles from 2,000 miles away. That's cowardly. Staying in the airplane when it hits the building, say what you want about it, it's not cowardly. Stupid maybe, but not cowardly." He said this on a show titled Politically Incorrect Need I say more?

Here's the punch line. In the end no one knows anything. In life we are all connected by one immutable truth. All of us are guessing in the dark and as such, no one holds the corner of truth on anything. So as it goes, either we are all wrong or we are all right. No matter the answer, your opinions hold no more value than mine. So, if this article offended you, realize, you are annoyed at the thoughts of a guy who admits to knowing nothing.

I hope I get hate mail.

Brad Leibowitz has no scruples. He can be reached at bleibow@student.umass.edu

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Editorial@DailyCollegian.com

WE NEED NEW BLOOD

Dear editor:

Re: "ALANA's promise," Shaun Robinson, Ed/Op, Mar. 3, 2008

The success of any political party, national or local, is the extent to which it is able to improve the lives of its constituents. It isn't how many slogans you chant or how loudly you chant them as much as what you can actually get done. The ALANA Caucus is a well-funded political coalition on campus and it has been in power for the past four years and what exactly has it accomplished?

The fees are every bit as high as they always were, in fact a proposal to further increase them will be discussed tomorrow in Boston. The roofs still leak, the classrooms are still overcrowded and we all still shlep around dodging potholes and snow banks. The administration still treats us with unveiled contempt and we won't even discuss the local constabulary or why I think that Charlie Scherpa should be indicted for war crimes.

So we had a strike, so we huffed and puffed and wasted a whole lot of student fee money photocopying fists. We are going to miss a day of school next month so we can go to Boston and say that people already receiving six-figure salaries should get more of our money? We are going to use student fee money (that should go to RSOs) to subsidize the Office of Admissions, what is next, using it to fix sidewalks?

ALANA couldn't even get rid of a lame-duck Michael Gargano. I, personally, did far more to encourage his departure.

It is time for a cold reboot. It is time to start over with new people and see if we can actually accomplish some of the things we are chanting about. All of the candidates running have essentially identical platforms and question thus becomes then, that's what you get for reading press releases from the American Civil Liberties Union and citing them without, you know, doing due diligence to check them out.

Nicastro would have the email that Achmed in Damascus sent to Abdul in Baghdad that coincidentally – gets routed through Hoboken, NJ have the same Fourth Amendment protections as American citizens.

In case Nicastro hasn't noticed, there's a war on. Intelligence is a part of that war. By his standards, a listening station in Hawaii in WWII could not have listened to Japanese transmissions because the radio waves went over U.S. territory.

As to the telecoms: The courts have consistently ruled that your phone records are not your property, they are the company's. They aren't listening to you and Aunt Matilda, they're looking for patterns. And the lack of immunity to their helping our government find and stop terrorist attacks is a great big wet kiss to the Trial Lawyers the Democrats' biggest contributors.

After 9/11, the left excoriated President Bush for not connecting the dots. Now, the Left wants to keep anyone from even seeing them – until, of course, the next attack when the left will – like clockwork – ask how we didn't see it coming.

David Hunt
Class of 1990

THE HEAT IS ON

Dear Editor:

As a concerned student and member of the UMass-Amherst community, worries about climate change and the environment are pressing in my life. That is why I am so glad to see our state taking a positive step forward with the Global Warming Solutions Act, filed by Senator Pacheco. The Global Warming Solution Act aims to have the Commonwealth reduce its global warming emissions by 20 percent by 2020 and 80 percent by 2050 – which most scientists agree is necessary to prevent the worst impacts of global warming.

I urge our state senators to use this opportunity to help us keep our world safe and healthy by supporting a strong Global Warming Solutions Act.

Kaitlyn Gorman
UMass MASSPIRG

THE DEBATE NO LONGER GREAT

Dear editor:

Personally, I am quite tired of hearing several members of the UMass Republican Club repeat the phrase "real men protect children" in defense of their embarrassingly petty and irrelevant protest.

If it's really "that simple," what exactly is the UMass Republican Club doing to protect children? Thousands of children suffer abuse and neglect every year in Massachusetts alone, one in every six hundred children will develop cancer before the age of fifteen, and several hundred children are killed every year by drunk drivers.

Yet somehow, these issues have been overlooked by the "real men" of the UMass Republican Club. They aren't volunteering at shelters, raising money for hospitals or educating the public about the dangers of drunk driving.

Under the guise of protecting children, they are simply looking for attention and attempting to salvage what is left of their crumbling student organization, driven into the ground by Mr DeFlumeri and his hypocritical debauchery.

Let's face it: the only children these members of the UMass Republican Club have protected all year are themselves.

Kasara Martin
UMass student

Dear editor:

Re: The RSU speaks out: Radical Student Union Ed/Op, Mar. 4, 2008

As a liberal I am an ardent advocate of free and unfettered speech, more so than most people, and someone who thinks sexual education is important. Yet I find what the RSU is doing irresponsible and reactionary.

Young children go through the student union all the time; tour guides bring prospective students and their families through it, yet they claim it is due to "homophobia and racism" that the brochure is being taken down. It is obvious to most people that this is not the case.

The administration is fighting allegations of UMass as a crazy party school and they (for obvious reasons) do not want pictures of two guys doing it in one of the most travelled places on campus. Since they control the space they get to say what goes, because contrary to what the RSU may believe the University is, in fact, owned by the state and managed by the administration, not them.

Sure, the current Republican Club is the last group that should be making charges of indecency, but regardless, the responsible, adult thing to do would be to take the brochures, which the RSU failed to do.

The RSU needs to get over itself.

Derek A Newhall
UMass student

The Daily Collegian encourages reader responses. Letters to the editor should be no longer than 350 words and can be sent to editorial@dailycollegian.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, MARCH 6, 2008 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Black reveals inspiration, explains new show

Comedian discusses Comedy Central's show 'Root of All Evil'

BY RYAN MCASKILL
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Everyone is trying to avoid the evils of the world, and now Lewis Black is here to help.

"Lewis Black's, Black Root of All Evil," a new show set to air on Comedy Central on March 12 at 10:30 p.m., is a court room style debate. During the debate, two comics take topics and put them on trial as the root of all evil, with Black acting as judge, jury and executioner.

Topics like Oprah vs. the Catholic Church, Donald Trump vs. Viagra, YouTube vs. Porn and Beer vs. Weed, are taken on by comedians like Patton Oswald, Greg Geraldo, Paul F. Thompkins, Kathleen Madigan and Andy Kindler.

Black opens each show with a quick monologue about each topic. He then introduces the "lawyers," or comedians, for each side. Following each side's opening and supporting argument, Black questions them and then has each one state what will happen if their evil is left unchecked in the "ripple of evil." With the arguments finished, Black renders a verdict.

"Root of All Evil" is a smooth mix of script and improv that takes comedians out of their comfort zone. They're not doing stand-up, but rather taking a particular topic and making it funny.

In a conference call on Tuesday, Black spoke about the new show, his career, his new book and why Jesus is his inspiration.

Question: Did you know all of the comics involved with the show before you started?

Lewis Black: "I knew most of them. To be honest, for that show to work it helps a lot to have a chemistry with those people. All you need is a comic there that you don't think is funny and the shows over."

Q: How did the writers strike affect the show?

LB: "We had to work overtime because we were working with a smaller staff. We had a deal in place with the Writer's Guild and were a non-union show."

Q: If you could pick one comedian to argue one topic who would it be, and what is the topic?

LB: "I have like eight comedians in mind and I'm trying to think about what would piss them off the most. The one that immediately comes to mind is George Carlin and Golf. For any topic really it would be George Carlin."

Q: So is there only one root of all evil?

LB: "There are hundreds of roots to evil, not one. What would that be, that's my question to you. [I may make the final decisions] I'm not gonna tell you sh*t. You're watching comedy. Your not gonna get a biblical revelation out of me."

Q: So is everyone angry or is it just you?

LB: I'm the lead piss off.

Q: What do you consider to be your credentials for making rulings on what is the root of all evil?

LB: Really none. Zip. Are you kidding me, I really have nothing. The only one that could count is that I was bar mitzvah-ed. And I've read the whole Bible; I don't remember it so I don't know if that qualifies.

Q: How are the topics not only chosen, but how are they paired?

LB: I came in late to the process because I was touring but it was a bunch of us around a table coming up with things that would make you sick and then Comedy Central came through and weeded some out and then we weeded some out and we were left with about 20 topics. Then we tried to see which worked best against what and then paired them up with a comic that was passionate about it. It all worked, but in the end about 70 percent of what we did came off as well as we hoped.

Q: How did this show come about?

LB: Scott Carter and a guy named David Sacks who had written a number of pilots and I had worked together for a long time on various things. They started working on [Root of all Evil] and brought it to Comedy Central and they wanted to do but said that the only one who could be the judge is me. So I came in and we started working it out.

Q: How exactly do you make your final decisions on which topics are more evil?

LB: "Really I'm just bullshitting. Sometimes I don't like the way somebody debated, sometimes I'm completely prejudiced against one subject and sometimes I just think one guy is funnier then the other."

Q: How is this show different from others that deal with social and political commentary?

LB: "We're funny. I don't think there are a lot of shows that do social, lots do political. The ones that kinda do it from time to time are a joke. What our show has to offer is two funny comedians every week and it shows comics in a different light. They are not doing their stand-up they are being funny about a certain topic. It's a totally different way for comics to work. That's where the uniqueness lies."

Q: How much of the show is improv?

LB: "We couldn't do all improv, we would be in hell. We learned a lot from the pilot like adding more me. It's scripted but I'd say it's 85 percent scripted, 15 percent improv. As we go along I think we'll change to 70/30."

Q: We all know your work from the "Daily Show with Jon Stewart," is there a chance Stewart will argue a topic on your show?

LB: "I would love to get [Jon Stewart] on the show but he has to keep his show propped up. They desperately need him there everyday."

"I'll be back on the Daily Show next week."

Q: Was the viewer text messaging idea yours?

LB: "That was the idea of Comedy Central to make money. I did all of the [voice over recording] for the text messaging, the 'yadda yadd or yadda yadda vote now,' and, ah, I felt like a whore. Like a big whore with lipstick and a bad pink wig and a miniskirt."

"I wanted the audience to vote at the end and then I would yell at the audience, but Comedy Central disagreed and I wanted to keep my job."

Q: How do you keep the show from becoming formulaic?

LB: "We keep fudging with it. We have talked about adding another character, a bailiff that I can banter with. We have comics that are so different it should keep us out of the realm of being a cliché."

Q: You have done a lot in your career: stand-up, playwright, television, movies, broadway. What do you like best?

LB: "Stand-up is my favorite. It's just me and the audience. There is no one that can screw it up but me and maybe a drunk in the seventh row. Working for Comedy Central is great but when I walk out on stage no one can tell me what to do. The only worry is, is anyone going to show up."

Q: You have a book coming out?

LB: "It's a book called 'Me of Little Faith.' It's a book that, combined with Oprah vs. the Catholic Church will bring an end to what was a promising career. It's a book about religion and I'm not sure that was the right move for me at this point with everything rolling along smoothly. I will get slammed because it's not a fire and brimstone critique of religion and also because at points I launch into rants, but it's basically my personal experience with religion. The only think keeping it out of religious book stores is that I use profanity."

Q: How does it feel to finally get recognition after 20 years?

LB: "It's nice to know someone is finally paying attention. It's also an opportunity to put my work out there that I couldn't have before. With the book I am probably the only writer in the history of writing that put a play in his paperback because the they wanted 20 more pages and no one would [expletive] publish this play. It's allowing me to get work out there that I never could before."

Q: What do you consider to be your biggest inspiration?

LB: "Jesus Christ. Can we get that out, can you publish that as the headline 'Lewis Black reveals Christ as his inspiration, but I thought you were a Jew Mr. Black?' If he is going to be in every debate I think I should be able to say he is my inspiration."

"My biggest inspiration is probably guys like George Carlin, Lenny Bruce or Richard Pryor, any of those guys that played it on the edge. I like to go and push as far as I can but not push so hard that you punch a hole in the air and you lose all the air."

Q: Is there any topic that you consider going too far or is everything fair game for ridicule?

LB: "I think everything is open. I can't touch abortion because I can't figure out how. It's the impossible joke. There are comics that do and it's funny. If something becomes way to sacred we're going to get caught up in something we shouldn't get caught up in."

Q: Do you want to focus more on current events or do you want the topics to be timeless [for "Root of all Evil"].

LB: "It's tough with current events because, it's rough to think about but with, like, Britney Spears we didn't know if she would still be alive. You want the nature of the beast to be evergreen."

Q: What are you least angry about?

LB: "What am I not angry about...wow...um...college basketball. March madness makes me the happiest all year. I could sit in a chair and watch every game and be in bliss, until they come out and say Jesus helped them win the game."

Ryan McAskill can be reached at rmcaskil@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY COMEDY CENTRAL

On Lewis Black's new debate show on Comedy Central, called "Root of All Evil," comedians debate topics from Oprah vs. the Catholic Church to YouTube vs. Porn to determine which is more dangerous to society. Black will soon be releasing a book on religion, entitled "Me of Little Faith."

COURTESY COMEDY CENTRAL

Comedian Lewis Black plays the judge on Comedy Central's "Root of All Evil." Most of the show is scripted, but there is room for improvisation for the three comedians, Black and the two "lawyers."

Fleet Foxes folk sound, harmonies shine on new release

BY IAN NELSON
COLLEGIAN STAFF

In recent years, Seattle-based Sub Pop Records has played a big part in marketing a softer breed of pop music churning out brilliant records by The Shins, Vancouver's Wolf Parade, and Seattle natives Band of Horses.

The most recent Sub Pop signee, Seattle's own five-piece Fleet Foxes, further stretch the limits of this mellow style of folk pop/rock, citing influences such as music from fantasy movies, Motown and even hymns. The hymnal influence especially shines through like a setting sun, allowing the blissful harmonies to bask in the golden haze on their new "Sun Giant" EP. The five-song release that was digitally available on Feb 28, captures the newly realized essence of the band.

"SUN GIANT"
FLEET FOXES

SUB POP RECORDS

4/5

After getting bogged down in standard genres and sonic archetypes on their 2006 self-titled debut EP, guitarist Robin Pecknold, 21, decided to take the band in a new direction, putting a harmony at the forefront. The band claims to have grown up on harmonious acts like Crosby, Stills and Nash, The Beach Boys and The Zombies and wish to stay true to those roots.

Pecknold has been trying to stray away from the norm and according to a January article in Seattle's "The Stranger," Pecknold has started to "try and avoid conventional song structures" while the rest of the band has been "avoiding choruses and verses in favor of long vocal rounds and alternating instrumental sections."

Megan Seling, who covered the band for "The Stranger," said that "everyone's voice is an instrument." Fleet Foxes huge five-part harmonies are at the center of their sound. While guitar, bass, drums, and keyboards set the base for the songs and unconventional pop instrumentation such as banjo and mandolin prevail, the entire EP is held together by their opulent vocal harmonies.

The young band shrugs off the buzz they have been receiving, which is not surprising due to the nature of their modest songs about friends and the dreary Pacific Northwest. After pitchforkmedia.com declared their "Sun Giant" EP "Best New Music" (an 8.7 rating out of 10), the band's Myspace page reads "Worst New Music," possibly a stab at the godlike stature Pitchfork Media holds in many a hipster's eye.

The band's sound has been self-described as "minstrelsy" and the songs have been dubbed "baroque harmonic pop jams." Pecknold's superb song craftsmanship evokes scenes of a creaky back porch in the Deep South. The most intriguing track on the EP, "English House," conjures that image, making dramatic dynamic changes between lush vocal parts and multi-layered, mandolin-drenched sections.

The band is expecting to release its first full-length record on Sub Pop June 3, an eleven track venture tentatively called "Rugged Wood." The LP will be devoid of any material found on "Sun Giant," which will be available in physical form April 8, though the MP3s can already be purchased directly from Sub Pop.

Though comparisons to labelmates "Band of Horses" are destined to be made, the difference lies in Band of Horses' mostly guitar-driven rock songs, whereas Fleet Foxes prefer different folk accompaniments and occasional organ-sounding keyboard flares. As their Myspace page states, they are "not much of a rock band."

On Feb 28, Fleet Foxes performed at San Francisco's Noise Pop Festival, the first date on their spring tour. Fleet Foxes will take their act across the country, from California, to Texas, and up the Atlantic seaboard, ending back in the Northwest.

The tour includes a free show at The Grind at Clark University in Worcester on March 30, the closest they'll come to Amherst this time around. Select songs from the "Sun Giant" EP and from the "Ragged Wood" full-length are streaming on their Myspace page, which is an amusing adventure to click through.

It's a good feeling to see a young band live up to their aspirations and to receive credit and praise for it without letting it go to their heads. Now that is what music's all about.

Ian Nelson can be reached at inelson@student.umass.edu

COURTESY MYSPACE.COM/FLEETFOXES

On their newest digital release "Sun Giant," Fleet Foxes successfully blend folk and pop for an EP full of intriguing tracks.

COURTESY NEW LINE CINEMA

Andre Benjamin and Woody Harrelson join Will Ferrell in "Semi-Pro," a slapstick comedy with traditional Ferrell humor.

'Semi-Pro' doesn't hold to Ferrell standard

Strong language overshadows otherwise comedic performances

BY KRISTA COSCO
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

"Semi-Pro" hit theaters on Feb 29 and quickly became the number one movie in America. Starring Will Ferrell and Woody Harrelson, this comedy about a 1970s basketball team brings the laughs. Like many classic Ferrell movies, he is an absurd athlete who can not help but be funny no matter the circumstances.

Ferrell plays coach, owner and player Jackie Moon who will go to any length to get his misfit team, The Tropics, into the NBA. Harrelson plays Monix, the cool, calm foil to Moon. The two play well together both literally and figuratively in the film. Ferrell and Harrelson's characters try to help the team perform to their greatest capabilities.

The Tropics play in Flint, Mich. to a lowly crowd of misfits who themselves are desperate for success. Father Pat, a priest with an attitude, is the referee who is often just as vulgar as the players. With run-of-the-mill players and fans, The Tropics become the people's champions, but in a sports parody kind of way.

Ferrell and Harrelson are also accompanied by several other familiar faces both on and off the court. Andre Benjamin from Outkast was an unexpected player on the team with a fairly large role. Maura Tierney plays Harrelson's love interest. Of course, some of Ferrell's "regulars" show up. Will Arnett ("Blades of Glory") is a commentator, Andy Richter ("Elf") plays Moon's assistant/best friend and David Koechner ("Anchorman") is the commissioner of the basketball league. Like in most Ferrell movies, seeing these actors is inevitable but still surprising.

"Elf" producer, Kent Alterman showed off his knowledge of the Ferrell-style in his direction of this film. It can not be said enough – "Semi-Pro" is classic Ferrell. His crazy hair and wild antics (like fighting a bear for the audience) are what makes him both comical and iconic. Jackie Moon could be straight from a Saturday Night Live skit. With his monotone voice and pauses in just the right places, Ferrell makes Moon a lovable, laughable underdog.

The slapstick comedy in the film is quite risqué at times, with obscene language that gives the movie its deserved "R" rating. Swearing is at an all time high for Ferrell, but with movies like "Superbad" and "Knocked Up" fresh in our minds, it seems normal for a comedy of this magnitude. The language only adds to the humor.

However, "Semi-Pro" is no "Anchorman" or "Old School," which are considered classics amongst college aged kids. It will go down with Ferrell's other "athlete" movies and was definitely good for some laughs. Like many of his movies, seeing it for a second or third time will probably make it even better. "Semi-Pro" is another "Blades of Glory" or "Talladega Nights," both funny movies, but not Ferrell's best.

"Semi-Pro" will not disappoint all those Will Ferrell fans out there, but to those who do not have an opinion about Ferrell may not agree. It is not for those who can not handle grotesque language or for people who want a comedy with a "that could so happen" plot line.

Ferrell does not disappoint, the humor is in your face, the cast is dynamic and if you liked his other sport related movies, be sure to check out "Semi-Pro."

Krista Cosco can be reached at kcosco@student.umass.edu.

Will Farrell stars as Jackie Moon, a basketball player/coach/team owner trying to bring his team into the NBA in "Semi-Pro."

"SEMI-PRO"

STARRING:
WILL FERRELL
AND WOODY
HARRELSON

GRADE: B

MySpace links past to present with historical figure profiles

Cultural icons represented on popular networking site

BY ALYSON WARD
MCCLATCHY NEWSPAPERS

Lots of famous people are on MySpace. But a good number of them are long dead.

Every dead poet, philosopher, artist and past president you can think of has a MySpace page, and many are presented in the first person, as if Thomas Edison and Joan of Arc are lounging at home in their pajamas, posting pictures and updating their blogs.

Benjamin Franklin recommends that his visitors read a bio that's posted on the site. "Maybe," he writes, "it will help people realize that flying a freakin' kite wasn't my greatest accomplishment."

Charles Darwin has gotten tired of people spamming his page. So he'll be approving comments before they're posted, thanks.

And George Washington asks us: "Who rocked the revolution? ... That's right, I did."

The Internet can bridge distances, bringing people together across continents. But now – thanks to some creative souls with a lot of time on their hands – it can also bridge decades, even centuries.

Who thought Henry David Thoreau, who found such solace in solitude, would approve of a social networking site? Or that private Emily Dickinson would find the exhibitionism to blog? And who would have predicted that, in the Internet age, Abraham Lincoln and John Wilkes Booth would be friends?

They'll add you as their friends, too after all, that's what MySpace is all about. But the anachronism raises all kinds of etiquette questions. What do we say to our long-departed heroes? Can we really talk banalities with poet Marianne Moore or Mary Todd Lincoln? Can we tell Alexander the Great to have a great weekend, or urge Napoleon to hang in there 'cause Monday's almost over? But, as with almost everything online, it's best not to overthink things. After all, even the most articulate voices of history seem nearly illiterate on MySpace. Mathematician Rene Descartes he who brought us "I think, therefore I am" introduces himself this way: "Well, I'm a famous philosopher, mathemitician, and scientist lol. I went to college when I was 8 because I am so smart rofl, but later I learned how much of a noob I really was."

And in another circle of MySpace friends, the Founding Fathers hash out some specifics of the Constitution by commenting on each other's blog entries. "I think that's probably a good idea," says Washington about a hard-won compromise. "Let's use that. WOOT."

We couldn't resist dropping in on the heroes of history, the famous figures who have returned to us online for "networking and friends" (except for Pablo Picasso, who also signed on for "dating" and "serious relationships"). Here's what we learned about how the famous faces of the past tend to mingle among the living online:

When you're famous (and deceased), how do you introduce yourself?

Shakespeare: "It is correct. I am backeth! It was once that I had a flight of sleep, but I have arisen to reclaim my art in this new and bright millennium."

Salvador Dali: "At the age of six I wanted to be a cook. At seven I wanted to be Napoleon. And my ambition has been growing steadily ever since."

James Joyce: "I've put in so many enigmas and puzzles that it will keep the professors busy for centuries arguing over what I meant, and that's the only way of insuring one's immortality."

Richard Nixon: "I welcome this kind of examination of my profile, because the MySpace users have got to know whether or not their friend is a crook. Well, I am not a crook!"

Walt Whitman: "If you want purely biographical stuff, I understand there's a really good article about me on Wikipedia."

Ernest Hemingway: "I would like to apologize for one thing. While writing Death in the Afternoon, I sounded like a total jerk, and I promise you, I'm not a jerk. I'm actually a pretty nice guy."

Who's in their Top 8:

T.S. Eliot: Dorothy Parker, D.H. Lawrence, Aldous Huxley. MySpace celeb Tila Tequila

Carl Jung: Albert Einstein, Charles Darwin, H.L. Mencken, Peter Gabriel Tribute Band

Cicero: Odysseus, Roman Emperors Caligula and Domitian, Cookie Monster

Albert Einstein: Isaac Newton, William Shakespeare, Plato, Mister Rogers

Whom they'd like to meet:

John Keats: "Poets, nightingales, people who like my poems, perhaps a doctor to cure me once and for all of this debilitating sickness."

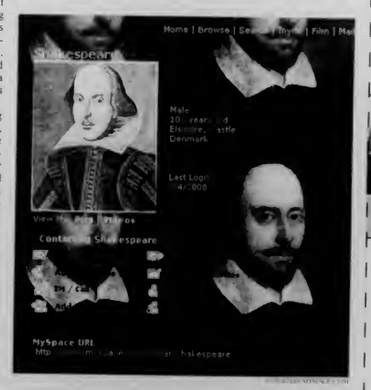
Martin Luther: "I'd also like to meet faithful 'Lutherans' (I TOLD THEM NOT TO NAME THE CHURCH AFTER ME!) and other Christians."

William Shakespeare: "Kenneth Branagh, Patrick Stewart, Marlon Brando (sadly, never will), Al Pacino, Emma Thompson, Mel Gibson (just to slap him)."

Ernest Hemingway: "I'd like to meet all my fans. I'm glad that you all enjoy reading my books. Some of you may not like my books, but hey, there are other authors to choose from aren't there?"

Beethoven: "I am not what you call a people person."

How do you say, Thanks for the add?



Stacey, to poet John Berryman: "i never dreamt i would live to see the day John Berryman left a comment on my page. never also, he died for our sins and washed us clean with scotch."

Terry, to President Abraham Lincoln: "Thank you for the add. I've admired your courage and politics for quite awhile. I also think you were kinda hot when you were younger. ^_^"

Mindi, to poet Charles Bukowski: "oh my bukowski tombto those in the know!)' i thought you were gone ... so glad you're just still drinking!"

Annie, to poet Sylvia Plath: "HI, SYLVIA! I'M GLAD WE'RE FRIENDS. COME READ MY POETRY IN MY BLOG IF YOU HAVE THE TIME. I SHALL NOT CLAIM TO BE ON YOUR LEVEL, OF COURSE, BUT I SING MY SONGS MAINLY FOR MY OWN AMUSEMENT, ANYHOW! ;) BUT YOU MAY ENJOY THEM. LET ME KNOW WHAT YOU THINK."

Nick, to writer Gertrude Stein: "Thanks, Gert."

MySpace users are honoring famous historical figures, like Shakespeare, with a complete profile on the social networking site.

Auto Express
Fast, Quality Service
Student Discount
10% off oil change
Axles
SUNDAY SPECIAL (Every Sunday from 10am to 4pm) : Full Service Oil Change $19.95
FREE WIRELESS INTERNET
Auto Express is your one stop for
MASS STATE INSPECTIONS
with extended hours for your convinence!
Monday Wednesday & Friday 8 am to 6pm
Tuesday & Thursday 8am to 7pm
Saturday 8 am to 5 pm
Sunday 10 am to 4pm
Axels • Brakes • Batteries • Mufflers • Tune-Ups • Full Service Oil Changes
118 South East St. Amherst, MA 01002
413-253-0056
Bring this coupon in to donate 5% of your purchase to the Center for Popular Economics

SKYPLEX
18 Plus College Night
Thursdays
The #1 Place to Party!
3 Different Rooms/3 DJ's spinning the best in Top 40, Dance, House and Select Mashup
THE ULTIMATE HOT BODY CONTEST
$100 Best Male $100 Best Female
The Hottest 19 Plus
SATURDAY NIGHT
Dance Party
NOW HIRING!
Bartenders
Cashiers
Security Staff
Barback
Waitstaff
SATURDAY
SkyPlex 10 Stearns Sq Downtown Springfield 413.827.9000 www.SkyPlex.us

Check us out on Facebook!
Advance your career, develop new skills and help the environment... all in one place.
Hire Smart. Train Well. Out Perform.
Ask anyone who works here, and they'll tell you that the culture at Triumvirate Environmental is hardworking, fun, and exciting.
If you want to work for a company where mentoring and training are keys to success, we'd like to talk to you.
We are currently hiring ENTRY LEVEL ENVIRONMENTAL SPECIALISTS at our Boston, New York & Baltimore area offices.
Interested candidates should call our Human Resources Department at 800.966.9282, or e-mail us at careers@triumvirate.com
TRIUMVIRATE ENVIRONMENTAL

Senior Forbes shines in finale

BASKETBALL from page 1

The seniors responded for the second consecutive year with spectacular performances in their final home game. Seniors Dante Milligan and Etienne Brower each scored in double figures, while Milligan registered a career-high six blocks.

Though the 37-point win was a two-point regression from last season's 39-point senior night blowout of the same team, the win has important postseason implications. With a victory against George Washington this weekend, UMass (20-9, 9-6 Atlantic10) can earn the third seed in next week's Atlantic 10 tournament.

The smashing of La Salle (14-15, 8-7 A-10) also bolsters the Maroon and White's chances of an at-large bid to the NCAA tournament.

Despite the 100-point offensive outburst from the Minutemen, the outcome was by no means defined early in the second half. After entering halftime with a 20-point lead, the Minutemen allowed La Salle to make a charge. At the 17:29 mark, the Explorers cut the deficit to nine.

After trading baskets on several possessions, Forbes made a 3-pointer from the top of the key that ignited a UMass offensive binge from which the Explorers would not recover.

Five minutes later, the Minutemen completed a 14-3 run to retake control of the game and establish a 24-point lead. That lead peaked at 42 points with 28 second remaining.

UMass continued its scoring prowess while LaSalle struggled to create offense. With the Explorers inability to develop a reliable half-court game evident in the second half, Ford said he told his players to focus on their transition offense instead of pressuring heavily on defense.

UMass limited La Salle's effectiveness by preventing second-chance opportunities. The Minutemen dominated the frontcourt with a 22-rebound advantage and 44 points in the paint. The guards also combined for 18 rebounds.

Offensively the Minutemen strove to create shots for their teammates; something that Ford has preached since November.

"We're just playing our style of basketball; practice hard and practice the way we play," Forbes said. "To have 27 [team] assists gets back to one of the things we wanted to accomplish at the beginning of the year."

Before the game, the Minutemen honored its five seniors, including walk-ons Matt Pennie and Nana Ampin who each saw two minutes of playing time. However, Ford was concerned before the game that the emotion of the occasion would get the best of his players, especially his seniors.

"I hate senior night," Ford said. "It's such an emotional night, especially when you're honoring eight people whom I've gotten to know pretty well over the past few years."

But La Salle coach John Giannini had a different perspective.

"It was deja vu from last year and by far our worst loss of the season," Giannini said. "I just hope the A-10 doesn't send us to UMass on Senior Night again next year."

Michael King can be reached at mking@dailycollegian.com.

Hometown rivals meet again

HARRIS from page 1

rack and he can shoot it real well. I give all the credit to Ricky for working hard."

Ricky was all smiles after notching 20-plus points, sending the five seniors out with a 100-63 victory on Senior Night and outscoring his old pal. It was Ricky's defense in the first half that limited Darnell to just one shot (which came nine seconds into the game) and one point in 18 minutes of play.

"Darnell's a great player. Wherever he went I just stayed with him; on his hip, on his chest and wherever he went I stayed right there," Ricky said.

"I've known Ricky for a long time, we basically grew up together," Darnell said. "We played a lot of basketball together growing up, he's like a brother to me."

The two guards didn't go to the same high school in Baltimore, but they were on opposite sides of the court enough to know one another's tendencies. But Darnell downplayed their familiarity with each other as the reason he struggled to get open.

"My game is totally different now than it was in high school. I'm pretty sure that they watched as much tape on us as we watched tape on them," Darnell said. "I really don't like to force shots and I didn't have any open looks so I just swung the ball to my teammates when they were open."

Coming in a losing effort, the senior captain for La Salle didn't really care too much about his late 3-pointers. But the final one – the shot from nearly halfcourt – was something he'll think about once his career is over.

"It's a good accomplishment," Darnell said about tying former UMass player Monty Mack with 331 made 3-pointers. "I definitely give credit to my teammates for getting me the ball. I'm definitely going to be proud of it after the season."

Ricky guarded Darnell for much of the night, but Chris Lowe switched out on him at times. La Salle played mostly zone defense, so Darnell didn't get much of a chance to play defense against him – except for one time early in the second half.

With about 16 minutes left to play, Ricky drove the lane hard in traffic. Darnell shifted over, and planted his feet. One of the officials blew the whistle. The call was against Ricky – a charge.

That moment marked the only time in the entire game the two good friends spoke to each other.

"I asked him if he was alright," Ricky said. "But when we're out there on the court, we're just competing. We're friends off the court."

Darnell probably enjoyed taking that charge, but Ricky got Darnell once on the defensive end, as well. It was a similar play, where Darnell drove the lane against Ricky. But Ricky couldn't take the charge as it was much too late.

"He's so quick, he went past me with his left hand and I couldn't get back in front of him," Ricky said. "He brought the ball behind his hip because I think Tony [Gaffney] stepped up and he had to change his shot. And I swiped at it and luckily I knocked it out and stole it."

Ricky said after the game he was going to call Darnell later to discuss the game.

Darnell should probably let it go to voicemail.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosenswa@dailycollegian.com.

UMass takes on UD

W BASKETBALL from page 10

or a half-court press, Dayton will be ready.

Dayton cruised through the end of the regular season with six wins in its last eight games, only losing to Richmond and UMass. UMass finished the season winning two of its last three games to push for that final A-10 spot. Dacko feels the Minutewomen are playing their best basketball in the last few games, even in the loss to Temple.

"I don't think the score indicates how well we played [against Temple]," Dacko said. "I think we are playing some good basketball right now. I think we are playing with confidence and the last few games we've kept our turnovers to 14ish and if we keep them under 15 we'll be in the ball game."

The winner of this game will face fourth-seeded Charlotte.

Steve Games can be reached at sgames@student.umass.edu

Alisha Tatham is 1-of-4 UMass seniors looking to improve on a disappointing track record in the Atlantic 10 Tournament.

GW, Temple earn first-round byes

A-10 PREVIEW from page 10

teams possess the most dominant players in the league.

In addition to GW and Temple, Xavier (21-8, 11-3 A-10) has the players to return to the NCAA Tournament for the second consecutive season

Sophomore Amber Harris led the conference in blocked shots (77) and also led the Musketeers in scoring with 15.5 points per game.

"It's like survival of the fittest, whoever is going in and making plays is going to be able to move on," Dacko said of the conference tournament.

UMass struggled in A-10 play this season, especially away from home, but the Minutewomen won't need any motivation for this postseason.

The team's leading scorers, Kate Mills and Pam Rosario, will be looking to extend their senior careers. The Minutewomen have no chance of making the NCAA Tournament or the NIT if they don't win the conference tournament, and they don't want to replicate last year's first round exit.

Mills was named to the A-10 All-Conference second team despite being in the top 10 in scoring, field-goal percentage, rebounding, free-throw percentage and blocked shots.

Rosario is a four-year starter and the face of the program. A fierce competitor, she will be playing close to home and have one final chance to prove she can lead her team.

Mike Connors can be reached at mjconnor@student.umass.edu.

Inconsistency to blame for offense's woes

MELONI from page 10

because his presence on the ice hurt the team at times.

"[Recently], Will's been more dinged up than anything else, we're just trying to keep healthy bodies on the ice," Cahoon said. "Will, generally speaking, is someone we look to [offensively]. He's due. We know he's due, he knows he's due. I think you can look for Will to, given the opportunity, be productive this weekend."

And it's imperative for the Minutemen that Ortiz find the scoring stroke that had him stop the league scoring charts early in the season, and fast. Assuming UMass makes the playoffs, New Hampshire awaits them in the first round of the Hockey East playoffs. The Wildcats are good for almost four goals per game while maintaining the best scoring defense in Hockey East at 2.31 goals per game.

Ortiz isn't alone, either. Outside of Quirk and Marcou, no UMass forward has been a viable scoring option for an extended period of time in 2007-08. And that really is what separates the Minutemen from Hockey East's elite. New Hampshire and Boston College know they have players that are going to make plays offensively. Not just get chances, they're going to score goals and they're going to score often.

Naturally, not every player can be a Gerbe or a Radja, but the UMass forwards are more than capable of scoring goals on a regular basis. They just haven't. And the Minutemen have suffered tremendously because of it.

The UMass players and coaches named crashing the net and taking more shots as possible remedies for their offensive woes. But it's been two months and the problem still isn't fixed. Perhaps the Minutemen were playing above their head in the season's early stages, but that doesn't seem like a plausible excuse. Their wins over Notre Dame and Colorado College – both top five teams at the time – are proof of this.

Following a weekend sweep at the hands of Maine two weeks ago, Cahoon commented that his team essentially dominated the Black Bears in every statistical category except for goals – those are fairly important.

With last week's win over Boston University, the Minutemen can breathe a little easier, but there is still a slight that chance that the Minutemen will fall from the playoff picture altogether.

"We are not going to panic. We're going to keep playing. Our guys understand what their strengths and weaknesses are and we're working toward that end," Cahoon said prior to the series with Boston University. "We are a pretty good team. We've got to find a way to be in the mix at the end. And we've got to scramble to do it right now."

Joe Meloni is a Collegian editor. He can be reached at joe.meloni@gmail.com

Senior Matt Burto will play his final home game for UMass Friday night. Like many UMass forwards, he has struggled to find the net this season.

Mass Attack ready for last-place MC

HOCKEY from page 10

playing space will work to the advantage of the Minutemen's top line of center Cory Quirk with wingers Alex Berry and James Marcou.

The trio played very well on Saturday, with Quirk scoring two goals and adding an assist and Berry recording one of each. Cahoon has tried a number of combinations for his top two scoring lines, and he seems to have found a rhythm in the combination of Berry, Quirk and Marcou.

"The last couple of weeks they've been pretty good. They seem to be getting a feel for each other," Cahoon said. "Cory is a rhythm player. When he's in a rhythm, he gets to loose pucks and makes good decisions with the puck."

"[Berry] brings a physical element to the game. He really gets in there, and he's really hard to play against for their defenseman," Quirk said. "He just opens up space for me and Jimmy [Marcou] to do the things we're capable of doing."

If UMass can make it that far, its next opponent is already set. New Hampshire has had the top spot in the conference clinched for weeks, and the Minutemen cannot advance beyond that eighth spot.

UMass will need at least three points this weekend to clinch a playoff spot themselves. If the Minutemen lose either game outright, they will need help from UMass Lowell, who plays Maine in a two-game set.

Jeremy Rice can be reached at jeremyr@student.umass.edu.

23rd ANNUAL HENRY JACOB MATHEMATICS COMPETITION

March 13, 2008 @ 7:00 p.m. room 323 LGRT

Sponsor: Roy Perdue, Class of 1973

FIRST PRIZE = $1500 CASH

SECOND PRIZE = $750 CASH

THIRD PRIZE = $250 CASH

- Sign-up in room 1623D LGRT by 3 p.m. March 13th and bring your UMASS photo ID to competition
- Competition is open to all Freshman and Sophomore degree students on the Amherst campus
- Continuing Education students and students who are closely related to members of the Math/Stat department are not eligible.

2008

BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL - W. SPFLD

Special Student Rate

Local Nationwide Placement

Includes Certification

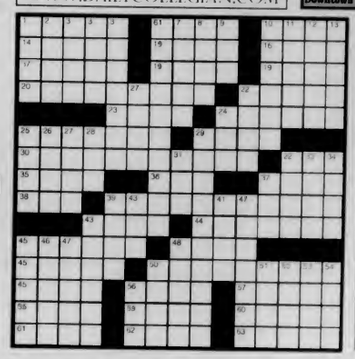
1-800-357-3210

BostonBartender.com

The revolution is coming...

	3			8	4
9			2			7
4		2	9			6
	4		1
	5		6	7		9
				2		8
	8			4	1	3
3			7			2
		1	3		4

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!



ACROSS
1 Bottom line
6 Consider
10 Work units
14 Tasty smell
15 Eyebell impolitely
16 Mystique
17 Spud
18 Shopping center
19 Singer Campbell
20 Close up against
22 Frozen rain
23 Ages and ages
24 Madrid nap
25 "The Blues Brothers" star
29 Practical sci. classes
30 Bluebonds
32 ___ Jose, CA
35 Stretch vehicle
36 Writer Rand
37 ___ gin fizz
38 Tweedle ending?
39 Monastic monk
43 Heavy imbibers
44 Burned with liquid
45 Cavalry swords
46 Ink spot
49 Lacking freshness
50 Stickers
55 Kick out
56 Flaming superspy
57 Aluminum producer
58 Clarinet relative
59 Badgered
60 Legal attachments
61 Hamlet, e.g.
62 Heckerling and Irving
63 Misplaces

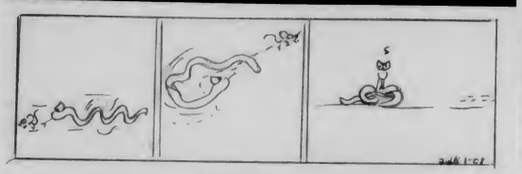
DOWN
1 So long!
2 ___ Roberts U.
3 Dorothy Gale's dog
4 ___ to theft
5 Most substantial
6 Roseau residents
7 Holly smokes!
8 Glamour rival
9 Actor Gibson
10 Aerie builders
11 Holds sway
12 Welcome ___, Cruz, CA
21 London district
22 Bro's bros
24 Took a seat
25 Smooth-headed
26 Toledo's lake
27 Key pre ingredient
28 Mil. welfare org.
29 Overwhelming victories
31 Sandwich bread
32 Lost traction
33 Top-drawer
34 Requirement
37 Letters on Cardinal caps
39 Cylinder diameter
40 Aliens, briefly
41 Desktop image
42 Derisive cry
43 Smell sofe
45 Got to one's feet
46 Antilles island
47 American buffalo
48 Toss about
50 Part of SRO
51 Hodgepodge
52 Sleeve cards
53 Verbal subtlety
54 Give guff to
56 Lingerie buy

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

amherst cinema
Fri, Mar 7 - Thu, Mar 13
4 MONTHS / 3 WEEKS AND / 2 DAYS — Weekdays 2:15 4:45 7:15 9:45; Sat 12:00 2:15 4:45 7:15 9:45; Sun 12:00 3:45 7:15 9:45
There Will Be Blood 2:30 6:00 9:15
JUNO — Fri-Wed 2:45 7:30 9:30; Thu 2:45 9:30; PLUS Sat & Sun 12:30
The SAVAGES — Fri-Wed 5:00 9:30; Thu 4:45
Loves of a Blonde — Sunday 3/9 2:00; Thursday 3/13 7:00
28 Amity St. (413) 253-2547
Downtown Amherst www.amherstcinema.org

PLEASANT STREET THEATER
Fri, Mar 7 - Thu, Mar 13
persepolis — Fri-Tue 2:45 5:00 7:15 9:30; Wed 10:00 2:45 5:00 7:15 9:30; Thu 5:00 7:15 9:30
persepolis — Fri-Tue 2:30 4:45 7:00 9:15; Wed 10:15 2:30 4:45 7:00 9:15; Thu 7:00 9:15
27 Pleasant St. www.pleasantstheater.org
Downtown Northampton (413) 584-5643

Submit your comics!
comics@dailycollegian.com



Submit your classifieds!
(413) 545-3500

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"Are you gonna bark all day, little doggy, or are you gonna bite?"

– Michael Madsen as "Mr. Blonde"

ECOLOGY By Jen Fill

RETRO GEEK By Steve Dickenson and Todd Clark

BLISS By Harry Bliss

"That's ridiculous! What makes you think you were adopted?"

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
You're not a girl, not yet a woman. For the time being you are a gender-neutral, chain smoking poodle.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Although it can be stressful, your hunger for life can best be satisfied by keeping many pots boiling at once.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Read the three step illustrated instructions on the chopsticks package all you want, but you will never learn how to use them.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Buy new bread but keep the old, one is fresh and the other is mold.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
You are ex-excellent. That's not a stutter, you just aren't as good as you used to be, but your excellence will soon return.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Put a goldfish bowl over your head and start training for your future as an astronaut.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Use your free time for something productive such as dancing to Cyndi Lauper or thinking of words that rhyme with orange.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
It's scary how much you remind people of Oprah.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Take ten seconds out of your day to submit a caption at www.dailycollegian.com/caption and you will be saved.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Find cancer's homeless goldfish and drop it in your pants for a squishy yet sensual sensation.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Wise words: he who shaves a scrotum saves a scrotum.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Some mantises pray about their food while others prey on their food. Which do you think is more successful?

IRON HORSE ENTERTAINMENT GROUP PRESENTS
MIKE DOUGHTY'S BAND plus The Panderers
WEDNESDAY, MARCH 12
8:30 PM DOORS OPEN 7:30 PM - BALLROOM
Pearl Street Nightclub
10 PEARL ST. • NORTHAMPTON, MA
TO PURCHASE TICKETS OR FOR MORE INFO VISIT OUR WEBSITE OR CALL:
WWW.IHEG.COM • 413-586-8686

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Montreal Weekend
From $99 Complete.
Best Hotels.
Best Prices.
montrealexpress.net
781-979-9001

APT. FOR RENT

Center of Town 1,2,3 bedrooms. NOW SHOWING for June and Sept. NO FEES. Schedule a showing 253-7879 view apts. at www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

2 Bedroom apartments in Sunderland HEAT, HOT WATER, CABLE and INTERNET INCLUDED! Call ASAP 413-665-3856

Brandywine Apts.
Now Leasing, 1&2 bed-

APT 4 RENT

room apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

Studio 1,2,3,4 bedrooms available. Going Fast, Still guaranteeing for Fall semester. ALL UTILITIES INCLUDED! Call ASAP 413-256-0741

EMPLOYMENT

ACCOUNTANT REPRESENTATIVE, SALES REPRESENTATIVE, STORE KEEPER, CLERK AND SECRETARY NEEDED: Requirement(Computer

EMPLOYMENT

Literate, Along with CV.) for more information write us at: Gina Shoes Limited Email: gina.limited@gmail.com

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext.162

TEXTBOOK BUYBACK STAFF NEEDED FOR $15/HR
Online textbook company needs 20 college students to staff textbook buyback events at local private high schools in May and June. 10-30 hrs/wk with flex hrs to fit your sched. Email resume to winnie.imperio@varsitybooks.com

EMPLOYMENT

SUMMER ON CAPE COD!! The Wychmere Harbor Beach Club is conducting interviews for summer employment on our Cape Cod property March 27, 28, 29 and April 3, 4, 5. Servers, Lifeguards, Beach Attendants and more needed! On-Site Housing is available. Visit our website at www.wychmereharbor.com for available positions and call (508) 432-1000 x129 for details!

Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

SERVICES

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906,1-800-550-4900 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthnght.org.

Concerned About Your Eating?
Do you eat too little? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic, 577-5101

TAPESTRY HEALTH providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling &rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN &

SERVICES

breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable, Safe. 413-548-9992 27 Pray St. Amherst. www.tapestryhealth.org

School a Pain in your eyes?
Headache? Itchy eyes? Trouble reading? An eye exam can be the first step toward relief. Call Eye Care Services at UHS, 577-5383 to learn more.

TRAVEL

Montreal Weekend
From $99 Complete.
Best Hotels.
Best Prices.
montrealexpress.net
781-979-9001

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, MARCH 6, 2008

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Forward play must improve

Massachusetts hockey coach Don Cahoon understands the value of defense. For the Minutemen, defense is not reserved for the two men stationed on the blue line or the one between the pipes. Defense is a team concept, and their success starts with it. It wins championships. In every sport, in every league, if you consistently defend well then you win.

Period.

But if 2006-07 taught the Pioneer Valley anything about hockey, it was that a little offense never hurts. Last season, the Minutemen averaged 2.79 goals per game. While that certainly isn't a great deal more than the 2.69 they're averaging this season, the difference lies in timing and consistency.

Joe Meloni

Once again, the UMass defensemen and goaltenders are keeping their team in games. But in the last two months, the UMass offense has basically disappeared – along with their hopes of home ice in the conference tournament and any possibility of a second consecutive at-large bid to the NCAA Tournament.

In the first 17 games of the season, which ended with the Minutemen ranked fifth nationally and in line to host a quarterfinal series in the Hockey East Tournament, they averaged three goals per game. In the 15 game since, however, offensive output has dropped nearly a full goal per contest to 2.07.

It doesn't matter how good a defense you have, you will not win hockey games if you can't consistently create and take advantage of scoring chances. Especially in a league like Hockey East where players like Nathan Gerbe, Mike Radja and Jon Rheault roam the slot.

Since his team's problems started, Cahoon toyed with different approaches to increase the offensive output. He seems to have found one answer with the top line pairing of center Cory Quirk and wingers Alex Berry and James Marcou. Berry provided very little offensively before Cahoon paired him with Quirk and Marcou. Since, however, he's scored four goals in his last five games while still serving as the physical presence on a smallish UMass team.

But beyond that, no combination has provided UMass with anything resembling consistency.

Sophmore winger Will Ortiz has essentially vanished from the score sheets. He hasn't scored a goal since Nov. 20 and his defensive inconsistency and undisciplined play essentially nullify his efforts if he isn't scoring goals. His health has been an issue this season, but he has also been scratched at times

See MELONI on page 8

It all comes down to this

Regular-season finale with MC to decide fate

BY JEREMY RICE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts hockey team has one weekend left in the 2007-08 regular season and subsequently has one last chance to clinch a postseason berth and add games to the schedule.

A home-and-home series with last-place Merrimack (12-16-4, 6-16-3 Hockey East) is all that stands between UMass (12-14-6, 7-13-5 Hockey East) and its chance to extend the season. The Warriors will come to the Mullins Center Friday night at 7 p.m. before both teams return east for the final game of the series.

The Mass Attack won the first contest between the teams, a 5-1 decision in Amherst, but that game has little relevance now compared to the amount of weight that has been put into Friday night's game.

"This is the biggest game we're playing this year, right now," UMass coach Don Cahoon said. "It's bigger than any game. I don't care if it's the championship game of the [Hockey East] Tournament. We need this game right now."

Few expected the Minutemen's playoff aspirations to come down to the final weekend, but as Cahoon has said, there is nothing they can do about games lost now.

"There's no looking back now," he said after Saturday's 5-1 over Boston University. "We can't do much about what's happened, and no one likes it. We got off to such a good start, and the expectations were so high. No one's more disappointed, when we stop and think about it, than we are."

The Minutemen have little to no chance of earning an at-large bid to return to the NCAA Tournament, despite some impressive wins over New Hampshire, Notre Dame, and Colorado College in December. UMass has fallen out of the national polls and its PairWise ranking has plummeted. Now the only hope for the Maroon and White is a Hockey East Championship.

The only path remaining that will get this team to Boston goes through Merrimack, and winning the first game at home will be crucial.

"I think we all understand that if we win Friday, out future is still in our hands," captain Mike Kostka said.

The Maroon and White now stand in eighth place in Hockey East, two points ahead of Maine for the final playoff spot. However, if Maine and UMass are tied after this weekend, Maine will be headed to postseason play due to a 2-1 advantage head-to-head with the Minutemen.

One of the biggest keys for UMass against the Warriors will be taking advantage of the extra space they have to play in on their home ice – the Mullins Center rink is 10 feet wider than the one Merrimack calls home at the Volpe Center.

"They really like to clog up the neutral zone, and it's a bit harder to do that in a bigger rink, so I think it works in our favor," Kostka said.

Playing against a team that is unfamiliar with surplus

See HOCKEY on page 8

JULIAN TEPPER/COLLEGIAN

Junior center Cory Quirk and the Minutemen end their regular season this weekend with a pair of games against last-place Merrimack. Quirk scored two goals and had an assist in UMass's 5-1 victory over Boston University last weekend.

A-10 Tournament wide open in 2008

12th-seeded UMass takes on fifth-seeded Dayton in first round of conference tourney

BY STEVE GAMES
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It's been a long and hard season for the Massachusetts women's basketball team, but now the Minutewomen find themselves in a viable position in the Atlantic 10 Tournament.

UMass (13-16, 5-9 A-10) earned the final spot in the A-10 Tournament and a matchup Friday night in Philadelphia with Dayton (23-7, 9-5 A-10). Two weeks ago Dayton came to the Mullins Center and had trouble containing Kate Mills, who scored 23 points and grabbed 10 rebounds. The senior forward was a standout on the defensive end as well – she blocked five shots leading UMass to a 56-46 victory.

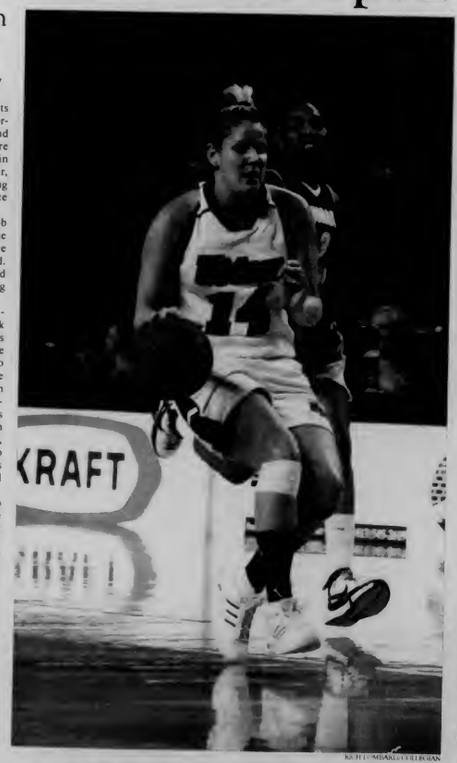
"If you look at the draw for us, we're playing Dayton [and] we've already beaten them this year. I think we matchup well against them," UMass coach Marnie Dacko said. "I think we've got a great deal of confidence playing them."

The Minutewomen were bounced from the first round of the A-10 Tournament last year as a No. 7 seed against St.. Bonaventure, a No. 10 seed. The Minutewomen blew a 16-point lead to the Bonnies. They led, 45-29, with 15:24 left in the game, when the Bonnies went on a 21-3 run to take the lead and lost 63-60. Under Dacko UMass has made the A-10 Tournament every year, but is only 1-5 in six tournament appearances.

"We learned from a year ago that we didn't get by," Dacko said. "St. Bonnies stopped us because we felt we were going to go in and take them."

When Dayton came to Amherst two weeks ago, the Minutewomen were not playing good basketball. Before the game, UMass had lost five of its previous six. They lost an important game to Saint Louis and Duquesne – both teams that were fighting for the last few spots in the A-10 Tournament. However, as bad as UMass was playing Dacko knew they had a chance when Dayton arrived.

"We did a real good job of outrebounding them on the boards, that's something we have to concentrate on," Dacko said. "We've been focusing more and more on boxing out and getting the ball."



The Minutewomen outrebounded the Flyers, 45-26, back on Feb. 23. Not only did UMass control the boards, its defense stood out as it held Dayton to 27.6 percent in the first half. The Minutewomen ended the half on a 17-7 run to go on top 33-21. In the second half UMass's offense went cold and Dayton cut the lead to 48-40. However, the defense again stepped up again, suffocating the Flyers as they scored six points in the final seven minutes of the game.

On Tuesday coach Dacko said she's watch that game tape four times and that was just that day. After looking at the tape Dacko can always find room for improvement. She expects senior forward Pam Rosanio , who went 5-for-15 from the field, to play better.

"I think we have to mix it up, they have a smart point guard [senior Karah] Cloxton and so we have to be ready to change defenses," Dacko said. "We can't just sit back and be complacent."

Dayton has the ability to make a lot of adjustments throughout the game, so whether UMass is in a zone defense, a man-to-man

See W. BASKETBALL on page 8

KEITH OSBORNE/COLLEGIAN

Senior Pam Rosanio and the Minutewomen are looking to go deep in the A-10 Tournament for the first time since UMass coach Marnie Dacko took the team over.

Defending champion Xavier looks to stop top-seeded Colonials

BY MIKE CONNORS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

George Washington and Temple will enter the Atlantic 10 Tournament the same as last year, as one and two seeds, respectively.

The Colonials (24-5, 12-2 A-10) and Owls (19-11, 12-2 A-10) will be favorites to win the tournament – last year they were both eliminated in the semifinals.

"It's a new life, it's anyone's game," UMass coach Marnie Dacko said.

"We've seen Saint Joseph's get to the finals and they had to play in and make it. I think here it's such a tight race, you look at Temple and George Washington, pretty much the top two teams in our league and then I think it's anyone's game from there."

Xavier won last year as a three seed over No. 5 Saint Joseph's, 65-59, before losing in the first round of the NCAA Tournament.

This year's conference tournament could be just as unpredictable. Temple lost by double-digits on the road to Dayton earlier in the season, a team UMass, the final seed in the tournament, beat by double-digits two weeks ago.

The Owls played a difficult non-conference schedule, and although they finished with a 7-9 record, it undoubtedly prepared them for the A-10 schedule, which didn't posses as many ranked teams.

Temple lost games to Georgia, Duke, Stanford, Maryland and Rutgers, all of whc are currently in the Associated Press Top 25, with the latter three all being ranked in the top six.

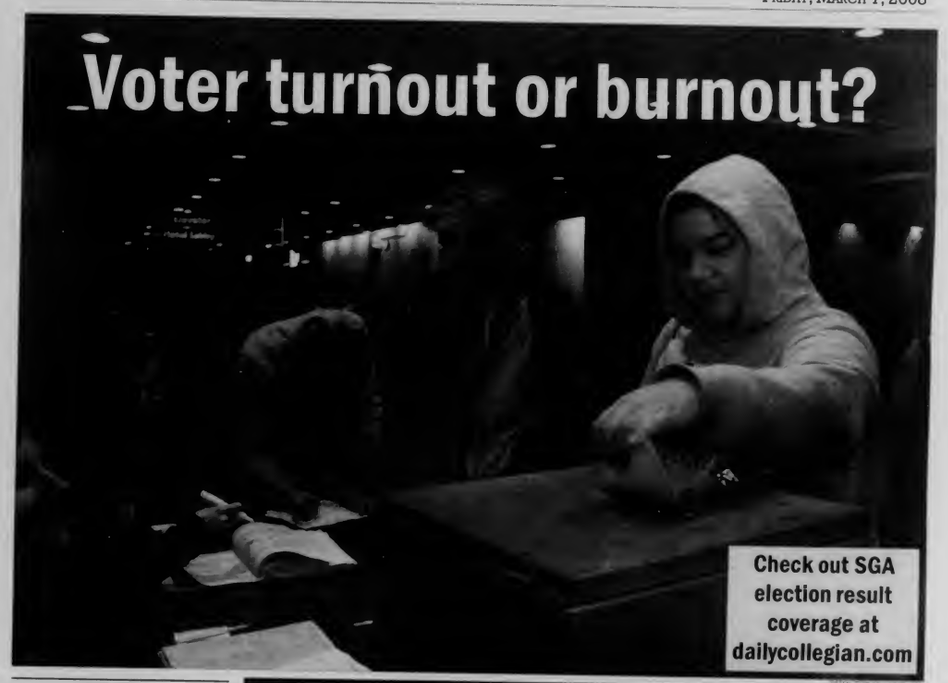
Point guard Ashley Morris leads the Owls in scoring (15.1 points per game) and assists (129) and her team will take on the winner of Richmond and Duquesne.

Though the tournament will be anyone's to win, GW is the only nationally ranked team and will be the favorites. The No. 13 Colonials shared the A-10 Regular-Season Championship with Temple and also played a tough non-conference schedule.

GW defeated Virginia and Texas A&M who are currently ranked and, similar to Temple, lost to Rutgers.

Kimberly Beck was recently named A-10 Player of the Year and leads the offensive attack for the Colonials. The senior point guard led the conference in assists per game (6.32) and also averaged 13.6 points over the regular season.

Beck's teammate, Jessica Adair, was also named to the A-10 All-Conference first team. The junior center used her large frame to provide GW with a low-post scoring threat and currently leads the team with 15.6 points per game.



The A-10 is a conference in which any team can beat any other team on any given night, but the top three seeded

See A-10 PREVIEW on page 8

COLLEGIAN
WEEKEND EDITION

FRI H:50 | SAT H:46 | SUN H:35 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

FRIDAY, MARCH 7, 2008

Voter turnout or burnout?

Check out SGA election result coverage at dailycollegian.com

BY ERIK TABER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Student Government Association (SGA) held their campus-wide elections on Wednesday and Thursday.

Students voted for candidates for SGA President, Student Trustee and Area Governments. Voting was held in all dining commons and the Campus Center.

Three questions were posed to students on the ballot, which regarded the availability of

See ELECTIONS on page 2

INSIDE:

FEATURES
Behind the scenes at the Mullins Center
Page 4

EDITORIAL OPINION
Nelson on: Paying teachers what they're worth
Page 6

ARTS & LIVING
Fan favorite shoots to thrill in Noho
Page 8

THE MASSACHUSETTS
DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 90

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Exter
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Mike Sarkes
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Ryan McAskill
COMICS EDITOR Adam Szajgin
EDITORIAL EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Rice
FEATURES EDITOR Dave Humphreys
PHOTO EDITOR Michael Phillis
WEB EDITOR James Hale
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Szymczak
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Marsea Whooten
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Stephanie McPherson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Skye McIntyre
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Brian Wood
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Garber
ASSISTANT NEWS Michael King
ASSISTANT NEWS Kate Olesin
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Seabury
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Connors
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Meloni
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenswaike
ASSISTANT PHOTO Brian Tedder
ARTS WEB EDITOR Michelle Abbasciano
EDITORIAL WEB EDITOR Leif Walcutt
NEWS WEB EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS WEB EDITOR Steve Games

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUES. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS ALUMNI LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
S.P. Sullivan

COPY EDITOR
Dominic Poli

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

WEB EDITOR
Leif Walcutt

Charges increase for '08-09

BY DEVON COURTNEY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

In a decision made by the University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees Finance Panel, UMass student charges are being raised 3.1 percent.

The decision was made in keeping with the agreement to keep student fee increases below the rate of inflation.

"The increase will generate over $23 million over all of the five campuses," said Robert P. Connolly, spokesman for UMass President Jack Wilson's office.

The increase was made in accord with Wilson's commitment to keep the fees and tuition from rising faster than the rate of inflation.

"For the fifth consecutive year, Wilson has kept the tuition and fee increases underneath the inflation rate, which is currently at 3.6 percent," Connolly said.

Over 20 percent of the projected revenue will be awarded to financial aid for those who attend one of the UMass colleges. The exact amount is predicted to be about $4.6 million.

"This increase in state-based tuition will make it possible for students and their parents to not have to be asked for large amounts of money," said Connolly.

But, many students aren't happy about the extra money they may have to pay because of the increase.

"My mother told me to start looking at Ivy League schools, with what we're going to be paying for me to go to UMass," said freshman Rosie Walunas, who is currently the UVC News producer.

"I really don't like coming here, so I don't like it when fees go up," she said. "It's expensive for a public school."

Massachusetts has increased its funding for higher education and financial aid to $85 million for 2008, an increase of 143 percent from $35 million since 2003.

This is a different approach toward funding for higher education, and is an alternative to a tuition-and-fees freeze in higher education in Massachusetts.

"When tuition froze for five consecutive years, the next generation of students and their families had to pick up the tab," said Connolly.

Historically, Massachusetts has not financially supported its public universities as well as other states. The fee-and-tuition increase is intended to help change that image.

"It's a key underlying issue," said Connolly. "With the UMass campus buildings deteriorating and the large amount of new construction, the state, which is one of the three supplier of higher education funding, can increase its contribution."

Plans to allocate the money indicate that the highest priorities are addressing the costs of campus construction, supplying applicants with larger amounts of financial aid, and the support of the Amherst 250 plan.

"We want to continue to hire faculty and retain faculty, as part of the 250 plan for the next few years," Connolly said.

Devon Courtney can be reached at dcourtne@student.umass.edu.

Mixed reactions surround SGA election

BRIAN TEDDER/COLLEGIAN

Students turned out to vote in Franklin dining hall yesterday, as well as the other DCs and the Campus Center. Polls were open yesterday and Wednesday for students to vote for SGA President, Student Trustee and Area Governments along with other campus issues.

ELECTIONS from page 1

the People's Market via YCMP, imposing a waivable three dollar fee for the campus group Advancing Democracy, and student support of solutions for issues concerning the strike.

Some other issues included fixing campus roads, increasing state funding in the hopes of decreasing student fees, fostering a safer campus environment, improving academic advising, returning the residence halls to students, and prioritizing student organizations.

UMass students could hardly walk through the Campus Center or dining commons without being asked to vote by campaign volunteers. Turnout and student opinions of the election were varied. Some students did their best to avoid the voting tables, while others went out of their way to vote.

The Campus Center had a "solid line of people all day long," according to University of Massachusetts student Matthew Sloan, who worked the voting table.

The Berkshire DC had a similar turnout, according to tablers. The Hampshire DC, however, was busy only in the morning. There was not much of a line throughout the afternoon.

Students' opinions on the election varied by their opinions on the issues at stake.

"I didn't vote because I am not really concerned with any of the issues," said UMass junior Kevin Igo.

Julian Vinocur, an avid supporter of Malcolm Chu and Lindsay McCluskey, was outside the Campus Center all afternoon and got mixed reactions from students he approached.

"I got some students who were really interested," he said. "They were never informed about issues, like the strike."

He also had some students who just brushed him off.

"I got some students who answered 'no thanks' to questions that required more detailed answers," he said.

Students' choice to vote or not was also based on how much they knew about the candidates.

"I don't know anything about them and the only thing I know about the candidates is that they stand outside the DC," said sophomore Jillian Elwell, who didn't vote.

Erik Taber can be reached at etaber@student.umass.edu.

Bomb found in dorm

BY RYAN LILLIS AND BILL LINDELOF
MCCLATCHY NEWSPAPERS (MCT)

DAVIS, Calif. – Classes were held as usual Thursday at the University of California-Davis following the arrest of an 18-year-old student after two pipe bombs were found in his dormitory room Wednesday night, authorities said.

No one was injured in the incident, and university police say they do not believe the student planned any attacks against his dorm or the school. Students who know him told The Sacramento Bee that the incident may be an overreaction to a science experiment that got out of hand.

The discovery about 9 p.m. PST Wednesday resulted in the evacuation of 455 freshmen from seven dormitory buildings. The students spent the night in the common dining area at the complex, and all have been allowed to return except for those in suspect's dorm building, which remains closed.

UC Davis police said they arrested Mark Christopher Woods, 18, a freshman economics major from Torrance, Calif., on charges of possession of materials with the intent to make an explosive or destructive device, and also possession with intent to make such a device on school grounds.

Police said bomb-making materials were found on a table in the dorm room, along with two empty pipe bomb shells, and police Capt. Joyce Souza said she could not reveal what materials were found but that it was "bad stuff."

An examination of it earlier Thursday morning showed that "the way it sits right now, it's not as unstable as we originally thought."

"At first glance, it looked like pretty serious and volatile material," Souza said. "Once they did an evaluation, they were able to determine the way all the materials were sitting, it wasn't as serious because it wasn't mixed."

Souza said that "there's no reason to believe he intended at this point to blow up anything or hurt anyone on campus."

But, she added, "anytime you get a call like this, we're going to err on the side of caution."

The material is expected to be packed up and moved to a U.S. Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives lab in Walnut Creek, Calif. Woods is in custody on campus and is expected to be taken to the Yolo County Jail in Woodland, Calif.

One student who knows Woods and lives two buildings away from his dorm room told The Sacramento Bee that she heard an explosion at about 6 p.m. PST Wednesday. Angela Rho, who graduated from West High School in Torrance with Woods last year, said she "heard a big boom" at 6 p.m.

However, Souza said UC Davis police had no report of an explosion Wednesday night. "We're following leads to determine if or when it may have occurred," Souza said.

Rho and others said Woods has no anti-social leanings and has many friends.

"He has different interests than most people," she said, adding that the explosives may simply have been a science experiment that was "just something to do other than schoolwork."

Other acquaintances of Woods described him as a pleasant young man who had shown no signs of trouble, and some said they believed authorities had overreacted to the incident.

Robert Chao, an 18-year-old from San Jose, Calif., who is Woods' roommate, said he was "in the room at 6 p.m. last night and didn't see anything like" a bomb.

Chao added that he thought the incident was "being blown way out of proportion."

With all the recent tragedies at universities around the country, "they have reason to believe it's one of those things, but it's not that at all," Chao said. "That is the opposite of what he is."

Chao and others describe Woods as someone interested in many subjects and say he was trying to expand his knowledge with science experiments.

Woods was an academic decathlete in high school, and while he was an economics major, he also was taking classes in Russian, Japanese and statistics.

"He had no ill intent like people said he did," Chao said.

Other students said Woods was a kind young man who escorts young female students to their dorm rooms when they go home at night.

"He's one of the nicest guys I know," said Lauren Bachman, 18, who lives in the dorm. "At the end of the day, I trust him."

UC-Davis students stand outside the perimeter of the area where explosives were found in a residence hall room yesterday.

Campus Anti-war Network rallies

BRIAN TEDDER/COLLEGIAN

CAN member Ryan Young, whose aunt and cousin are returning to Iraq for another tour, speaks out against war yesterday.

Parking Services Regulation Reminder

Effective Monday, March 10, 2008, Parking Services is returning to regular hours of parking enforcement. These hours are from 7:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m., Monday through Friday. Valid UMass parking permits are required in all parking lots, with the exception of metered lots. Metered lots are enforced for payment from 9:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m., Monday through Friday.

From 5:00 p.m. to 7:00 a.m., Monday through Friday, on weekends and on holidays, vehicles may park in any legal, non-reserved, non-restricted parking space or lot without displaying a permit. Reserved and restricted parking spaces or lots always require display of a proper permit. These spaces/lots include handicapped spaces, vendor spaces, state vehicle spaces and 24-hour restricted lots (specifically Lots 21, 22, 29, 44, 46, 49, 50, 54, 64P, 67, North Village Apts. and Lincoln Apts.). Parking is never allowed in a tow zone or access lane. For more information, please visit our Web site: http://parking.umass.edu or call Parking Services at 413-545-0065.

THE MASSACHUSETTS
DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 90

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Exter
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Mike Sarkes
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Ryan McAskill
COMICS EDITOR Adam Szajgin
EDITORIAL EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Rice
FEATURES EDITOR Dave Humphreys
PHOTO EDITOR Michael Phillis
WEB EDITOR James Hale
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Szymczak
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Marsea Whooten
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Stephanie McPherson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Skye McIntyre
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Brian Wood
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Garber
ASSISTANT NEWS Michael King
ASSISTANT NEWS Kate Olesin
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Seabury
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Connors
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Meloni
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenswaike
ASSISTANT PHOTO Brian Tedder
ARTS WEB EDITOR Michelle Abbasciano
EDITORIAL WEB EDITOR Leif Walcutt
NEWS WEB EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS WEB EDITOR Steve Games

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS ALOFT LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
S.P. Sullivan

COPY EDITOR
Dominic Poli

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

WEB EDITOR
Leif Walcutt

Charges increase for '08-09

BY DEVON COURTNEY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

In a decision made by the University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees Finance Panel, UMass student charges are being raised 3.1 percent.

The decision was made in keeping with the agreement to keep student fee increases below the rate of inflation.

"The increase will generate over $23 million over all of the five campuses," said Robert P. Connolly, spokesman for UMass President Jack Wilson's office.

The increase was made in accord with Wilson's commitment to keep the fees and tuition from rising faster than the rate of inflation.

"For the fifth consecutive year, Wilson has kept the tuition and fee increases underneath the inflation rate, which is currently at 3.6 percent," Connolly said.

Over 20 percent of the projected revenue will be awarded to financial aid for those who attend one of the UMass colleges. The exact amount is predicted to be about $4.6 million.

"This increase in state-based tuition will make it possible for students and their parents to not have to be asked for large amounts of money," said Connolly.

But, many students aren't happy about the extra money they may have to pay because of the increase.

"My mother told me to start looking at Ivy League schools, with what we're going to be paying for me to go to UMass," said freshman Rosie Walunas, who is currently the UVC News producer.

"I really don't like coming here, so I don't like it when fees go up," she said. "It's expensive for a public school."

Massachusetts has increased its funding for higher education and financial aid to $85 million for 2008, an increase of 143 percent from $35 million since 2003.

This is a different approach toward funding for higher education, and is an alternative to a tuition-and-fees freeze in higher education in Massachusetts.

"When tuition froze for five consecutive years, the next generation of students and their families had to pick up the tab," said Connolly.

Historically, Massachusetts has not financially supported its public universities as well as other states. The fee-and-tuition increase is intended to help change that image.

"It's a key underlying issue," said Connolly. "With the UMass campus buildings deteriorating and the large amount of new construction, the state, which is one of the three suppliers of higher education funding, can increase its contribution."

Plans to allocate the money indicate that the highest priorities are addressing the costs of campus construction, supplying applicants with larger amounts of financial aid, and the support of the Amherst 250 plan.

"We want to continue to hire faculty and retain faculty, as part of the 250 plan for the next few years," Connolly said.

Devon Courtney can be reached at dcourtney@student.umass.edu.

Mixed reactions surround SGA election

Students turned out to vote in Franklin dining hall yesterday, as well as the other DCs and the Campus Center. Polls were open yesterday and Wednesday for students to vote for SGA President, Student Trustee and Area Governments along with other campus issues.

ELECTIONS from page 1

the People's Market via YCMP, imposing a waivable three dollar fee for the campus group Advancing Democracy, and student support of solutions for issues concerning the strike.

Some other issues included fixing campus roads, increasing state funding in the hopes of decreasing student fees, fostering a safer campus environment, improving academic advising, returning the residence halls to students, and prioritizing student organizations.

UMass students could hardly walk through the Campus Center or dining commons without being asked to vote by campaign volunteers. Turnout and student opinions of the election were varied. Some students did their best to avoid the voting tables, while others went out of their way to vote.

The Campus Center had a "solid line of people all day long," according to University of Massachusetts student Matthew Sloan, who worked the voting table.

The Berkshire DC had a similar turnout, according to tablers. The Hampshire DC, however, was busy only in the morning. There was not much of a line throughout the afternoon.

Students' opinions on the election varied by their opinions on the issues at stake.

"I didn't vote because I am not really concerned with any of the issues," said UMass junior Kevin Igo.

Julian Vinocur, an avid supporter of Malcolm Chu and Lindsay McCluskey, was outside the Campus Center all afternoon and got mixed reactions from students he approached.

"I got some students who were really interested," he said. "They were never informed about issues, like the strike."

He also had some students who just brushed him off.

"I got some students who answered 'no thanks' to questions that required more detailed answers," he said.

Students' choice to vote or not was also based on how much they knew about the candidates.

"I don't know anything about them and the only thing I know about the candidates is that they stand outside the DC," said sophomore Jillian Elwell, who didn't vote.

Erik Taber can be reached at etaber@student.umass.edu.

Bomb found in dorm

BY RYAN LILLIS AND BILL LINDELOF
MCCLATCHY NEWSPAPERS (MCT)

DAVIS, Calif. – Classes were held as usual Thursday at the University of California-Davis following the arrest of an 18-year-old student after two pipe bombs were found in his dormitory room Wednesday night, authorities said.

No one was injured in the incident, and university police say they do not believe the student planned any attacks against his dorm or the school. Students who know him told The Sacramento Bee that the incident may be an overreaction to a science experiment that got out of hand.

The discovery about 9 p.m. PST Wednesday resulted in the evacuation of 455 freshmen from seven dormitory buildings. The students spent the night in the common dining area at the complex, and all have been allowed to return except for those in suspect's dorm building, which remains closed.

UC Davis police said they arrested Mark Christopher Woods, 18, a freshman economics major from Torrance, Calif., on charges of possession of materials with the intent to make an explosive or destructive device, and also possession with intent to make such a device on school grounds.

Police said bomb-making materials were found on a table in the dorm room, along with two empty pipe bomb shells, and police Capt. Joyce Souza said she could not reveal what materials were found but that it was "bad stuff."

An examination of it earlier Thursday morning showed that "the way it sits right now, it's not as unstable as we originally thought."

"At first glance, it looked like pretty serious and volatile material," Souza said. "Once they did an evaluation, they were able to determine the way all the materials were sitting, it wasn't as serious because it wasn't mixed."

Souza said that "there's no reason to believe he intended at this point to blow up anything or hurt anyone on campus."

But, she added, "anytime you get a call like this, we're going to err on the side of caution."

The material is expected to be packed up and moved to a U.S. Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives lab in Walnut Creek, Calif. Woods is in custody on campus and is expected to be taken to the Yolo County Jail in Woodland, Calif.

One student who knows Woods and lives two buildings away from his dorm room told The Sacramento Bee that she heard an explosion at about 6 p.m. PST Wednesday. Angela Rho, who graduated from West High School in Torrance with Woods last year, said she "heard a big boom" at 6 p.m.

However, Souza said UC Davis police had no report of an explosion Wendnesday night. "We're following leads to determine if or when it may have occurred," Souza said.

Rho and others said Woods has no anti-social leanings and has many friends.

"He has different interests than most people," she said, adding that the explosives may simply have been a science experiment that was "just something to do other than schoolwork."

Other acquaintances of Woods described him as a pleasant young man who had shown no signs of trouble, and some said they believed authorities had overreacted to the incident.

Robert Chao, an 18-year-old from San Jose, Calif., who is Woods' roommate, said he was "in the room at 6 p.m. last night and didn't see anything like" a bomb.

Chao added that he thought the incident was "being blown way out of proportion."

With all the recent tragedies at universities around the country, "they have reason to believe it's one of those things, but it's not that at all," Chao said. "That is the opposite of what he is."

Chao and others describe Woods as someone interested in many subjects and say he was trying to expand his knowledge with science experiments.

Woods was an academic decathlete in high school, and while he was an economics major, he also was taking classes in Russian, Japanese and statistics.

"He had no ill intent like people said he did," Chao said.

Other students said Woods was a kind young man who escorts young female students to their dorm rooms when they go home at night.

"He's one of the nicest guys I know," said Lauren Bachman, 18, who lives in the dorm. "At the end of the day, I trust him."

UC-Davis students stand outside the perimeter of the area where explosives were found in a residence hall room yesterday.

Campus Anti-war Network rallies

BRIAN TEDDER/COLLEGIAN

CAN member Ryan Young, whose aunt and cousin are returning to Iraq for another tour, speaks out against war yesterday.

Parking Services Regulation Reminder

Effective Monday, March 10, 2008, Parking Services is returning to regular hours of parking enforcement. These hours are from 7:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m., Monday through Friday. Valid UMass parking permits are required in all parking lots, with the exception of metered lots. Metered lots are enforced for payment from 9:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m., Monday through Friday.

From 5:00 p.m. to 7:00 a.m., Monday through Friday, on weekends and on holidays, vehicles may park in any legal, non-reserved, non-restricted parking space or lot without displaying a permit. Reserved and restricted parking spaces or lots always require display of a proper permit. These spaces/lots include handicapped spaces, vendor spaces, state vehicle spaces and 24-hour restricted lots (specifically Lots 21, 22, 29, 44, 46, 49, 50, 54, 64P, 67, North Village Apts. and Lincoln Apts.). Parking is never allowed in a tow zone or access lane. For more information, please visit our Web site: http://parking.umass.edu or call Parking Services at 413-545-0065.

FEATURES

Miracles at the Mullins Center

Behind the scenes with the workers who move the ground under your feet

By Shelby Landeck
Collegian Staff

March may seem like a busy time for basketball and hockey fans, but for the Mullins Center operations crew, it's about as hectic as it gets.

With a crew of about 30 people, switching the Mullins Center floor from hardwood to ice is a daunting task that takes almost five hours to complete.

"Sometimes it gets a little crazy. In the beginning of December, we did four changeovers in three days," said Scott Neas, the crew's operations manager. "One of them was in between a 12 p.m. basketball game and a 7 p.m. hockey game. We brought in all of the 60 people we have on staff and got it done in about two and half hours."

While that sort of effort isn't a usual occurrence, the crew puts in plenty of hours, mostly at night. Starting the 25-step process, including pulling up 250 pieces of "hoop" floor and 600 pieces of subfloor, usually begins at 10 p.m. and ends at 3 a.m., Neas said.

"Setting up and taking down the glass for the hockey games is really the most difficult, we have to lift 150 pound glass slabs into the dashers with suction cups so they can be placed in straight," said Cam Mosgrove, a senior sports management major and two-year veteran of the operations crew.

"It's really power in numbers, sometimes over winter break we have a tough time because kids go home and can't work," explained Neas. "The longest change this year took about 10 hours, simply because we only had a crew of 12 people."

During the school year, Neas said there is rarely a shortage of help from students, many of whom enjoy the job.

> "It's rewarding knowing that we essentially create an arena for two very good Division I teams."
> - Cam Mosgrove

"It's rewarding knowing that we essentially create an arena for two very good Division I teams," said Mosgrove. "It's kind of a sense of pride, really."

And while many of the crew members, like Mosgrove, are proud of their work, being able to see the teams in action always adds to the enjoyment.

"Lots of the kids just come watch the games and then slip down to help with the changeover... the majority of the crew are huge fans," Mosgrove said.

KEITH TOPPLING/COLLEGIAN STAFF

KEITH TOPPLING/COLLEGIAN STAFF

Workers at the Mullins Center begin to remove portions from the 250-part basketball floor.

Neas, also a fan, said there are many events he wouldn't have seen or even known about if it wasn't for his position on the operations crew. One event in particular, 'Walking With Dinosaurs,' has captured Neas' attention.

Being a fan of UMass athletics and events doesn't hurt, because the operations crew is also partially responsible for cleaning up the arena after events like 'Walking With Dinosaurs.'

"Anyone who came to a post event would never eat popcorn again," joked James England, a senior and operations manager.

"I think if people saw the mess that gets cleaned up, they would definitely have a little more respect," Neas added.

The hours may be long and the job not always that easy, but in the eight years Neas has worked there, he has never seen the crew fail to get a job done on time. "There have been close calls when we've finished 10 minutes before the doors open, but it always gets done 100 percent before patrons come in," he said.

Part of the reason things go smoothly for the operations team is how well they work as a group. "When someone can't make it, someone else can usually bring a friend to help out," said Neas.

"Lots of us are friends outside of the crew, I got the job because of one of my roommates and Cam got the job through me," England added.

While the Minutemen inch toward the playoffs, the operations crew will be working the late shift until the middle of March, making sure everyone gets the right playing surface. "Sometimes it feels like we live here," said Neas while Mosgrove added that the long hours are worth it. "It's nice knowing that we get to do this for these guys."

Shelby Landeck can be reached at slandeck@student.umass.edu.

All you need is love

From the bars to the dorms: love and lust at UMass Amherst

By Cara Grannemann
Collegian Staff

JEREMIE WATKINS/COLLEGIAN STAFF

Couples find love in a variety of places on campus. From residence halls to dining commons, UMass has something for every walk of life.

For many college-age students, more of their time is devoted to finding and defining their romantic relationships than to studying. Whether it is texting that cutie from calculus class, calling a girlfriend, or having a one-night stand with that guy from the bar, young adults at the University of Massachusetts are trying to make love work.

When on the prowl for love, one of the most difficult aspects is finding that special someone – even if they might only be special until the next morning. The college scene can be a catalyst for budding relationships and personal interactions.

At this stage in life, where many students are trying to figure out who they are, dating can be an attempt to define one's self through relationships with others. College is a time of experimentation and personal growth, which is why there is such a difference between what people consider the ideal relationship.

For sophomore Alon Rivel, finding that special someone was as easy as attending orientation, where he met his boyfriend of one year, Tyler Dobshinsky. The two were close friends at first, but began dating in March of last year. Now they live together in a dorm on campus. Not only have they overcome the difficulty of forming a relationship, they have overcome the barrier of living together on campus, something straight couples in regular dorms can never do.

For junior Tatiana Ryan, her relationship came at a much faster pace – in fact, in under a year she was married. "We started dating May of my freshman year," she said. "By October, we knew that that was it, so we got engaged. We got married on Dec. 9."

Before meeting her boyfriend, Tatiana had no idea that the relationship in her first year of college would escalate so quickly.

AMANDA LUNDT/COLLEGIAN STAFF

She said, "I always thought that I was going to get married more like [when I was] 26-27 instead of 20... [But] when you know, you know."

On the other end of the spectrum is senior Matt Klypka, who, known by his friends as regular "ladies' man," says the bars are where the real romantic connections are made.

"Needless to say, after a few pitchers at McMurphy's and all the liquid persuasion that I may need, interacting with the opposite sex becomes fluent. Attempting this in any other way may be fatal, if not, embarrassing," he said. "But if you find yourself in that position, just remember: buy the ticket, take the ride."

When looking for love, it is important to look in the right places. And according to Rivel, that is the same on both the straight and gay scenes.

"It really depends on what kind of man you are looking for. UMass has a lot of gay men around but not all are serious relationship material. You really have to allow yourself to first off be comfortable with your sexuality and go out there an explore, just like straight people," he said.

Rivel also recommends being more outgoing and making new friends around UMass.

He said, "I think that if you get to know the right people and get involved on campus that it is not too difficult to meet gay men."

Many students, however, never seem to make it past finding that potential lover. The problem may lie in the fact that there is such a wide variety of what people want from romance.

For Klypka, he finds sanctuary in a place where pet names and P.D.A. (Public Displays of Affection) are left at the door, and according to him, finding true love is the last thing on his mind when he goes out on the weekends.

"The truth is that many people go out in search of the 'big L' and few find it. Go out, rent a Disney movie and save yourself the stress," he said.

Rivel, however, is happily in love and has made a home with his boyfriend, Tyler.

"To be able to live with your significant other at the age of 19 is really something special and we feel very lucky to be able to do so and have it work out so well. Every night no matter what happens I get to snuggle in bed with him."

Though Rivel and his boyfriend have a close relationship in close proximity, they are not exempt from the spats in any other relationship.

"We have arguments because we live together and bicker sometimes just as any couple does, but it is healthy and strengthens our relationship," he said. "We both respect and love each other enough to know how to communicate and give each other space if and when needed."

For sophomore Gabi Blier, her long-distance relationship with her high school boyfriend has been completely dependent on communication.

"We both had to get used to talking more on the phone, but having a relationship based on conversation rather than just being together makes you closer," she said.

For most of these couples, it is the effort put into the relationship that makes it last. Ryan knows how difficult it is to balance her family life. She is a chemical engineer and has a new baby at home, but she makes it work.

"It's hard to juggle homework and stuff like laundry and making dinner. [My husband] always picks up my slack and vice versa," she said.

As a gay couple, Rivel and Dobshinsky have had to put much of the effort in their relationship into ignoring and overcoming the homophobic hostility around them.

"Some people on our floor have not been as supportive as we would have liked because we are a gay couple living together, and that makes people uncomfortable," said Rivel.

Though Rivel said the whiteboard on their door was written on last semester with anti-gay remarks, he doesn't let it get him down.

"This however, just shows us how ignorant people can be and how much education and open-mindedness is important," he said. "We have friends who love and support and respect us and, for the most part, we have no problems with being expressive of our very public relationship."

To Rivel, any adversity he faces while being in a couple is well worth it.

"We are just two people who love each other unconditionally and share a dorm room," he said. "Could you ask for anything more?"

The ideal college relationship is relative to each person, and with almost four years of college experience, Klypka has decided to go it alone.

"From where I'm standing, the single life is like cruising down the highway on a warm summer's evening with the windows down, listening to your favorite song with not a worry in the world," he said.

So, whether looking for true love or just trying to get free drinks, the UMass dating scene can have a lot to offer for every lifestyle.

Cara Grannemann can be reached at cgrannem@student.umass.edu.

EDITORIAL OPINION

Price of education

Hannah Nelson

In the upcoming, much-talked-of presidential election, there are numerous right-wing pundits who claim that the most pertinent issue for the next leader is national security.

Well, the children of today are the leaders of tomorrow, and Generation Y is going to have to clean up some messes the baby boomers will leave behind. So shouldn't a top priority in this country be education? Maryland's board of education certainly thinks so.

The Teacher Academy of Maryland (TAM) is a way for the state to provide itself with future teachers. It is giving high school students the opportunity to take college level education classes for credit in order to get a head start.

For some students the program is a risk-free way of testing out the field of study before committing to it. It doesn't hurt that Towson University is willing to guarantee participating students who pursue a career in teaching $1,000 per year in tuition either.

The University System of Maryland is also hoping to see other colleges in the state join the initiative. The U.S. Department of Education is already on board with TAM's optimism given that they awarded a $6 million grant to the state for the program.

According to the Teacher Shortage Taskforce Proposal that fueled the TAM in Maryland, the goal is to improve the local school system's ability to "grow their own" teachers by implementing the Teach Academy of Maryland (TAM) program in each Maryland school system."

Part of this includes the institution of Future Educator Clubs in the high schools to help provoke interest. The program is not binding, and the worst that can happen for a student that participates is that they know one profession they don't want to pursue and got three credits out of it.

The Maryland program wants to increase teacher turnover which is a benefit to the state as well as to future students. It's a win-win situation. And it should please those who argue that there are plenty of teachers and there is only a lack of skilled or "good" teachers.

The problem isn't the lack of interest in teaching; it's the paycheck that is well known to be falling short. To be cynical, there does come a time when beggars can't be choosers. The bottom line is that having a mediocre teacher in a classroom is better than having no teacher at all.

The Massachusetts Signing Bonus Program for New Teachers was a big flash in the pan a couple of years ago when it went from high praise to high scrutiny for being no guarantee for good teachers but simply a bribe for anyone with qualifications to fill empty positions.

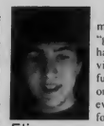
The problem isn't the lack of interest in teaching; it's the paycheck that is well known to be falling short

Towson University is trying to help solve the teacher shortages through offering special programs to high school, and even middle school students interested in the profession.

The college is trying to help build tomorrow's workforce of teachers by providing supportive incentives for the prospective students. The TAM is still in early stages, but assuming the program is successful, it may prove a beneficial step for other states to follow.

Massachusetts is currently underperforming as far as college readiness goes, despite the fact that the state ranks as one of the highest for high schoolers going on to higher education.

According to the National Student Association, within the coming 10 years the nation will be in need of about two million teachers as many look ahead to retirement. Hence the possibility of TAM starting a trend across the country is an encouraging thought.



The fact that it was supposed to attract new teachers has come under scrutiny for it acting as a quick fix to the problem. What's more is that the teachers started to leave after about a year of teaching, which just left the state back where they started. Adjustments were made in the years that followed but nothing has yet had the ability to stick.

Other states had already started to follow the lead of Massachusetts by this time, and it is hardly surprising that as the countdown to retirement has already begun, the time of trial and error is over.

Maryland's twist on education preservation seems to be a great idea in theory as well, and the very fact that it is aligning its future teachers with the students of the present seems to be a good move on their part. For the sake of the classroom, let's hope that TAM is more successful than its Massachusetts counterpart.

Hannah Nelson is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at hnelson@student.umass.edu.

Change the verdict, not charge

Eli Gottlieb

Anyone who knows me can explain my dislike of campaigns for various "good causes." Despite my heavy-handed and seriously-held moral views, I somehow manage to never fully agree with the stated platform or views of any group of campus, even that of the Student Alliance for Israel. So it should come as no surprise to them that I don't approve of the "Justice for Jason" campaign.

The group has organized for the sake of Jason Vassell – the 23-year-old UMass student who was arrested on charges of armed assault with intent to murder and (unfortunately in this case) black.

The group charges that Mr. Vassell is being unjustly prosecuted for the incident in which he stabbed two (unfortunately white) men who assaulted him in MacKimmie Hall. They want his charges and bail reduced, and they want Jason allowed back at UMass to finish his education.

Here in America and especially in Massachusetts everyone obeys the exact same laws – no exceptions.

Now, I can wholeheartedly agree to that last demand. Mr. Vassell does not seem to be a random criminal and to my knowledge had no previous criminal record; he fought back when harassed and assaulted.

This makes him no more a danger to the UMass student body than anyone else. Or rather, no more a danger than anyone else who carries a knife. A surprisingly large number of students do. Let the man finish his degree here at UMass if the courts will allow him his freedom until and during his trial.

However, I must protest the request that Mr. Vassell's charges be reduced by the courts from felony armed assault. Whatever his reasons, Mr. Vassel stabbed two men with a knife. The two men he stabbed required hospital treatment to live. That fully warrants the charge of armed assault.

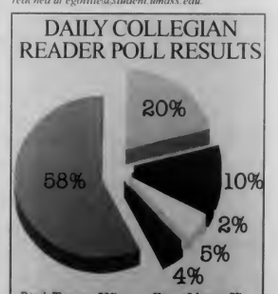
That leaves me wondering why "Justice for Jason" so strongly asks that the charges be reduced. According to a "Justice for Jason" representative tabling in the campus center and a small pamphlet she was kind enough to give me, they believe that the current charges, which also charge one of Mr. Vassell's two white assailants with disorderly conduct; assault and battery with intent to intimidate; and civil rights violations, are biased because of Mr. Vassell's race.

For a moment, let me break from my calm tone into the more emotional tone normal for me. How far have we come from the civil rights movement when we charge that a man who stabbed two other men in a fight with armed assault with intent to murder is racist or racially biased just because the stabber is black and the stabbed "victims" are white?

We have come extremely far, if you ask me. Now of course, the other white assailant should answer to criminal charges of his own. Both of the white men attempted to gain unlawful entry to MacKimmie Hall, harassed Mr. Vassell with a racial slur that long since should have passed from real use, assaulted Mr. Vassell and smashed his window.

Both of them, Jonathan Bosse and Jonathan Bowes, deserve to answer to law and justice. But then so does Jason Vassell, because here in America and especially in Massachusetts everyone obeys the exact same laws – no exceptions. So the "Justice for Jason" campaign should, in my opinion, hold off on their crusade to treat black men equally by not charging them justly.

Still, do not think that simply charging and convicting everyone involved will do justice by this tragic incident. No, the two Jonathan's broke into MacKimmie illegally and assaulted Jason Vassell both because he would not let them in and because he is black.



Mr. Vassell fought for his own safety and that of others, and in the process stabbed the two assailants because he felt he had to. I have heard that this may constitute an illegal "escalation of force" under Massachusetts criminal law, and that claiming self-defense may not exonerate Mr. Vassell.

I have been unable to confirm this, but if true, there lay the injustice: That a man who bravely defended himself against assault from bigots cannot walk free.

Hopefully it is not true, and if it is then hopefully Mr. Vassell's jury will understand the issues at hand and apply their rightful power of jury nullification by refusing to convict.

Jason Vassell rightfully defended himself instead of martyring himself to a legislator's overly abstract notions of morality. Let him receive the justice he deserves: a verdict of "not guilty."

Eli Gottlieb is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at egottlie@student.umass.edu.

Driven to distraction

Katherine Marr

Returning to UMass after spending President's Day weekend at home, my welcome back to Amherst did not begin on a high note. There we were, sitting at a traffic light on Main Street. The light turned green and we started across the intersection when another car made a left turn directly in front of us.

There would've been a collision if we hadn't slammed on the brakes and the other driver hadn't made a sharp turn off the road – where he sat in a snow bank, bewildered, with his cell phone still glued to his ear.

Ever since cell phones came into existence, there's been debate over the issue of talking while driving. More recently, several states have put strict prohibitory laws into effect. In New Jersey, being pulled over for talking on a cell phone is now a primary offense that will cost you a $250 ticket.

Similarly, Connecticut and New York both fine $100 for a first infraction, and New York will even penalize up to $500 for subsequent violations. Massachusetts has a comparable law in the works – on January 23, the House passed a bill that would impose cell phone regulations on Bay State drivers.

All of these aforementioned laws and penalties, though, revolve solely around handheld phones. If you're chatting via OnStar or a Bluetooth device, you're free to hit the road. But does whether you're talking into a handheld phone or a headset really have a significant impact on road safety?

Ever since cell phones came into existence, there's been debate over the issue of talking while driving.

Consider my eventful return to UMass after President's Day weekend. The incident had virtually nothing to do with the driver physically holding a cell phone to his ear.

The left-hand turn was perfectly executed and would have been lauded by any driver's education instructor, if not for the fact that it was into an oncoming vehicle. Why he didn't yield to a car with the right-of-way can most likely be explained by the distraction of the conversation.

Therefore, the larger issue at hand is cell phone use in general. Recent studies at MIT indicate that engaging in any cell phone conversation can put drivers in a problematic "mental fog." Even more importantly, though, is the person – not the device that he or she is using to make the call.

You can be one of two people. There are those who memorized the driver's education manual – and actually retained the information half an hour past the exam.

You program numbers into speed dial, dial only at (red) traffic lights for the purpose of quick conversations and immediately put down the phone if entering a situation that requires your undivided attention.

Several times, I've been sitting in the passenger seat beside a friend who was talking on a cell phone while driving. But as soon as the need arose to pass a pack of trucks or another car cut us off, the phone would suddenly be tossed to me. Thus, I would have an impromptu conversation with whoever happened to be on the line until the driver was in a position to safely drive and talk again.

But if you're the type who is extremely confident in your multi-tasking abilities (you consider simultaneous driving, talking and texting to be a piece of cake), using a hands-free device probably won't impact your overall driving habits.

It's likely that you'll consider yourself equally adept at navigating the roads while searching for your earpiece in the cup holders and repeatedly attempting to get your voice-activated system to actually dial the correct number.

Besides, even if you have a hands-free phone, there are a multitude of other driving distractions. How many times have you gone through the Dunkin' Donuts drive-thru and realized that you didn't unwrap and insert the straw into your Coolatta until you're already on the road?

What about when your six-slot CD rotator has you thoroughly confused as to which disc is where? How about the animal lovers who bring their energetic dogs along for a ride of jumping against the dashboard and windows? What happens to parents when children start a Lego war in the backseat?

In these cases, whether or not there is an accident relies on the driver's behavior. (So, show some willpower and hold off on drinking your Coolatta until you've reached a traffic light.)

Of course, there is the age-old argument that gabbing on a cell phone is the exact same as chatting with someone in the passenger's seat. Except, if you're merging onto Route 16 and suddenly it starts pouring rain and there's an endless parade of tractor-trailer trucks in the left lane, the friend beside you will probably stop hounding you with questions about weekend plans.

The friend on the phone, however, is going to continue rattling off into your ear, clueless that you're trying desperately to avoid being creamed between two trucks.

For all the hype over whether a cell phone law will pass in Massachusetts, will it even make a dent in improving road safety? Just yesterday I saw a woman applying mascara to her eyelashes as she cruised down the street. Maybe she'd learn a lesson if she hit one of the campus's innumerable potholes. But that's another story.

Katherine Marr is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at kmarr@student.umass.edu.

Put a stop to robotism

Matthew M. Robare

Every Saturday at 8 you can find me in the front row of Herter 231 laughing my head off watching Mission: Improvable, UMass's short form improvisational comedy troupe.

Sometimes one of the performers, Cardigan, likes to introduce a game by getting the audience to talk about their feelings. He always points out that emotions are a chief difference between humans and robots.

Sometimes there was a hint of something darker in his voice, as if recognizing our feelings was going to be the way humanity could survive when the robots started secretly replacing us. I have never personally had any trouble with robots, there aren't very many in Vermont, although I took an advanced placement physics class with one in high school (he was salutatorian).

But then inflammatory posters started appearing in the Campus Center, the Student Union, and the various message boards around campus, accusing a UMass student of being a dangerous robot.

The posters were put up by a group calling itself CARE – Citizens Against Robot Equality – and within days another group, calling itself PETAR – People for the Ethical Treatment of Amicable Robots – was putting up fliers of its own, alleging that the CARE fliers were "unwarranted and hateful."

CARE responded with more fliers that depicted the student in question with Terminator and Megatron and one that purported to be issued by the UMass Republican Club (careful readers noticed that the date was a year off).

The war of words unleashed some heavy thinking on my part, challenging my previous – often unconscious – beliefs regarding robots and robotism. I thought of the robots I had grown up watching on film and television – R2-D2, C-3PO, Terminator, K-9, Bender, Tom Servo, Gypsy, Crow T. Robot – only the Terminators were ever evil (although Bender was far from benevolent or helpful).

But a key point in the discussion is that R2-D2, K-9, C-3PO, and Bender were created as property, machines for doing work that could be bought or sold at a human's whim. Terminator was the product of an artificial intelligence and was created for killing humans and the other three were built especially for making fun of bad movies.

PETAR's assertion that popular culture has created a negative image of robots (unless those robots are servants) is certainly warranted. CARE's signaling out of one particular robot among possibly dozens of others on campus as dangerous without evidence (has this student been seen terrorizing campus or attempting to seize control of OIT kiosks? No.) is rightfully condemned.

Lack of emotion has never stopped humans from being afforded their natural rights.

CARE is certainly a robotist organization in asserting that robots should be denied their property rights and the civil rights deriving there from because they are robots.

I mean, until the first robots were built, the main dividing line between humans and other animals (and the reason, in natural law theory, why nonhuman animals have no rights) is that humans have the capacity to reason.

After robots, the dividing line has shifted as human-supremacist philosophers continue to think of new ways to deny robot people there rights, since robots can reason. There was the argument that humans are alive, life being defined as the ability to reproduce combined with a metabolism.

But then robots got metabolisms and figured out how to reproduce. The argument has now shifted to emotions (although some robots have been able to mimic these – Keanu Reeves for example) and the more metaphysical notion of the soul.

While I do not deny that, so far, robots do not experience genuine emotion and I doubt a robot will ever have a soul. The only thing they prevent robots from is guilt at sinning against a God who is very pro-human.

Lack of emotion has never stopped humans from being afforded their natural rights (Hillary Clinton has done rather well for herself) nor has lack of a soul – I mean, Dick Cheney died in 1998 and he's vice president.

But PETAR is no more innocent of robotism than CARE. PETAR essentially claims to represent the interests of all robots. It is a short leap to see that should a robot ever rise to prominence while having interests that generally align with the majority held by humans, that robots will be accused of betraying its model number.

Just like how the humans who hold views similar to many robots are called species-traitors. The reason it is robotism (or anti-humanism, for that matter) is that it is impossible for any organization to represent the interests of all humans or robots.

Humans and robots are individuals and the voluntary associations individuals enter into with each other are their own and nobody else's. Even if several people hold the same opinions about one subject, those opinions are still held by the individual alone and not by a group. For example, if seven people all own the same copy of a book, then each individual person owns a copy of the book, not the group of seven owning the book.

While humans are generally spoken of in individual terms, robots – even by their defenders – are usually spoken of collectively. When we see robots and humans as collectives and not as individuals, each entitled to their dignity as persons – not as robots or as humans – then we become robotist or anti-human.

Matthew M. Robare is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mrobare@student.umass.edu.

The Brew plays moe. aftershow at Pearl Street

COURTESY MYSPACE.COM

Massachusetts-based band The Brew serves as the perfect after party for music fans who seek to mellow out after a high-impact, high-energy musical experience. Their concert is free for fans who attend the moe. show on the same night at the Calvin Theater.

BY HUNTER AMABILI
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Flying down a dark highway in a giant red pickup somewhere between New Hampshire and Massachusetts, drummer Kelly Kane and guitarist Dave Drouin knew they had finally found something.

It was 2002. The two Amesbury, Mass., natives were driving back from their first gig with a brand-new lineup. Six months earlier, the two met up with bassist Joe Plante, and earlier in the month, his brother, keyboardist Chris Plante joined the cause, thus creating The Brew.

Six years and several hundred shows later, The Brew is bringing their age-cured approach to jazz-influenced rock to the Pearl Street Nightclub this Saturday at 10 p.m. The show will follow moe.'s 8 p.m. performance at the Calvin Theater. It has been a long trip for the up-and-certainly-coming band, but their growing fame can be boiled down to their first true assignment as a band.

The first gig. By day it was known as the Oyster River High School cafeteria, but that night, a less-than-a-month-old band would turn that one-star dining commons into a laboratory of musical exploration with a single goal.

"All we wanted to do was express ourselves," said Drouin, guitarist. "We wanted to create an outlet to write good music and perform it live."

Bassist Plante was in charge of sound that night. "There was a four-foot stage and crappy reverb, but I got it up and running." The anxious quartet went on to play a mix of Grateful Dead and Otis Redding covers, but stuck mostly to original music in front of the crowd of 10, their nervous excitement causing the tempos of their songs to race.

Pushing through the six years of music gathered like cobwebs on the mind, one thing is certain: something happened that bonded the four teenagers together that night.

"We have come along in a perfect storm for musicians," Plante said, referring to the technological advances in music, graphic design and Internet networking. The bandmates often log 12-hour days perfecting graphics for Web sites and publicity projects. By doing all the work without outside help, the band saves money, but also assumes a huge responsibility.

"You can't be too hard on yourself, but you have to be hard enough on yourself to keep progressing," said Plante. Joe is often the one responsible for upholding the band's Web site

See THE BREW on page 10

"THE BREW"
MARCH 8
PEARL STREET NIGHTCLUB
10 P.M.
FREE/$8

Sketch-22 to perform

BY JENNIFER LECLAIR
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Sketch-22 performs their first show of the semester Saturday, March 8, in Herter Hall room 231 at 8:00 p.m. Students across campus and the community will gather to watch the comedic talents of University of Massachusetts students. Sketch-22 is the student-run comedy group of Student Valley Productions (SVP) of the Pioneer Valley.

SVP is the umbrella corporation of Sketch-22, Mission: IMPROVable, and Improve with attitude, all groups are student-run and receive funding from the University. The director of Sketch-22 is Danielle Soto and producer is Sam Punia, both UMass students. The group has three performances a semester at Herter Hall. Performances usually consist of 15 to 18 sketches ranging from 10 seconds of nonsense to eight minutes of more-so-sense. Every second of comedic nonsense is written, produced, directed and performed by the entire Sketch-22 group.

Sketch-22 formed after the downfall of the original UMass sketch group, Casual Sketch. The previous sketch group disbanded on campus after members lost interest. However, the tradition of sketch comedy survives on campus as Sketch-22 with an unrelenting vengeance of tears and stomach pain caused entirely by non-stop laughter.

Joseph Heller's popular novel, "Catch-22," is the basis for the group's name. "Catch-22" suggests that one is a victim, regardless of the choice one makes. Along those same lines, Sketch-22 believes that every audience member is a victim to their comedy no matter what choice they make – as long as one shows up to the performance. Sketch-22 also uses a plane as its symbol, further illustrating the connection they created to Heller's novel.

The performances are rehearsed and many are recorded. A sketch "usually tells someone's story, or gives the audience a glimpse into the life of someone or something", adds producer Sam Punia.

Worried that Saturday's performance will be just like any other comedy show seen on campus? Sketch-22 showcases only original acts written by student members and anyone in the community who wishes to contribute. However, not every suggested story makes the cut. Each voting meeting brings in up to 50 different sketches, fully written and ready to be performed. Out of the 50 only approximately 15 to 20 sketches are chosen for each performance, but every performance showcases 15 to 20 new sketches.

Though the group has discussed creating a connection among all sketches in a performance, only one underlying theme has entwined Sketch-22's shows as of yet.

"When we all bring our sketches together to vote on which ones will get into the show, we never really think about themes," said Punia. "The only theme I can think of would be ... comedy. I think comedy is definitely a theme we aim for."

Even more so, Soto adds that the pauses between each sketch allow the audience to react and "laugh as long and hard as they wish," before the next sketch.

The comedic talent encompassed in the group shows a broad range between newcomers and oldies, yet everyone contributes equally to each rehearsal and performance. "I think the range of talent in Sketch-22 is tremendous. We have so many talented writers and performers. Everyone brings his or her own writing and performance style. I think the best part about sketch is that everyone is excited to perform and make people laugh," Punia said.

Soto, a sophomore and psychology major, plans on sketching for the rest of her life.

"I dream of being on Saturday Night Live when your favorite cast was on," she says. Within Sketch-22, Soto runs meetings and organizes performances.

As the producer of Sketch-22, Punia also organizes different events. He is a senior at UMass, studying theater.

Saturday's performance hopes to be "a ridiculous break after a long week of studying," said Soto. Members of Sketch-22 come together as a group to laugh, make others laugh and tell jokes.

According to a laughing Soto, "prepare yourself for big laughs. Expect acts of perversion with fruit, dramatic scenes from a chemistry lab, a lot of screaming, classroom romances and of course, time travel - past and future."

Punia added, "it will be the greatest event in UMass on-campus sketch comedy that you're going to find."

Jennifer Leclair can be reached at jleclair@student.umass.edu

GRAHAM RAE/DAILY COLLEGIAN

Rachel Kador, Mantas Dumcius, Peter Storey and Danielle Soto of Sketch-22 huddle up.

"SKETCH-22"
MARCH 8
HERTER 231
8 P.M.
FREE

The Source

(the sors) n. key to discovering the weekly happenings of Western Mass.

Friday, March 7

FILM

University Productions Concerts' "Something Every Friday" series continues with a presentation of "I Am Legend," the 2007 film starring Will Smith as a scientist who is the sole survivor of a plague that ravages the population of New York City. The free screening takes place at 8 p.m. and 10 p.m. with an encore on Sunday at 8 p.m. Free popcorn and refreshments will be available.

COMEDY

The Five College Improv Comedy Jam takes place in the Weinstein Auditorium at Smith College. The free event features local short-form improv groups and begins at 8.

EVENT

Mount Holyoke College hosts an open mic night at 8 p.m. in Blanchard Great Room. The free show will feature performances by local talents in the realm of music, spoken word and more.

Saturday, March 8

SPEAKER

Acclaimed writer, director, actor and drag-legend Charles Busch will speak in Cole Assembly Room in Converse Hall at Amherst College. The event is free and will be followed by an after party at the Amherst College Rainbow Lounge.

DANCE

Hampshire College's Hip-Hop Collective will present a performance titled "La Femme Expression," a showcase of a variety of female talents from poets to beatboxers to DJs. The event, in honor of women's "herstory" month, will begin at 9 p.m. and take place in the Red Barn. Tickets are $2 at the door.

MUSIC

Jam-band moe. performs at the Calvin Theater in Northampton. The show begins at 8 p.m. and tickets are $26.50.

•

For all who attend the moe. concert, there will be a free after-party concert in the clubroom of Pearl Street Night Club featuring a performance by The Brew. Admission is free with presentation of the ticket stub. If you do not attend the show at the Calvin, tickets will be $8. The show is set to begin at 10 p.m.

Sunday, March 9

MUSIC

At 4 p.m., UMass's Wind Ensemble and Symphony Band, conducted by Laura Rexroth, perform in the Fine Arts Center. Tickets are $10 for the general public, $5 for ages 17 and under and senior citizens and $3 for UMass students.

Compiled by Allie Roth, Collegian Staff

CINEMARK
The Best Seat In Town
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
367 Russell St 413-587-4233
Schedule for Friday 3/07/2008 thru Thurs. 3/13/2008
Purchase Tickets @ cinemark.com

(Midnight Show) - Naked Gun (PG 13)* 12:01am
10,000 B.C. (PG-13)* 1:15 4:00 7:10 8:00 9:45 10:35
College Road Trip (G)* 1:55 4:10 7:00 9:15
Miss Pettigrew Lives For A Day (PG-13)* 1:35 4:20 7:25 10:05
The Bank Job (R)* 1:50 4:40 7:40 10:25
In Bruges (R)* 1:30 7:35
Semi-Pro (R)* 1:05 3:30 4:35 7:05 7:50 9:40 10:20
The Other Boleyn Girl (PG-13)* 1:10 4:25 7:15 10:00
Be Kind Rewind (PG-13) 4:55 10:15
Vantage Point (PG-13) 1:25 4:15 7:30 9:50
Definitely, Maybe (PG-13) 1:20
Jumper (PG-13) 1:00 4:05 7:20 9:35
The Spiderwick Chronicles (PG) 1:40 4:30 6:55 9:25
Fool's Gold (PG-13) 1:45 4:45

* NO PASSES, NO SUPERSAVORS
TICKETS AND INFO AVAILABLE AT CINEMARK.COM

Massachusetts-based band comes to Noho

THE BREW from page 8

and other Internet networking sites.

When behind the comfort of their instruments, the band transforms from webmasters and graphic artists to musicians who still carry the same goal from six years earlier, making good music.

"We're always trying to move forward, keeping ourselves and our fans on the edge," Drouin said. "We have really progressed as songwriters."

The band is influenced by The Beatles, The Police and Pink Floyd, but also classical musicians of the Romantic-Symphonic era, such as master orchestrator Rimsky-Korsakov. Their creation of improvisational melodies over chord changes pays homage to their love of jazz musicians like Oscar Peterson and Stanley Clarke.

The main composer of The Brew's music, Plante, describes his style of writing as "jazz influenced, while keeping a pop sensibility." Plante has studied piano since he was 3 years old, but if it wasn't for a skateboard accident as a 14-years-old he may not have become the player he is now.

"I was on a halfpipe, when I really shouldn't have been," Plante said as he recalled breaking his leg at the beginning of the summer. In order to cheer up his house-ridden kin, Plante's grandfather asked a friend to help Plante learn to play the drums. His friend, 30-year-old Berklee School of Music professor Wes Harris Sr., began teaching Chris the art of music.

Since that summer, two things have happened. Plante began taking music very seriously, and Mr. Harris still comes to teach him every Saturday.

Flash back to August 2006, Lowell, Mass.: The Brew takes the stage in their most memorable show as the opening act for legendary pianist Bruce Hornsby. Looking out over a sea of thousands screaming in anticipation, the band was in shock. "It was a different sound, not discerning individual claps," Plante said of the crowd.

The show was a success. The Brew was voted "Best Opening Act" by fans at BruceHornsby.com and it was at this gig where they met future producer of their newest CD and Bruce Hornsby's saxophonist, Bobby Reed.

The quartet went down to Reed's studio in Virginia for several weeks this fall to record their new album "Back to the Woods," which will be released April 5 at Harper's Ferry in Allston, Mass.

"Simply complex," Drouin said of the album. "A kind of kill your TV settlement, but we have our own take on it."

There is a dual meaning in the title, says Plante. "I've always grown up in the boondocks and every time I go to the city, I find it chaotic. Going back to the woods is a relief. Also, it is a question of how long can we experience population growth and eventually, what is it going to take to get back to the woods?"

Of late, the band puts even more stress on the meaning of their songs. "If no one else is really getting it, what's the point?" said Plante, who looks to steer away from pointlessly abstract material he described as "headiness for the sake of headiness."

To emphasize their heightened sense of lyrical value, the band has also focused on perfecting their vocals. Plante takes on the majority of the lead vocal duties, but Drouin and Joe have pivotal harmonization roles. Guitarist Drouin said the band is like a patient farmer waiting for the cream to rise to the top.

"We try not to take ourselves too seriously," Drouin said. At a show in Maine, the band played a bunch of T.V. theme songs. From watching the YouTube footage, it is truly impressive hearing "The Price is Right" done to the "t."

Over the past few years, the band has been touring the Northeast, playing shows from Portland, to Burlington, to Boston, to New York City. The Brew comes back to the woods of Northampton at the Pearl Street Nightclub on Saturday, March 8.

Living on the road has proven to be quite the lifestyle for the band. They have had to sleep with friends' places in addition to a number of sub-par hotels across the Northeast.

"The last hotel we stayed at was pretty nasty," said drummer Kelly Kane. "The only place we could find was a Motor Inn. When we got in our rooms we noticed the sheets had weird blood stains or something." There was also a mysterious hole in the wall that Kane swore had a camera on the other end. It was avoided in fear that some day they might find a poor quality fetish video on the internet with their faces attached to it, they said.

Between touring and playing, the band is often working on their media Web sites. Beyond that, there is little time for recreation, save a recent mid-tour stop at a movie theater to see Will Ferrell in "Semi-Pro."

"The band has absorbed my life and that's how I want it to be," said Chris Plante.

When the band is on stage, they are in their element. The four instantly morph into seasoned musicians. With the nodding of a head and the raising of a hand, the band throws their music into overdrive, leaving the crowd to pick up the pieces, which is usually done in dancing fashion to the intricate rhythm of the music.

"Joe brings the energy with his wacky antics, Chris is the glue, Dave gives a unique look at our music and I... I guess I'm the grooveholder," said the self-taught Kane.

The quartet will bring their road-tested, mother-approved formula 409 "Back to the Woods" of Northampton this Saturday night, March 8 at 10 p.m. Being an afterparty to the earlier moe. show, The Brew's set will be free for fans coming from the Calvin Theatre. Without a ticket stub from the moe. show, admission is $8.

"We're real excited for the show," said Joe, who will have to duck out early from moe. in order to start The Brew's first set. "We're hoping that maybe some of the guys from moe. might stop by."

Hunter Amabile can be reached at hamabile@student.umass.edu.

UMass returns to diamond in '08 vs. No. 1 Arizona St.

By Mike Connors
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts baseball team hasn't had a winning season since 2003.

Regardless of its results this season, however, the team won't be accused of beginning the season against weak opposition.

UMass will play three road games this weekend against Arizona State (9-0), the top-ranked team in the USA Today/ESPN poll as well as the NCBWA poll.

Not only do the Sun Devils hold an undefeated record, they've made a habit of defeating opponents by large margins this season, outscoring their foes, 95-18.

"They're strong one through six, their pitching staff is good," UMass coach Mike Stone said. "I mean they either have a guy who throws strikes and has good command of all his breaking stuff and his off-speed stuff or they come at you hard with a lot of velocity."

Arizona's climate makes it conducive to playing baseball year-round, and the Sun Devils feature some of the top players in college baseball.

Pitcher Josh Satow and catcher Brett Wallace were both named preseason first team All-Americans, while the latter won the Pacific-10 Player of the Year last season.

Wallace led the conference with a .404 batting average and also led the Pac-10 in slugging percentage, runs scored, hits, RBIs, home runs and total bases.

The junior backstop has carried his success over from last season and is batting .324 this season with four home runs, while holding an impressive .477 on-base percentage.

The ASU hitters are scoring 9.88 runs per game thus far in 2008 but the pitching staff certainly cannot be looked at as a weak point of the team. Overall, the pitchers hold a collective 1.46 earned-run average this season.

Sophomore Mike Leake leads the team with 18 2/3 innings pitched and three wins while Satow leads the team in ERA (1.64) and has one win and a pair of saves.

The Minutemen look to tame the ASU bats this weekend with the starting pitching trio of Mitchell Clegg, Bryan Leigh and Nick Serino – none of whom pitched a single inning for UMass last season.

Clegg, a junior, transferred from Maine and posted a 1-1 record and an ERA of 6.00 last season in 24 innings with the Black Bears.

Leigh didn't see any time on the mound last year and Serino is an incoming freshman who Stone thinks can contribute in a starting role this season.

Serino enjoyed a successful high school career with Malden Catholic High School, posting a 22-6 record, 254 strikeouts and a 1.56 ERA. He will now be facing the toughest competition of his life against a Sun Devil team that has a .306 collective batting average.

Stone's original plan for the No. 1 starter was Jared Freni but the sophomore underwent meniscus surgery three weeks ago. However, he will travel with the team and should be ready soon.

Unlike the other three starters this weekend, Freni has pitched for the Minutemen. Last year he compiled a 3-4 record with a 5.12 ERA, but came on strong at the end of the season.

Though they lack experience in the pitching rotation, UMass will return two key players in the field from last season, both whom will be captains this season.

Catcher Bryan Garrity has been starting behind the plate since he arrived as a freshman in 2005. He hit .240 last season and will be responsible for guiding the young pitchers throughout the lengthy season.

Adam Tempesta has the ability to play second base or shortstop but Stone expects him to begin the season at second. The junior led the team with a .306 batting average last season while also scoring 30 runs and knocking in another 22.

Despite the formidable opponent, Stone looks forward to this weekend.

"We like to have people who like to play the best, and we use it as recruiting incentive," he said. "[Arizona State's] one of the best teams in the country right now so it'll be a great challenge. It will be interesting to see how our guys respond to that."

Mike Connors can be reached at mjconnors@student.umass.edu.

CRISTIAN GOMEZ/COLLEGIAN

UMass opens its season today for the start of a three-game series against Arizona St., the top-ranked team in the country. The Minutemen look to have their first winning season since 2003.

Minutemen hope to secure bye in A-10s start in conference play to re-enter the discussion for an at-large berth. A victory over the Colonials would assure UMass of the third-seed in the A-10 Tournament, which runs from March 12-15 in Atlantic City, N.J. If Richmond loses to Xavier (ranked No. 8 in the country) on Saturday, the Minutemen can still get a bye in the first round even with a loss against GW.

BASKETBALL from page 16

The Colonials have played much better basketball of late, and look to continue that tomorrow and help spoil UMass's strong season. GW has won four of its last six games following a seven-game losing streak.

"George Washington is a tough place to play. We are going to be playing for a lot, and a lot is at stake," Ford said. "They are playing their best basketball and have made some adjustments the last couple weeks with their basketball team."

The four most recent wins for the Colonials came against some of the upper-tier teams in the conference. George Washington handily beat Rhode Island – a team ranked in the Top 25 for several weeks – by 17 points and topped Richmond, a team tied with UMass for third in the conference. The first of the four big wins came against Dayton in a narrow victory over a team that was once-ranked No. 15 in the country.

In last year's meeting between UMass and GW, the Minutemen escaped the Mullins Center with a 91-84 victory. Chris Lowe (seven points, seven assists) and Gary Forbes (16 points off the bench) helped secure the victory.

The two are expected to lead UMass this year, as well. Forbes led all players with 26 points and 11 rebounds in the win over La Salle, and Lowe became just the third player in school history to record a triple-double with 14 points, 10 rebounds and 14 assists.

Maureece Rice, the starting point guard for the Colonials, had a career-night against UMass last season with 30 points. But this season has been a struggle for the senior, with his scoring average below 10 points per game. He'll defer the majority of the scoring responsibility to a pair of junior forwards, Rob Diggs and Wynton Witherspoon – the two players averaging double figures for the Colonials.

How UMass handles the duo in the low-post will likely decide the outcome – and possibly its NCAA Tournament hopes.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@student.umass.edu.

Pozar, UMass to face Brown, Siena in busy weekend slate

By Scott Feldman
Collegian Staff

Today's matchup between the Massachusetts tennis team and Brown University pits two teams going in opposite directions. The Minutewomen are on a four-game losing streak, while Brown has gone 4-0 over the same span.

UMass (3-6) is in Providence, R.I., to try to snap both streaks and reverse its negative momentum when it faces Brown (5-4). Play begins at 3 p.m.

After Brown, UMass heads back to Amherst to face Siena this Saturday at noon in one of its few home games this month.

The Minutewomen's last matchup is one they would like to forget. Last week, Boston College shut out UMass, 7-0, in a dominant performance. This was the most recent loss in a four-game skid that included losses to Army (4-3), Dartmouth (7-0) and Cornell (4-3).

Meanwhile, the Bears have played well of late. After starting out the year 1-4, Brown has been excellent in its previous four games, defeating strong teams in Boston University (6-1), Rhode Island (7-0), Bucknell (7-0) and Syracuse (6-1).

History is not on the Minutewomen's side; Brown boasts a 13-0 record against UMass dating back to 1980.

If performance against a common opponent is an indicator, the Minutewomen are in trouble. UMass was shut out when it faced BC, but when Brown faced the Eagles on Feb. 10, the lost, 4-3.

To avoid stretching their losing streak to five games, the Minutewomen must get solid play from their top two singles positions. Freshman Candynce Boney, who plays in the second singles position, has been a revelation in her first year. She has gone 6-3 in singles matches against top-flight competition and has earned three awards for her play this season. She has been named the Atlantic 10 Player of the Week for Feb. 19-26, in addition to being named Rookie of the Week twice. Boney will likely face off against Brown's junior Sara Mansur in a key matchup.

Each player has faced off against BC's Dasha Cherkasov; Boney took her to the brink in the first set losing 7-6(2), but was swept 6-0 in the second set. When Mansur faced Cherkasov, she lost 6-3 in consecutive sets. If Boney can play Mansur as well as she played Cherkasov in the first set, she has a strong chance to get UMass a point.

Masha Pozar has been the top singles performer for the Minutewomen this season, but it's been an up-and-down few months for the Slovenian senior. Pozar is 4-5 on the season and is coming off of a 6-1, 6-1 loss against BC's Lana Krasnopolsky. This weekend her most likely opponent will be Bianca Aboubakare, who lost to Krasnopolsky 6-3, 3-6, 6-2. Pozar will have to be in top form to bring UMass a point closer to the upset.

Including today's road match, the Minutewomen will be on the road for eight of their next 11 games.

Scott Feldman can be reached at sfeldman@student.umass.edu.

Minutewomen drop close match late to Dartmouth

By David Brinch
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's lacrosse team came within five minutes of snapping its three-game losing streak against No. 13 Dartmouth yesterday in Hanover, N.H.

In a game defined by back-and-forth scoring and tough defensive play, the Minutewomen fell short; as the Big Green went on to win, 9-8.

UMass (1-4) never trailed in the game, until Kathleen Wallace scored the game-winner for Dartmouth (3-1) with just five minutes to play in regulation.

"We definitely feel like we won the game, despite the box score," coach Alexis Venechanos said. "Overall, I am very proud with the way our team competed and played."

Dartmouth	9
UMass	8

UMass held the advantage in draws (14-5), but were not successful in securing ground balls or registering shots on goal -losing the shots on goal battle, 23-14.

"We did a great job winning the draw. Winning possession and on [the] attack, we took the shots we wanted to take so, as a coach, I couldn't ask for anything more," Venechanos said.

Three attackers scored in double figures for UMass, as Kaytlin McCormick, Melynda Zwick and Stephanie Hopkins all found the net. Defensively, Julie Papeleo caused two turnovers and two groundballs, including a turnover that gave possession back to the Minutewomen with just under a minute to play. But UMass was unable to get a shot off before time expired.

UMass came out strong offensively, jumping out to a 2-0 lead in the first eight minutes of the game. Zwick found Jeannettee Villapiano for the first score, while McCormick scored her first on the day less than five minutes later.

Midway through the first half, the Big Green answered with a pair of goals from Eliza Bennett (three goals) and Katherine Chiusano (three goals, one assist), before both teams added another pair of goals tying the game at 4-4 at halftime.

McCormick added her second goal four minutes into the second half, putting the Minutewomen up by one before Bennett added her second goal for the Big Green four minutes later, tying the game at five.

Zwick and Hopkins added back-to-back goals 18 seconds apart to put UMass up 7-5, attempting to put the game out of reach for Dartmouth.

After a Big Green goal, Zwick scored her third goal of the game to restore the lead to two with 17 minutes left to play.

But on a free position shot, Bennett recorded her 10th goal of the season to cut the lead to one, and Chiusano followed with a goal of her own to tie the game at 8-8 with just under six minutes remaining.

Just 48 seconds later, Wallace had the unassisted game-winner for Dartmouth.

"It was a back and forth game, some goals here, some calls there, but for the most part, this was a normal lacrosse game," Venechanos said.

"I think moving forward this is a young team, and we are going to use this as a learning experience."

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu.

Track teams in Beantown

By Sam Grossack
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's and women's track and field teams travel to Boston to compete in separate major events this weekend.

The women race at the ECAC Championships, while the men run at the IC4A Championships.

The men will send 13 qualified athletes to compete in the state's capital. Tyler Cotto will run in the high hurdles, Josh Boone will run in the 1000-meter run, Andrew McCann in the 3000-meter run, and Nicolai Naranjo and Jesse Regnier will show what they can do in the 5000-meter. In addition to those runners, the Minutemen will have eight other athletes competing in two relays, the 4x880 and the distance medley.

Men's coach Ken O'Brien looks forward to the prestigious event.

"It is the biggest and second-best collegiate track and field championship meet in the United States, second only to the NCAA Championships," he said, referring to the IC4A Championship.

O'Brien hopes his team comes away with several points at the event, as well as at least a few athletes that will qualify to compete next week at the NCAA Championships.

At this meet, over 90 colleges will be represented from a region stretching from Northern Maine, as far south as North Carolina and as far west as Pittsburgh, Pa..

The Minutemen face the toughest competition on the East Coast, and will look to gain some recognition. This meet, along with the NCAA Championships next weekend, is one all athletes dream of competing in, and those athletes who missed the opportunity this year will look to work even harder next season.

The women's team competes in a meet just as important at the Reggie Lewis Center in Boston. This meet is against the elite competition from the Eastern College Athletic Conference and is quite an honor for the few distinguished women who will be competing.

The Minutewomen have several athletes looking to continue their strong seasons, including junior Kristen Bakanowski.

UMass coaches are constantly looking to get more athletes into these qualifying events, and though the school will be supported well, it, like all schools, is always looking to improve.

Sam Grossack can be reached at sgrossac@student.umass.edu.

UMass to host Harvard

Minutemen hope to rebound from loss to Yale, top Ivy League Crimson

By Michael King
Collegian Staff

Entering the season, The Massachusetts men's lacrosse team knew entering the season it would go as far as its offense would take it. Following an 8-4 victory over Hofstra, the Minutemen looked to have the potential for a special season and rose to No. 16 in the Nike/IL media poll.

However, UMass dropped a 7-4 decision at Yale last weekend after the Minutemen had trouble maintaining possession and developing offense from set-piece situations.

Now back to Garber Field and having fallen out of the poll, the Maroon and White want to prove it is the team that handily defeated the Pride and not the one that looked anemic offensively last Sunday.

"They were disappointed; you put a lot into it then you don't come out on top," UMass coach Greg Cannella said of his players' reaction to Sunday's loss. "Obviously as a coach you want to see that. Hopefully they have the wherewithal to improve."

The Minutemen (1-1) face a young and inexperienced team in cross-state rival Harvard (1-1) Saturday afternoon.

Though Saturday's battle features the Bay State's only two Division I lacrosse programs, Cannella does not place more emphasis on beating Harvard than any other team on the schedule.

"I don't think it's any more special to me or any of us," Cannella said. "All of these games are very important. Every game we try to prepare the same way. If you try to prepare differently, it can become a problem."

Harvard has a new coach and a large roster turnover from last year's 5-7 campaign. In addition to the bevy of scorers lost to graduation, the Crimson lost faceoff specialist John Henry Flood – one of the nation's best in the faceoff circle in 2007.

UMass lost 11-of-14 draws against Yale. But Cannella hopes his team can take advantage of the Crimson's inexperience at the position. Expect junior Joe Reale to retain the primary duties, but the coach also wants to get junior Nick Glasser and freshman Stephen Zorkers involved. Sophomore Bobby Hayes lost two faceoffs on Sunday.

"We have a lot of faith in Joe," Cannella said. "But you gauge that decision on how the game is going. You have to make a change if you're not winning them and that's why we put Bobby in there."

Yet even when the Minutemen had possession in Sunday's loss, the team struggled mightily to create consistent scoring chances during six-on-six situations. It is unclear if the offensive unit will improve over time since several of the group's expected key components are serving indefinite suspensions.

"You need everyone to be able to go 100 percent, but also be unselfish," Cannella said. "When you talk about guys needing to do more, they can misjudge that and hold the ball a little too long and that will cause trouble too. I tell them just to do their job and have faith that everyone will do their job as well."

The attackers played well in both games while the midfielders struggled to aid the offense. The midfield by nature plays an important role in transition offense – a part of the game nearly nonexistent for UMass last weekend.

"I think transition offense and scoring the 'easy ones' is very important," Cannella said. "I think in the college game, defenses and goalies are better than they've ever been, so it's become hard to consistently score six-on-six. You have to score as many of those goals as you can. We only had one against Yale, and against Hofstra we had three or four. So it makes a big difference in your scoring total."

Regardless of UMass's offensive struggles, the team's defense has played well enough in both games. Adding the fact that Harvard lost its top four scorers from 2007, the Minutemen should deliver another impressive performance on defense.

In fact, Cannella hopes his defense can develop into a weapon to cause turnovers. Though, he is careful to tell his players not to risk too much in front of their own net.

"I don't think you encourage it, but the guys playing in front of [UMass goaltender] Doc [Schneider] know that if they do take a chance at some point that Doc's there to back him up," Canella said. "So there's a certain comfort level that they have so they don't have to play tight, where if they give their opponent an inch the ball will be in the back of the net."

Michael King can be reached at mking@dailycollegian.com

Junior attackman Tim Balise (Right) and the Minutemen take on Harvard tommorow afternoon at Garber Field. UMass was ranked No. 16 in the country before losing its last game against Yale.

Sports Fridays, get your weekly dose of Maroon and White. Wash it down with a bowl of Wheeties.

YES COMPUTERS
Apple Specialist

In downtown Northampton!

Now featuring the ASUS Eee PC

The Pioneer Valley's premier Apple- and Asus-authorized dealer.

- Ultraportable: 7 inches and 2 pounds.
- Over 40 built-in programs, including a full office suite.
- Rugged, shock-resistant design.
- Simple, intuitive, Linux-based operating system.
- Built-in wireless Internet.

Present this coupon for $50 off any Asus Eee PC!
expires 3/7/08

$395!

Yes Computers | 38 Pleasant St, Northampton, MA | 413-585-0007

Comix

"I MAY NOT AGREE WITH YOUR OPINION, BUT I WILL SMACK YOU IN THE FACE IF YOU OPEN YOUR MOUTH AGAIN."

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Montreal Weekend
From $99 Complete.
Best Hotels.
Best Prices.
montrealexpress.net
781-979-9001

APT. FOR RENT

2 Bedroom apartments in Sunderland HEAT, HOT WATER, CABLE and INTERNET INCLUDED! Call ASAP 413-665-3856

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

Studio 1,2,3,4 bedrooms available. Going Fast, Still guaranteeing for Fall semester. ALL UTILITIES INCLUDED! Call ASAP
413-256-0741

Hobart Condos 3 Bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, phone (internet access), in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for June and Sept. NO FEES. 253-7879 www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

INFORMATION

Free Ride to Church & back in Dwight Chapel Van. Be at Haigis Mall @ 10:00am or Converse Hall @ 10:20am Sundays. www.dwightchapel.org See you there!

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided.
1-800-965-6520

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

Office Assistant on Nantucket Island this summer. Run errands, recieve inventory, computer data entry, answer telephones. Salary plus housing. Fax RESUME to 508-228-8778 or mail to Rafael OSONA PO box 2607, Nantucket MA 02584 telephone: 508-228-3942

ACCOUNTANT REPRESENTATIVE, SALES REPRESENTATIVE, STORE KEEPER, CLERK AND SECRETARY NEEDED. Requirement (Computer Literate, Along with CV), for more information write us at Gina Shoes Limited Email: gina.limited@gmail.com

SERVICES

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthright.org.

SERVICES

Concerned About Your Eating?
Do you eat too little? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic, 577-5101

TAPESTRY HEALTH providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling &rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable, Safe. 413-548-9992. 27 Pray St. Amherst. www.tapestryhealth.org

School a Pain in your eyes?
Headache? Itchy eyes? Trouble reading? An eye exam can be the first step toward relief. Call Eye Care Services at UHS, 577-5383 to learn more.

TRAVEL

Montreal Weekend
From $99 Complete.
Best Hotels.
Best Prices.
montrealexpress.net
781-979-9001

ACROSS
1 Small freshwater duck
5 Follow secretly
9 Lingers
14 New Haven school
15 Ancient Peruvian
16 Legislative rider
17 Displaced
19 Valerie Harper sitcom
20 Run
21 Christmas barrier
23 Profit's opposite
25 Neither's partner
26 Papal emissary
30 Attribute to 35 Sun-lit courtyards
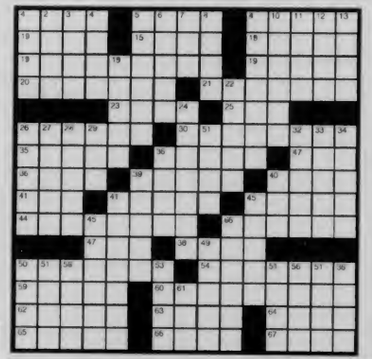
36 Construct
37 Lyric poem
38 Counterfeit
39 Poet Aleighieri
40 Entirely
41 Pouchlike structure
42 Funnyman Feldman
43 Ostriches' kin
44 Jerkwater
46 Confused state
47 Social insect
48 Downpour
50 Singer Etheridge
54 Shine lustrously
59 On one's toes
60 2/14 love token
62 Dwelling
63 Smelt
64 Racetrack numbers
65 Landed estate
66 Impresses greatly
67 Nuisance



DOWN
1 Keyboard goof
2 Lawman Wyatt
3 Toward the sheltered side
4 Lascivious look
5 Step cautiously
6 Feeds the kitty
7 Chill
8 Noblewoman
9 Military leader
10 Stick
11 False god
12 Commotion
13 Unforeseen obstacle
18 Mediterranean republic
22 Remus or Sam
24 Stroll jauntily
26 Cowboy's rope
27 Cain brother
28 Meal prayer
29 Purpose
31 Urban area
32 Melted (out)
33 Standard of perfection
34 Rib
36 Prohibits
39 Pub missiles
40 Advanced deg
42 Hideous creature
43 Angry dispute
45 Pageboy or bouffant
46 Coe and Bannister
49 Having the look of love
50 Address for a queen
51 Napoleon's isle of exile
52 Author Uris
53 Declare openly
55 Octagonal sign
56 Forceful trend
57 Linemen
58 Snug retreat
61 Fuss

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

This is the Strudel box.

Place your breakfast pastry here.

Continuing & Professional Education
UMassAmherstOutreach

Summer Session 2008

Don't Wait- Jump Start Your Career This Summer

Session I: June 2 - July 10
Session II: July 14 - Aug 20

Online Gen Ed's
Small Classes
Great Faculty

PLAN AHEAD!
UMassULearn.net

WONDERMARK By David Malki

Frizzle and sizzle.

		1			6			9
				7		4		1
	8	4			5	2
8							2
	4		8		3		9
	9							3
		8	3			7	1
1		5		8
4			2			3

Quote of the Weekend

"The first time I set eyes on Mary Swanson, I just got that old fashioned romantic feeling where I'd do anything to bone her."

— Jim Carrey as "Lloyd Christmas"

Caption Contest

Winning Caption Submitted by: Anna Lustberg

Next week's contest will start on Monday.
See the picture and submit captions at www.dailycollegian.com/caption

"Daaaamn...should not have dropped that stink bomb!"

Horoscopes

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Hey pee diddy, sing a little song while you urinate.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
You are the cutest little llama out there. You're the dolly llama.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Your posture has taken a U-turn for the worse. Stand up straight or enter the realm of Quasimoto.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
It doesn't have to be someone's birthday to bake a giant cake and hire a stripper to pop out of it.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Impress people by bringing bubbles to a party. Drunk people are like six year olds, it'll blow their minds.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
You will inducted into the Viking Hall of Fame for pillaging your friend's supply of bottled water. Vikings must stay hydrated.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
You are like air, you're popular everywhere. Except underwater.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Stop throwing rotten tomatoes at others when really it's your own performace you're upset with.

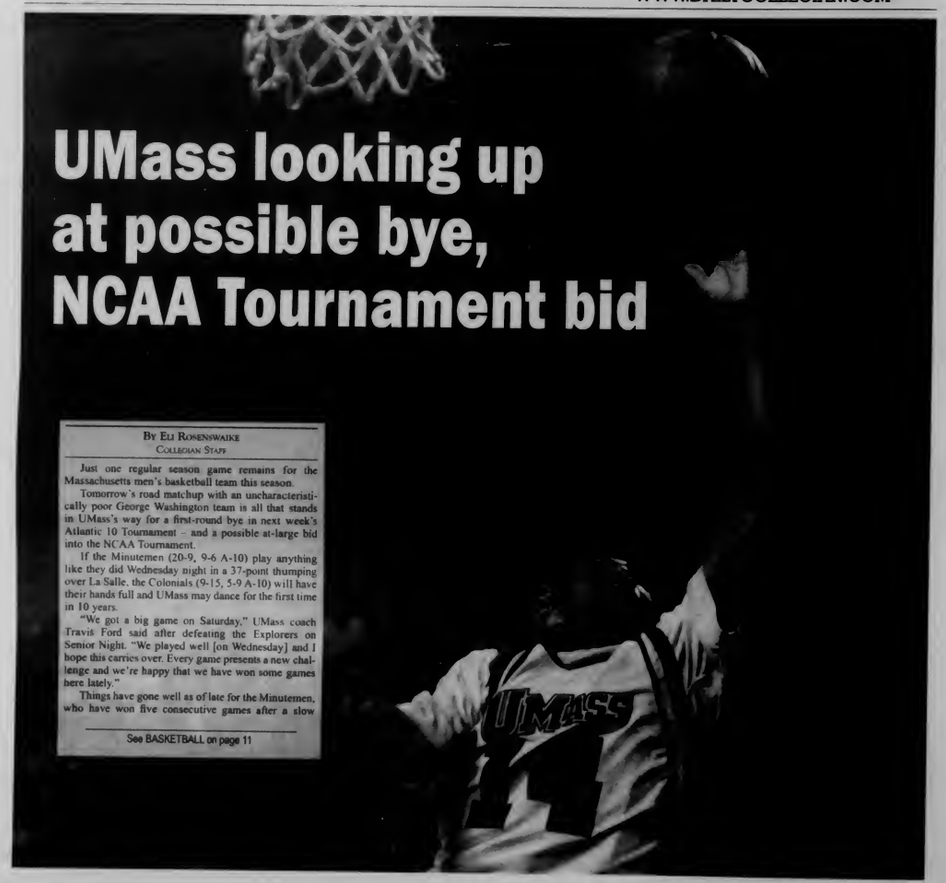
libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Like Dave Matthews, your hairline might fade, but the hits will keep on coming.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
With the amount of baby oil you use, it's no surprise that your life is slipping through your hands.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Like a reflexive verb, you're way too into yourself.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
March your hot cross buns straight into the Office of Dining Services and demand a fine French pastry chef.

Ecology By Jen Fill



The Quigmans By Buddy Hickerson

SPORTS WEEKEND

FRIDAY, MARCH 7, 2008 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UMass looking up at possible bye, NCAA Tournament bid

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Just one regular season game remains for the Massachusetts men's basketball team this season.

Tomorrow's road matchup with an uncharacteristically poor George Washington team is all that stands in UMass's way for a first-round bye in next week's Atlantic 10 Tournament – and a possible at-large bid into the NCAA Tournament.

If the Minutemen (20-9, 9-6 A-10) play anything like they did Wednesday night in a 37-point thumping over La Salle, the Colonials (9-15, 5-9 A-10) will have their hands full and UMass may dance for the first time in 10 years.

"We got a big game on Saturday," UMass coach Travis Ford said after defeating the Explorers on Senior Night. "We played well [on Wednesday] and I hope this carries over. Every game presents a new challenge and we're happy that we have won some games here lately."

Things have gone well as of late for the Minutemen, who have won five consecutive games after a slow

See BASKETBALL on page 11

INSIDE: A TASTE OF COMEDY ON CAMPUS | PAGE 5

THE MASSACHUSETTS
DAILY COLLEGIAN
NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

SUNNY : HI: 39 LO: 20 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM MONDAY, MARCH 10, 2008

Chu wins presidency

McCluskey elected to student trustee post

BY DERRICK PERKINS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Student voters handed Malcolm Chu and Lindsay McCluskey a landslide victory over their opponents for the positions of Student Government Association president and student trustee after last week's elections at the University of Massachusetts.

"Our platform resonated with a lot of people on campus," McCluskey said. "That showed in the outcome and the support we got."

Chu took 1,523 votes in total – more than tripling the number received by rival candidate Derek Khanna – during the two-day election process held in the Campus Center and at dining commons across campus.

Khanna netted 475 votes, and Devin Ashe took in 213 ballots.

Lindsay McCluskey took 1,610 votes in the race for the position of student trustee over candidates Elizabeth Protzman and Augusta Mfuko.

Protzman garnered 474 votes, and 137 went to Mfuko, the only graduate student candidate.

McCluskey attributed her success to the volunteers working on her campaign throughout the election cycle.

"I felt really supported. We had over a hundred campaigners helping us out. It was a collective effort," McCluskey said.

According to University officials, the ballot counting process ended between 7 and 8 a.m. Friday morning.

Polls officially closed around campus Thursday night at 8 p.m. Corey Carvalho, administrative coordinator at the Student Legal Services and legal counsel for the SGA, oversaw the overnight ballot counting process. According to Carvalho, the candidates' representatives present found no fault with the final tally.

"Everyone was very pleased with the way things turned out," he said. According to McCluskey, the representative for her campaign approved of the counting process.

"He thought it was pretty fair," she said. "It was a pretty landslide victory."

McCluskey will officially take her seat on the University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees on July 1 in line with the start of the next fiscal year.

"The big thing now is planning," she said. "I'm going to start connecting with other student trustees and talking about our plans for the year. I've already done a lot of statewide organizing."

McCluskey said she had already met with the student trustee at UMass Boston over the weekend and talked about collaborating next year as well as getting into contact with students at UMass Dartmouth.

McCluskey will meet the other members of the Board during next week's scheduled meeting at UMass Dartmouth.

Derrick Perkins can be reached at dperkins@dailycollegian.com

Malcolm Chu was elected Student Government Association president, along with student trustee-elect and running mate Lindsey McCluskey. Both candidates won in landslide decisions during last week's voting.

Search committee to narrow finalists

BY PAMELA LAWN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The search for a new chancellor of the University of Massachusetts' Amherst campus is now taking shape with the final candidates expected to be chosen by early April.

The search committee, which has an undergraduate and graduate member representing the student body, met on Feb. 25 for its sixth meeting since last August.

Robert Connolly, a spokesman for the UMass system, said the search committee is "looking for somebody who demonstrates leadership, management skills and a true passion for education that can inspire everyone on campus."

The committee began with a large field of candidates and is now working to bring this number down, Connolly said.

They will be conducting interviews before meeting again in early April to make their decision. Only then will the names of the final three or more candidates become public.

The finalists will begin holding meetings with students around campus. President Jack Wilson will then make a recommendation to the search committee before the final vote, which is expected to occur this fall.

"In recent memory, there hasn't been a recommended candidate who has been turned down by committee," said Connolly.

John Lombardi, the previous chancellor of the Amherst campus, resigned to become the president of Louisiana State University over the summer. Dr. Thomas Cole has been serving as an interim chancellor until a permanent candidate is chosen.

In addition to providing leadership for the Amherst campus, the chancellor has other significant administrative responsibilities. According to Connolly, the chancellor is required to "bring in additional faculty, improve the core academic functions and research enterprise and oversee the building boom of recent years here at UMass."

The search committee encourages student engagement on this issue.

"We have had a lot of electronic communication so far from students," said Connolly.

All messages are then forwarded to President Wilson. Varun Vuppala, a UMass senior majoring in history, thinks students would take more interest in this process if the issue were more in the public domain.

"If we had more students on the search committee and if the proceedings of the committee were made public, students would be able to follow along at the very least," said Vuppala.

Students and other members of the UMass community can voice their opinions via the chancellor search Web site www.massachusetts.edu/amherst-search/index.html.

Pamela Lawn can be reached at plawn@student.umass.edu.

Interim Chancellor Thomas Cole will serve in his current capacity until a permanent replacement is named within the next few months.

Tuition stablization

Student fees will increase next semester while tuition steadies

BY EDEN UNGER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Board of Higher Education (BHE) decided not to increase tuition this year for the University of Massachusetts system, as well as state and community colleges.

The Feb. 29 decision is the 10th year in a row that the BHE has decided not do so.

"The Board of Higher Education is the entity that sets tuition for all higher-education campuses," said Joyce Hatch, the vice chancellor for administration and finance at UMass Amherst. "However for the most part, tuition is returned to the state and not kept on campus so the Board knows there is no advantage to the campuses to raise tuition."

There is a small catch, however.

Joyce Hatch

"One of the few exceptions to that law is that the Amherst campus can retain the out-of-state tuition, but the Board still keeps tuition level," said Hatch. "They know that it is through fees that the campuses will benefit from an increase."

Fees are a hot topic at UMass, especially surrounding the recent Student Government Association (SGA) elections.

"I don't think that tuition really affects us so much as the fees do," said UMass sophomore Nate Rugis. "The fees cost way more money."

Tuition seems to take a backseat to fees in terms of student concern.

See TUITION on page 2

Similar note found at UM Dartmouth

BY MATT SHEEHAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Over the weekend, University of Massachusetts Dartmouth officials reported the finding of a nonspecific threatening message in a campus building.

According to a notice posted on the school's Web site last week by Col. Emil Fioravanti, UMass Dartmouth's Director of Public Safety, the threat was written on a men's restroom wall in the Science and Engineering Building, Group 2.

An anonymous tip was received by the Dept. of Public Safety at approximately noon on March 2. The campus remained open and classes were held as scheduled.

"You have to take anything like this very seriously and get to the bottom of it. We made the campus aware of it, and we made sure it's being investigated. We're trying to determine who put it there and when," UMass Dartmouth Assistant to the Chancellor John Hoey told the Standard Times of New Bedford, Mass. last week.

Fioravanti said on March 4 that police would not release details about the message's wording to ensure the integrity of the investigation. Fioravanti did reveal that the writing expressed no intent to commit violence. The notice added that a UMass Dartmouth student, who had allegedly made troubling references to the violence on campus, had been suspended.

The threat at UMass Dartmouth comes amid similar findings at UMass Amherst within the past two weeks. Last Monday, threatening messages were found in men's rooms at Hills South and Furculo Hall.

Five days earlier a similar threat was discovered in a second-floor bathroom in Bartlett Hall. According to campus police, the intent of violence with a weapon was expressed in the first threat found on Feb. 27. Specifics were not offered on the more recent threats, but a mass e-mail said that each "includes similar language."

Any connection, aside from location in restrooms, has not been established between the threats at the different UMass campuses.

Students at UMass Amherst weren't familiar with the threats at UMass Dartmouth.

"I had no idea there were messages found at other UMass schools," said James Connolly, a senior studying classics at the Amherst campus.

Other colleges in the Commonwealth have experienced similar problems as the UMass system recently. On Feb. 27, a Framingham State College student discovered a note written on toilet paper that suggested a chance of campus violence two days later.

At Bridgewater State College, threats were found in women's bathrooms around campus last week. One specifically threatened the life of the school's president. Other threats contained the words "death" and "murder" according to the Standard Times but did not target particular individuals.

Matt Sheehan can be reached at msheehan@student.umass.edu.

Students hold vigil for murdered Israelis

The Student Alliance for Israel organized a vigil Friday afternoon for murdered Israeli students on the Student Union steps. The eight students were slain when a gunman fired into a Jewish yeshiva last Thursday in Israel.

INSIDE: A TASTE OF COMEDY ON CAMPUS | PAGE 5

THE MASSACHUSETTS
DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

SUNNY : HI: 39 LO: 20 | WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM | MONDAY, MARCH 10, 2008

Chu wins presidency

McCluskey elected to student trustee post

BY DERRICK PERKINS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Student voters handed Malcolm Chu and Lindsay McCluskey a landslide victory over their opponents for the positions of Student Government Association president and student trustee after last week's elections at the University of Massachusetts.

"Our platform resonated with a lot of people on campus," McCluskey said. "That showed in the outcome and the support we got."

Chu took 1,523 votes in total – more than tripling the number received by rival candidate Derek Khanna – during the two-day election process held in the Campus Center and at dining commons across campus.

Khanna netted 475 votes, and Devin Ashe took in 213 ballots.

Lindsay McCluskey took 1,610 votes in the race for the position of student trustee over candidates Elizabeth Protzman and Augusta Mfuko.

Protzman garnered 474 votes, and 137 went to Mfuko, the only graduate student candidate.

McCluskey attributed her success to the volunteers working on her campaign throughout the election cycle.

"I felt really supported. We had over a hundred campaigners helping us out. It was a collective effort," McCluskey said.

According to University officials, the ballot counting process ended between 7 and 8 a.m. Friday morning.

Polls officially closed around campus Thursday night at 8 p.m. Corey Carvalho, administrative coordinator at the Student Legal Services and legal counsel for the SGA, oversaw the overnight ballot counting process. According to Carvalho, the candidates' representatives present found no fault with the final tally.

"Everyone was very pleased with the way things turned out," he said. According to McCluskey, the representative for her campaign approved of the counting process.

"He thought it was pretty fair," she said. "It was a pretty landslide victory."

McCluskey will officially take her seat on the University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees on July 1 in line with the start of the next fiscal year.

"The big thing now is planning," she said. "I'm going to start connecting with other student trustees and talking about our plans for the year. I've already done a lot of statewide organizing."

McCluskey said she had already met with the student trustee at UMass Boston over the weekend and talked about collaborating next year as well as getting into contact with students at UMass Dartmouth.

McCluskey will meet the other members of the Board during next week's scheduled meeting at UMass Dartmouth.

Derrick Perkins can be reached at dperkins@daily-collegian.com.

Malcolm Chu was elected Student Government Association president, along with student trustee-elect and running mate Lindsay McCluskey. Both candidates won in landslide decisions during last week's voting.

Search committee to narrow finalists

BY PAMELA LAWN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The search for a new chancellor of the University of Massachusetts' Amherst campus is now taking shape with the final candidates expected to be chosen by early April.

The search committee, which has an undergraduate and graduate member representing the student body, met on Feb. 25 for its sixth meeting since last August.

Robert Connolly, a spokesman for the UMass system, said the search committee is "looking for somebody who demonstrates leadership, management skills and a true passion for education that can inspire everyone on campus."

The committee began with a large field of candidates and is now working to bring this number down, Connolly said.

They will be conducting interviews before meeting again in early April to make their decision. Only then will the names of the final three or more candidates become public.

The finalists will begin holding meetings with students around campus. President Jack Wilson will then make a recommendation to the search committee before the final vote, which is expected to occur this fall.

"In recent memory, there hasn't been a recommended candidate who has been turned down by committee," said Connolly.

John Lombardi, the previous chancellor of the Amherst campus, resigned to become the president of Louisiana State University over the summer. Dr. Thomas Cole has been serving as an interim chancellor until a permanent candidate is chosen.

In addition to providing leadership for the Amherst campus, the chancellor has other significant administrative responsibilities. According to Connolly, the chancellor is required to "bring in additional faculty, improve the core academic functions and research enterprise and oversee the building boom of recent years here at UMass."

The search committee encourages student engagement on this issue.

"We have had a lot of electronic communication so far from students," said Connolly.

All messages are then forwarded to President Wilson. Varun Vuppala, a UMass senior majoring in history, thinks students would take more interest in this process if the issue were more in the public domain.

"If we had more students on the search committee and if the proceedings of the committee were made public, students would be able to follow along at the very least," said Vuppala.

Students and other members of the UMass community can voice their opinions via the chancellor search Web site: www.massachusetts.edu/amherst-search/index.html.

Pamela Lawn can be reached at plawn@student.umass.edu

Interim Chancellor Thomas Cole will serve in his current capacity until a permanent replacement is named within the next few months.

Tuition stablization

Student fees will increase next semester while tuition steadies

BY EDEN UNIVER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Board of Higher Education (BHE) decided not to increase tuition this year for the University of Massachusetts system, as well as state and community colleges.

The Feb. 29 decision is the 10th year in a row that the BHE has decided not do so.

"The Board of Higher Education is the entity that sets tuition for all higher-education campuses," said Joyce Hatch, the vice chancellor for administration and finance at UMass Amherst. "However for the most part, tuition is returned to the state and not kept on campus so the Board knows there is no advantage to the campuses to raise tuition."

There is a small catch, however.

Joyce Hatch

"One of the few exceptions to that law is that the Amherst campus can retain the out-of-state tuition, but the Board still keeps tuition level," said Hatch. "They know that it is through fees that the campuses will benefit from an increase."

Fees are a hot topic at UMass, especially surrounding the recent Student Government Association (SGA) elections.

"I don't think that tuition really affects us so much as the fees do," said UMass sophomore Nate Rugo. "The fees cost way more money."

Tuition seems to take a backseat to fees in terms of student concern

See TUITION on page 2

Similar note found at UM Dartmouth

BY MATT SHEEHAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Over the weekend, University of Massachusetts Dartmouth officials reported the finding of a nonspecific threatening message in a campus building.

According to a notice posted on the school's Web site last week by Col. Emil Fioravanti, UMass Dartmouth's Director of Public Safety, the threat was written on a men's restroom wall in the Science and Engineering Building, Group 2.

An anonymous tip was received by the Dept. of Public Safety at approximately noon on March 2. The campus remained open and classes were held as scheduled.

"You have to take anything like this very seriously and get to the bottom of it. We made the campus aware of it, and we made sure it's being investigated. We're trying to determine who put it there and when," UMass Dartmouth Assistant to the Chancellor John Hoey told the Standard Times of New Bedford, Mass. last week.

Fioravanti said on March 4 that police would not release details about the message's wording to ensure the integrity of the investigation. Fioravanti did reveal that the writing expressed no intent to commit violence. The notice added that a UMass Dartmouth student, who had allegedly made troubling references to the violence on campus, had been suspended.

The threat at UMass Dartmouth comes amid similar findings at UMass Amherst within the past two weeks. Last Monday, threatening messages were found in men's rooms at Hills South and Furculo Hall.

Five days earlier a similar threat was discovered in a second-floor bathroom in Bartlett Hall. According to campus police, the intent of violence with a weapon was expressed in the first threat found on Feb. 27. Specifics were not offered on the more recent threats, but a mass e-mail said that each "includes similar language."

Any connection, aside from location in restrooms, has not been established between the threats at the different UMass campuses.

Students at UMass Amherst weren't familiar with the threats at UMass Dartmouth.

"I had no idea there were messages found at other UMass schools," said James Connolly, a senior studying classics at the Amherst campus.

Other colleges in the Commonwealth have experienced similar problems as the UMass system recently. On Feb. 27, a Framingham State College student discovered a note written on toilet paper that suggested a chance of campus violence two days later.

At Bridgewater State College, threats were found in women's bathrooms around campus last week. One specifically threatened the life of the school's president. Other threats contained the words "death" and "murder" according to the Standard Times but did not target particular individuals.

Matt Sheehan can be reached at mvsheeha@student.umass.edu.

Students hold vigil for murdered Israelis

The Student Alliance for Israel organized a vigil Friday afternoon for murdered Israeli students on the Student Union steps. The eight students were slain when a gunman fired into a Jewish yeshiva last Thursday in Israel.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 100

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Exter
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Michael Sarkes
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Ryan McAskill
COMICS EDITOR Adam Stagiin
EDITORIAL EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Rice
FEATURES EDITOR Dave Humphreys
PHOTO EDITOR Michael Phillis
WEB EDITOR James Hale
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Szymczak
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Marsea Whooten
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Stephanie McPherson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Skye McIntyre
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Brian Wood
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Garber
ASSISTANT NEWS Michael King
ASSISTANT NEWS Kate Olesin
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Seabury
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Connors
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Meloni
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenwaike
ASSISTANT PHOTO Brian Tedder
ARTS WEB EDITOR Michelle Abbasciano
EDITORIAL WEB EDITOR Leif Walcutt
NEWS WEB EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS WEB EDITOR Steve Games

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE NEWS IN 1907, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1936. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN AWARDED SINCE JANUARY 1994 FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL 545-3500 BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 5:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
William McGuinness

COPY EDITOR
Nichole Amaral

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

WEB EDITOR
James Hale

UP-TO-THE-MINUTE NEWS

DAILYCOLLEGIAN.BLOGSPOT.COM

Biker with a cause:

UM grad student to help build affordable housing via bike trip

BY ELIZABETH HAWLEY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

University of Massachusetts graduate Dennis Plato will be biking across the country to raise money for affordable housing. Plato is traveling with Bike and Build, a non-profit organization that sends young adults on cross-country trips each summer, with stops along the way to build affordable housing units.

"A friend of mine told me about Bike and Build, and it seemed like a perfect fit," said Plato, who did not feel ready to go straight to work after graduating with a Bachelor of Business Administration in Management this past December. Plato added that Bike and Build felt like a good cause, especially given the current housing crisis.

According to Habitat for Humanity, around one third of Americans live in overcrowded or physically inadequate housing if they have homes at all. Approximately one in seven Americans spends more than 50 percent of their income on housing. Nationally, over two million of sub-prime mortgages have ended in foreclosure.

Plato departs from Manteo, N.C. on May 23 and ends the 3,428 mile trip in San Diego, Calif. on July 24. The route will take Plato through Middle America - North Carolina, Tennessee, Arkansas, Okalahoma, Kansas, Colorado and Arizona - before ending in Southern California. He will participate in 10 build days in several of those states.

"I hadn't seen a lot of those areas of the country," Plato said. "It seemed like a really nice scenic route."

Approximately 30 other young adults, ages 18 to 25, will be making the trip with him. This is one of seven routes, all leaving from the eastern seaboard and ending on the west coast.

Plato and the other riders will be able to keep in touch via e-mail and with scheduled mail drops while on the road. Plato also has a blog for friends and family to track his progress.

"I'm psyched. I can't wait," Plato said. "I've never done anything like this."

Plato said that while he did some labor work with a friend of the family, he's never done build-work for affordable housing. Bike and Build requires that he perform eight hours of volunteer construction work before the trip. Plato said he expected that people who have never done construction work would receive some training.

"I'm a little nervous about it," Plato said, referring to the physical nature of the trip.

Bikers will start riding early in the morning and will enjoy time off at night and during some scheduled days off. They will be staying with people in the communities they bike through. A van and a trailer will follow the riders carrying luggage.

So far, Plato has raised $745. He needs to raise $2,000 by March 21 and $4,000 before he leaves North Carolina. Donations can be made through the Bike and Build Web site. The money will go to student-led affordable housing projects.

Bike and Build's headquarters are located in New York City. It was founded in 2003 and has contributed more than $1 million to student-led housing projects, with over 500 riders.

Elizabeth Hawley can be reached at ehawley@student.umass.edu

COURTESY BIKE AND BUILD.ORG

The Bike and Build organization works to construct affordable housing for impoverished citizens across the U.S. with its annual ride.

Search begins for UMMS chancellor

BY CAITLIN QUINN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The University of Massachusetts Medical School is beginning a search for a new chancellor. A year after former chancellor Aaron Lazare stepped down, the campus has formed a search committee to find a permanent replacement.

After finalists for the chancellor position are selected, President Jack Wilson will select a candidate for the position. His decision must be approved by the UMass Board of Trustees.

Chairman of the search committee is trustee member Philip Johnson, a former state legislator and gubernatorial cabinet secretary.

"I'm very enthusiastic about being on the committee," said Johnson. "I want to promote the university."

Johnson's interest in participating in the search derives from his personal history in western Massachusetts.

"I am an alumnus, as is my wife and son," he said. "We're big UMass people. When Deval Patrick was elected governor, he asked me what I wanted to do. I said one thing I want to do is help UMass. Plus, my whole family is from Worcester, so I care about that part of the world."

Johnson consults on health and human services issues as founder and president of Philip W. Johnson Associates, as well as serving as chairman of the Blue Cross Blue Shield Foundation and of the Massachusetts Health Policy reform.

The search committee has one student member, Trustee Bharath Nath, who is in the MD-PhD program at UMass Medical. He was chosen to serve from a pool of students by the student government, in consultation with the university administration.

"I believe that any search process for university leadership will benefit from engagement of the student population," said Nath, who is looking forward to participating in the search process.

Nath said he will be looking for character, leadership and a willingness to communicate in candidates in order to choose someone who will use those qualities to form a well-articulated vision for the university.

"I believe the most important role that we have as students on these committees is a communicative one," Nath said. "We have to effectively communicate the concerns of students to the search committee members and be able to articulate student perspectives on the directions in which the university is headed to the candidates."

He believes that this communicative role that student committee members serve – rather than bringing personal beliefs into the decision – is justification for not including other student members.

"I'd like to think that my role there is ideally to represent all our students, and I certainly hope that I can perform that role effectively," he said.

UMass Medical researcher Craig Mello is serving as vice chair. His work with Andrew Fire was awarded a Nobel Prize in 2006.

UMass Medical School brings in $189 million in research funding annually, with 80 percent of that coming from federal sources.

The committee members were appointed by UMass Trustees Chairman Robert Manning, as well as his board colleagues and President Wilson. According to Johnson, the committee will have their first meeting in the beginning of April.

Caitlin Quinn can be reached at cquinn@student.umass.edu

COURTESY MASSACHUSETTS.EDU

UMass Medical School is in the early stages of its search for a new chancellor. A search committee will identify candidates and make a final recommendation to UMass President Jack Wilson.

No tuition increase for UMass students

TUITION from page 1

"The fact that we're paying so much to go to a state school shows that there's something wrong there. I mean, the fees are just ridiculous," said sophomore Alex Silber.

"Our University Board of Trustees is the body that can set the fee levels and [on March 5] the [administration and finance] subcommittee of the Board of Trustees voted to raise in-state fees by 3.1 percent and out-of-state fees by six percent, which will net an increase in revenue next year so that the campus can cover many cost increases."

This decision was partly based upon the inflation level in Massachusetts.

"The trustees know that inflation is at 3.6 percent in the state, and they were being reasonable with the 3.1 percent in-state increase," said Hatch.

While students will not have to pay more for tuition next year, fees are clearly on the minds of many.

"I think it's important that anyone who wants to go to college can afford to do so," said junior Sean Moore. "I noticed that I've had to take out more loans, and it doesn't make much of a difference whether it's coming from tuition or fees. I just know I have to pay more money."

Part of the revenue that the school will make from these fees will go toward financial aid for next year.

"The campus has committed to set aside an additional $2.7 million for need-based financial aid next year to address the affordability issues with needy students," said Hatch.

According to the BHE Web site, in-state UMass students paid $1,716 in tuition with fees of $7,886. Out-of-state UMass students paid $9,937 with fees of $9,384. These figures are based upon fall full-time undergraduate state-supported rates.

Eden Univer can be reached at euniver@student.umass.edu.

PLEASE RECYCLE

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
Insurance Replacement Rates
FREE PICK-UP
POTTER'S AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates
Potter's Collision Repair
Collision Repair & Glass Replacement
at North Amherst Motors
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.pottersauto.com
(One mile North of UMass - on bus route)

This year: UMASS made you smarter
This summer: we'll make you hotter
Become a thinner, healthier, more confident you at...
SHANEdiet & LIFESTYLE RESORTS
AT THE NEVELE GRANDE RESORT AND COUNTRY CLUB
Weight loss, nutrition & fitness classes, yoga, tennis, walking trails. Fun & friends at a great place and price less than you would expect.
YOUNG ADULTS 18-25
Call us at (914) 271-4141
www.shanedietresorts.com
office@shanedietresorts.com
Need a summer job?
Counselor jobs available
www.campshane.com

Summer '08 at UMass Boston
Learning is in the air!
• Over 600 undergraduate & graduate courses
• Classes offered days, evenings, or online
• Study abroad in locations like China, Amsterdam, and West Africa
• Small classes taught by distinguished UMass Boston faculty
• Accessible Boston Harbor campus
Registration starts March 31 summer.umb.edu
617.287.6000

GIVE THE EYES A REST.
Send the major issues straight to your ears with our new Podcasts
Dailycollegian.com/podcast

URI examines new tuition structure as state funding falls

BY ANDY BLAIS
THE GOOD FIVE CENT CIGAR

(U-WIRE) KINGSTON, R.I. — University of Rhode Island President Robert L. Carothers said Tuesday the tuition rate structure could change dramatically if the state continues to slash funding for the school.

Carothers said barring an increase in state appropriations, the school could be looking at instituting a single tuition rate for in-state and out-of-state students alike.

"It's no longer possible to sustain the price at which we offer an education to Rhode Island students if the General Assembly doesn't supply the subsides," Carothers said yesterday.

Carothers said the yearly cost to educate an in-state student is about $23,000 a year, but the students only pay $8,000, leaving a $15,000 difference for the state to pick up. With 60 percent of students coming from the Ocean State, the total subsidy that goes to Rhode Islanders attending URI totals more than $118 million.

The financial problem is underscored by the governor's proposed $12 million cut to URI's 2008-2009 budget, which would bring the total state appropriate from this year's $77 million to $65 million next year.

"The problem is there is now no viable way to subsidize the price for Rhode Islanders," Carothers said.

Carothers brought his case to the public in an opinion piece to local newspapers recently, saying that with the rate of the state budget cuts in higher education, the University of Rhode Island's state appropriation would be gone by 2020.

Carothers proposed the state appropriations would use money to create a state scholarship fund similar to the federal Pell Grant system. This state scholarship fund would give money directly to Rhode Islanders going to URI, Rhode Island College or the Community College of Rhode Island to offset the cost for in-state tuition.

"I would say, that we would commit to fully financing those whose families make $75,000 or less," Carothers said.

Ideally, Carothers hopes that the scholarship will bridge the gap between the cost of education and what the family and student can afford.

Carothers said yesterday that besides creating flat tuition rate, the university would move to a "quasi-private" business model similar to T.F. Green Airport.

"The other big piece of it would be [URI] would go from a state entity to a public corporation," Carothers said.

If this were to happen, the university would need to sustain itself financially as an institution. By being forced to sustain itself, Carothers said the university would need to offer the best possible education to compete with other institutions both in New England and across the nation.

Trafficking plagues Hmong

BY CHRISTOPHER SINATRA
DAILY ORANGE

(U-WIRE) SYRACUSE, N.Y. — Between 14,000 and 17,500 people are trafficked annually, and an estimated 200,000 American children are at high risk of being part of this modern-day form of slavery, Saejung Lee said while speaking in Eggers Hall Wednesday.

Lee, an immigration attorney at the Wisconsin Coalition Against Domestic Violence (WCADV), gave a presentation called the "Intersection of Human Trafficking and Domestic Violence," subtitled, "Experiences of Hmong Victims in the Heartland."

Approximately 15 graduate students and faculty gathered to hear Lee explain the intricacies and difficulties of dealing with human trafficking through law organizations like WCADV, which is celebrating its 30th anniversary this year.

"We were looking for speakers who were involved more in activism than academics," said Susan Wadley, the director of the 2008 Gender and Globalization Speaker Series. "I knew her and about her work in the United States, particularly in New York, and now in Wisconsin."

She focused on the issue of the Hmong people in America as an example of a situation in which the answers as to how victims of trafficking can be given and legally are not as easily found as would be hoped.

The Hmong is the fifth largest minority group in China, who in the mid-18th century began to migrate toward South East Asia due to political and financial reasons.

One of the tallest hurtles law-enforcement must jump before acting on information is the location of victims, she said. The number of prosecuted cases for human trafficking is extremely low, at less than 100 cases per year.

The exploited are often offered marriage or a job if they come to America, and when they arrive, they are deprived of movement, their documents are taken and therefore and they are left without recourse.

The victims are often told, "You have to be my wife if you want to have legal status," she said.

Currently, there are 300,000 Hmong who have emigrated from South East Asia. Lee explained that "while a lot of Hmong businessmen return to Laos to start businesses even though they are refugees, many also return to Laos to fetch a second, third or fourth wife and bring them back here."

There are a few explanations for this, Lee said. The first wife might not have had children, there might have been a prearranged agreement, the man may need a house-keeper or his parents may encourage a second wife if they do not like the first.

Technically, men often divorce their first wife before returning for another. In Wisconsin, 60 percent of refugees are polygamous, and the wives are mostly minors with false documents. Lee said she has a good friend who has not one, but five mothers.

The United States' federal definition of trafficking and other laws, like the Protect Act of 2003 and the U.N. Definition of Trafficking, are helpful, but use language that is too broad to deal with these issues effectively, Lee said.

She also said it is important to look for ways to deal with this while respecting culture, as did a few members of the audience.

Students demonstrate for tax

UConn protestors support measure to protect enviroment

BY HEATHER MURDOCK
THE DAILY CAMPUS

(U-WIRE) STORRS, Conn. — About 20 protesters marched to the Co-op at the University of Connecticut shortly after 10 a.m. Friday, singing: "We are the students! The mighty UConn students – fighting for PlasTax – at the UConn Co-op!"

They carried bright signs with slogans like, "Save the Earth, One Reusable Bag at a Time." And while others bustled into the store to escape the cold, the protesters set up camp outside.

The demonstration was part of a campus and worldwide movement to reduc e consumption of non-biodegradable plastic bags.

One pro tester wore a tutu made of Stop n' Shop bags and several others had plastic bags around their necks, over their clothes, or on their heads. A chain of plastic grocery bags spanned the length of sidewalk outside the store.

The costumes symbolized the damage plastic bags cause to the environment, according to demonstrators. Laura Cote, a sixth-semester religious studies major, bound her hands, legs, and mouth in plastic. She chose the outfit to demonstrate the gruesome death marine animals often suffer from plastic bags.

They shared a bullhorn, and as they waved their signs and marched, they shouted chants like, "Hey-hey! Ho-ho! Plastic bags have got to go," and "Don't be mean – go green!"

Protestors also passed out flyers depicting a Jiminy Cricket cartoon. "Carry your conscience in something other than a plastic bag," it said.

There were more cartoons inside the flyer, along with information about how plastic bags harm the environment. According to the flyer, they kill marine animals, they make soil and freshwater toxic for land animals and they use up finite natural resources. We use more than 500 billion bags a year worldwide, it said, and they last for up to 1,000 years.

The protest was planned to raise awareness and to urge the Co-op to immediately implement a 25-cent charge on plastic bags, a charge they call, "PlasTax."

"This is not a protest against the Co-op," Cote said, "It is a protest against the plastic bags at the Co-op."

Charging shoppers for plastic bags has reduced usage by 90 percent in the Republic of Ireland, according to the country's government Web site, and many other countries report similar successes. Other plans to take them out of circulation include an outright ban in San Francisco and Japanese legislation that allows the government to issue warnings for overuse.

The Co-op is also working on a plan to reduce plastic bag usage, but it does not include the 25-cent charge. Their plan is modeled after the New York University Bookstores Sustainable Bag Program. According to Co-op president and general manager, William P. Simpson, the NYU bookstore manager reported that the new system appears to have already reduced plastic bag usage by about 50 percent.

The Co-op plan will give shoppers that refuse a plastic bag a wooden token. The shopper can then drop his token into a bin that corresponds to one of four charities. The Co-op will then donate five cents to that cause. According to Suzy Staubach, the manager of the general books division, the tokens have already been ordered.

"We would rather give back ourselves than charge the students extra money," she said.

Staubach said she was in support of the protest outside the store. "We share the same goal," she said. "It's all about saving the environment."

Some demonstrators, however, doubt the token plan's potential. Haley Welz, an eighth-semester English major, said, "I don't think people will say, 'Oh, a five-cent token!' [They will say,] 'give me a plastic bag.'"

Other demonstrators do not think the Co-op is doing enough. Ben Beaudry, a seventh-semester English and philosophy major, said there is "urgency lacking in people in charge of the Co-op."

Beaudry also said that he supports activism because it counters the commercialism within our culture that fosters apathy.

And, he noted, the "plastic bags are extremely thick."

Nikita Shpilberg, an eighth-semester philosophy major and one of the protesters, agreed, and said the demonstration was not just about plastic bags.

"We want to shift people's awareness of single use consumption," he said. "If everybody on the planet wanted to live like Americans, we would need three to five Earths. It's frightening."

Shpilberg also said that the protest itself was empowering.

"Inaction is deadly," he said. "People see us, and they feel justified in giving time and thought to something that seems too big to tackle."

Curious onlookers and passersby had mixed reactions to the demonstration. To the delight of some of the protesters, cars honked their horns in response to a sign that said, "Honk if you're green!"

Sheena Jeune, a 6th-semester accounting major, agreed with the overall message, but did not think the cost was high enough to be a deterrent.

"I don't think 25 cents will stop people from using plastic bags," she said.

Jason Mozzicato, an 8th-semester cognitive science, Web technology and linguistics major, agreed that plastic bags are a source of pollution but said the environment has bigger problems. He said electronic waste is a bigger, or at least a faster-growing problem than plastic bags.

Mozzicato also said the rising cost of the petroleum that makes the plastic will eventually convince retailers to shun them.

"Economics will solve the problem in the future," he said.

The protest went on for almost three hours in below-freezing conditions. Most of the demonstrators were students of Robert Luyster, a philosophy professor who teaches Interdepartmental 250, Global Militarism and Human Survival, a class that focuses on activism and social justice, and chooses a cause to champion every semester.

Luyster's students began campaigning against plastic bags, and for the "PlasTax" early this semester. They have since gained broader support. Their facebook group, "UConn Students Against Plastic Bags at Co-op," now has more than 400 members.

While the group was spirited and rowdy, police said they heard no complaints.

The next event in this campaign will be in conjunction with the April 22 Earth Day celebrations.

4 + 5 April | 2008
GLOBAL EYES
A Smith College symposium
new ways of seeing art
to explore how global influences are reshaping our understanding of the meaning of art
4 April | 5:30 PM
5th Annual Miller Lecture in Art and Art History
Maria Magdalena Campos-Pons | contemporary artist
Wright Hall | Weinstein Auditorium | Smith College
FREE and open to all
5 April | 8:30 AM–5:30 PM | Symposium
REGISTRATION REQUIRED
Detailed information + registration:
www.smith.edu/artmuseum/globaleyes
or 413.585.2760
SMITH COLLEGE MUSEUM OF ART

PARKING SERVICES REGULATION REMINDER
Effective Monday, March 10, 2008, Parking Services is returning to regular hours of parking enforcement. These hours are from 7:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m., Monday through Friday. Valid UMass parking permits are required in all parking lots, with the exception of metered lots. Metered lots are enforced for payment from 9:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m., Monday through Friday.
From 5:00 p.m. to 7:00 a.m., Monday through Friday, on weekends and on holidays, vehicles may park in any legal, non-reserved, non-restricted parking space or lot without displaying a permit. Reserved and restricted parking spaces or lots always require display of a proper permit. These spaces/lots include handicapped spaces, vendor spaces, state vehicle spaces and 24-hour restricted lots (specifically Lots 21, 22, 29, 44, 46, 49, 50, 54, 64P, 67, North Village Apts. and Lincoln Apts.). Parking is never allowed in a tow zone or access lane. For more information, please visit our Web site http://parking.umass.edu or call Parking Services at 413-545-0065.

Monday, March 10 · 5–9 pm
CELEBRATE RESTAURANT NIGHT AT HAMPSHIRE DC
FINE DINING & SPIRITS
BUTTERNUTS
SIGNATURE MENU:
Herbed Goat Cheese Bruscetta
Salmon Cornucopia
The Big Easy
(chicken, shrimp & andouille sausage)
Pasta Michel (vegetarian)
Roast Shallot Mashed Potatoes
Chocolate Walnut Pecan Pie
TASTE GREAT FOOD AND A CHANCE TO WIN A $50 GIFT CERTIFICATE!
BUTTERNUTS RESTAURANT GUEST CHEF:
ANDREW SUSSMAN, CHEF/OWNER
2007 Grand Prize
DINING SERVICES UMass/Amherst
umass.edu/diningservices

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

MONDAY, MARCH 10, 2008

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
- Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Fidel Castro's last lesson

Ted Rogers

I'm still a little awed that Fidel Castro, the communist dictator of Cuba, resigned. The guy just wouldn't go. This is a man who was in power at a time when he could call Ike Eisenhower "the Golfer in Chief" of America and was still president when he called Jeb Bush a "fatty" half a century later.

Reactions to his resignation were mixed. Barack Obama said he would meet with Castro's brother, Raul. Hillary Clinton, in a state of one-upmanship, said she would meet with Raul but only under certain conditions. John McCain, sounding less like a respected senator and war hero and more like a disappointed third grader, said, "I hope he has the opportunity to meet Karl Marx very soon."

Okay, I need to admit that a third grader wouldn't be nearly witty enough to say that, but my feelings on Castro are a little more complex than "I hope he dies." I'm no apologist for Old Fidel, but I hope that America can learn something from the bastard before we forget about him completely.

First and most importantly, I see him as a reminder that when America chooses to mess with other countries' governments in order to promote its foreign policy, it will come back up to bite us. Always. The reason Castro was able to come to power, held on to it and made so many Cubans' lives miserable is directly because America gave him the tools. It happened in Iran, it's happening in Iraq, but it happened first in Cuba.

Castro was not Cuba's first dictator. Before Fidel came to power in 1959, there was Fulgencio Batista. He was a dog of a man. Batista played to the interests of big business only, leaving thousands of ordinary Cubans to beg in the gutters. His scheme for making Cuba rich included having American businesses (read: the Mafia) build giant casinos in Havana in order to spread the wealth of rich Americans among rich Cubans. The American administrations of the '50s loved him.

By the time Castro's revolution reached Cuba, average Cubans were so poor and so downtrodden that the spirit-crushing, hellish system of communism sounded like a damn good alternative. We could blame the Cubans for being easily seduced by this false promise of freedom, but we'd be better off looking in a mirror.

I'm no apologist for Old Fidel, but I hope that America can learn something from the bastard before we forget about him completely.

The trade embargo on Cuba should also be a lesson for us in how not to do economic sanctions. The Cuban trade embargo started in 1962, a few minutes after the Kennedy administration smuggled 500 premium cigars from Havana. Since then, the embargo works something like this: We don't get stogies, the Cubans don't get better food or blue jeans, and Castro gets to blame the inherent failures of communism on the Gringo's trade embargo. The embargo didn't cripple Castro. It let him stay in power.

Castro is also a good reminder for Americans to live up to the standards we love to profess. Every time I hear some ultra-patriotic senator decrying better relations with the Cuban government because of Castro's gross violations of human rights, I remember Guantanamo bay. It's on the same island. The same type of torture is being done there to people who have no rights. The only difference is that we're the ones doing it.

I'll Presidente should also teach us to be mistrustful of most revolutionaries, especially our own. There isn't much difference between Castro and our own Founding Fathers. Jefferson kept slaves as a workforce and a harem. Ben Franklin and Alexander Hamilton were notorious boozehounds who would sleep with anybody who had four limbs and a working heart. Those in America who stayed loyal to the Crown were tarred, feathered and run out of the country. It isn't so different from the Cuban Revolution, other than the way we look at it.

The fact that we can learn all this from Castro's dictatorship does not change what he did. During his revolution, the once idealistic student became a bigger monster than Batista ever were. There are 50,000 graves and nearly a million Cuban refugees in the U.S. who can be directly attributed to Castro and his policies. Several of his own children have escaped Cuba and now preach against their father and his policies.

It is too easy, however, to think of Castro as simply an evil man who should die. He rose to a dictatorship and stayed there because America gave him all the tools and support he needed. Unlike John McCain, I don't hope Fidel Castro dies soon. I hope he lives long enough to remind us Americans why we need to change how we deal with dictators like him.

Ted Rogers is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at twrogers@student.umass.edu.

Justice 101: it begins with conversation

Sada Farah

You have all probably seen the Justice for Jason table at the Campus Center, the flyers all over campus or the Facebook group for the cause. I saw the flyers up by the Campus Center and decided to read the summary. And while I don't usually like to get involved in causes, because they are sometimes blown up for effect and, in my opinion, overreacted to, there was something about this case that just shook me. To be completely honest, the flyers do not do the case justice; and although this is essentially a hate crime, the use of the words "white" and "black" instead of the names of the assailants and victim seem to separate people even more.

The facts of the case in and of themselves are enough to get the message across, and issues that raise questions of freedom, justice and equality should be supported by the majority of the community. Isn't this what Dr. King's intent was – people being judged by their character, not their color? Now, I understand the racial implications and facts of this case, but I don't believe that you can rally a united support by excluding a certain group. Wording is always important.

With that said, this case, one of a few incidents that have occurred in the five college area since the fall which have clear racial overtones, hits me the hardest. If you can be in your dorm, be racially insulted and provoked, have assailants trespass and find yourself in a violent altercation simply because of the color of your skin, what do you do? I'm not sure about others, but I would hate to be in that situation because I don't know what I would have done.

The arbitrariness of this crime is appalling. It could happen to any student of color, period. Now I'm not saying that there should be no charges at all; however, I'm simply saying that if there was ever a case of clear self-defense, this is it. And when you have multiple assailants, maybe a weapon isn't excessive force. But that's for a jury to decide. However, you should not be charged with everything under the book that could possibly be applied. That seems to me to be overkill and show's the agenda of the state.

On a campus where there have been several threats and with the escalation of violence not only on our campus but nationwide, this raises the question: what can be done if anything to stop the violence? The answer is a difficult one. Sources note that universities and colleges are not so dangerous as cities, but this does not say much. Arbitrary campus shootings, bomb threats and other violent altercations are on the rise, and campus communities are struggling with a solution to this problem. It is easy to prevent violence if each student is kept under lock and key. It is more challenging a problem in a society that values freedom.

The message that is given to students by the administration is that a safe community requires their active participation. The role of police is facilitating safety, not assuring it. It is difficult to have a campus community that fosters growth, learning, as well as people's rights and is safe in today's society. Short of having police and video cameras everywhere, encroaching on people's freedom and civil liberties, I'm not sure if there is anything that can be done to deter these crimes.

The use of the words "white" and "black" instead of the names of the assailants and victim seem to separate people even more.

What I do know is that, against this violent backdrop, we as a community cannot allow hate-motivated crimes to occur on our campus, regardless of what type of person is being victimized (white, black, Latino, gay, Asian, disabled, etc.). Hate crimes have always been present in the United States, but most would like to think that racism and overt race-driven crimes are a thing of the past. Although it is generally knowledge that racism seems to have become more institutionalized and less blatant over the years, people do not realize that hate crimes still occur every day – until it happens to them or someone they know well.

Many people think that hate crimes only occur in the South, where racial tensions were always strained; however, the reality of the situation is that this occurred here on a college campus in "liberal Amherst." What this says to me is that some people in this area think one way but present themselves in a way that is politically correct. The racial incidents of the past semester-and-a-half alone have shown that conversations about race need to happen in this area, and what needs to change are people's attitudes about others who are different from them.

Ignorance is not bliss. Educate yourself. After all, you are attending a university and know what is appropriate or not in society. What I am dumbfounded by is the fact that someone can dress up in blackface while claiming ignorance of the implications of such a costume. What I don't understand is how college students can be so ignorant of the history of their own society. Do we not learn anything at all?

This is not an issue of a minority group being too sensitive; it is offensive to hear about these events. I mean, what kind of progress have we truly made if people's attitudes do not change with the laws? The only good thing I see coming out of this is the opportunity to have honest conversations in the community about issues that might be seen as divisive. I just hope that it accomplishes something. If you have the opportunity, go to the Justice for Jason rally today and show your support. I know I'll be there.

Sada Farah is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at sfarah@student.umass.edu.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

To the Editor:

Have you seen the bus messages about UMass students and alcohol? It's likely – 96% of students have! It's also likely you've wondered about the part of the message saying, "We got the facts from you."

Right now, the University's Center for Alcohol and other Drug Abuse Prevention (CADAP) is doing just that – getting the facts from undergraduate students, through an anonymous e-mail survey conducted by the Boston University School of Public Health. This is the third year of the survey, which asks questions about alcohol and other drug use and non-use. The survey methods produce results representative of all undergraduate students. Because the questionnaire can't be traced back to respondents, it's easy to be completely honest.

After we receive the survey results, we share them with students, campus leaders and the community through bus ads, posters, table tents, reports, presentations and news stories. The findings are big news because what we're learning about students and drinking is different from what many people think!

The perception that UMass Amherst students are out-of-control partiers is deeply entrenched on campus and in the community. But research shows most students don't drink heavily and, in fact, practice healthy behaviors. The past two surveys found that two out of three students have four or fewer drinks when they party and nine out of 10 students know how to have fun without alcohol.

These findings have a major impact because of the discrepancy between perception and fact. The goal of these social norms messages, and of all CADAP initiatives, is to help students make informed decisions so they can stay healthy and achieve their academic and personal goals. The deadline for this year's survey is the end of this week. If you've received one, we encourage you to take this important opportunity to be heard. We'll be listening!

April McNally
Health Educator
Center for Alcohol and other Drug Abuse Prevention
University Health Services

DAILY COLLEGIAN READER POLL

Did you vote in last week's SGA elections? Why did you vote? Why didn't you vote?

- ☐ I voted because I care about campus politics.
- ☐ I voted because it seemed like the right thing to do.
- ☐ I didn't vote. I meant to make a statement.
- ☐ I didn't vote because I just don't care.

Vote and discuss at www.dailycollegian.com!

If you have a letter, and we have a newspaper, and our newspaper reaches allllllllll over campus ...

What would happen then, in theory?

We print your letter!

We print it up!

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR: editorial@dailycollegian.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, MARCH 10, 2008

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Witty word play, crude comedy combine

Sketch–22's original skits, videos earn laughs

By Jennifer Leclair
Collegian Correspondent

Saturday night's Sketch-22 comedy show drew a large crowd. A mixture of mistaken identity, drawn out fruit perversion, visits from past presidents and yodel rehearsal lit up Herter 231 with enough laughter to make passersby stop and stare.

Every member of Sketch-22 performed as well as the next. Saturday's show saw the debut of three new members since the start of the spring semester. Mantas Dumcius, Natasha Nemurgut and Pete Storey blended right in with the rest of the returning cast of Sketch-22.

The group's producer, Sam Punia, said, "I think the range of talent in Sketch-22 is tremendous. We have so many talented writers and performers. Everyone brings their own writing and performance style. I think the best part about sketch is that everyone is excited to perform and make people laugh."

This comment could easily be validated by the more-than-amateur acting and writing by Sketch-22 members. Also, the resounding laughter booming from viewers enriches the talent upon which Punia insisted.

The sketches showcased at the performance ranged from clever comedic play-on-words to the obvious jokes that were drawn out far too long.

The night opened with "Paper Bag" written by Greg Boz. A comedic take on the teacher-student relationships flooding the current news proved a great start to a memorable show. Performers Hunter, Natalie, Danielle, Jay, Sam and Adam discussed the most important topic of high school – sex – in lieu of answering the teacher's question.

The clever sketch lasted fewer than ten minutes but opened for an hour of seemingly promising comedy. Love in the classroom, a student with a paper bag over his head, a guilty teacher, an oblivious husband and origami intertwined to form a web of jokes and laughter. The skit centralized around such similar stories in the news, which added to the topic's clever appeal.

One common type of sketch in Saturday's performance was the video sketch. They ranged in length from eight seconds to eight minutes. Each video showcased a scenario that could not be displayed on the stage.

"Melon" by Erik Smith was the first of many video sketches. It provided a lengthy act of perversion with the common household fruit – melon. Appearing to be a spin off of the ever-popular "American Pie" movies, the sketch started in a great direction. Altogether, it was quite comical, especially to the crowd of men in the audience.

After about five minutes, however, it seemed to drag on and lost a great deal of its original appeal. Starting with loud shrieks of laughter, "Melon" could only beg for a laugh from its audience when the video stopped. Yet, after this sketch, melon may become an even more common fruit among college males.

The abundance of previously recorded videos of sketches disconnected the audience from witnessing the innate, instinctive reactions of the actors as they read lines in a certain surrounding. Although the videos enabled the sketches to be set in various places – dorm rooms, outside – and show precise battle scenes and music, the imaginative quality that backs sketch comedy is no longer allowed much leeway. Mess-ups throughout sketch scenes can only add to their comedic appeal.

A case of mistaken identity: what if everyone thought you were of the opposite sex? Could you not get your words across, your voice heard? "Boy Oh Boy," written by Carly Mandell became the hit of the night. Short and sweet, the sketch gave a voice to the man who was a lady instead. Mandell's overly dramatic acting in rage proved to be the perfect way to portray such a troubled character. The 12 seconds of screaming ended with the lady, or man, being carried off stage to roars of laughter.

The titles revealed a lot about an upcoming sketch. Sometimes an entire sketch could be given away in a cleverly entitled play-on-words. "Sometimes Ships Sink" by Carly Mandell was most obviously about a sinking ship. And also, acronym – "SSS" clearly defined a scene referring to a ship.

"Legally Blind" written by Hunter Wallingford followed precedent of clever titles. The play-on-words didn't stop there, however, as audience members who had ever watched the movie series "Legally Blond", featuring the character Elle Woods as a dumb-blond-turned-prestigious-lawyer, understood. "Legally Blind" featured an alcoholic Elle Woods with her brunette and blind daughter – obviously a genetic recipe for disaster.

Additional highlights of the night included "240 Seconds" by Mantas Dumcius, "Culture Shock" by Greg Boz and Pete Storey, "Scene from a Chinese Food Restaurant" written by Carly Mandell and "Frat Boys" written by Pete Storey. Each sketch helped to end the night's performance with laughter and left the audience talking – a reaction that should keep the laughter flying about campus for days.

The message of the night's comedy can be found in the performances title: "Presidents from the Future." The impossible or unimaginable are imagined and made possible through the creative minds of Sketch-22's writers and members.

Sketch-22 has won a variety of contests in the area.

"I hope that we can take trips together to attend workshops and see other performances," said the group's director, Danielle Soto.

Upcoming performances for Sketch-22 include Student Valley Productions' "12th Annual Comedy Jam" on April 11 and 12 at 8 p.m. in Bartlett room 65. Comedy troupes from all over the country will be showcasing their talents alongside UMass's own Sketch-22, Mission IMPROVable and Improv With Attitude.

Sketch-22 will also be performing on the last day of classes this spring semester.

The videos seen on Saturday night's performance and a number of other recorded sketches can be viewed online at http://www.youtube.com/sketch22comedy.

Sketch-22 is a student run organization that is part of the umbrella corporation Student Valley Productions (SVP) of the Pioneer Valley. SVP is a UMass funded organization that provides for the comedy groups on UMass.

Sketch-22, Mission IMPROVable and Improv With Attitude. The two latter groups showcase their improv skills in performances every Friday and Saturday night at 8 p.m.

Jennifer Leclair can be reached at jleclair@student.umass.edu.

Sketch–22 performed in Herter hall on Saturday night, debuting new members and new original skits. The group, part of Student Valley Productions, entertained with a mix of recorded and live skits.

Though at times crude, Sketch–22 put on an overall entertaining show on Saturday night, with clever word–plays and sketches.

System of a Down screaming out loud

Rock band makes film on genocide

By Andrew Sheridan
Collegian Staff

One point five million people dead, thousands of children orphaned. Three-fourths of an entire population murdered in the span of two years, and a guilty government in complete denial. Such was the state of the Armenian Genocide of 1915, "the forgotten massacre." It was the inspiration for the Holocaust, the first Great War crime of the 20th century and the topic of the new documentary, "Screamers."

The film is the product of the Grammy-winning band System of a Down, and from the start, one might think that it is simply a profile of the group. It begins at a System concert in the U.S., where rabid fans flock the stadium, and the members prepare to perform. The emphasis quickly changes, however, to the political activity going on at the event.

Tents and stands dot the area, distributing literature about genocide and circling petitions. Activists push their social agendas freely with the blessing of the group, who announce their intentions right off the bat saying, "This band just started to make you ask questions."

The concert, which took place in 2005, was held on the 90th anniversary of the Armenian genocide. The band members, all of Armenian descent, feel strongly about the event, which is largely unknown and denied openly by many of the world's governments.

The documentary mixes interviews of band members, survivors of war crimes and experts. It is also laced with live performances by SOAD, in which the sometimes incomprehensible lyrics are layered over the instrumentals, revealing their highly political nature often lost on casual System listeners.

Though the film chronicles genocide in general, much focus is given to the near-extermination of the Armenians. Following the introduction of band member Serj Tankian's 96 year-old grandfather Stepan Haytayan, a survivor, the film starts in on a heart-wrenching depiction of Turkey circa World War I.

Unbeknownst to most Americans, during the turn of the century the Christian Albanian population of Turkey was being persecuted by the Muslim majority. When war broke out, Turkish leader Mehmet Resat used the confusion to carry out the mass execution of the Albanian people.

The narration is supplemented by poignant accounts of the terrible incident from survivors and was made even more effective by black-and-white images of the carnage and death.

After Turkey is discussed, the focus of the film is widened to genocide in general throughout the twentieth century. As one expert says, "Genocide is about using the cover of an overall conflict to deal with ethnic ... claimants that you've been wanting to get out of the way for a long time."

From the Holocaust to Rwanda, Kosovo, Bosnia, Kurdistan and even Darfur, "Screamers" profiles some of the lowest points in human history in graphic detail.

Chilling accounts from those left behind are almost too much to bear at times, and full color photographs of recent events bring the conflicts a little too close to home. Not for the faint of heart or the weak of stomach, these scenes are well edited and make a significant impact.

The latter part of the piece is dedicated to the United States and its responses to past atrocities. After every single act of genocide in the past century, a high-ranking U.S. official has publicly denounced the act, boldly saying "never again." Time and time again, however, the government witnesses the murder of thousands and does nothing because of political interests.

Released in 2006, "Screamers" has been shown at theaters and film festivals around the world, bringing home awards at Sundance and Montreal. The DVD, which debuted at the end of 2007, contains a backstage tour with System as well as additional songs and press interviews with the artists.

It has been acclaimed by critics nationwide and for good reason. At times powerful and eye-opening, the film succeeds in the band's original goal of making you ask questions. It doesn't stand out from other documentaries in terms of production values or pacing; but in terms of impact and information, it is one of the best of the year.

Those who are simply looking for an entertaining movie to pass the time should most likely look elsewhere, but for the politically minded and System of a Down fan "Screamers" is top-notch.

Andrew Sheridan can be reached at asheridan@student.umass.edu.

Hard rock band System of a Down produced the documentary called "Screamers." It focuses on the little–known Armenian genocide and the United States' response to past genocides. Gathering acclaim at many festivals, "Screamers" is a moving and revealing film.

Frat. talent showcase fails to attract crowd

There were many talented performers at Phi Sigma Pi's talent showcase but barely any audience to see them.

By Frank Godinho
Collegian Staff

If you've ever found yourself taking a stroll by the Student Union Ballroom, chances are some event is being held by some organization on any given night of the week. Last Thursday, Phi Sigma Pi, one of the few co-ed fraternities at UMass, held its biggest, most publicized event in years.

The young fraternity chose to have a showcase as its big event versus a talent show as they felt it would be less stressful on both the performers and the audience.

"We decided on more of a coffeehouse type of setting so it's more social and more relaxed. We wanted to get rid of that connotation [of talent show prizes], so that's why we used the showcase title," said Barry Epstein, one of the fundraising co-chairs of the fraternity.

Creating a relaxed atmosphere is exactly what the fraternity did Thursday night, offering a table full of coffee, bagels and other refreshments toward the back of the ballroom. The fraternity's obstacle, however, was generating enough buzz for students to show up.

"We had over three months to advertise and I don't think we did a very good job, to be honest," said one brother of Phi Sigma Pi.

Epstein disagrees, however.

"We don't have as much pull as the rest of Greek Life on campus. I feel like we need to reach a certain threshold before we can really draw the crowds," he said. "Once we get to that point, it will be much easier."

Perhaps the time planning the event was all spent on finding suitable performers for the showcase.

Whether it was Saturday Night Live style comedy, hip-hop, unicycling acrobatics or Japanese martial arts, the showcase had it. The event boasted well-established performers like Sketch-22, Illie Entertainment, The UMass Dancing Team and Good Ole Tom and the Gold Diggers. For those who weren't there, it certainly was a missed opportunity for students to enjoy a talented group of performers.

Crowd favorites of the night were comedy troupe Sketch-22, variety performer Joe Lapaire and Lenz, a local hip-hop artist. Lapaire even called on a volunteer from the audience to participate in one of his acrobatic performances.

There's no question as to why the performers came out. These types of events are "great publicity for us," said Danielle Soto, of Sketch-22.

"It's kind of hard to turn down a show, really. Why the hell not [show up]?" added Pete Storey, also of Sketch-22.

Fellow performer Joe Lapaire, former member of the UMass juggling club said, "I work as a variety performer, and all through the winter I didn't do much of anything. I thought this would be a nice practice gig to get me back into show mode."

The fairly new fraternity may not have had much success in bringing in the crowds, but the nine RSOs and other groups that did perform each put on a great performance.

"Our turnout wasn't perfect, but now we know how to modify it for next year," said Epstein. "I saw the event as a great way to put us right up there with the rest of Greek Life on Campus."

The fraternity's next big event will be a 5K Charity Race for Teach for America on April 6.

Frank Godinho can be reached at fgodinho@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY NINTENDO.CO

Nintendo recently released the popular Super Smash Bros. for its new game console, the Wii. The new version of the game is better than before, with new characters and new plot twists.

Smash Bros. back in action

New Wii game improves old, adds new twists

BY ANDREW SHERIDAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Let's face it, winter is behind us. For many, spring is a welcome relief from the snow and wind, but for video gamers it means a painful spring game drought. Developers, rushed to get their products on store shelves in time for the holidays, seem to take a vacation of their own this time of year. Amidst this dry spell, however, Nintendo has released its opus, the most anticipated game of the season – Super Smash Bros. Brawl for the Wii.

Brawl is the sequel to Super Smash Bros. Melee, the best-selling game on Nintendo's previous console, the GameCube. It is a 2-D fighting game for up to four players, featuring the stars of the Big N's other franchises, such as Mario, Yoshi, Kirby and Starfox. Known for its fast-paced action and zany attacks, the series has garnered a large following across many demographics.

For those of you who are familiar with Melee, not much has changed this time around. New stages, modes and challenges have been added, beefing up the overall package, but the core game-play remains the same.

The characters you know and love have all returned for another round, though many have been tweaked for the sake of fairness. Several new fighters have been added, bringing the roster up to 34 brawlers. The big news this time around is the inclusion of non-Nintendo-owned characters, the most anticipated of which is Sonic the Hedgehog. A long time rival of Mario in the world of video game mascots, Sonic is an extremely fast combatant, whose moves are mainly variations on his signature spin-dash. Also imported from outside of the company is Solid Snake, of Metal Gear Solid fame, whose moves utilize heavy artillery and explosives.

The single player mode has seen the biggest changes since the last installation. The Adventure Mode has been fleshed out from a string of encounters to a full-blown side-scrolling experience reminiscent of Paper Mario. The plot isn't exactly Pulitzer worthy, but it provides a decent excuse for the characters' varied backgrounds to intertwine.

Also included is a level editor, which allows players to build and fight in their very own custom arenas. As more matches are played in custom stages, more interesting pieces are unlocked with which to build better levels. Players who are especially proud of their creations have the option of submitting them to Nintendo, who will choose one stage per day to submit online to every Wii owner on Earth.

Speaking of online, Brawl is one of the first, and undoubtedly the biggest game to utilize the Wii's online multiplayer service. Using WiFi connections, Brawl owners can log on to Nintendo's free service and battle their friends from around the world. The full online experience, however, requires a console-specific "friend code." It is possible to battle perfect strangers, but that entails a stripped down experience without rankings or text messages.

Another big addition is the "Final Smash," a powerful, character-specific coup de grace which is achieved by destroying a special item called the Smash Ball. This simple item changes the entire dynamic of the game because whenever it appears the focus of the match shifts from beating on other players to getting the ball. This is an interesting twist and certainly shakes up the typical formula of "ring-out or knock-out."

Overall, Super Smash Bros. Brawl is a more polished version of its predecessors. Everything feels faster, tighter and more intense. The Wii remote works surprisingly well, and even if you opt for the familiar GameCube controller, the whole game seems fresh and new. If you were a fan of the game in its past iterations, you will be hard-pressed to find anything to complain about this time around. And if you happen to own a Wii, you owe it to yourself to buy Super Smash Bros. Brawl.

Andrew Sheridan can be reached at asher1@student.umass.edu.

Tattoo removal gives ex–gang members chance for new lives

BY COLLEEN LAMAY
MCCLATCHY NEWSPAPERS

EAGLE, Idaho – Gang life lured Enrique Martinez, 25, to drop out of school in the fifth grade and turn to stealing and drugs, a life he advertised with tattoos.

His gang tattoos included the letters LSL, which stand for Last Side Locos, his Caldwell gang, he said. Three dots near his eye are a gang message meaning "My Crazy Life," he said.

On Friday, Martinez, a Boise, Idaho, sheet-metal worker who wants to study mechanical engineering in college, started shedding the tattoos, the last reminders of his life as the gang member "Cholo." Second Chance Grace, a ministry based in Meridian, Idaho, is partnering with the program Dr. Ink-Off, which is a part of Eagle River Medical Aesthetics, to make the procedure affordable for Martinez and others like him.

Through the ongoing ministry, ex-gang members can get laser tattoo removal for about $25 a treatment regardless of the tattoo's size.

That's cheaper than the going rate, which can hover around $35 to $45 per square inch, the staff said.

In return, participants in the program must pass on kindness to others through community service.

Kids younger than 18 get tattoos removed for free.

Kids join gangs because they want to belong to something, Martinez said as the staff at Dr. Ink-Off numbed his skin for the removal, which will take several sessions, each about a month apart.

"A lot of people are looking to the streets for love," he said. They don't find it.

"It's a rough lifestyle," he said. "A person gets harder, and you don't really care about nothing." That no longer is true for Martinez, who said religion helped him find the way out in November 2005.

He now helps out at Calvary Chapel, steering other kids away from gang life.

"I am denouncing it," he said of his former life, which landed him in prison off and on for more than six years. "It is not my life anymore." Among the other 10 or so people scheduled to have tattoos removed on a recent Friday included Lowell Urwin, 25, of Nampa, Idaho, who got into a gang because it was part of his family's lifestyle.

"I went down, all the way down," he said as he waited to have his tattoos removed.

His wife, Yolanda, 28, started to cry as she talked about how much the couple's life has improved after they hit bottom, living in a tent in his mother's yard.

Yolanda said she never was involved in gangs, and her family and God's grace helped pull Lowell out.

They now live in a house of their own.

She works as a baker, cosmetologist and Realtor, and he is a merchandiser for soda products, they said.

"We can't get any better than we are now," Yolanda said.

Ryan McLaughlin, 30, of Meridian, Idaho, was a gang member in Oregon who moved to Idaho to sell drugs but ended up in prison on drug charges.

While he was in prison, he got a tattoo below his collar bone saying "Trust No (rhymes with witch)." His girlfriend had sold his belongings while he was incarcerated, and he wasn't happy about it.

Now, he and his wife have six kids between them, and his 9-year-old daughter wants that tattoo gone because it bugs Mom.

He also has to wear clothes that cover it up during his work as manager of a pizza place.

"When I got out (of prison), I wanted to do something different with my life, raise my child, be a father," he said.

The tattoo had to go.

Julian Leon, 16, a student at Nampa's Skyview High School, and his nephew Juan Castillo, 16, got tattoos removed that read "208." The tattoos weren't really gang-related, but some people thought they were. As well, the tattoos were against school rules. A basketball coach helped them find the tattoo ministry.

IF YOU CAN'T SEE THAT

ILLEGAL DOWNLOADING

IS STEALING

THEN KEEP READING

1 2 3 4 5 6 7

If you download music illegally, you are stealing music.

Every month, thousands of students face university disciplinary action or lawsuits and fines that cost thousands of dollars.

Legal downloading doesn't cost much. The choice is yours. Pay a little now or a lot more later.

RIAA

Developed by university students for the RIAA.

Dainton stifles MC offense in 3rd period weekend series from UMass Lowell, forcing UMass to do the same against Merrimack.

HOCKEY from page 10

The top line pairing of center Cory Quirk and wingers Alex Berry and James Marcou led the way of UMass offensively, recording nine points – three goals, six assists – in the two games against Merrimack. Since Cahoon paired the trio together before last weekend's series with Boston University, the Minutemen have found the offensive rhythm that had them at the top of Hockey East in the first half of the season.

Senior captain Mike Kostka scored a power-play goal at 11:09 of the first period. But MC winger Francois Dainton fired a slap shot from the high right face-off circle past freshman goaltender Paul Dainton to even the score.

The teams alternated possession until the final minute when the Warriors turned the puck over in the neutral zone. Marcou pounced on the loose puck and headed up the ice, trailed by Berry. The two players separated as they crossed the blue line, Berry headed left while Marcou went right, taking the defenseman with him.

Braithwaite committed to Marcou, anticipating the shot before the shifty winger slid the puck over to Berry. The pass was slightly off target as it hit Berry in the skates. He quickly recovered, however, and flipped the puck into the net.

A goal from MC's Joe Cucci at 11:58 of the second period tied the score for the second time. Until Quirk and Virtue's goals in the third, the teams spent most of the game mired in battle for possession.

MC managed most of the scoring chances in the second period and most of the third. Until Cahoon's timeout, the Minutemen had trouble controlling the puck and maintaining possession in the Warrior zone.

UMass experienced similar struggles in the second period of Friday night's game. After Berry gave UMass the 1-0 with a nifty stick-handling play in the first period, P.J. Fenton and Chris Davis extended UMass's lead. The Warriors outshot UMass 20-13 in the final two periods.

In each game of the weekend, Dainton made 13 saves in the third period to preserve the victory for UMass.

GAME NOTES

Kostka leads Hockey East in goals by a defenseman with nine … Marcou is now three assists shy of the UMass freshman record of 27 … The 14 goals scored in the last three games is the most by the Minutemen in any three-game stretch this season … UMass has now won consecutive games for the first time since winning the Lightning College Hockey Classic.

Joe Meloni can be reached at joe.meloni@gmail.com

BRIAN FOLEY/COLLEGIAN

Freshman goaltender Paul Dainton made 13 saves in the third period of each UMass victory over Merrimack this weekend.

COURTESY PHOTO/COLLEGIAN

Cory Quirk and his linemates, James Marcou and Alex Berry, combined for 10 points on three goals and seven assists in UMass's weekend sweep of Merrimack. Quirk leads UMass with 11 goals on the season, and Marcou leads with 24 assists.

Quirk, wingers finding stride

LINE from page 10

Fenton and Chris Davis, a fast, play-making combination that had success early in the season, but injuries and matchups forced Cahoon to try other things.

Marcou played with fellow freshman Michael Lecomte and Chase Langeraap, but a season-ending injury to Langeraap broke up that set, which also had marked success during the first half of the season.

The chemistry has quickly become strong enough to help the Mass Attack match its season-long winning streak (three games) to close out the season and secure a sixth straight Hockey East Tournament berth.

Many of the goals they've put together have been impressive and looked like they had been drawn up in the composition notebook that never leaves Cahoon's hands during games. But other times, it is clear that Quirk, Marcou and Berry simply know where the other two are on the ice at all times.

That was never truer than the game-winning goal at Merrimack Saturday night.

With Berry and Marcou fighting for the puck behind the net, Marcou pushed it over to Berry, who immediately threw it out front, where Quirk reined it in, turned and slipped the puck between the left post and the skate of Warrior goaltender Andrew Braithwaite.

"I was left out front for like 20 seconds all alone," Quirk said.

"Al found me out front, and I didn't really look at the net. I just shot it. I just turned around and wanted to get it on net."

It certainly wasn't the type of textbook goal that one might expect, but little about the Minutemen's up-and-down season has gone as expected.

Jeremy Rice can be reached at jeremyr@student.umass.edu

Keep your career on a direct path to success.

Start out in the right direction at Ernst & Young. With our award-winning training programs, you'll have invaluable resources to help you enhance your skills. And since you'll be working alongside some of the best talent in the industry, getting ahead is as simple as following the signs.

Grow. Succeed.
Visit us at ey.com/us/careers and our Facebook.com group.

FORTUNE 100 BEST COMPANIES TO WORK FOR 2008

Assurance • Tax • Transactions • Advisory

ERNST & YOUNG
Quality In Everything We Do

© 2008 ERNST & YOUNG LLP

Offensive struggles continue for UMass

Schneider, defenders solid in loss at hands of Crimson

By Michael King
Collegian Staff

As torrents of rain pounded the Garber Field turf on Saturday afternoon, the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team hoped its attack would pour goals into the net of in-state rival Harvard. However, another poor offensive performance resulted in an 8-5 loss despite strong play on defense.

Harvard	8
UMass	5

The Minutemen (1-2) took a 2-1 lead into halftime but allowed Harvard (2-1) to score six consecutive goals through the third and fourth quarters to put the game out of reach. Like last weekend's loss at Yale, the Maroon and White struggled consistently to create quality scoring chances, while relying too much on junior goalkeeper Dax Schneider (eight saves).

"I thought we were ready to play and that the guys were focused," Cannella said. "We missed some opportunities early, and for a team that's struggling to score, that hurts your confidence. I didn't think we had very good shot selection. We need to find a way to score some goals."

UMass hopes to put this loss behind it with a quick turnaround as it faces winless Albany (0-3) on Tuesday afternoon at Garber Field.

Though the Minutemen did a good job of controlling possession by creating 17 Crimson turnovers, UMass simply failed to take advantage of its offensive opportunities. Chances that could have resulted in goals became easy shots that Harvard goalkeeper Joe Pike easily turned away.

The loss prompted Cannella to search for ways to solve his team's offensive woes after the game.

"We really don't have anybody that's breaking [the defense] down," Cannella said. "We have some good athletes, but we don't have anyone who can beat a defender off the dodge. That's what creates offense. When you don't have that, a defense can just sit in there and wait."

With the inability to penetrate, many UMass shots came from the 10-15 yard range that barely challenged Pike. Even when the Minutemen created separation, many shots went directly into the Crimson goalie's stick.

But with a 2-1 advantage at the half, it looked like the Maroon and White might escape Garber Field with a win.

However, as the rain briefly subsided in the third quarter, Harvard took advantage and permanently retook the lead. The Crimson penetrated the UMass defense by working the ball from behind the net and creating shots directly in front of the crease. Sophomore midfielder Jason Duboe scored two goals late in the period using this technique as a part of his hat trick.

The Minuteman offense showed some signs of life in the final 15 minutes with three goals in that period. But the Maroon and White simply could not string together enough chances to mount a serious comeback.

Cannella experimented with three different face-off men. The coach stuck with midfielder Joe Reale, despite his struggles in the face-off circle (2-for-8). Bobby Hayes and Nick Glasser showed promise with a combined 4-for-7 performance.

Though Schneider and the UMass defense performed well for the third consecutive game, Cannella is not concerned that his defenders will become jaded by the team's inability to consistently score.

"I think their approach is very good; I don't think they get that frustrated," Cannella said of his defense. "You just tell those guys to keep doing their job, and we know they will because we have a lot of confidence in them."

After a scoreless first quarter, Harvard started the scoring early in the second. UMass then scored a pair of goals 20-seconds apart to take the lead just before halftime.

Game Notes

The Minutemen failed to cause any turnovers with its ride, as the Crimson cleared the ball a perfect 15 times … Saturday's loss was the first to Harvard since the 2004 season … Harvard failed to convert on three extra-man opportunities, including two chances with a two-man advantage … The Maroon and White committed a season-low 12 turnovers.

Michael King can be reached at mking@dailycollegian.com

Sophomore midfielder Bobby Hayes slips on the rain-soaked Garber Field turf during Saturday's 8-5 loss to Harvard.

Brower, Harris strong in win over Colonials

M. Basketball from page 10

Though the fast break was a non-factor, Saturday's shooting performance was one of the Minutemen's best of the season. Had the Maroon and White not converted 46 percent of its 3-point attempts, a George Washington upset would have been much more likely.

"We knew that we would live and die with the 3-point shot," Ford said. "They did a good job of taking away the middle."

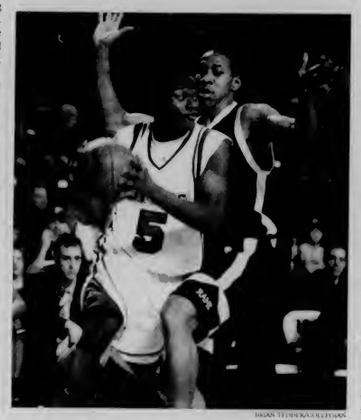
The GW defense focused on collapsing driving angles once opponents penetrate toward the paint. That allowed the Minutemen to kick the ball out to its shooters who were consequently wide-open on the wing.

Minutemen like sophomore shooting guard Ricky Harris and freshman forward Matt Glass excel in that role. The pair combined to shot 6-for-12 from beyond the arc against the Colonials.

Yet it was the versatility of senior forward Etienne Brower on offense that boosted the Minutemen down the stretch. The captain registered a double-double of 17 points and 10 rebounds. Brower also added four 3-point baskets.

"He came up with some big plays as usual," Ford said. "He made some big shots, rebounds and free throws. He did a little bit of everything – that's what makes him so valuable to this basketball team."

For the second consecutive game, the Minutemen built a double-digit advantage within the first 10 minutes. However, the Colonials scored the next 12 points to take the lead, 20-18.



The Minutemen will face the winner of the first-round match-up between Charlotte and Rhode Island Thursday evening. Though the Maroon and White appear to be peaking at the right time on the heels of its six-game winning streak, Ford knows a lot can happen between now and tournament time.

Last season the Minutemen entered the A-10 tournament with the same streak but lost in the quarterfinals to Saint Louis.

Game notes

GW center Damian Hollis had a double-double from 20 points and 11 rebounds … The loss ended the Colonials' season, as they were eliminated from the A-10 tournament by virtue of finishing 11th in the conference … Colonial leading scorer Rob Diggs was held to seven points.

Michael King can be reached at mking@student.umass.edu.

Sophomore Ricky Harris scored 20 points in UMass's win over George Washington in the 2007-08 regular-season finale.

No. 1 ASU sweeps Maroon and White in Tempe, Ariz.

By Eli Rosenswaike
Collegian Staff

For one thing, the Massachusetts baseball team was consistent this weekend.

In all three road matchups with No. 1 Arizona State, the Minutemen hung tough for much of the game.

But you couldn't tell that by looking at the final scores.

UMass lost, 13-4, on both Friday and Saturday, after holding a lead in each game in the middle innings. Saturday's game was tied at 4-4 in the bottom of the eighth inning, before the Sun Devils exploded for nine runs. On Sunday, UMass trailed 2-1 in the fifth, but ASU scored six runs in the bottom of the inning en route to a 17-9 victory and the series sweep.

Before the three-game set began, UMass coach Mike Stone said it was good for his team to start the season against such a strong opponent.

"We like to have people that like to play the best, and we use it as a recruiting incentive," he said. "They are one of the best teams in the country right now, so it will be a great challenge and it will be interesting so see how our guys respond to that."

The Minutemen (0-3) opened their season later than any other team in the Atlantic 10, while the Sun Devils (12-0) started the year on Feb. 22 and have already outscored their opponents this season, 138-35.

On Sunday, UMass starter Nick Serino gave up two runs (one earned) in four innings to keep the game close. Jared Freni, the No. 1 starter on the Minutemen, came in to relieve Serino in the fifth. In one-third of an inning, eight of the nine batters Freni faced reached base, as the Sun Devils scored six runs in the inning to take an 8-1 lead.

ASU added nine runs in the final three innings to push the lead to 17-4. Seth Blair ran into trouble in the ninth, allowing UMass to score five unearned runs for a final tally of 17-9. Adam Tempesta paced the Minutemen at the plate, with two hits and three runs batted in.

The highly-touted Blair was roughed-up in Saturday's game as well and didn't make it out of the first inning in his start. UMass got the early lead, 3-0, but Stephen Sauer came in for Blair and shut the Minutemen down. His seven innings of stellar pitching (one run allowed, 11 strike-outs) helped the Sun Devils take the lead at 4-3 after six innings.

UMass tied the game at 4-4 in the eighth on a run-scoring single by Mike Donato, but the Sun Devils quickly answered back with nine runs in the bottom of the inning to secure the victory. Closer Aaron Smith received much of the damage, allowing five runs without registering an out.

Friday's game was almost identical. UMass held a 3-1 lead in the fourth inning after a Ryan Franczek solo home run and an Andy Tuetken two-run single. ASU tied the game in the fifth inning and took the lead for good with three runs an inning later. The Sun Devils tacked on seven runs in the eighth inning.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosenswa@dailycollegian.com.

5th Annual
MILLER LECTURE in Art and Art History
IN MEMORY OF DULCY BLUME MILLER, SMITH CLASS OF 1946

Maria Magdalena Campos-Pons

Exiled from Cuba and living in Boston, Campos-Pons will speak about her work and experience as an artist of Nigerian descent.

FRIDAY 4 APRIL 2008 5:30 P.M.
WRIGHT HALL, WEINSTEIN AUDITORIUM SMITH COLLEGE
Free and open to all. No reservations necessary.

This program is offered in conjunction with GLOBAL EYES: new ways of seeing art a Smith College symposium to explore how global influences are reshaping our understanding of the meaning of art, April 4-5, 2008. Info and registration www.smith.edu/artmuseum/globaleyes or 413.585.2760

Maria Magdalena Campos-Pons Cuban 1959– Birth Certificate 1991 Woodcut on amate (bark) paper, carved wood, and etched glass Purchased with the Dorothy C. Miller class of 1925 Fund in 2007. Photograph by Thomas J. Gustavus

SMITH COLLEGE MUSEUM OF ART A MUSEUM SHOP

413.585.2760 www.smith.edu/artmuseum Northampton, MA

Renting 101:
How to Rent Your First Apartment

RENTING 101

- DOOR PRIZES
- HELPFUL CHECKLISTS
- EXPERT ADVICE FROM STUDENT LEGAL SERVICES OFFICE ATTORNEY LISA KENT

Come to a crash course in renting!

TUESDAY, MARCH 4
Berkshire Dining Hall
7:00-8:00pm

TUESDAY, MARCH 11
Franklin Dining Hall
7:00-8:00pm

UMassAmherst
This event is presented by the Student Legal Services Office in collaboration with Off Campus Housing and the Housing Assignment Office.

spring breaking

women's clothing, shoes and accessories
downtown Amherst

ALUMNI ASSOCIATION

Faculty & Staff drawing for free gift!

Students, Enter drawing for fun-filled Fan Bag!

FREE
Networking Breakfast for Students, Faculty, Staff, Alumni

Thursday, March 13
8:30 - 10:30 a.m.
Memorial Hall

Sponsored by the UMass Amherst Alumni Association and Brueggers Bagels of Amherst
(Limited to first 250 people)

BRUEGGER'S BAKED FRESH

GET TESTED. GET ANSWERS.

In recognition of National Women and Girls HIV/AIDS Awareness Day

FREE AND CONFIDENTIAL HIV RAPID TESTING

Monday, March 10
9:30 am - 5:00pm
Smith Campus Center

Tuesday, March 11
Friday, March 14
10:00 am - 6:00pm
Amherst Common

Wednesday, March 12
9:30am - 1:30pm
UMASS Campus Center

TAPESTRYhealth.org

800 696 7752

HIV

Arigato II
Hibachi Steak & Seafood
15% off with Student ID
(except Friday & Saturdays)
Sushi · Full Bar · Cocktails

Reservations Suggested
413.253.0707

Obsessive Sudoku Disorder.

6	2	4	9	5
			2	4	7	9
		3		1
	9	5						3
1						7	2
				7		5
		6	5	2	9
				6	1	8	9	2

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

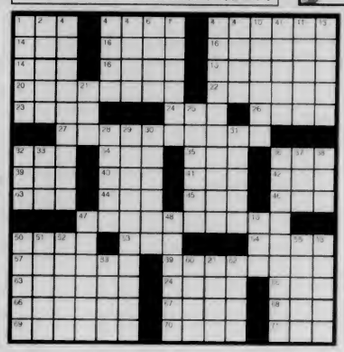
Quote of the Day

"It's doggie style. It's just the style. We don't have to go outside or anything."

-Seth Rogen as "Ben Stone"

The Brothers Watt By William Wilson

Wondermark By David Malki



Middle of the Road By Jake Whitt

ACROSS
1 Heavy-hearted
4 Sicilian volcano
8 Sticky situation
14 Wedding vow
15 Sea of Asia
16 Restless desires
17 Light brown
18 Sepulcher
19 Absent without leave
20 Mass prayer
22 Movie with a soundtrack
23 Twenty quires
24 Final degree
26 Soprano Lily
27 Green belt
32 Scottish river
34 Scand. country
35 Period
36 Chew the fat
39 Ginger ...
40 Invent facts
41 Golly!
42 In the past
43 Open an auction
44 Four-legged toter
45 ___ Alamos, NM
46 Critic Reed
47 Two dozen
50 See socially
53 Extinct flightless bird
54 Resins
57 Neighbor of Kenya
59 Tract
63 Thebes today
64 Stratagem
65 "___ Town"
66 Magnate's purview
67 Etc.'s cousin
68 Made in the 60s
69 One prone to backtalk
70 Overplay the T.C.
71 Put in stitches

DOWN
1 Shankar's instrument
2 Maxim
3 "From Here to Eternity" co-star
4 Has a bite
5 Stepped (on)
6 Christen
7 Ungarnished
8 Lose one's cool
9 Gillette shaver
10 Carve
11 Military hat
12 Bolshevik leader
13 Photorealist painter
21 Thurman of films
25 Threefold
28 Related by marriage
29 Party raffle
30 California city
31 Go-ahead
32 Touch lightly
33 Actor Wallach
36 Tiresomely talkative
37 Birthday number
38 Present container
47 Asha Stadium sport
48 Knocked lightly
49 Vocalized grunt
50 Put up your ___
51 Lizard of the Old World
52 Waterproof covers, briefly
55 Sedan's river
56 Drawn tol
58 Call a chicken?
60 Chorus voice
61 Castle defense
62 Gomer of Mayberry

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Is DOODLING your thing?
Why not put it to use?
Submit your comics to THE DAILY COLLEGIAN Comix Page and you could be published up to 5 times every week

Continuing & Professional Education
UMassAmherstOutreach
Summer Session 2008
Don't Wait- Jump Start Your Career This Summer
Session I June 2 - July 10
Session II July 14 - Aug 20
Online Gen Ed's
Small Classes
Great Faculty
PLAN AHEAD!
UMassULearn.net

Horoscopes

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Life is a symphony and you are the conductor. Wave your baton and hit on the first violinist.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
You will fail the U.S. Citizen test on Facebook and subsequently be deported to Iceland.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
It is never a good day to tell your girlfriend that you are attracted to her mother.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Attend a guest lecture on the importance of fingernail clipping in the 21st century.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
The sun will be out for an extra hour from now on. Emerge from your cave dwelling and get some vitamin D.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Some days you're the elephant and other days you are the walrus. Either way, you've got tusks.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Like a sandwich, you will always be looked to as a timeless source of dependability and happiness.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Take bovine growth hormone intravenously to stimulate the growth of breast tissue. You'll be utterly huge.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Your body is undergoing lots of changes; ask your mommy where babies come from.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
If you can hide inside of your own purse, it is safe to say that it is too large for your frail body.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Freedom is not free. It is equal to the cost of three vowels on Wheel of Fortune.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Covering your pubic region with a layer of latex paint does not count as using a prophylactic.

Don't go chasin' waterfalls just stick to the comics and the lakes that you're used to.

comics@dailycollegian.com

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Announcements

Montreal Weekend
From $99 Complete.
Best Hotels.
Best Prices.
montrealexpress.net
781-979-9001

Apts. For Rent

Center of Town 1,2,3 Bedrooms. NOW SHOWING for June and Sept. NO FEES. Schedule a showing 253-7879 view apts. at www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

2 bedroom apartments in Sunderland HEAT, HOT WATER, CABLE AND INTERNET INCLUDED! Call ASAP 413-665-3856

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin in June, Aug, or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

Studio 1,2,3,4 bedrooms available. Going Fast, Still guaranteeing for Fall Semester. ALL UTILITIES INCLUDED! Call ASAP 413-256-0741

Employment

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520

Office Assistant on Nantucket Island This Summer. Run errands, recieve inventory, computer data entry, answer telephones. Salary plus housing. Fax RESUME to 508-228-8778 or mail to Rafael OSONA P.O. Box 2607, Nantucket MA 02584 telephone: 508-228-3942

ACCOUNTANT REPRESENTATIVE, SALES REPRESENTATIVE, STORE KEEPER, CLERK AND SECRETARY NEEDED. Requirement (Computer Literate, Along with CV). For more info write us at Gina Shoes Limited Email: gina.limited@gmail.com

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

Services

School a pain in the eyes? Headache? Itchy eyes? Trouble reading? An eye exam can be the first step toward relief. Call Eye Care Services at UHS, 577-5383 to learn more.

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test.

233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthnght.org.

Concerned About Your Eating?
Do you eat too little? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic, 577-5101

TAPESTRY HEALTH providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling &rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable, Safe. 413-548-9992. 27 Pray St. Amherst. www.tapestryhealth.org

Travel

Spring Break in Rome, Florence, Venice, Italy
Heading to Italy this spring? Visit www.prestotours.com for Expert Touring Advice. VIP Walking Tours of the Vatican City, Colosseum and more. No Lines. Elite English speaking Tour Guides. Small Groups. Student Discounts. Low Price. Online Booking. info@prestotours.com. 617-642-7082

Montreal Weekend
From $99 Complete.
Best Hotels.
Best Prices.
montrealexpress.net
781-979-9001

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, MARCH 10, 2008 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Two for the show

BRIAN TEEMBERG/COLLEGIAN

Junior center Cory Quirk and junior defenseman Topher Bevis celebrate Quirk's third-period goal in UMass's 4-2 win over Merrimack on Saturday night. Quirk's goal proved to be the game-winner and clinched a playoff spot for the Minutemen in the Hockey East Tournament.

Sweep of Merrimack clinches playoff spot for Minutemen

By Joe Meloni
Collegian Staff

NORTH ANDOVER — Eight minutes and 57 seconds into the third period of Saturday's matchup between the Massachusetts hockey team and Merrimack, UMass coach Don Cahoon had seen enough.

With the scored tied, 2-2 and his team's post-season chances slipping away, he called a timeout. His team hovered over their bench as Cahoon paced back and forth shouting instructions.

"I told them, 'we have to get back to playing UMass hockey; too many things are going through your minds,'" Cahoon said. "'We know everybody here is ready to compete. Now we just have to focus on playing. Let's get back to UMass hockey. Let's get back to our fore-check. Let's get back to our breakout.'"

Four minutes later, the Minutemen got the message. James Marcou wrapped the puck around the boards to Alex Berry behind the net. Berry battled with Merrimack defenseman Joe Loprieno before sending the puck into the slot. Junior center Cory Quirk, collected the puck, wheeled and fired a slap shot past MC goaltender Andrew Braithwaite.

UMass	4
MC	2

UMass	5
MC	2

Jordan Virtue added another exactly 30 seconds later, clinching the 4-2 win and the eighth and final playoff spot in the Hockey East Tournament. UMass will take on top-seeded New Hampshire next weekend in Durham, N.H., in a best-of-three quarterfinal series.

"We had to play until the seven-minute mark of the third period of the 34th game, so yeah," Cahoon said when asked if he felt a sense of relief. "I think every body is passionate about playing. We love to play. And you can't play for what is most important if you don't get into the playoffs."

Entering the weekend, the Minutemen were two points ahead of Maine for the last spot in the conference tournament. The Black Bears swept a

See HOCKEY on page 7

Conference play ends with win at GW

UMass earns first-round bye in Atlantic 10 Tournament

By Michael King
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's basketball team can breathe easily – for now.

With Saturday's win over George Washington, the Minutemen finished the regular season with a six-game winning streak and secured the No. 3 seed, as well as a bye into the quarterfinals, in this week's Atlantic 10 Tournament.

UMass	67
GW	63

UMass (21-9, 10-6 A-10) narrowly avoided the upset from the Colonials (9-17, 5-11 A-10), 67-63, at the Smith Center in Washington.

"GW came into the game playing with a great amount of freedom and played extremely hard," UMass coach Travis Ford said after the game on the UMass radio broadcast. "We weren't on top of our game tonight, but we made just enough plays down the stretch to win. That's what you need to do this time of year."

The Colonials had an opportunity to take the lead late in the game as the Minutemen missed several free-throw attempts in the final three minutes.

Yet the Minutemen's offensive performance was uncharacteristic of the style of basketball featured in their 20 previous wins. Though 3-point shooting was still a significant factor, UMass received zero points on the fast break. The Colonials effectively nullified the UMass uptempo offense with aggressive defensive play and hustling down the other end of the court.

"We didn't play UMass basketball tonight," Ford said. "George Washington did a good job getting back on defense, and they did a good job pushing the ball at us. We played on our heels a lot tonight."

See M. BASKETBALL on page 8

Trio heats up at right time

Berry, Quirk, Marcou pace Maroon and White offense

By Jeremy Rice
Collegian Staff

NORTH ANDOVER — Three goals and seven assists over a two-game weekend.

Now that's the type of production you need from your top scoring line. Massachusetts hockey coach Don Cahoon would never call it that, but the trio of center Cory Quirk and wingers James Marcou and Alexander Berry are quickly becoming just that.

Cahoon put the three skaters with different but complementary skill sets together several weeks ago, and they have been the key to the three-game winning streak UMass has ended the regular season with.

"James has special abilities to move the puck, and those other two guys are finding the net," Cahoon said.

"Cory adds a quickness dimension and an energy dimension, and Berry is finally getting his stick on the puck around the net."

PJ STANLEY/COLLEGIAN

Junior Alex Berry turns to greet his teammates after scoring in the first period of UMass's 5-2 win over Merrimack Friday night at the Mullins Center. Berry scored two goals in the weekend pair with MC.

Marcou (5-foot-7) and Berry (6-foot-2) contrast physically about as much as two Minutemen can, but their production on the ice has been outstanding for a team that desperately needed an offensive boost for two months.

Quirk, Berry and Marcou combined for a total of six goals and nine assists dating back to a 5-1 win over Boston University on March 1.

Five of those goals and seven of the assists came while the line was on the ice together. The others were power play goals. And nearly every goal scored by one of them was assisted by another, so whether it's with the man advantage or at even strength, they are finding each other in the right spots all over the ice.

"He always seems to be able to find me," Berry said of Marcou, who is nearing the rookie record for assists in a season. "He's so crafty with the puck; he gets me the puck in places where I can score. Now come playoff time when goals are crucial, this line's been providing that, so it's great."

"Berry's a big guy. He throws his body around out there and finishes [plays]," Marcou said. "I think we've got a good chemistry right now, and it's helping the team out really well."

It's the type of chemistry Cahoon has tried to develop with various lines throughout the season, as he does every year.

Earlier in the season, Quirk was primarily the pivot between P.J.

See LINE on page 7

Flyers avenge earlier loss

By Steve Games
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's basketball team earned another berth in the Atlantic 10 Tournament followed by another first round exit.

On Friday, the Minutewomen were knocked out of the first round in the A-10 Tournament in Philadelphia, losing to Dayton, 57-51. It was just two weeks ago that UMass (13-19) upset Dayton at home, 56-46.

Senior forward Kate Mills scored 17 points and grabbed a career-high 19 rebounds in her last game wearing a UMass uniform. UMass coach Marnie Dacko is losing four seniors from the 2007-08 squad, which includes starting forward Pam Rosanio, who scored 11 points and forwards Alisha Tatham and Whitney McDonald.

"We played all outside tonight, living and dying by each shot, and it hurt us. I feel for my seniors," Dacko said at the post game press conference. "They've certainly been working hard for four years, and I applaud them for their efforts."

Senior forward Nikki Oakland led the way for Dayton with 20 points and 13 rebounds. Oakland scored 11 points and grabbed eight rebounds in the second half. Oakland struggled against the Minutewomen two weeks ago, only scoring five points.

"[Kate Mills] is a great player," Oakland said. "You cannot take that away from her; and every time we play against each other, I feel like it's a battle."

The Minutewomen kept the game close in the first half as they started with an 11-8 lead. Midway through the first half, the Minutewomen saw a glimpse of their future with freshman forward Stephanie Lawrence and freshman guard Cerie Mosgrove seeing action during pivotal points in the first half.

Dayton	57
UMass	51

With UMass trailing, 13-11, Lawrence knocked down a jumper with the assist from Mosgrove. On the next possession, Mosgrove found Mills for a jumper. With another defensive stop, the Minutewomen looked to push the lead. Tatham missed on her attempt, but Mills gathered the rebound and found Mosgrove behind the 3-point line. Mosgrove didn't pass this time as she nailed it to give the Minutewomen their largest lead of the game, 18-13.

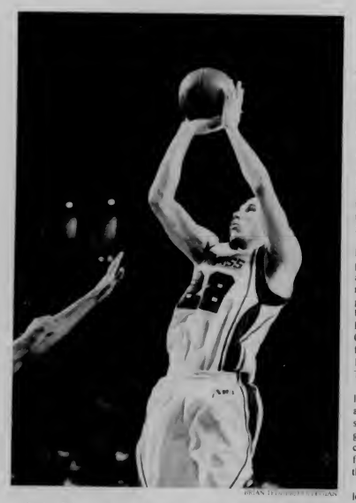
Dayton called a timeout and took back the momentum. On its first possession, sophomore forward Kendel Ross hit a jumper before freshman forward Kristin Daugherty stole the ball from Mills for a layup to cut the lead to 18-17.

Freshman forward Teya Wright scored a layup to give the Minutewomen a 20-17 lead; but on the defensive end, Wright picked up her second foul of the half and went to the bench early. The rest of the first half went back and forth and saw one tie and five lead changes.

Despite shooting 31.3 percent from the field and hitting 1-of-12 from 3-point territory, Dayton held a one-point lead to end the half, 27-26. The Minutewomen shot 40 percent in the first half. The Flyers capitalized at the free throw line, hitting 6-of-8, while the Minutewomen only went to the line once.

The Flyers started the second half on a 6-0 run and held the Minutewomen scoreless for the first three minutes. With 15:10 to go in the game, Wright cut the lead to six with a jumper. With the score, 36-30, Dayton maintained its six-point lead over the next five minutes.

With 6:53 remaining, Mills hit Mosgrove for a lay up to inch closer at, 43-41, it was as close as UMass would get. The Minutewomen had no answer for Oakland, who nailed a 3-point basket on the next possession. After a miss from Mills, Oakland put the game out of reach with another basket, giving Dayton a 50-41 lead with 6:01 left.



"We've had a lot of time with UMass, I give a lot of credit to our women," Dayton coach Jim Jabir said. "We were much more aggressive and better on the boards. It was a game that we really needed."

With 3:22 left, Mosgrove stole the ball, and Rosanio scored a layup out of a time out to make it a two-possession game, 54-48. On the next possession, Young stole the ball from Oakland. On the offensive end, Mills missed a jumper, but Rosanio grabbed the offensive rebound and hit Tatham, who then missed a 3-pointer. The Minutewomen were forced to foul, and the Flyers closed the game out on the free throw line.

Game notes

Despite being a smaller team, Dayton outscored UMass in the paint, 32-24 ... UMass committed 19 collective personal fouls to Dayton's six. The Flyers finished 11-of-14 from the line ... UMass went 3-19 from 3-point territory ... Mills placed four on UMass all-time list with 1,525 points and Rosanio finished seventh with 1,466 points ... In the next round Dayton crushed Charlotte, 77-51. The Flyers season ended in the semi-final round against Temple, 56-51.

Steve Games can be reached at sgames@dailycollegian.com.

BRIAN TEEMBERG/COLLEGIAN

Senior Etienne Brower scored 17 points in UMass's 67-63 win over George Washington Saturday night.

INSIDE: MINUTEMEN WIN NATIONALS IN SKIING | PAGE 5

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

SUNNY : HI: 46 LO: 28 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM TUESDAY, MARCH 11, 2008

LAX 8 no longer UMass students

Last year's lead scorer exits team, University

By Michael King
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts no longer lists the five men's lacrosse players suspended on Feb. 2 for an undisclosed violation of team rules as enrolled students.

Juniors Jim Connolly and Justin Kelleher, redshirt sophomore Jordan Hendry and freshmen Jay Lucas and Alex Whitney are no longer associated with the team, University officials confirmed yesterday.

"The five individuals are no longer enrolled at UMass," said University spokesman Patrick Callahan.

Due to privacy laws regarding students, Callahan could not specify if the students were dismissed from the school or if they willingly left.

Three other former players, Christian Haggerty, Ryan Marcus and Christopher Casey, were arrested for alleged participation in an assault of three individuals at 304 North Pleasant St. on Feb. 1. All eight were suspended by UMass coach Greg Cannella the day after the incident.

However, none of the five have been arrested in connection with the assault.

"No other arrests have been made in connection with the incident besides the original three," said Amherst Police Detective Brian Johnson. "The investigation is still ongoing."

Johnson said that the Amherst PD does not help the UMass dean of students office compile a case against students in alleged violation of the Code of Student Conduct. Neither the public nor any organizations are privy to the information collected through a police investigation before the alleged criminal's arraignment and subsequent trial.

The dean of students office has the ability to suspend and dismiss students that it determines to be in violation of the Code of Student Conduct.

Cannella declined to comment on the situation involving his former players.

"Coach Cannella has no comment at this time," said Associate Athletic Director for Media Relations Jason Yellin. "They are no longer associated with the team or the University."

From the team perspective, the depleted roster hurts the team's depth as well as its offensive ability. Connolly was the team's leading scorer last season with 29 goals. The Minutemen struggled on offense during their past two games, scoring an aggregate nine between a pair of losses.

Michael King can be reached at mking@student.umass.edu

TRISTEN GAVIN/COLLEGIAN

Jim Connolly – who led his team in scoring last season – is one of eight former lacrosse players no longer enrolled following an indefinite suspension for violating team rules in an off campus incident last month.

Southwest left with lights out

For about an hour last Thursday night the dormitories and dining commons in Southwest lost power.

Campus loses power after equipment failure

By Kristen Healy
Collegian Staff

A power outage in the Southwest residential area left students in the dark for about an hour last Thursday night along with several other campus buildings.

At about 11:20 p.m. the lights went out in the Whitmore Administration building, Boyden Gymnasium and throughout the Southwest residential area.

According to director of the University of Massachusetts physical plant Patrick Daly, the electric cable running from the physical plant through the Southwest residential area failed. The lightning arrestor – helping to protect electrical equipment from lightning damage – was knocked down, affecting the line that powers that particular area of campus.

"When the power went out, it was nerve-racking because no one knew what was going on, and since police were called into the area they might have been expecting a riot to break out," said sophomore Lucy Kittle.

According to Patrick J. Callahan, the associate news editor at the Office of News and Information for UMass, police were called into the area out of precaution. The police were in the area until approximately 1:30 a.m. and did not have to interfere except for assisting people out of the dining commons.

"A command center was set up near the Southwest tunnel to monitor activity, but police noted that students were well behaved while the power was out," said Callahan.

This incident was isolated from the scheduled power outages that were scheduled to occur on March 15 and 17. Incidentally, these scheduled power outages have been postponed due to a component within the system that needed to be replaced.

The power outage on Thursday did not contribute to the postponing of the scheduled power outages, which have yet to be assigned a new date.

"Initially when the power went out, I thought it was part of the scheduled power outages that we were informed about, but since the RAs did not know what had happened we figured it was unplanned and something had gone wrong," said Nicole Bowker-Kelly.

According to John Mathews, assistant director of facilities and campus planning, the tests will be rescheduled when the system has been fixed and comprehensively checked out. Their hope is to plan the outages for a time that causes minimal disturbance for students, faculty and events on campus.

"A lot of people left their dorms when the power went out to go outside and see if anything would happen," said Southwest area resident Emily Gittes. "Everyone was well-behaved, though, and most students just stood around, talking and taking pictures."

Kristen Healy can be reached at kkhealy@student.umass.edu

Students spring into mid-semester break

Vacationers drawn to points across the globe

By Liz Newman
Collegian Correspondent

Spring break may be about relaxing, but students at the University of Massachusetts are anything but relaxed with a little less than a week to go.

They're getting tans and manicures, buying clothes and working out.

"Students are at the gym more than usual trying to get in shape for their spring break plans," said Kate Vivian, a Gold's Gym employee.

Diets are at an all-time high this season. Female students at UMass, in particular, are getting ready to go away by counting calories.

Some say that ironically, getting ready for the vacation is even more expensive than the vacation itself. The time, energy and money put into spring break preparations seem endless. Nonetheless, students are shelling out the extra cash, becoming antsy in classes, and getting ready to unwind.

Women are also breaking down the nail salon door to get the perfect manicure and pedicure.

"I don't regularly visit the nail salon because it's a little too pricey for me," said Lauren Codwise, a junior communications major. "Before spring break is another story."

"I definitely get a manicure and pedicure before spring break because you'll be at the beach and people will be seeing your toes. Spring break and nail salons go hand-in-hand," said Codwise.

Melissa Zornberg, a sophomore

See TANNING on page 4

Students across the country are gearing up for the start of spring break 2008 by heading home, flocking to resorts, or traveling overseas.

By Lauren Codwise, John Banelis and Lisa Nobs
Collegian Correspondents

This spring break, students plan to do more than the usual week of binge drinking on the beach, traveling to places like Fort Meyers and Tokyo for a variety of different reasons.

Nationwide, the most popular spring break destinations, by far, are still tropical regions. According to the New York Times, Cancun is the most popular destination for college students, followed by Acapulco and Panama City, Fla. But some of the more interesting "hot" spots are ski resorts, especially in Colorado and Europe.

But not all UMass students are heading for the beach or hitting the slopes.

Sarah Hurd, a senior sports management major, is a proud member of Red Sox Nation and will display it down at training camp in Ft. Myers, Fla.

"Florida is a warm, popular place to go to and I'm a huge Red Sox fan," she said.

Catching a couple of Grapefruit League games aren't the only things on her agenda. She also plans to go to the beaches and relax while enjoying time away from classes.

And what does she hope to get out of it all?

"A tan," Hurd said.

Spring break is also an opportunity for students to spend time with family.

Nico Hough, a sophomore, said he will be returning to Zihuatenejo, Mexico for spring break – where he grew up.

"My dad placed the offer on the table," said Hough. He accepted the suggestion to have the opportunity to tour historical locations with his brother that they never saw as "pups."

Other students are using the break to further their education.

See BEACHES on page 4

Forbes, Harris honored by Atlantic 10

By Eli Rosenswaike
Collegian Staff

Gary Forbes was surprised that he won the Atlantic 10 Player of the Year award yesterday. The senior forward wasn't even expecting to be named to the A-10 All-Conference first team.

But Forbes was downright shocked that his teammate, junior point guard Chris Lowe, wasn't even honored with a third-team nomination yesterday when the A-10 announced its set of awards.

Lowe led the league in assists with 6.2 per game and shooting guard Ricky Harris finished sixth in the conference in scoring (18.1) but neither were named to any of the all-conference teams. Harris, however, did take home the Most Improved Player of the Year honor after his scoring average from last year (4.5) more than quadrupled.

"To me, C-Lowe is the best point guard in this league and probably one of the best point guards in the country," Forbes said. "To have 174 assists and lead the league, and not make a team – the words I have to say probably can't get into a newspaper."

Forbes became the second straight Minuteman to capture the A-10 Player of the Year award; Stephane Lasme took down the honor last year. Heading into the Atlantic 10 Tournament, Forbes is tied for the conference-lead in scoring at 20.3 points per game. The senior swingman also leads UMass in rebounding at 7.9 per game (fourth in the conference).

"I still don't really grasp the point that I was the Player of the Year," Forbes said. "It's tough with the league that we got; there are so many great players. It's basically because of my teammates: the ways they gave the ball in certain positions to score.

See FORBES on page 6

BRIAN TEEMBERG/COLLEGIAN

Senior Gary Forbes is tied for the A-10 lead in points (20.3) and is also fourth in the conference in rebounding (7.9).

RIAA leaves UM off of newest lawsuit list

By Sruthi Valluri
Collegian Staff

The Recording Industry Association of America (RIAA) released a fresh wave of pre-lawsuit letters to 401 students accused of illegally downloading music at 12 universities across the country last month.

Last year, the University of Massachusetts ranked sixth in the nation for copyright complaints, and 37 students received pre-litigation letters. This February, however, UMass was not even included on the list of targeted universities.

The RIAA tracks IP addresses active on peer-to-peer programs like LimeWire and Kazaa. Pre-litigation letters are sent to universities that receive the highest volume of complaints and to the students who are most active illegal file sharers within those universities.

At UMass, the Office of Information Technologies blocks students' access to the Internet if they are recipients of the RIAA's letters. The process evolves from that point on, and depending on the number of offenses, can result in a lawsuit.

The RIAA's lawsuit letters only affect students on campus and cannot accurately identify repeat offenders.

Student Legal Services Office (SLSO) and OIT began to actively address illegal downloading across campus since the RIAA had begun

See RIAA on page 2

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
CXVIII
Issue 101

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Nicholas Belanger
Managing Editor Katie Huston
Business Manager Dan Exter
Production Manager Chris Martin
Night Supervisor Meghan Murphy
Advertising Manager Alex Bender
Advertising Production Katherine Shea
Editorial Production Michael Sarkes
Arts & Living Editor Ryan McAskill
Copy Editor Adam Stagin
Editorial Editor S.P. Sullivan
News Editor Derrick Perkins
Sports Editor Jeremy Rice
Features Editor Dave Humphreys
Photo Editor Michael Phillis
Web Editor James Hale
Asst. Business Manager Eric Stymeziak
Assistant Advertising Marsea Whooten
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Asst. Arts & Living Stephanie McPherson
Asst. Arts & Living Skye McIntyre
Asst. Arts & Living Brian Wood
Asst. Editorial James Mathews
Asst. Editorial Melissa Garber
Assistant News Michael King
Assistant News Kate Olesin
Assistant News Holly Seabury
Assistant Sports Mike Connors
Assistant Sports Joe Meloni
Assistant Sports Eli Rosenzweike
Assistant Photo Brian Tedder
Arts Web Editor Michelle Abbascjano
Editorial Web Editor Leil Walcutt
News Web Editor Nick Bush
Sports Web Editor Steve Games

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently owned, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life. It was the College News in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1904 and the Bi-Weekly Collegian in 1906. Published daily since 1967. The Collegian has been printed since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:00 p.m.

Production Crew
On staff today

Night Editor
Meghan Murphy

Copy Editor
Kirsten Swenson

Production Supervisor
Michael Sarkes

Web Editor
Steve Games

Across the Nation News Wire Around the World

Civil rights activist fights to close 'Redneck' store in NC

By Katrina A. Goggins
Associated Press

A black civil rights activist is fighting to close a store that sells KKK robes and T-shirts emblazoned with racial slurs. David Kennedy is confident he can make it happen. After all, he says he owns the building.

Since 1996, the Redneck Shop has operated in an old movie theater that, according to court records, was transferred in 1997 to Kennedy and the Baptist church he leads.

"Our ownership puts an end to that history as far as violence and hatred, racism being practiced in that place and also the recruiting of the Klan," Kennedy said. "This is the same place that we had to go up into the balcony to go to the movies before the Klan took it. So there's a lot of history there."

But legal documents also indicate that the man who runs the store, 62-year-old John Howard, is entitled to operate his business in the building until he dies. Now the dispute may go to court.

Kennedy, 54, has led protests outside the store since it opened but said he's never been able to close it because of the agreement that Howard can run the shop for life.

The reverend envisions the building as a potential future home for his New Beginnings Missionary Baptist Church, which now meets in a double-wide trailer.

Kennedy claims he can't even visit his own property because Howard won't let him in when he appears in the door. But that didn't happen during a recent visit with an Associated Press reporter and photographer

"Reverend Kennedy, where you been hiding?" Howard shouted when the door opened.

Inside the store, hooded Klan robes hang on the same rack as the racist T-shirts. Pictures of men, women and children in Klan clothing and pamphlets tell a partial history of the organization.

John Howard's Redneck Shop has become the center of controversy after the property was transferred to David Kennedy's (right) Baptist church.

Howard used to own the whole building. When his store first opened, he said, people threw rocks at his windows, spit in his doorway and picketed. A month later, a man intentionally crashed his van through the front windows.

"If anything turns people off, they shouldn't come in here. It's not a thing in here that's against the law," Howard said, adding that he was once the KKK's grand dragon for South Carolina and North Carolina.

To blacks, Kennedy said, the store is a reminder of this region's painful past, which includes the lynching of his great, great uncle by a white mob.

The town of Laurens, about 30 miles southeast of Greenville, was named after 18th century slave trader Henry Laurens.

Some street addresses are still marked with the letter "C" that once designated black homes as "colored." Racial tension was heightened in recent years when two white female teachers were sentenced for having sex with male students — all of them black.

Kennedy has a long history of fighting racial injustice. He protested when a South Carolina county refused to observe the Martin Luther King Jr. holiday, and he helped lobby to remove the Confederate flag from the Statehouse dome.

When people in the region allege racism, he rallies attention to the cause. A walk through the neighborhood where he was born shows that he seems a stranger to no one.

"Hey Rev," one man says as he strolls by.

"Pump it up," Kennedy responds with the phrase he uses at his protests.

Mary Redd, who lives across from the house where Kennedy was born, said blacks know to contact the pastor with their problems.

"And he helps them out," added neighbor Deborah Cheeks. Kennedy said progress has always been slow to come to Laurens.

"There are two powers in the world: the mind and the sword," he said. "In the long run, the sword is defeated by the mind. I want to destroy the concept of hatred."

Vatican updates laws to include "new sins"

Social injustices, human rights violations condemned by Pope

By Frances D'Emilio
Associated Press

In olden days, the deadly sins included lust, gluttony and greed. Now, the Catholic Church says pollution, mind-damaging drugs and genetic experiments are on its updated thou-shalt-not list. Also receiving fresh attention by the Vatican was social injustice, along the lines of the age-old maxim: "The rich get richer while the poor get poorer."

In the Vatican's latest update on how God's law is being violated in today's world, Monsignor Gianfranco Girotti, the head of the Apostolic Penitentiary, was asked by the Vatican newspaper L'Osservatore Romano what, in his opinion, are the "new sins."

He cited "violations of the basic rights of human nature" through genetic manipulation, drugs that "weaken the mind and cloud intelligence," and the imbalance between the rich and the poor.

"If yesterday sin had a rather individualistic dimension, today it has a weight, a resonance, that's especially social, rather than individual," said Girotti, whose office deals with matters of conscience and grants absolution.

It's not the first time that the Vatican has sought to put a modern spin on sin. Last year, the Vatican took on the problem of highway accidents, issuing a kind of "Ten Commandments" for drivers against the sins of road rage, alcohol abuse and even rudeness behind the wheel.

Vatican officials, however, stressed that Girotti's comments broke no new ground on what constitutes sin.

On the environment, both Pope Benedict XVI and the late Pope John Paul II frequently expressed concern about the fate of the Earth. During Benedict's papacy, Vatican engineers have developed plans for some Holy See buildings to use solar energy, including photovoltaic cells on the roof of the auditorium for pilgrims' audiences with the pontiff.

John Paul also dedicated much of his long papacy to condemning the gap between have and have-nots in speeches in his travels throughout the world as well as in writings.

"The poor are always becoming poorer and the rich ever more rich, feeding unsustainable social injustice," Girotti said in the interview published Sunday.

Closer to home, Girotti was asked about the many "situations of scandal and sin within the church," in what appeared to be a reference to allegations in the United States and other countries of sexual abuse by clergy of minors and the cover-ups by hierarchy.

The monsignor acknowledged the "objective gravity" of the allegations, but contended that the heavy coverage by mass media of the scandals must also be denounced because it "discredits the church."

Benedict has been leading the Vatican's campaign against abortion, and Girotti was asked about the "widespread perception" that the church doesn't consider the "difficult" predicament for women.

Girotti rejected that view, saying that Catholic organizations help unwed mothers, educating "their children who come into the worth because of their lack of foresight" and facilitating adoption.

Over 25,000 lawsuit letters mailed to students across the country last year

RIAA from page 1

taking legal action against students caught illegally downloading music. Their initiatives include brochures, posters, informational seminars and material for new students.

John Dubach, chief informational officer at OIT, says that his office now receives almost 12 warning letters a day. It is unclear whether there has been a significant decrease in complaints, or if OIT's efforts have paid off, but UMass students still remain under RIAA's scrutiny, according to Dubach.

Charles DiMare, directing attorney at the Student Legal Services Office, said that pre-litigation letters arrive in waves, so evading one wave does not make a student immune to the next.

DiMare has dealt with and represented almost 175 students who have received letters. He tells his clients that they have a 50-50 chance of winning.

If a student chooses to settle, he or she may end up paying $3,000, which is the average settlement. If they decide to face RIAA in court, the bill could amount to $300,000, since pre-litigation letters usually demand $750 for each song that has been downloaded illegally.

According to the RIAA, losses incurred from music piracy amount to almost $12.5 billion of economic losses. The lawsuits against college students started in late February 2007 and target only high-volume illegal activity.

To date, the RIAA has sent letters to over 25,000 students, the vast majority of whom decided to settle. The actions taken by the RIAA considered "bullying tactics" by some have polarized the debate surrounding illegal downloading.

The RIAA contends that they have a legal right to press charges against students. According to their Web site, although targeting students was not their first option, doing so has "deterred a sizeable number of largely casual would-be illegal downloaders."

DiMare agrees, but points out that the problem is much larger than specific students on campus.

"I suspect they hare having some effect," he said. "But I think Congress needs to take a very hard look at this and make some sort of change. The RIAA can't keep sending pre-litigation letters to thousands and thousands of students."

Dubach thinks that the RIAA's actions are inappropriate, and ultimately, ineffective for the problem at hand.

"They're trying to make an example of a few people with the hopes that everyone else will get the idea," he said.

Dubach said that technological advancement will always remain ahead of RIAA's litigation letters.

"To really curb illegal activity, they need to come up with a better idea," said Dubach.

Most students have been forced to settle because of the heavy consequences of losing against RIAA. A woman in Minnesota who decided to go to court ultimately ended up paying $220,000 for illegally downloading 24 songs. Students can avoid paying such high prices, but settling still remains an expensive alternative.

"It's harsh," said DiMare. "College students have a tough enough time paying bills, so having to pay another three grand is difficult."

Sruthi Valluri can be reached at valluri@student.umass.edu.

University officials are unsure as to whether new policies or programs have kept UMass students off of the latest round of RIAA lawsuits.

This year: UMASS made you smarter

This summer: we'll make you hotter

Become a thinner, healthier, more confident you at...

SHANEdiet & LIFESTYLE RESORTS

AT THE NEVELE GRANDE RESORT AND COUNTRY CLUB

Weight loss, nutrition & fitness classes, yoga, tennis, walking trails. Fun & friends at a great place and price less than you would expect.

YOUNG ADULTS 18-25

Call us at (914) 271-4141
www.shanedietresorts.com
office@shanedietresorts.com

Need a summer job?
Counselor jobs available
www.campshane.com

"The man who reads nothing at all is better educated than the man who reads nothing but newspapers."
—Thomas Jefferson

Then again, he never had to read for psych. Or Astronomy.

dailycollegian.blogspot.com

5th Annual
MILLER LECTURE in Art and Art History
IN MEMORY OF DULCY BLUME MILLER, SMITH CLASS OF 1946

Maria Magdalena Campos-Pons

Exiled from Cuba and living in Boston, Campos-Pons will speak about her work and experience as an artist of Nigerian descent.

FRIDAY 4 APRIL 2008 5:30 P.M.
WRIGHT HALL, WEINSTEIN AUDITORIUM SMITH COLLEGE
Free and open to all. No reservations necessary.

This program is offered in conjunction with GLOBAL EYES: new ways of seeing art a Smith College symposium to explore how global influences are reshaping our understanding of the meaning of art. April 4-5, 2008 Info and registration: www.smith.edu/artmuseum/globaleyes or 413 585 2760

Maria Magdalena Campos-Pons, Cuban, 1959- Birth Certificate, 1991 Woodcut on amate (bark) paper, carved wood, and etched glass. Purchased with the Dorothy C. Miller, class of 1925 Fund in 2007. Photograph by Thomas J. Gustavino

SMITH COLLEGE MUSEUM OF ART & MUSEUM SHOP

413.585.2760 www.smith.edu/artmuseum Northampton, MA

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

Editorial Opinion

Tuesday, March 11, 2008

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
- Sir Salman Rushdie

Editorial@dailycollegian.com

Deserts and tragedy

Global Perspectives

Greg Collins

The silence was deafening as the 20 of us American University in Cairo students refrained from making a single sound for one minute in the middle of the White Desert, part of the Western Desert in Egypt. Not a noise was heard as we stood surrounded by endless sand and magnificent geological creations, civilization merely a distant memory in our minds.

The Black and White Deserts, which we visited this past weekend, are two of the most amazing deserts in the world. Upon arriving here for the first time, one would think that the soft white outline of the landscape represented the aftermath of a light snowfall. However, a closer look reveals that this color provides the coating for unique rock formations scattered throughout the desert.

These configurations, some as high as three-story buildings, resemble camels, chickens, mushrooms and ostriches. We were able to climb to the top of these structures and gaze across vast stretches of the desert in complete silence; a pleasant departure from the incessant bustle of downtown Cairo.

At sunset and sunrise, the white powder covering the formations transforms into orange and pink, creating an incredible spectacle of color contrast. We experienced this change firsthand, as we had slept outside throughout the night on mats provided by our Bedouin hosts. We awoke to the glistening sunshine amidst the backdrop of the white and pink landscape.

The Bedouins (nomadic Arabs) who guided us throughout our journey acted as though we had been friends for years. My driver sped our Jeep around the desert, identifying famous sites, all the while racing other vehicles and driving upwards of 130 miles per hour.

It is easy to hold an apathetic attitude in reaction to news events far removed from the luxuries of our own homes.

The Bedouins joked with us, introduced us to Egyptian music and its unique drum-playing, and cooked us a delectable dinner of chicken, rice and potatoes at night.

This particular night in the White Desert was perhaps my most enjoyable time here so far. Sitting cozily around a campfire, eating with my friends, dancing with Bedouins and observing the eerie white environment is something I will most likely never again experience in my life.

Coupled with our travels to the Crystal Mountain, a huge rock formation composed of quartz crystal, this past weekend was a kind of surreal experience only Egyptians and tourists can comprehend.

In addition, the trip presented us with an opportunity to drive through an authentic local Egyptian town far away from Cairo. It was absent of any cute tourist concoctions frequently seen throughout the streets of the capital.

The environment resembled that of a Third World country, with a run-down infrastructure and little indication of a functioning economy. Every woman I saw wore both a hijjab and a niqab (which covers a Muslim woman's entire face besides her eyes).

Yet a deeper look showed that there were clearly signs of culture similar to more advanced societies. There were schools for young children, local restaurants with chefs, and reliable transportation methods, such as moving food and supplies on donkeys.

These aspects provided fresh evidence that even if different cultures are inhabited by people who don't look like us, the same desires — education, a healthy diet and efficient economization of resources — are universally applied in any successful civilization, regardless of the blood of its residents.

This town offered no mesmerizing tourist sites, but the memories of these otherwise mundane occurrences — little children bolting out of class into the streets, a chef waiting for locals to drop buy for a bite to eat, and men moving materials on donkeys — will be in my head for the remainder of my time here.

Back in Cairo, Hamas leadership has been talking with Egyptian authorities about a possible cease-fire with Israel. Recently, a Palestinian terrorist opened fire on a West Jerusalem seminary, killing eight innocent students.

As of right now, Hamas has not been directly implicated in coordinating the attack. Reading horrific news stories from the comfort of our homes often distances us from the realities of military conflict. In light of my travels throughout the region, Middle Eastern violence has taken on a new meaning for me.

For instance, I received an e-mail recently from an Israeli friend whom I had met on a trip there. She explained how a close friend of hers had died during the violence near the Gaza-Israeli border. She discussed the current instability and heightened tension in Jerusalem, where her family lives.

Another Israeli friend, with whom I roomed for a few nights in Israeli hotels, told me how buildings right next to where he lived were bombed.

A Palestinian friend in one of my AUC classes has family living on the Gaza Strip. Personally, I shudder at the fact that I walked within the vicinity of the recently attacked seminary in West Jerusalem in January.

It is easy to hold an apathetic attitude in reaction to news events far removed from the luxuries of our own homes. But never forget that the actions of a few — in this case, primarily Palestinian terrorists — can cost the lives of many. Tragically, my Israeli and Palestinian friends know this truism all too well.

Greg Collins is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at gcollins@student.umass.edu.

Another primary fiasco

John Gruenenfelder

It seems strange, champions of democracy that we are, that we have such a terribly difficult time holding an untarnished election. We've never even reached the point where claims of voter fraud and disenfranchisement have been spread throughout media outlets. No, this time it is some boneheaded moves by Democratic Party state officials in Florida and Michigan.

Last year, Michigan and Florida chose to hold primaries on Jan. 15 and 29, respectively, earlier than national party rules allow under the "Let's make New Hampshire Important" bylaw.

It was stupid then, but at the time, nobody foresaw the dead heat that Senators Hillary Clinton and Barack Obama would be locked in. Now it has moved past the stupid stage and right on into crisis territory.

As the Daily Show humorously, though crudely, called it, this situation really has become a "Clusterf to the White House." With the two remaining contenders so close, every remaining delegate is now more important than ever. By holding their primaries early, however, the national party stripped Florida and Michigan of their 366 combined delegates.

Abiding by party rules, neither candidate campaigned in these two states; Obama was not even on the Michigan ballot. As a result of these restrictions, Clinton carried both states, though it did not matter at the time.

Both candidates must now reach some agreement over how to proceed from here. Democratic National Committee chairman Howard Dean has already made it clear that delegates will not be seated based on the January vote, saying, "You can't change the rule in the middle of the game."

At this point, the only fair way to proceed is to hold a "do-over." Unfortunately, such a prospect is surprisingly expensive; costing at least $20 million in each state and nobody has been jumping to pay for it. Still stubborn, neither Michigan's nor Florida's state Democratic Party is willing to pony up the cash.

Dean has also said that he will wait for the states to devise a solution and not hand one down from the national level; meanwhile, the states have an opposite view of the situation. Presumably, this has much less to do with stepping on anyone's toes and more that the states hope that a national solution will magically include national party money.

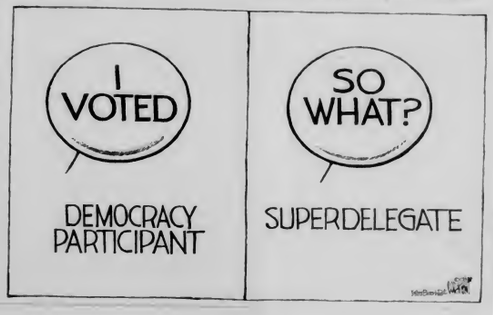
In this case, the fault lies entirely with Michigan and Florida. Given recent memory, is anybody really surprised Florida would find a way to foul up another election? While the choices to hold too-early primaries were made by the state party leaderships, voters in those states certainly could have made their feelings known.

With all of these problems, maybe having some U.N. monitors wouldn't be so bad.

The DNC made its decision in late August and gave the states a 30-day period in which to remedy the situation. Even if the problem had been fixed after the 30-day limit, chances are very good that the penalty would have been removed anyway simply so that the nomination process could go forward without any reservations.

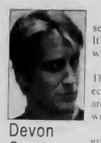
As silly as the DNC's rule about no primaries before Feb. 5 might be, an election year is not the time to change party rules. Many states have also waited until the last minute to try new voting machines mandated after 2000's electoral malfeasance. All that has gotten us is scandal after scandal involving Diebold and easily hacked and modified electronic voting machines.

In our two party system of government, the national parties have a lot of power and control over how primaries are conducted. It's also understandable that they would want to maintain some modicum of control over the primary schedule. Even with oversight, we've seen the primaries pushed ever earlier into the year.



The individual states do this for largely selfish reasons; wanting their votes to matter more on the national stage. This is not a bad reason and, if anything, it points to a serious flaw in how we conduct our primaries. But early primaries have a worse effect that the states seem happy to ignore.

The longer the campaign lasts, the more money it will consume. The vast sums of money that must be raised by each candidate do far more damage to our system than a fight over who gets to vote before New Hampshire.



It's a mess, to be sure: missing delegates, super delegates, push polling, disenfranchisement, phone jamming and so on. With all of these problems, maybe having some U.N. monitors wouldn't be so bad.

Having some neutral observers might make the parties behave better. If recent history has demonstrated one thing time and again, it's that Republican Party operatives might be masters at ruining somebody else's votes, but Democrats are clearly the masters of damaging their own.

John Gruenenfelder is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at jgruenen@student.umass.edu.

Hey you, got a swipe?

Devon Courtney

There are pressing matters at hand. This semester, your YCMP swipes are worth $7.25. It's quite the change from the year before that when their value was $6.75.

What about the semester right before that? They were only worth $6.25. It doesn't take an economist to see that the values of your swipes are rising faster than an elderly woman with a winning bingo card.

This won't mean a whole lot to the demographic of people who order online pizza but yet somehow can't spell the letter Y. C'mon. Pull the right order. I'll bet you a dozen dollops for a dish of dumplings that you eat food, and are quite concerned with it's much a part of this.

I hate to get global with my editorials, but I have to. The fact that our economy is up crippic creek on a stick is partly responsible.

I regret thinking about whether or not you'll have a job when you graduate with that psychology degree. You'll have enough on your life to worry about walking dogs. The economy is certainly affecting you as a student at UMass, right now.

My point is that the cost of our food is flying skyward faster than the library's broken elevators.

If you repeatedly find yourself in line at the Blue Wall Hatch and are consistently paying with cash, I'm inspired to start thinking about bank loans and interest rates.

It also wouldn't hurt you to consider investing in a grapefruit, because pretty soon that wallet may be going on a diet. You might even find yourself becoming a modern day Jean Valjean faced with 20 years for having to steal vegan noodles and vegetarian layer bars from the Worcester D.C. Quelle dilemma.

If you do find yourself the proud owner of a handful of YCMP "flex swipes," you're in the clear for now. You've already paid for them. If you're thinking about chucking your meal points out the rear window for next semester because your cooking tactics are inspired by the stylings of Rachel Ray, you may as well never dine in these parts ever again. Daily flips to Arigato Sushi in downtown Amherst will soon be more practical than a Blue Wall meal.

While surfing the UMass Dining Services blog, I came across a couple more potential reasons for why we're paying more and more each semester for our food. In a Nov. 14 blog entry titled, "How we help you to keep the cost down," Ken Toong, manager of planning services at UMass, writes that food costs per meal are up 7% percent compared to last year.

Statistics suggest that the average amount of food wasted at the dining commons is half a pound per plate. I'm not going to go into a tirade about starving children in Mongoloturkistan, but I will suggest that this is a two-sided problem. Here are some potential solutions.

If you're going to spend some money on food, I would recommend going to the all-you-can-eat boneless wing buffet every Monday and Tuesday evening at the Hangar.

At $6 a head, it's well underneath the value of the meal swipe. As an added bonus, it also represents a nice compromise between starvation and starting your own food-based landfill.

I would also recommend looking through the UMass calendar of events for socials of any kind. Most people attend organizational meetings have local pizza shops sponsor them and they're always looking for people to swing by and see what they're all about. You may not be a serious contender for a slot on the Mexican future astronauts club, but hey, food is food, right? Right.

As for me, I've got about a month of school left and I'm trying my hardest to save my last few YCMP swipes. So don't bum it anybody want to swipe me into the DC.

Devon Courtney is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at dcourtne@student.umass.edu.

Clarification for Devon Courtney's February 26, 2008 article, "Norms at UMass"

In my last editorial about the social norms campaign here at UMass, I wrote a few things that didn't quite come off the way I'd hoped. You might have read that I disapproved of the efforts that UMass and the Health Services department has undertaken to help alleviate the negative effects of both underage and high-risk drinking.

In truth, I commend the fact that UMass takes a unique approach to the problem, and the campaign is a noble effort. My problem lies with the fact that people who chose to drink legally and safely are being lumped into the UMass party-hype reputation, and are being treated as a part of the problem.

That's where my gripe truly is, and I stand by it.

IMAGINE YOUR NAME HERE

SEND AN E-MAIL TO:
EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

"The Daily Collegian UMass Yak-Back!"

AIRING DAILY ON UVC-TV 19 AT 4 P.M. AND 5 P.M.

STAY TUNED TO UVC AND THE EDITORIAL/OPINION PAGE

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, MARCH 11, 2008

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

'Worried about Ray?'

Latest release from UK trio explores alternate personality

BY SOPHIA YAVORSKI
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

If you are searching for a band with deep, meaningful lyrics, then it is recommended that you stop reading this article immediately, before you find yourself with yet another disappointment.

Like most indie-pop bands these days, it seems as though the only thing to do is listen to the upheat sound and ignore the other mechanics behind it, such as the lyrics, because they are meaningless. This seems to be the case in The Hoosiers' album "The Trick to Life."

"THE TRICK TO LIFE"

THE HOOSIERS

RCA RECORDS

3/5

Not ringing a bell? Perhaps you have heard their single "Goodbye Mr. A" in trailers for the movie "Juno." Or maybe you would recognize it as one of the songs in "FIFA 08." Either way, it is the beat of the song that would catch your attention certainly not the lyrics.

But rag all you want, the facts remain unchanged. The Hoosiers have topped the pop charts for months in the United Kingdom, and have been busy touring with major bands such as The Fray.

After receiving advice from their chemistry teacher to broaden their horizons, lead singer and guitarist Irwin Sparkes and drummer Alfonso Sharland packed up their belongings and headed to the United States at age 16. Spending time at the University of Indianapolis and experiencing life in America, Sparkes and Sharland knew that it was time to head back home and begin writing.

While the lyrics in each song basically consist of repeating the same verse over and over again, the melody is surprisingly catchy. At first listen, The Hoosiers sound like a cross between The Darkness and The Cure, but after listening a few times, their songs and vocal talent have quite a bit of uniqueness to them.

"Goodbye Mr. A" is a personal favorite. Lyrical content is lacking, but it is definitely a dance-around-your-room type of song. Its upbeat, toe-tapping rhythm really makes it pleasurable to listen to, and the notes that lead singer Irwin Sparkes can hit really draw the listener in.

The starter track, "Worried About Ray," is yet another song that grabs your attention. Not only is it catchy, but is also the meaning to the band's alter ego, Ray.

The Hoosiers believe that everyone has another side to them, and that every once in a while they should let loose and be whoever they want. This notion has led to creative ways of marketing for the band, and "Ray" can be seen on promotional T-shirts and all over the band's Web site.

As horrible as this CD appeared at first, with every listen, it becomes more and more addicting. Although they're not likely to be a hit in the United States, you should at least check out the band yourself and make your own judgments; it's definitely worth a shot.

Sophia Yavorski can be reached at syavorsk@student.umass.edu.

The latest album from The Hoosiers lacks intelligent lyrics and comes off bland at first, but after a few listens, the catchy beats become addicting and lure you into repeated plays.

Students tanning before break

The practice of hitting the tanning bed before vacation is a long-practiced tradition and this spring break is no different as college students around the country are preparing for spring break.

TANNING from page 1

at UMass, plans to pay $30 to get a manicure and pedicure for spring break.

"I feel much better when I have my nails done, especially in a warm place," she said.

Zornberg plans to opt for a light color, probably "Italian lover," she said, because it is a color commonly used in summertime.

Gyms are not the only one's doing extra business. Tanning salons in Amherst are increasing their sales due to spring break approaching.

"We always get a lot of new customers who just tan a few weeks before. There is definitely an increase in customers during this time," said Corey Thomas, a Southern Sun-Sations Tanning Salon employee.

One might wonder why people would go tanning before they go away to a sunny destination.

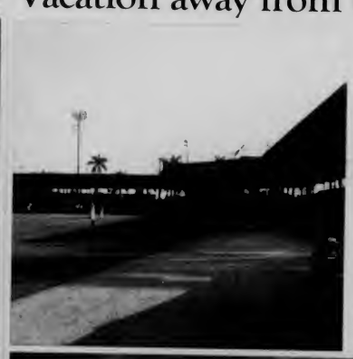
"Most students don't want to be pale before they go away," said Christina Fong, a UMass journalism student.

Clothes are another expense at this time.

"I went into Target about a month ago and they were already putting out spring break clothes," said Melissa Rosen, a UMass senior.

Usually students are watching their wallets. Why spend so much money on preparations for spring break?

"Spring break is a chance of a lifetime, it is a college thing to do and it is part of your college experience," said Nicole Stewart, a psychology student.



Some students are opting to go away with their families, spending quality time and saving money at the same time.

"My family is going on a cruise for break, and trying to find summer clothes in winter has been pretty tough," said Erik Taber, a sophomore journalism major. "Passports for a family of five cost around $1,000."

But Taber can't buy new clothes, because he's "hurting for cash."

Vacation away from the beach

BEACHES from page 1

Mike Lenahan, a senior, will not be going on an expensive vacation. Instead, he will go to Washington D.C. to look at the graduate school of George Washington University, "if you can call that a vacation," Lenahan said.

Kerriann Kelley, a senior, said she will not be going on spring break this year because of her computer.

"Last year I went to Miami, but this year I needed a laptop more than I needed sun," said Kelley.

Joe Biegler, a sophomore at the Massachusetts College of Liberal Arts in North Adams, Mass., is visiting Japan, albeit for academic reasons.

"I get three credits for it," he said. "It's like a class." Still, he plans on seeing the sights in Kyoto, Hiroshima and Tokyo. As far as specific sights, Biegler hopes he will be able to "see Godzilla."

While most students head for the southern beaches of Mexico and Florida, not everyone follows suit. Locations such as Fort Myers, for Red Sox spring training, and Tokyo are becoming more popular.

Get to know your 'American Idol' top 12

BY JULIE HINDS
DETROIT FREE PRESS

OK, class: "American Idol" is down to 12 singers now, and before they face off on Tuesday night, let's review what we've learned so far.

Paula Abdul knows which contestant's head she wants to squeeze off (watch out, David Archuleta). Chewbacca phoned and wants his hairstyle back (sorry, Amanda Overmyer, your pre-makeover 'do was "Star Wars" scary).

Danny Noriega was voted off last week, which means the rest of the season will be considerably duller. Next to Christian Siriano of "Project Runway," Danny was the fiercest contestant on reality TV.

On a brighter note, Luke Menard was kicked to the curb, too. The high-pitched singer had only one thing going for him: He looked like Matthew Fox of "Lost" crossed with James Van Der Beek of "Dawson's Creek" fame.

In case you've had a life on Tuesday and Wednesday nights and missed the previous "Idol" episodes, here's a quick look at the flirty dozen who are vying to become the next Jordin Sparks. Remember her "Idol" victory last year? How soon they forget.

David Archuleta, 17: A favorite to win already, the wholesome teen crooner with the bashful grin combines the modesty of past contender Melinda Doolittle with the assured vocals of a pro twice his age. But after only a few weeks, he runs the risk of becoming a cliché for his emotional ballads.

Best moment: Taking John Lennon's "Imagine" and delivering an interpretation that was distinctive, sophisticated and karaoke-free.

Needs to do next: Choose something peppy, to defy the rap that his songs are too depressing.

Michael Johns, 29: The Australia native looks like a leading man and sounds a little bit like the late Michael Hutchence of INXS. He keeps threatening to break out with a major performance. But so far, he's coming across as a really good bar band singer, and that won't get him to the finals.

The problem in a nutshell: When Johns sang "Light My Fire" by the Doors and "Don't You (Forget About Me)" by Simple Minds, he reminded everyone the originals are better.

Needs to do next: Go a little Russell Crowe and show some angry passion.

Carly Smithson, 24: The Irish lass with the major tattoos is a polished performer who probably has the best vocal skills of all the women. But she never makes it look effortless, especially when she tries to go all Celine Dion or Ann Wilson of Heart on a power ballad.

Recent development: The stylists are subtly revamping her look by giving her a softer hairdo.

Secret weapon: Her name sounds right for an "Idol" star. Carly Smithson, Kelly Clarkson ... you get the idea.

Syesha Mercado, 21: Spunky and adorable Syesha could step right into an acting career if the singing thing doesn't work out. Her charisma makes her a force to reckon with, but her voice isn't as big as her overall show business potential.

Best advice: Stay away from Whitney Houston hits like "Saving All My Love for You" and choose quirkier, quieter love songs.

Sour note: Choosing "Me and Mrs. Jones" (and changing it to Mr. Jones) came off as gimmicky and revealed her low tones aren't nearly as appealing as her high ones.

Jason Castro, 20: A drummer from Texas who likes to strum a folksy guitar onstage, Jason has won the hearts of fans with his post-millennium hippie flair and his super-cool dreads. Unlike most "Idol" contestants, he really seems to be doing this for a lark (and that makes him even more fun to watch).

Is it just us? ...: Or does Jason seem to combine the relaxed vibe of fellow Texan Matthew McConaughey with the ironic distance of Bob Dylan?

Surprise moment: When he dropped his laid-back persona and experimented with a poignant version of "Hallelujah" that was almost as nuanced as the Jeff Buckley version of the Leonard Cohen song.

Amanda Overmyer, 23: The motorcycle-loving, raspy belter has made a big impression as a rocker. But what happens once she runs out of songs by Janis Joplin, Joan Jett and Bonnie Tyler? Oh, wait, she can always do "Bette Davis Eyes."

Unanswered question: Why does Amanda seem more and more uncomfortable with being on the show?

Hair apparent: Now that her streaky, teased-to-the-max 'do is being made over, no more comparisons to Pepe Le Pew.

Ramiele Malubay, 20: She's cute as a button, but don't be fooled by her petite charm. She's got a voice as big as a potential winner, if only she can show a little edge and stay away from the warm and fuzzy songs that remind people "Malubay" sounds like "lullaby."

Needs to do next: Borrow one of Amanda's tough tunes and give it a whirl.

Most likely to ...: Weep during the results shows.

David Cook, 25: He doesn't stand out in a crowd – a big problem. Then again, David C. wowed the judges last week with his killer update of Lionel Richie's "Hello." If he can do that to a drippy '80s classic, don't count him out yet.

Best case scenario: He makes it to the final four and pulls a Chris Daughtry by releasing a hit CD.

Worst case scenario: The show's stylists can't find a way to improve his hair, which is both awful and indistinct.

David Hernandez, 24: Having survived a mini-scandal, David H. may have to endure a flurry of male stripper jokes from the late-night TV hosts. When he chooses the right song, as he did with "Papa Was a Rolling Stone," he's a contender. But the wrong songs, like last week's "It's All Coming Back To Me Now," reveal his weaknesses.

Disadvantage: Being unmemorable in a contest that has three Davids.

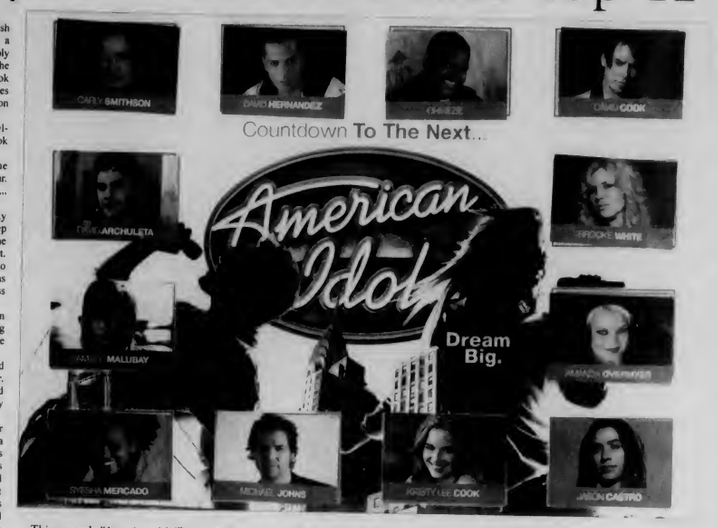
Advantage: The hint of scandal should help with the memorable part.

Brooke White, 24: Like sunshine in a bottle, she's always upbeat. Never before has a singer smiled so perkily through a romantic revenge song like "You're So Vain." But if you're trying to be Carly Simon, it helps to have ravishing hair and miles of gleaming teeth.

Future gig: Simon Cowell is right. She'd be perfect for a dish-washing liquid commercial.

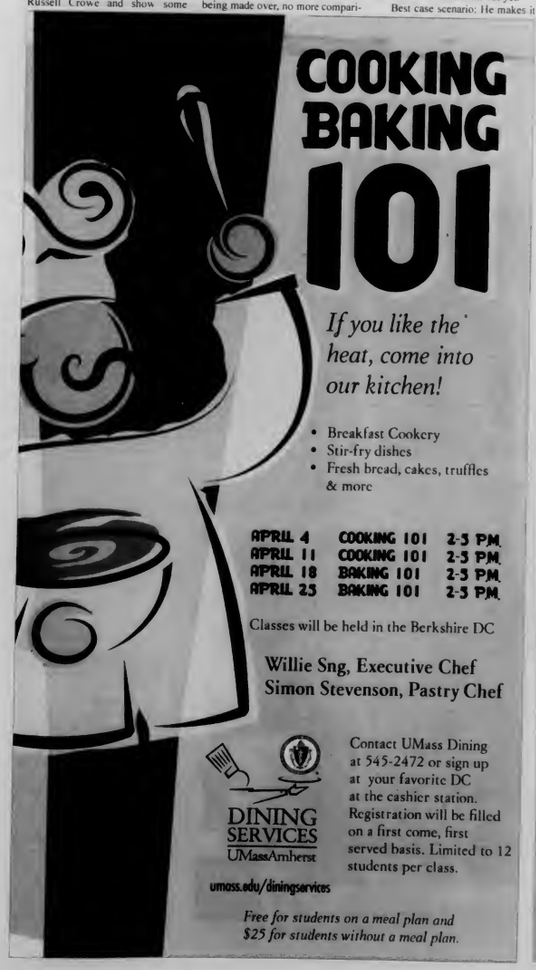
Most likely to ...: Impress the celebrity guest coaches with her attitude.

Chikezie, 22: Chikezie has dropped his last name (Eze) in a quest to be different. His performances have been solid, but he hasn't unleashed a superstar personality yet. He seems like a nice enough guy. But he'll need something extra to become a one-name wonder.

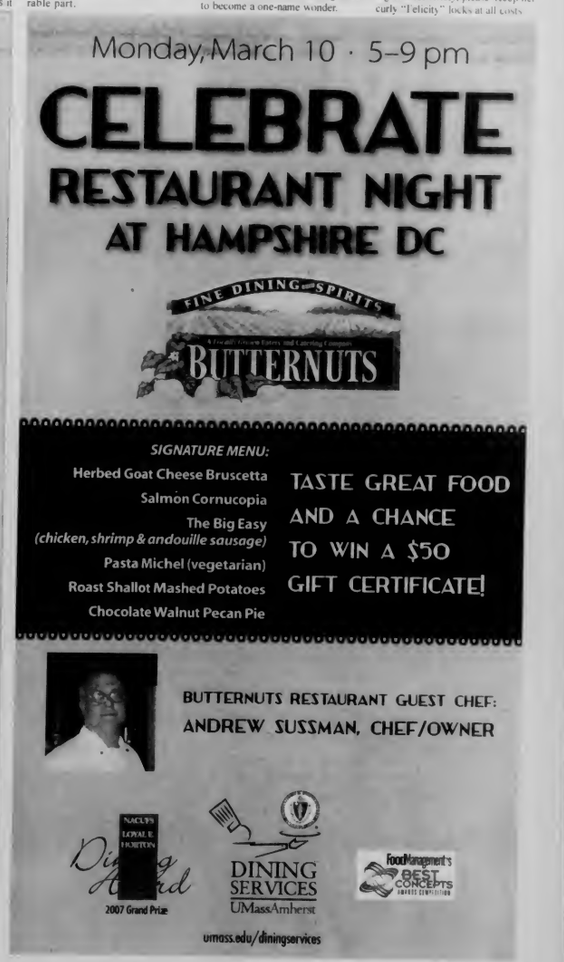


Clothes encounter: Simon gave Chikezie a hard time for wearing a splashy suit during his top 24 debut.

Best performance: His soaring "I Believe In My Soul."



Kristy Lee Cook, 24: Although this isn't supposed to be a beauty pageant, Kristy has the dewy looks and gentle voice of someone who's just waiting to be molded into a pop sensation. Already the judges have practically begged her to go country, the better to capture the Carrie Underwood vote.



Wait for it: It's almost inevitable that someone will talk her into doing Underwood's smash hit, "Before He Cheats."

Note to stylists: No straightening iron for Kristy, please. Keep her curly "Felicity" locks at all costs.

This season's "American Idol" top 12 have been chosen, and tonight the men and women take the stage together for the first time. Each contestant possesses a unique musical style that will resonate with the audience, though David Archuleta is the clear front runner.

UMass heading to nationals

Bakanowski, DeRosa excel in ECAC Indoors in Boston

BY ADAM MILLER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Massachusetts redshirt senior Kristen Bakanowski knows what it means to win the hard way after scrapping her way to a first-place finish in the pole vault competition at this weekend's track and field ECAC Indoor Championships in Boston on March 8 and 9.

She started off missing the first two jumps before clearing the bar at 3.55 meters. During the second round, she continued to struggle, missing the first two jumps.

"Kristen had to calm down," UMass women's coach Julie LaFreniere said.

At the 3.85-meter mark, Bakanowski was one of five pole vaulters to clear, leading her to a first-place finish, clearing 3.95 meters.

"I was ecstatic. It was the highest she's ever jumped in her life," LaFreniere said.

In the 5,000-meter race, senior Christina DeRosa accomplished a career best, (16 minutes, 41.71 seconds) taking fifth place. The race came down to the top five runners, but DeRosa could not separate herself from the top four.

"They had a better kick at the end of the race than Christina did," LaFreniere said.

DeRosa's time was almost a minute better than last year's ECAC Championships where she finished 23rd.

The 1,000-meter run did not yield the results the Minutewomen hoped for as Gina Perno (2:58.81) placed 20th.

DeRosa and Bakanowski qualified for the NCAA Championships that will take place on March 14-15 in Fayetteville, Ark.

Nobody qualified for the NCAA Championships on the men's side with disappointing performances across the board. Freshman Tyler Cotto (7.74 seconds) placed 19th in the 55-meter hurdles.

Junior Josh Boone took 19th place in the 1,000-meter run preliminaries. The Minutemen's top performance came from sophomore Nicolai Naranjo (15:8.17), who placed 18th in the 5000-meter run. Junior Jesse Regnier (15:20.02) trailed behind, taking 20th.

In the 4x800-meter relay, sophomore Ryan DiOrio, freshman Scott Vander Molen, senior Ryan Durkin and junior Peter Fortunato placed 19th with a time of 7:49.46 while senior Matthew Klypka, sophomores Sam Laorenza and Jonathan Pierce and freshman Brian Tino took 20th (10:19.87).

"It was a really disappointing performance overall," UMass men's coach Ken O'Brien said. "It is the end of the season and the kids are a little bit beat."

In the third week of championship meets, O'Brien believes the Minutemen ran out of gas but expects to have a refreshed team ready for the beginning of the outdoor season.

Both teams start the outdoor season March 29 at the UMass Five-Way Meet.

Adam Miller can be reached at ajmill0@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Kristen Bakanowski qualified for the NCAA Championships after a first-place finish in the pole vault at the ECAC Indoor Championships.

Loyola crushed by No. 1 Blue Devils

ECAC LAX from page 8

to clear the ball out of its own defensive zone. The Hoyas were able to capitalize on the extra-man advantage, going 2-for-4, even though both teams were even in penalties (four), while Syracuse held 30 more seconds in the box. The Orange's freshman goalkeeper John Galloway had ten saves, while the Hoya goalie Jesse registered a career-high 19 saves.

FAIRFIELD UNDEFEATED

Fairfield continued to show no signs of slowing down, knocking off ECAC foe Rutgers in its conference opener last Saturday. 10-7 Attackman Travis Nelson was named ECAC Offensive Player of the Week after scoring a career-high four goals and registering two assists. The senior leads Fairfield in goals (six), assists (five) and points (11).

Another Stag earned his second conference award in his third week of being a collegiate athlete, as attackman Doug Kuring earned Co-Rookie of the Week honors. He scored twice against the Scarlet Knights, including the game-winning score off a feed from Nelson, and also leads the ECAC in game-winning goals (two), and is second on the team in points (seven).

As a team, Fairfield is ranked for the first time in the Nike/Inside Lacrosse Coaches Poll and is 3-0 for the second consecutive year.

GREYHOUNDS STREAK ENDS

No. 17 Loyola suffered its worst defeat since 1995 in a one-sided loss to the nation's top-ranked team last Saturday. No. 1 Duke shelled the Greyhounds, 21-8, last Saturday, as midfielder Paul Richards was the only Loyola player to score more than one goal.

Richards and attackman Jake Wilcox cut the deficit to four goals midway through the second quarter, but the Blue Devils answered with six straight and led five minutes into the second half, 14-4.

The Greyhounds stuck with Duke on ground balls (44-43 of Duke) and faceoffs (17-15 Duke), but were outshot (48-29) by a potent Duke offense that had six players score more than one goal. Attackman Max Quinzani had five goals, while captain attackman Matt Dinowski had four goals and two assists for the Blue Devils.

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu.

Junior Tim Balise leads UMass with seven goals in three games this season and also has an assist.

Faceoffs could be improved

M. LAX from page 8

finding shots, faceoffs and turnovers have become problem areas for the Minutemen. Junior Joe Reale took a majority of the draws in the first three games and will see most of the time at the face-off X in today's game. After a 10-for-16 performance against Hofstra in the season-opener, he is 5-for-20 in the losses to Yale and Harvard.

Faceoffs are an area of concern for Albany as well. Four Great Dane players combined for a 343 percentage in the season's first three games. Cannella expects to see Levine take a majority of the draws today – he is 9-for-20 on the season.

"[Reale] is going to go out there and we'll see how he does," Cannella said. "We'll see if Nick [Glasser] can take a couple again, and Bobby Hayes did a pretty good job Saturday. [Albany] is going to face off a couple different guys. Jordan Levine will take some. That's a real dangerous matchup for us anywhere on the field, particularly on the faceoff if he gets it out in transition."

NOTES

Senior team captain Rory Pedrick has not played in a game this season and will miss the remainder of the season with a knee injury. He is scheduled for surgery Friday ... Albany All-American defenseman Craig McDonald has not played yet this season with an injury, but Cannella said he expects him to play today ... UMass has been outshot in the second half by a margin of 50-30 in its first three games this season.

Joe Meloni can be reached at joe.meloni@gmail.com

Minutewomen fall to Brown

TENNIS from page 8

her better. She has the game in place but the confidence needs to be there."

"When she wins like this it's going to help her get better," she continued. "We have some things in place that are going to help her get better. It's very difficult to play No. 1. She's played No. 2 for three years in a row but the confidence needs to be there because you play the best player from every school - you always have to be ready to go."

Dixon then commented on Boney's outstanding performance.

"When I recruited Candynce, I expected her to play in the No. 3 slot," she said. "She's winning all the time at No. 2 so I can't move her down. She has some great college tennis ahead of her. She knows how to fight on the tennis court. She knows when to defend on time, she knows when to attack on time. I think her best asset is her movement."

Tanisha Hodgson was 0-11 before today's match but on Saturday she overcame her struggles and beat Siena freshman Lauren Moy 6-2, 6-0.

"Today was Tanisha Hodgson's. She is 0-11 at No. 3," Dixon said. "Today was her first win. I think the monkey is off her back. I am going to move her down the lineup so I expect her to do much better, so I would say today really goes to her."

Carly Ludmer and Lauren Mackay, who sparingly get to compete in match play, were fortunate enough to compete on Saturday. The two were victorious in their No. 3 doubles match, winning 8-1.

On Friday, UMass traveled to Providence, R.I., to play Brown.

Since 1980 when UMass first started playing Brown, Brown has won every match, and the past results were the same on Friday, when Brown beat UMass 6-1.

Boney won her team-leading 10th singles match (6-3, 7-5) and claimed UMass's only point.

Brown owns a 15-0 all-time record over UMass.

Ryan Fleming can be reached at rfleming@student.umass.edu.

Ricky Harris was named A-10 Most Improved Player after improving his scoring average from 4.5 points per game last year to 18.1 this season.

Forbes best in A-10

FORBES from page 1

The guys push me every day to get better and I just thank my teammates as the reason why I gained the award."

Forbes registered double-digits in scoring in all 30 games this season for the Minutemen (21-9, 10-6 A-10), and leads the conference with 18 performances of at least 20 points. The senior forward displayed his inside-outside versatility all season with 52 made 3-pointers, a league-leading 154 made free throws and a team-leading 7.9 rebounds per game.

"It was a great achievement by Gary, no question," UMass coach Travis Ford said. "People have to realize how much pressure we put on him. We require him to do just about everything and I got to stay on top of him because our team depends on him."

A lot also depends on Lowe, the man most responsible for running one of the highest-scoring teams in the country. The junior floor general had a strong all-around season for the Minutemen, always getting his teammates involved and shouldering some of the scoring load when called upon.

Lowe turned it up when it mattered most, averaging 7.4 assists per game in conference play. His best game of the season came against La Salle, as he became just the third player in school history to record a triple-double with 14 points, 10 rebounds and 14 assists.

Much like Forbes, Lowe's coach was also shocked at the fact that Lowe was not honored by the league in any way yesterday.

"I have great respect out of all players that made it, absolutely," Ford said, referring to the 15 players named to the three all-conference teams. "Do I think [Lowe is] one of the top 15 players in the league? Easily. No question. That's an opinion, but that's a fact as well. He's got something to prove."

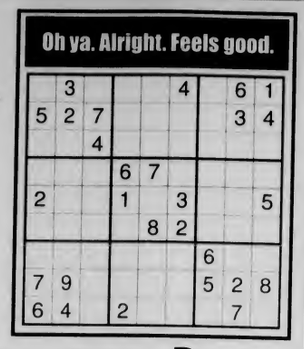
Lowe feels exactly the same way.

"It's very motivating. I gotta prove it on the court now," he said. "[If] coaches thought there were 15 better players in the conference than me, then that's what they think. I'm going to go out there and show them that I'm the best point guard in the conference now, and in the country."

Harris had a breakout season for UMass. After averaging 4.5 points per game last year with an average of 10.8 minutes per game, his numbers exploded. The sophomore finished sixth in the conference in both scoring and in 3-point field goals made with 82.

Harris was happy to be honored by the A-10, but had more important things on his mind.

"A lot of people were talking to me about it, but I didn't think I was going to win it," he said. "I'm happy I won, but we still gotta take care of business in the Atlantic 10 Tournament."



Eli Rosenwaike can be reached at erosenrw@student.umass.edu

GET TESTED. GET ANSWERS.
In recognition of National Women and Girls HIV/AIDS Awareness Day
FREE AND CONFIDENTIAL HIV RAPID TESTING
Monday, March 10 9:30 am - 5:00pm Smith Campus Center
Tuesday, March 11 Friday, March 14 10:00 am - 6:00pm Amherst Common
Wednesday, March 12 9:30am - 1:30pm UMASS Campus Center
TAPESTRYhealth.org CARE WITHIN REACH
800.690.7752

4 + 5 April | 2008
GLOBAL EYES
A Smith College symposium
new ways of seeing art
to explore how global influences are reshaping our understanding of the meaning of art
4 April | 5:30 PM
5th Annual Miller Lecture in Art and Art History
Maria Magdalena Campos-Pons | contemporary artist
Wright Hall | Weinstein Auditorium | Smith College
FREE and open to all
5 April | 8:30 AM–5:30 PM | Symposium
REGISTRATION REQUIRED
Detailed information + registration: www.smith.edu/artmuseum/globaleyes or 413.585.2760
SMITH COLLEGE MUSEUM OF ART

spring Breaking women's clothing, shoes and accessories
downtown Amherst

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

ACROSS
1 Sisal-laced
5 Summit
9 Tropical parrot
14 Sharpen
15 Branch of math
16 Skip the reception
17 Church recess
18 Suspended
19 Had a meal
20 Gets 'er done
22 Forward sails
23 Regards with respect
24 Repeals from memory
27 Teeter-totters
29 Squealer
30 Travels far and wide
34 Falsehood
35 Songstress Patti
36 Approximately
37 Cool down
39 Irritate
40 Northern Scandinavian
41 Bad actor
42 Dead un-
43 Greek letter
44 December 31st follow-up
47 Man from Belgrade
49 Bring to life
54 Female family member
55 Break in a trip
56 Hobgoblin
58 Molt
59 Tibetan monk
60 Grown-up
61 Withered
62 Quick swims
63 Impatient and easily annoyed
64 Methods
65 Blackthorn fruit

DOWN
1 Distinct stage
2 Uses a lasso
3 Map within a map
4 Reagan cabinet member
5 Receiving callers
6 Vacation on a liner
7 Julep garnish
8 Easier hunt
9 Interns informally
10 Acceptable excuse
11 Force
12 Mimic
13 Marry
21 "___ of the d'Urbervilles"
22 Precious stone
24 Fence piece
25 Two under par score
26 Take the wheel
28 Viscous
30 Movie parts
31 Speak pompously
32 Spear vegetable
33 Thick mass of hair
35 In favor of 37 Defraud
38 Actress Goldie
42 Grasp firmly
44 XC
45 Greasy spoon
46 Positive electrodes
48 Constructed
50 Shapes
51 Be of use to 52 Pace
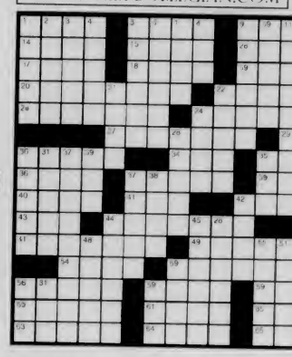
53 Use the delete key
55 New York Mets stadium
56 Night flier
57 Lyric poem
58 Wind dir.



CAPTION CONTEST!

Submit captions and see the picture in color at:
www.dailycollegian.com/caption
This week's winner gets an actual prize: two movie passes

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"Only when the tide goes out do you discover who's been swimming naked."
-Warren Buffett

ECOLOGY BY JEN FILL

LAST DITCH EFFORT BY JOHN KROES

BLISS BY HARRY BLISS

"I just thought of the funniest path to enlightenment."

Submit your comics!
comics@dailycollegian.com
Submit your classifieds!
(413) 545-3500

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Henceforth, your Spanish name shall be Pepito Bismola!

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Making an offering of delicious dark chocolate chippy treats is always a wise choice. The god of astrology shall smile upon you.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
The fruit of your loins will be unripe, shriveled and unattractive. Basically, you will birth a prune.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
James Brown will haunt your dreams tonight. Unlike him, when you wake up, you will not feel good.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
You can't make up the time you waste putting on your cosmetic facemask. You look fine just the way you are.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Could there be anything less risky than sitting at a table for six hours playing a bored game called Risk?

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
You will become inspired to write an award-winning essay touting your achievements over the past four years.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Steal one of the new smoothie machines from Worcester DC and you shall be revered as hero.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
It took bravery to mix lemons with poppy seeds, but just look at those muffins. Bravery tastes so good.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Your parents are very pleased that you grew into your face.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
If you want to hear something straight from a horse's mouth, you must first find a horse.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Think twice before buying UMass water bottles as they may be filled with the tears of underpaid sweat shop workers.

Dear Comics readers,
IIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIII eeee IIIIII will always love youoooooooo!
sincerely,
Whitney Houston

comics@dailycollegian.com

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Montreal Weekend
From $99 Complete.
Best Hotels.
Best Prices.
montrealexpress.net
781-979-9001

APTS. FOR RENT

Hobart Condos 3 Bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, phone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for June and Sept. NO FEES. 253-7879 www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

2 bedroom apartments in Sunderland HEAT, HOT WATER, CABLE AND INTERNET INCLUDED! Call ASAP 413-665-3856

APTS. FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin in June, Aug, or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

Studio 1,2,3,4 bedrooms available. Going Fast, Still guaranteeing for Fall Semester. ALL UTILITIES INCLUDED! Call ASAP 413-256-0741

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520

EMPLOYMENT

Office Assistant on Nantucket Island This Summer. Run errands, recieve inventory, computer data entry, answer telephones. Salary plus housing. Fax RESUME to 508-228-8778 or mail to Rafael OSONA P.O. Box 2607, Nantucket MA 02584 telephone: 508-228-3942

ACCOUNTANT REPRESENTATIVE, SALES REPRESENTATIVE, STORE KEEPER, CLERK AND SECRETARY NEEDED Requirement (Computer Literate, Along with CV). For more info write us at Gina Shoes Limited Email: gina.limited@gmail.com

EMPLOYMENT

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

SERVICES

School a pain in the eyes? Headache? Itchy eyes? Trouble reading? An eye exam can be the first step toward relief. Call Eye Care Services at UHS, 577-5383 to learn more.

SERVICES

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthright.org.

Concerned About Your Eating?
Do you eat too little? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic, 577-5101

SERVICES

TAPESTRY HEALTH providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling &rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable, Safe. 413-548-9992. 27 Pray St. Amherst. www.tapestryhealth.org

TRAVEL

Montreal Weekend
From $99 Complete.
Best Hotels
Best Prices.
montrealexpress.net
781-979-9001

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, MARCH 11, 2008 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Fairfield still unbeaten; GU falls to 'Cuse

BY DAVID BIRSCH
COLLEGIAN STAFF

This past week, six of eight teams in the Eastern College Athletic Conference played its first conference opponents, in games characterized by tough, competitive play just four weeks into the season.

No. 20 Fairfield (3-0, 1-0 ECAC) continued its quest for an undefeated season, defeating Rutgers, 10-7, while 2007 ECAC champion No. 11 Georgetown fell in double overtime to No. 5 Syracuse in its conference opener on Sunday.

Massachusetts and Hobart are the only two teams in the league who have not faced a conference opponent.

The Minutemen, coming off two straight losses to Ivy League opponents Harvard and Yale, will open their ECAC schedule against No. 18 Albany (N.Y.) today, while Hobart (2-1) will face a tough opener against the Hoyas on Saturday.

Just 46 seconds into the double-overtime period, senior midfielder Brendan Lotus (four goals) netted the game-winner to lead the Orange to victory against Georgetown, 9-8.

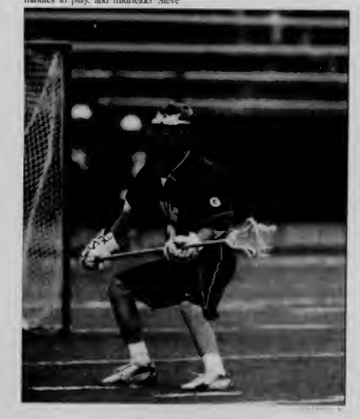
The team overcame a three-goal, fourth-quarter deficit to force overtime, outscoring the Hoyas 4-1 in the final period.

Lotus's third goal of the game, coming at 13:41, sparked the three-goal run over the next seven and a half minutes, which tied the game 6-6 with a little over six minutes left in the game.

Hoya attackman Max Seligmann scored an unassisted goal that put Georgetown up one with under two minutes to play, and midfielder Steve Brooks came up big for the second straight week.

Last week, the senior who forced overtime against No. 2 Virginia did it again, getting a cross-field pass from captain attackman Mike Leville (one goal, two assists) and burying a low shot past Hoya senior goaltender Miles Kass with two seconds to play. Georgetown was sloppy at its own end of the field, turning it over in the last seconds of the game, allowing the Orange to capitalize.

Syracuse dominated on face offs, winning 17 of 21, thanks in part to senior midfielder Danny Brennan, who won all but one faceoff for the Orange.



In the second extra time, Brennan set up Lotus for the game-winning goal, which gave Syracuse its first lead in the game. On five occasions during the contest, the Orange trailed by three goals until finally taking the lead in the second overtime.

Attackman Kenny Nims had two goals, while midfielder Steve Brooks and attackman Stephen Keough each had a goal and an assist, respectively. With three points, Leville continued his streak of consecutive games with a point at 43, while Nims' two goals leave him with the team lead in goals (11).

For Georgetown, attackman Andrew Baird and midfielder Andrew Brancaccio each had two goals, while four other Hoyas notched goals for the visiting team.

The Orange outshot Georgetown, 57-26, while Syracuse also secured a plethora of ground balls and were able

See ECAC LAX on page 6

Georgetown's Jerry Lambe was the 2007 ECAC Defensive Player of the Year and is a Tewaaraton Trophy candidate this season.

UMass hosts Great Danes

Neither team has yet to live up to preseason billing

BY JOE MELONI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Even in years of great success, the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team has struggled to defeat Albany. The Minutemen hope to reverse their four-game series losing streak, as well as the current two-game slide, when they take on the Great Danes this afternoon at Garber Field; faceoff is scheduled for 3 p.m.

The No. 18 Great Danes (0-3) pose a difficult matchup for an undermanned UMass (1-2) team with their combination of speed and skill offensively and raw physicality on the defensive side.

Despite the graduation of both of Albany's leading scorers from last season, Frank Resetarits and Merrick Thompson, Tewaaraton Trophy candidate Jordan Levine leads an upstart and talented Great Dane offense.

"They're a very athletic group; they've got some guys that have been playing like that for four years," Cannella said. "Jordan Levine is one of the best midfielders in the country. They've got two twins [Steve and Mike Amman] who are excellent specimens as athletes."

Like UMass, Albany hasn't enjoyed the early success teams hope for in the preseason. However, the Great Danes three losses have all come on the road to teams currently ranked in the Nike/Inside Lacrosse Men's Division I Media Poll by a combined seven goals – No. 4 Johns Hopkins, No. 7 Notre Dame and No. 8 Delaware.

The reason for UMass's early struggles is no secret; its offense has not consistently created enough scoring chances. Even when the UMass offense has managed to find a high-percentage shot, opposing goalkeepers have made quality saves. UMass has scored nine goals in its last two games, the lowest two-game total since Cannella took over as head coach in 1995.

"We cannot consistently win games scoring five, six, seven goals. We have to score in double digits," Cannella said. "You can't expect your defense to hold teams down to three goals. It's not fair, and there are too many good teams out there that are going to score more."

The Minutemen were in both of their two losses until late runs by their opposition put the games out of reach primarily because of the outstanding play of their defensive unit. For most teams in the country, allowing an average of 6.33 goals per game would be more than enough to win games.

Aside from the problems

See M. LAX on page 6

BRIAN TITUS/COLLEGIAN

Freshman Zach Rodgers has started all three games this season and leads the Minutemen with five assists. UMass hosts Albany today at Garber Field at 3 p.m.

Minutewomen split pair over weekend

Pozar, Boney enjoy successful weekend in win against Siena

BY RYAN FLEMING
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts tennis team came to form on Saturday in its second home match all season, defeating Siena after falling to Brown on Friday.

With an impressive overall team effort, UMass (3-7) shut out the Saints, 7-0. It was the first time UMass had taken every point in a match this season.

The win halted the team's previous five-match losing streak.

Senior co-captain Masha Pozar teamed up with No. 2 singles player Candynce Boney in the No. 1 doubles match. The two overpowered their opponents and came away with a seemingly easy victory over their doubles opponent, 8-1. It was Pozar's fifth doubles win this season, which moves her closer to the school record of 67 that is held by Caroline Steele ('94-'98) and Susan Hyams ('00-'04).

Pozar and Boney were victorious in their singles matches as well. Pozar defeated Sarah Mayer in a competitive match 6-1, 6-4. In the match, Pozar displayed some of her overwhelming power with dominant serves and strong, well-placed forehand strokes.

Boney defeated Karina Davis, 6-0, 6-2. Boney showed her fighting grit and speed that her coach commented on later in the match.

UMass coach Judy Dixon talked about Pozar's recent struggles and her win.

"Right now, Masha is playing at 70 percent of her ability. She's much better even than what you saw today," Dixon said. "What she is right now is lacking confidence. She hasn't gotten the wins that I expected or the wins she has expected herself. She also lacks commitment when she plays because she's scared; she's playing with check swings. But we have steps in place that are going to make

See TENNIS on page 6

COURTESY OF MASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Masha Pozar won both her singles and doubles match against Siena after dropping both of her matches against Brown on Friday.

Minutemen win slalom, giant slalom in USCSA Nationals

BY SCOTT FELDMAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts men's skiing team has not been the most consistent team all year, but when stakes are highest, the Minutemen are at their best.

Two weeks ago, UMass earned a one-point victory at the Eastern Collegiate Ski Conference regional over Plymouth State. That was the Minutemen's first victory all season – they followed it up with a national championship.

Last week at the United States Collegiate Snowsports Association Nationals, the Maroon and White won its first national championship ever in both the giant slalom and the regular slalom.

UMass coach Skip Fox was thrilled with his team's exceptional showing.

"I was so happy that we peaked at the right time," Fox said. "It was almost surreal."

This marks the first time an eastern team has won the championship in 23 years.

UMass started the week competing in the giant slalom on Thursday, placing three skiers in the top 10 to secure the title and defeating PSU and Sierra Nevada College by over a full second.

For the second week in a row, the Minutemen were led by senior Jason Small. At the ECSC regional, Small earned a first-place finish for the giant slalom in a UMass win. This week, Small followed up that performance with a second-place finish, clocking in at a combined time of 2 minutes, 16.66 seconds in his two runs.

Sophomores Andrew Hawes (2:19.21) and Ian Hohmeister (2:19.48) placed eighth and ninth, respectively, in the giant slalom.

The next day, the Minutemen participated in the slalom and proved they could dominate the field in both events, scoring another first-place team finish.

After three skiers placed in the top 10 in the giant slalom, the Maroon and White did even better with four skiers earning a top-10 finish.

Small showed that he is as adept skiing in slalom as he is in the giant slalom. He led the team by earning another second-place finish (1:40.17).

"He was so thrilled, you could see it in his expression on the podium," Fox said. "You know it was like his four years of racing for UMass just culminated in one fantastic finish."

Hawes came in fifth place (1:44.00), Matthew Small came in ninth place (1:45.21) and Ian Hohmeister came in 10th place (1:45.45).

The Minutewomen also competed Thursday in the USCSA giant slalom and came in ninth place.

Heidi Skinner had the best time on the women's team at 2:45.79, sufficient enough for her to earn 27th place.

Ashley Hawes (2:47.13) was close behind, placing 30th.

Two of the Minutewomen's top skiers this year, freshman star Jamie Taloumis and senior Eliza Hawkins both had a difficult day. They failed to finish their first run and were disqualified.

Sophomore captain Emily Shilletto had a promising start, placing fourth in her first run with a time of 1:25.81, but missed a gate in the second run, dropping her to 58th place (2:56.55).

The team rebounded nicely on Friday in the regular slalom by claiming third place, coming less than a second away from first place.

Hawkins shook off her giant slalom disqualification and took fourth place, clocking in at 1:56.39. Hawes placed fifth (1:56.42) and Taloumis came in 10th (1:57.03).

The presentation and banquet awarding the national championships was held on Saturday.

Scott Feldman can be reached at sfeldman@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY OF MASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Jason Small earned a second-place finish in both the slalom and giant slalom at the USCSA Nationals. The Minutemen became the first team in the eastern part of the country to win an event in 23 years.

ATLANTIC 10 TOURNAMENT PREVIEW | PAGE 10

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

RAIN/SNOW : HI: 43 LO: 21 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM WEDNESDAY, MARCH 12, 2008

Elections: work, but rewarding

BY DERRICK PERKINS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A little under a week after polls closed for next year's Student Government Association president and student trustee, Emma Pfordresher still can't quite put her role in the entire process into words.

"I didn't really know what I was getting into when I accepted the job," said the former chancellor of elections. "I just don't think that there is a good way to explain all that you have to do before you actually do it for yourself. There's no good explanation for it."

Pfordresher – along with her team of election commissioners – organized, regulated and administrated the balloting through both days of voting last week, a process several months in the making.

"It was very overwhelming," she said. "It's a lot of work, but if you take it one step at a time and if you have people you can rely on to help you – I had my commissioners to help and I knew that I could rely on them and that if I needed them they would be there. That was a huge help."

From scheduling the candidate debates to monitering the campaigns themselves, Pfordresher

See SGA on page 3

Campus to begin work on rec center

University officials give green light

BY MICHAEL KING
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The barn on campus will be fully demolished by the end of the semester, but will be documented for archival purposes. Despite debate over the construction site and weather delays, construction of the recreation center is now underway.

Though debate has raged over the historical status of a stucco barn on the University of Massachusetts campus, construction on the $50 million recreation center began in full swing last week.

University officials reached an agreement with several groups and plan to fully demolish the barn later this semester. Both the Amherst and Massachusetts Historical Commissions became involved once the removal of the southern portion of the barn took place.

"It was never officially deemed to be a historic building," said Jim Hunt, Facilities and Campus Planning (F&CP) communications manager. "We just wanted to make sure that all parties got their say with the situation. There's a certain routine that you have to follow. Now we're at the end of that process and we can move on."

Hunt said the barn will be documented for archival purposes and the campus will commit to maintaining a museum quality display of the structure. The University also examined the possibility of keeping the barn, including just the silo.

"We completed a structural analysis of the barn and we determined that it was impossible to save the barn without significant structural enhancement, which would cost money," said Jim Cahill, F&CP director. "We didn't think that the expenditure to keep the silo up would be commensurate with its value."

The contractor began moving excavators to the site last week to begin foundation and utility work.

Cahill said the weather also contributed to the excavation delay, due to the cold temperatures and

See REC CENTER on page 3

Students' work unfolds cultures

BY GISEL SAILLANT
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Thatcher language house on campus tackled issues of immigration and emigration and their effects on people globally.

Last week in the Campus Center, the students that participated researched the issue in the six languages Thatcher offers: Chinese, French, German, Italian, Japanese and Spanish.

The students presented their research on power point presentations which highlighted the history of migrations out of the country and the immigration into each distinct country. The presentations showed similarities on how each country handles xenophobia, racism, citizenship attainment and integration.

Sid Ferreira, the Program Coordinator, welcomed the students to the "Thatcher Migration discussion" and explained to all the attendees that the presentations were academic and researched-based.

According to Ferreira, "[In] the global community we live in now, it's important for students to have understanding of languages and cultures around the world."

"Thatcher in Northeast [is] a language immersion program, exposing [to students] the different cultures, traditions, music and food," said Ferreira.

The Thatcher program that originally started with Japanese ten years ago has grown to offer students six languages. Residents studying common languages are situated together in order to harbor more conversation among them.

"They have classes, live together and have a class that meets in the residence hall," Ferreira said.

The Chinese program, taught by Ping Geng, was called up by Ferreira to present their research on Chinese immigration. According to the presenters on the subject, the Chinese migration to the United States was at its peak during the gold rush and the construction of the railroads.

They also reported that the main reasons Chinese people have migrated are due to the economic, educational and labor motives. They also noted that Chinese immigrants make up only 4 percent of the U.S. population.

Students from the French program, taught at Thatcher by Carolyn Shread, presented their research titled "Migration in France: an Analysis of its geography and history." The students pointed out that the majority of immigrants that come to France are from former French Colonies like Algeria.

They also mentioned the influence French president Nicholas Sarkozy has had over the immigration policies. The students noted how Sarkozy prefers skilled workers and students to enter the country.

The presentation voiced concerns over the republican model in France. The republican model calls for a homogeneous France, where an individual's ethnic identity and religion is removed from the public sphere.

The German program, which is taught by Alli

See THATCHER on page 3

Salmonella bacteria may help find cancer cure

BY BEN WILLIAMS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Neil Forbes is using something most people associate with sickness, salmonella bacteria, to work toward a cure for one of today's most prominent health concerns, cancer.

Forbes, an assistant professor of chemical engineering at the University of Massachusetts, is working off of earlier research that showed the salmonella bacteria accumulate in cancerous tumors.

Since then scientists have been able to engineer the bacteria to make it harmless. This paved the way for Forbes's research by using the bacteria to deliver a toxic payload to tumors where conventional chemotherapy is unable to reach.

Forbes explains that because traditional chemotherapy travels through the bloodstream and kills cancerous cells wherever it finds them, it is less effective the further the tumor is away from blood vessels. Also, chemotherapy seeks out and kills rapidly dividing cells by interfering with that dividing process, and is not just limited to cancerous tumors.

His research, "targeted intratumoral therapeutic delivery," calls for the engineers to use the bacteria to seek out tumors, and then deliver a toxin that kills them.

Forbes said the damage to the rest of the body will be minimal because once the engineer gets the bacteria to the tumor, radiation can be used to make them produce the toxin, rather than just having them constantly produce a tumor-killing agent.

"If you're able to do small amount of damage to the bacteria, they'll respond to that and you can take the receptor that responds to damage and hook it up to your drug," said Forbes. "And almost every cancer facility already has directed radiation technology on site, so we don't have to re-invent the wheel."

Forbes has also found some evidence that bacteria could be useful in treating metastasized cancer, which could give more hope to the hard-to-treat, late-stage cancer patients.

He also said there are a number of reasons salmonella accumulates in tumors that are not completely understood. But tumors can act like filters, trapping bacteria in them, and because they have fewer immune cells than the rest of the body, the tumors are vulnerable. In addition, the inside of a tumor has the perfect conditions for bacteria to grow and multiply.

"You'll inject on the order of millions of bacteria, but eventually in the tumor it will be on the order of billions, so they'll replicate quite a lot in a few days," said Forbes.

Forbes says although the ability of bacteria to accumulate in cancer has been

See RESEARCH on page 3

Minutemen survive late scare to win, 9-8

Junior attackman Tim Balise (right) scored three goals and assisted on another to help the Minutemen escape Garber Field with a 9-8 victory over Albany yesterday afternoon. The Great Danes scored three goals in the final minutes to cut the lead to one, but UMass fought off the late rally to preserve the win.

THE ARMY ADVANTAGE FUND.
BECAUSE SOLDIERS DESERVE MORE.

Now the Army gives you more choices for your future. Earn up to $70,000 to start the business of your dreams or buy the home you always wanted. Log onto goarmy.com/aaf to learn more about the Army Advantage Fund.

U.S.ARMY
ARMY STRONG.™

Recreation center set to be completed by late spring '09

REC CENTER from page 1

subsequent frost. It was determined not to be cost effective for the contractor to begin digging under such conditions in the middle of January.

The delays forced the project managers to rearrange several steps of the project.

The original construction timeline called for the structure to be completed by this fall, with the facility open for use in the late spring of 2009. However, Cahill acknowledged that the goal of the project is for final commissioning and occupancy to occur by the beginning of the fall semester in 2009.

"We're behind our original schedule, but I don't think we've effectively lost much," Cahill said. "I expect the project to be rolling at full speed ahead once we get into April."

The 120,000 square-foot facility will feature exercise space, a three-court gym and administrative offices. Groundbreaking on the project began last summer.

Michael King can be reached at mking@dailycollegian.com.

Hallucinogen Savlia divinorum under consideration for ban

BY JESSICA GRESKO
ASSOCIATED PRESS

On Web sites touting the mind-blowing powers of Salvia divinorum, come-ons to buy the hallucinogenic herb are accompanied by warnings: "Time is running out!" and "stock up while you still can."

That's because salvia is being targeted by lawmakers concerned that the inexpensive and easy-to-obtain plant could become the next marijuana. Eight states have already placed restrictions on salvia, and 16 others, including Florida, are considering a ban or have previously.

"As soon as we make one drug illegal, kids start looking around for other drugs they can buy legally. This is just the next one," said Florida state Rep. Mary Brandenburg, who has introduced a bill to make possession of salvia a felony punishable by up to five years in prison.

Some say legislators are overreacting to a minor problem, but no one disputes that the plant impairs judgment and the ability to drive.

Native to Mexico and still grown there, Salvia divinorum is generally smoked but can also be chewed or made into a tea and drunk.

Called nicknames like Sally-D, Magic Mint and Diviner's Sage, salvia is a hallucinogen that gives users an out-of-body sense of traveling through time and space or merging with inanimate objects. Unlike hallucinogens like LSD or PCP, however, salvia's effects last for a shorter time, generally up to an hour.

It is not the same as the ornamental garden plant known as salvia.

No known deaths have been attributed to salvia's use, but it was listed as a factor in one Delaware teen's suicide two years ago.

"Parents, I would say, are pretty clueless," said Jonathan Appel, an assistant professor of psychology and criminal justice at Tiffin University in Ohio who has studied the emergence of the substance. "It's much more powerful than marijuana."

Salvia's short-lasting effects and the fact that it is currently legal may make it seem more appealing to teens, lawmakers say. In the Delaware suicide, the boy's mother told reporters that salvia made his mood darker but he justified its use by citing its legality. According to reports, the autopsy found no traces of the drug in his system, but the medical examiner listed it as a contributing cause.

Mike Strain, Louisiana's Agriculture and Forestry Commissioner and former legislator, helped his state in 2005 become the first to make salvia illegal, along with a number of other plants. He said the response has been largely positive.

"I got some hostile e-mails from people who sold these products," Strain said. "You don't make everybody happy when you outlaw drugs. You save one child and it's worth it."

An ounce of salvia leaves sells for around $30 on the Internet. A liquid extract from the plant, salvinorin A, is also sold in various strengths labeled "5x" through "60x." A gram of the 5x strength, about the weight of a plastic pen cap, is about $12 while 60x strength is around $65. And in some cases the extract comes in flavors including apple, strawberry and spearmint.

Web sites such as Salviadragon.com tout the product with images like a waterfall and rainbow and include testimonials like, "It might sound far fetched, but I experience immortality."

Among those who believe the commotion over the drug is overblown is Rick Doblin of the Multidisciplinary Association for Psychedelic Studies, a nonprofit group that does research on psychedelic drugs and whose goal is to develop psychedelics and marijuana into prescription medication.

"I think the move to criminalize is a misguided response to a very minimal problem," Doblin said.

Doblin said salvia isn't "a party drug," "tastes terrible" and is "not going to be extremely popular." He disputes the fact teens are its main users and says older users are more likely.

"It's a minor drug in the world of psychedelics," he said.

Million dollar grant received to help with cure for cancer

RESEARCH from page 1

known since the 1880s, the first research wasn't done until a few decades ago, and focused mostly on strains of bacteria that find tumors because they seek out places with little or no oxygen in the body.

Salmonella finds tumors in a completely different way, and says his team is unique in studying how to use it as a targeted cancer therapy, part of the reason they just received a $1 million grant from the National Institute of Health to continue their research.

Forbes says he didn't start off by trying to use salmonella as a piece of the cure for cancer, but he looked at the problem from a very practical, engineering standpoint of how to get a cancer treatment inside tumors, and saw salmonella as that way in.

Forbes hopes that if everything goes well with the next stages of research there could be human trials of a salmonella-based treatment in five years.

"I do think it's the future, but there's not going to be a blockbuster cure. The cure is going to come in pieces; it's going to come slowly," Forbes said.

"We're all just trying to control it, to find better ways of controlling it. That's how we'll come to the cure; by making lots of pieces, and I see this as a very important, but just one piece of the puzzle."

Ben Williams can be reached at bwilliam@student.umass.edu

Thatcher program focuses on immigration, emigration issues

THATCHER from page 1

Merely, was next in line as they presented "Foreigner in Germany: German Immigration Policy." The students were quick to mention the lack of diversity in Germany, compared to other European countries.

The presenters named Turks as being the largest ethnic minority in Germany. According to the students, Turkish immigrants are very marginalized in Germany, and the existence of xenophobia is rampant. They also noted acts of violence against the Turks.

However, the students noted that there were positive waves of integration within the country as Turkish fast food and music have become popular.

The Italian program, taught by Simone Gugliotta, focused on the emigration of Italians after World War II. The students noted that the U.S. was the largest recipient of Italian immigrants from 1876 to 1976.

The students also noted that many Italians have also migrated to Argentina. They commented on the slang language, Lunfardo, which began in Argentina due to the influence of the Italian immigrants.

Next, the Japanese program, taught by Yuko Takahashi, began its presentation by noting how difficult it is to obtain citizenship in Japan. The presenters gave detailed descriptions on the type of visa an individual can obtain, including temporary visitor, transit and working visas.

The students noted that it takes over five years to obtain citizenship and an individual must relinquish all other nationalities.

The presentation shifted its focus to the treatment of foreigners that enter Japan. The students commented that they were not stereotyping Japanese people as a whole but discrimination does occur, specifically when immigrant women are taken by gangs and forced into prostitution.

The Spanish program, instructed by Elena Garcia-Frasier, was the last group of students to present. "Immigration to Spain" discussed information on the majority of immigrants that live in Spain, originally from Latin America and the Maghreb (Northern Africa).

This group of students decided to bring it closer to home as they presented the current immigration issues between the U.S and Mexico. The presenters said that after 9/11, Mexicans became more dangerous than Canadians, due to the rise in "The Minutemen," an extreme activist group that positioned itself along the border and tried to secure the border from Mexican immigrants.

"After making each of their presentations, the students split into aggregate groups and talked about different issues in the various countries," said Ivan Babian, a biology major in the German Thatcher program. "And also [made] comparisons between similar issues common to each nation to contrast issues such as human trafficking, anti-foreign sentiment, emigration, assimilation and integration of immigrants in each nation."

"The end result left all of the students from the different language [programs] with a greater understanding of how immigration issues relate to lives within and in between many countries across the globe," said Babian.

"It was very informative, more informative than I thought it would be," said Barry Walker, a freshman English major. "It was refreshing that the program was beginning to encourage this kind of cultural exchange."

Gisel Saillant can be reached at gsaillan@student.umass.edu.

Hair, Nails, Tanning, Waxing, Facials, & Massage Owner
Ms. Abigael M. Sicard
267 Amherst Road
Suite #2 (Rt.116)
Sunderland, Ma
413-397-9988
Tuesday 10-6 • Wednesday 10-6
Thursday 10-7 • Friday 10-6
Saturday 10-3
Absolute SALON & DAY SPA

Former chancellor to remain out of SGA and her staff put together an election largely left unmarred by the scandals and problems that have marked years past. In 2006, candidates Michael Makarski, Matthew Fox, Rob Shepherd and Ed Cutting all came under scrutiny for violating SGA campaign bylaws. As recently as 2004, the Undergraduate Student Senate declined to ratify the elections results and threw out the original vote.

SGA from page 1

According to Sarah Morgan, who oversaw last year's vote as chancellor of elections before taking a position in current SGA President Aaron Buford's administration as attorney general, the hardest aspect of the job is addressing allegations of misconduct or fraud that arise during the two-day voting period.

"You have to show that you're neutral, and it's hard. You don't want to come to one candidate and say, 'This is what I notice you're doing and oh, all of these candidates are doing these things as well,'" Morgan said. "You only address what this candidate is doing and as a result of that they don't see what you're doing to the other candidates."

Morgan said friction between rivaling candidates was to be expected in a campaign which involved dozens of campaign volunteers, a large investment of time and a high level of energy. She applauded Pfordresher for successfully navigating between highly competitive campaigns.

"She did a really great job easing the tension between the two campaigns, which was pretty high at points," said Morgan. "I think that could have elevated and been so much worse, but I think she did a wonderful and fantastic job."

Pfordresher called overseeing all of the candidates during the phase of campaigning between the end of the nomination period and the elections "challenging."

"My job is to make sure that everybody gets a fair shot," she said. "Honestly, what either side is saying, what either candidate stands for, that's not my concern. My concern is that they follow the bylaws with whatever they have, whatever campaign material they have. If they broke that...that's when I get involved."

Pfordresher intervened in Derek Khanna's campaign for SGA president after a poster with a graphic allegedly taken off of President-elect Malcolm Chu's Facebook.com account leaked to the Massachusetts Daily Collegian. The graphic depicted a hand presenting the middle finger with references to different ethnic and racial groups on campus. Despite this action, Pfordresher said her focus had been on getting the candidates to campaign positively.

"There were definitely some issues between some of the candidates, but I feel that it wasn't extreme," she said. "It's politics, and politics can get dirty sometimes. I was so focused on telling the candidates to stay positive and focused on their own campaign and not to get swept up in all the mudslinging."

Pfordresher was thrown into working closely with the SGA although she had little prior knowledge of the association a situation Morgan says can be prime training for a position in student government.

"Being chancellor, you go from having no experience in working with the SGA to being in the office knowing absolutely everything that goes on, every single little detail of what's happening," Morgan said. "With how much the chancellor has to learn so quickly about the internal structure of the SGA and the history of the SGA, it's good to keep those people around."

However, despite praise from University and SGA officials including the former chancellor of elections for her work this year, Pfordresher won't follow in the footsteps of her predecessor and take a position in the new administration.

"This was a good experience. It was a lot of fun," Pfordresher said. "But it also took a lot of time and I don't know if I would be the right person for a job in the SGA."

Derrick Perkins can be reached at dperkins@dailycollegian.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 102

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Ester
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Michael Sarkes
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Ryan McAskill
COPIES EDITOR Adam Staggin
EDITORIAL EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Rice
FEATURES EDITOR Dave Humphreys
PHOTO EDITOR Michael Phillis
WEB EDITOR James Hale
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Szymczak
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Marsea Whooten
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Stephanie McPherson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Skye McIntyre
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Brian Wood
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Garber
ASSISTANT NEWS Michael King
ASSISTANT NEWS Kate Olesin
ASSISTANT NEWS Holli Seabury
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Connors
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Meloni
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenwaike
ASSISTANT PHOTO Brian Tedder
ARTS WEB EDITOR Michelle Abbasciano
EDITORIAL WEB EDITOR Leif Walcutt
NEWS WEB EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS WEB EDITOR Steve Games

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS SUMMER SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUES. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS ACRE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SPIRAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1904 AND THE BI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1906. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Katie Huston

COPY EDITOR
Greg McCarthy

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Michael Sarkes

WEB EDITOR
Nick Bush

Thursday, March 13 · 5–9 pm
CELEBRATE
RESTAURANT NIGHT
AT WORCESTER DC
THE DELANEY HOUSE
you only think you know us

FEATURED MENU:
Baked Stuffed Shrimp
Statler Chicken Alfresco
Roast Sirloin of Beef
Bayou Scallops · Tortellini Carbonara
Eggplant Napoleon (vegetarian)
Asparagus · Risotto
Bananas Foster

SAMPLE FABULOUS FOOD AND A CHANCE
TO WIN A $50
GIFT CERTI CATE!

THE DELANEY HOUSE GUEST CHEF:
MICK CORDUFF, OWNER/CHEF

2007 Grand Prize
DINING SERVICES
UMassAmherst
umass.edu/diningservices
FoodManagement's BEST CONCEPTS

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 12, 2008

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
-Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Make education a priority

Dan Nicastro

The University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees finance panel voted last week to increase student fees by 3.1 percent.

This means the projected student costs for the 2008-09 school year are $18,346 in state and a whopping $29,843 for out-of-state students. Sensing that these increases may be greeted with disapproval, a recent UMass press release laid out a three-tier justification of the increases.

First, the University contended that the rise in tuition and fees was below the rate of inflation. Second, it maintained that most of this money would return to the students through increases in financial aid awards, hiring of faculty and renovation projects.

Lastly, the Board of Trustees pointed out that the cost of a UMass education is much less than the cost of a private school education. These are all valid arguments, yet they obscure many other underlying facts about the nature of public education.

First, let's deal with the issue of inflation. The fee increase of 3.1 percent is certainly under the rate of inflation for the Northeast in the last quarter (which the Consumer Price Index lists as 3.6 percent), a feat the UMass system has managed to accomplish for the past five years.

Unfortunately, these numbers do not tell the whole story. While the University has managed to keep increases in fees under the curve of inflation, this may be because inflation is rising at a pace the University cannot keep up with.

As unemployment increases (4.8 percent in February), and the economy slows, we may be headed for more than a recession. If these numbers remain consistent over a long period of time, we may see the reappearance of stagflation.

Inflation will skyrocket and families will not be able to afford to send their children to college. Even with additional financial aid packages, these increases may be enough to keep deserving prospective students away from quality secondary education.

This leads to the second problem. The University has pledged to channel 20 percent of revenue from these fee increases into more financial awards for students. Increasing the paltry number of financial aid awards is certainly an idea long overdue.

The problem is that the increases in awards do not amount to much, especially since college loan companies are suffering due to fallout in subprime loans and the credit crunch.

The Massachusetts Educational Financing Authority has allowed thousands of students (including myself) to take out loans in order to pursue a college degree. Due to worry among investors, however, MEFA has so far been unable to secure financing for the loans it doles out.

Like it or not, loans are a vital part of modern collegiate life. With costs through the roof, it is difficult to pay upwards of $17,000 out of pocket. This means students need some sort of financial help to pay their way through college. If the means of securing these financial investments dries up, then increased financial aid awards will be too little too late.

As a final argument, the Board of Trustees repeatedly reiterated the fact that a public university education at the University of Massachusetts is cheaper than the average Massachusetts private school education. It's hard to argue against this point. Even with fee increases, the average private secondary education in Massachusetts is over $22,000 more expensive than that of UMass Amherst.

Increasing the paltry number of financial aid awards is certainly an idea long overdue.

Comparing the two, however, is like comparing apples with a Rolls Royce. Of course private schools cost more. The "private" moniker denotes independence from the state in terms of curricula, teaching methods and, most importantly, funding.

The goal of a public university, on the other hand, is to "provide an affordable and accessible education of high quality," as laid forth in the UMass mission statement.

It's clear the problem does not lie solely with the UMass Board of Trustees. While fees have increased over the past several years, these increases probably have more to do with economic realities than attempts to cheat students.

Instead, the problem is indicative of the way in which we treat education in this country. On the one hand, we celebrate the abstract concept of public education, believing it to be a good measure of the success of a democratic society.

On the other hand, governmental programs and entities fail to reflect this mythical view of public education (especially at the collegiate level). They treat the system more like a business meant to secure higher profit margins by letting students and parents foot the bill for their schooling.

While the Patrick administration is certainly doing more to aid the UMass system, it's not enough. I realize it's naively foolish to believe government will eventually foot the bill for higher education, but there are steps that can be taken to alleviate the pressures on families and students who want the education they are entitled to have.

Many of us who graduate tend never to look back at the system we've left. Instead of thinking of education in terms of its public benefits, or as a vital societal need, we see our tax dollars "wasted" on a system that provides no immediate benefit to us. That's an attitude we need to shift if we ever want to see further progress within our democratic nation.

Dan Nicastro is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at dnicastr@student.umass.edu.

All politics is local

Bruce Lerner

Voting is a good thing. Voting is a great thing. Well, actually, it depends on the situation. Voting when it counts is a great thing. Voting when it will create change is a great thing. Voting when there is no election is simply impossible.

Creating hype about imaginary elections goes even further past absurdity. What's the difference between a real and imaginary election? Let's take a look at two elections that can easily be described: the Student Government Association election that took place last week, and the upcoming November elections.

In the former, candidates were actually diverse, not only in terms of race, as some will claim of the November elections, but more importantly in terms of policies. This crucial aspect of any real (i.e. not nonexistent) election deserves much discussion, because candidates will be responsible for directing positive change in the system to which they are elected to serve.

Ironically, there is not much talk about policies in the cacophony surrounding the November elections. Obama's platform is "change," which could mean just about anything one could imagine. Bottom line? It is not easy to find out the U.S. presidential candidates' stands on important issues. This is opposed to the proximity of the local SGA candidates and the accessibility to them that students enjoy.

Since no one knows what the actual stances of the national candidates are, it is simply impossible to call what will take place in the November election. It is more like a lottery, or more specifically, a slot machine. A person goes in, pulls a lever, and hopes for the best.

The policies that the future president will adopt will not be different from historical tendencies that American leaders have pursued. These tendencies are quite obviously akin to world domination and the rule of business and profit over people and their needs.

Therefore, voting is a waste of time in the upcoming elections, especially if the potential voter lives in a so-called red or blue state, where the outcome of their vote has conveniently been determined ahead of time. It doesn't stop there, though; a large proportion of the population is disenfranchised through the policy of not allowing felons to vote, something that has long been abandoned in Europe.

In short, it's going to take much more than pulling a slot machine this fall to create change in our lives.

Conversely, voting in local elections, and specifically in the SGA elections, can have major effects on students' lives. This is a phenomenon known as democracy.

Although people are not used to it, this system of governance allows for input from the actual humans who will be subjected to the policies enacted. What a crazy idea – students actually saying that enough is enough to the bureaucrats in the offices making hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Local politics are such that candidates do not have the capabilities to hire public relations companies to focus on their qualities and not on their policy desires. This gives people a chance to vote for someone who may be from their own social class, something that is unimaginable in the current U.S. presidential system.

Also, the candidates are around for students to talk to and discuss important issues. In short, there is much more transparency, accessibility and democracy in local politics.

Thus, it is like shooting oneself in the foot not to participate in such local endeavors, especially where things like fees, diversity, student control and the police are concerned. These things have huge effects on UMass students' lives.

Who wouldn't want to pay less, have their black friends come to school, have a party in the student union and not get arrested? The only way to get these things is to take action and have a strong representative organization, such as the SGA and the GSS, as well as the ALANA caucus and other student groups. So, involvement is the only way.

As far as the beacon of hope for the Democratic Party, Obama, his politics can be uncovered by the likes of any intelligent college student who knows that everything shown on TV is a complete diversion. The media is owned by large multinational corporations whose sole motive under the law is to obtain profits.

DemocracyNow.org has been following Obama's policies by interviewing his advisors and they have uncovered that he is not as progressive as he seems. For instance, he wishes to allow military contractors to remain in Iraq, to raise the pentagon budget (which is already the highest defense budget in the world) and to "stabilize" Afghanistan.

We know what stabilize means, especially when the Russians said it about Afghanistan. He also is the fourth largest recipient of aid from the war contracting industry, according to "Blackwater" author Jeremy Scahill. Clinton's positions are similar in terms of the Iraq occupation and the global U.S. presence, and McCain is patently a warmonger.

In short, it's going to take much more than pulling a slot machine this fall to create change in our lives. It's going to take local activism and grassroots organization. The streets are where it takes place, as well as the community centers, or the dorm lounges and campus eateries. More people need to start caring about their own lives and not have others tell them what to think and do. That is a true democracy.

Bruce Lerner is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at bvlerner@student.umass.edu.

Understanding "Justice for Jason"

Despite our reluctance to affiliate higher education with peril, high risk behavior on college campuses is steadily increasing. Even here at UMass, student safety is a major concern.

Shaun Robinson

The wickedest part about the campus climate in regards to violence is that we are being desensitized to the severity of these issues. We check our school emails and what do we find? We find bomb threats, stabbings and assault leading to robbery.

To put it simply, we are entirely confused. In terms of dialogue there is a great disservice being done. We are informed when violent behaviors take place, but that is usually the end of the discussion.

We are conscious of racist acts, but don't speak about the culture of white supremacy that motivates such action. We are told of sexual assaults, but this is never juxtaposed to a culture of hyper-masculinity.

By addressing hate crimes and assaults as isolated events, we are undercutting our ability as a community to identify their causes and subsequently alleviate them.

Furthermore, this lack of proper discourse has distorted our ability to think with common sense. It can begin to make the perpetrator seem like a victim, and make the victim seem like an instigator, which is the case with Jason Vassell.

First things first, we'll start off with the facts. Vassell was in his dorm room at 4 a.m. on Feb. 3. With him in his room were two female friends, one of whom went to open a window and found a face staring back at her from outside.

The figure sees Jason and offers several disparaging comments. He then proceeds to kick in the window. The girls run back to their rooms in trepidation. The police are called and Jason calls a male friend from a neighboring dorm to wait with him until the police arrived.

The man who kicked in the window, along with an accomplice, manages to get into the building and attack Jason, breaking his nose. The fight continues, resulting in the assailants suffering several knife wounds.

When we look at this story as an isolated occurrence, ignoring the social context, we make a series of flawed judgments. Our first reaction is, "Damn, another stabbing."

This stance denies the complexity of the story. It reduces the analysis to this: "Cutting people is bad, so if Jason cut folks he is automatically wrong." But in looking at the situation deeper, we find that such an oversimplified way of thinking gives way to injustice.

By calling this incident "just another stabbing," we dehumanize Jason, and nullify the humanness of his actions.

It is essential to emphasize that Jason was in his bedroom tending to his own affairs when he was introduced to the assailants. This point is quite valuable. Jason wasn't out intoxicated at a bar, or roaming the streets of Amherst looking for a confrontation – he was in his bedroom.

Next, it is important to note that Jason was a senior on the verge of graduation, who is spoken of quite highly by faculty and classmates alike. Furthermore, he has no police record. This demonstrates that prior to this incident Jason has had no traceable reputation as a purveyor of violence.

I intentionally left out Jason's race initially, wanting the reader not to bias their interpretation solely on the basis of race. But now it is an essential aspect in the story, Jason is a black male. Prior to kicking in the window the assailants berated Jason with racial epithets and threats.

Jason's race, in my estimation, is most relevant in regard to the public's interpretation of his actions. Within the UMass community I have heard students, most importantly other black males, speak pessimistically of Jason's plight.

Some have indicted the man, saying he should have known better, without even listening to all the available information. As I was walking through Southwest during the vigil held in his honor, a white heckler shouted out, "Why are you having a vigil for someone who stabs people?"

I don't believe Jason would face such harsh criticism had he been of a different race or ethnicity. The stigmatization of blacks as violent individuals suggests that black males should be prepared and well accustomed to events such as these.

In elementary school we learn to stop, drop and roll if our clothes catch fire. Professionals are trained to use the Heimlich when folks start to choke. Unfortunately for Jason, there is no quick and easy technique to use when your window is kicked in at four in the morning.

There is no instruction manual for what to do when being attacked by two men simultaneously. Put yourself in Jason's shoes. How would you react? Think of the thoughts and emotions running through him during that moment.

By calling this incident "just another stabbing," we dehumanize Jason, and nullify the humanness of his actions. This story is indicative of a greater problem in our society. Those who are under attack are portrayed as instigators while those who do the attacking are given the luxury of being a victim.

Shaun Robinson is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at skrobins@student.umass.edu.

Diagnosing the David Project

A few years ago I sat in the UMass Hillel house and heard a representative from the David Project say that their goal was "making it appear as if Israel is the David in the conflict and not the Goliath."

Yousef Munayyer

Guest columnist

Shortly after his introduction, a film called "Columbia Unbecoming" was screened. The film, part of a propaganda campaign, smeared professors at Columbia University and alleged they had silenced students who were "pro-Israel."

Since then, several of the classes which supposedly hosted these incidents put forth signed statements saying the allegations were false. Most students in the class were appalled by the false accusations. Their voices, however, went largely unheard and the David Project's smear campaign became well known.

The David Project is not done. Yesterday, (Mar. 11) the Student Alliance for Israel screened another film by the David Project. This one, "The Forgotten Refugees," is about the exodus of Arab Jews from their native lands in the second half of the 20th century. One may ask how this topic portrays Israel as the biblical David.

The answer lies at the crux of a bloody conflict. It is a history that the David Project will never directly address because any serious account of that history, the history of the depopulation of Palestine, will shatter all illusions of Israel's innocent victim identity.

The argument is all over. Vehement proponents of Israel either attempt to change or ethnic cleansing by saying that the Arabs "kicked out" Jews were their states. The latter may be true. While there is definitely debate within the academic historian community about the extent of Arab state involvement in this, there is little doubt in my mind that there is some truth to it.

However, this in no way justifies the ethnic cleansing of Palestine. It does not answer the charge and does not excuse the state of Israel from abiding by its commitments to uphold the universal declaration of human rights and the charter of the United Nations, as a member state, and allow the refugees to return. Likewise, all Arab states, who once housed the Arab Jews, should abide by the same commitments and allow these Arab Jews and their descendents the right to return to the places they were forced out from.

There are two main problems with arguing that the exodus of Arab Jews from Arab states in anyway justifies Israel's actions in depopulating Palestine from 1947-49.

First, it makes Palestinians, a distinct people tied to a territorial concept, liable for the actions of other Arab states. It would be an obvious farce if Brazil held Spanish speakers within its borders responsible for the actions of Mexico or Spain.

The second problem with the argument is that it supports the process of homogenization during state creation. It justifies the idea of ethnic cleansing.

The David Project is engaged in quite a task. Creating the illusion that Israel is the underdog, while every observable fact points otherwise, is a difficult endeavor. The reality is that Israel could never be painted as the "David." From Israeli historians have gleaned out that in 1948, on the eve of the creation of the state of Israel, Israeli forces outnumbered the combined forces of five poorly-trained and uncoordinated Arab armies.

Today, Israel has peace with Egypt, its greatest threat in modern history. It has peace with Jordan. It also has the world's largest per capita nuclear deterrent and the best equipped and best trained army in the Middle East. In the past eight years, less than 15 Israelis have been killed by homemade Qassam rocket fire. However, in response to Qassam fire, Israel dropped American made bombs on Gaza, killing over 120 people in two days.

SAFI should publicly distance itself from the David Project. The David Project has shown that it is in line with the most right-wing elements in Israel who do not want peace. Recent polls in Israel have shown that over 60 percent of the Israeli public is in favor of talking to groups like Hamas if it can bring peace.

It is unclear why SAFI would choose to put forward this hawkish perspective by promoting the propaganda of these extremists. It is unclear why SAFI, an American student group, puts forward a more right-wing agenda than the Israeli public. SAFI must acknowledge and move to "score points" by twisting reality will never lead to a peaceful resolution to this conflict. The only way to achieve peace between Israelis and Palestinians is by reconciling differences in the historical narratives and understanding the root causes.

Yousef Munayyer is a former Collegian Ed/Op editor and Liberal alumnus.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 12, 2008

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Mountain Goats make good on promise

Band brings new album and fresh stories in return to Northampton

BY BRIAN WOOD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Tomorrow The Mountain Goats return to the Pearl Street Night Club in Northampton for one of the band's seven East Coast stops. Last fall, following their last-minute cancellation of a scheduled Pearl Street performance, front man John Darnielle promised disappointed fans that he would make it up to them. Judging by his inclusion of Pearl Street in the relatively small-scale tour, Darnielle is a man of his word.

Originally hailing from California, Darnielle started the band in the early '90s, recording and releasing self-made cassettes using crude and rudimentary recording equipment. While the band's early catalog is extensive and spans multiple platforms, most of their releases were largely impossible to find. Subsequent reissues have followed in the past years, and are a true testament to the band's fervent fan base and increased critical acclaim.

With Darnielle as the primary songwriter, the band has shuffled contributing members and played in various incarnations during their lengthy history. The lineup currently performing on tour is a three-piece band consisting of Darnielle on guitar, Peter Hughes on bass and new addition Jon Wurster, joining them from the band Superchunk, on drums.

With the band's simplified instrumental arrangements serving as a backdrop, the focus and power of Darnielle's unique vocals and lyrical prowess are what propel their songs. Darnielle is so adept at crafting a compelling narrative in the restrictive length of a compact disc that he is frequently commended for being as gifted literary-wise as he is a lyricist.

Over the past five years, Darnielle has transformed The Mountain Goats from its humble beginning as an underground favorite of lo-fi fanatics to a consistent producer of polished and heavily-introspective releases. Traditionally known for his variety and depth of characters and minimalist recordings, Darnielle has used the band's last two albums, 2005's "The Sunset Tree" and 2006's "Get Lonely," as a means of providing listeners insight into the life of the gifted storyteller.

On "The Sunset Tree," Darnielle delved back into his troubled childhood and fractured relationships with his family, lyrically painting visuals of the young songwriter donning headphones while hunched over his turntable in an attempt to drown the sounds of ever present household disputes.

Further advancing his own personal story arch, "Get Lonely" is Darnielle's deflating retelling of a relationship falling apart before his own eyes. The album is full of mellow compositions weighted heavily in desperation and melancholy. While desperation is a common theme that has often appeared in his works, never before "Get Lonely" had the theme been personally connected to the songwriter. "Get Lonely" is Darnielle's most vulnerable moment.

Before these two releases, Darnielle's personal life had never been a lyrical focal point. Providing new insight into the gifted lyricist's own life, the albums are successful departures from his previous catalog, which consisted of songs revolving around such eccentric varieties as drug-dealing high school running backs, men dressed as Superman and prescription pill abusers.

While his last few releases were deeply autobiographical, the band's latest release, "Heretic Pride," is a return to Darnielle's more scattered storytelling approach to song writing. On the album, Darnielle opts to shift the primary lyrical emphasis from personal confessions and anecdotes in favor of unveiling an expansive array of new characters to the lyricist's already elaborate repertoire.

In addition to the lyrical content, the album also heralds a return to the more minimally produced and lo-fi roots that helped define their earlier years. While "Get Lonely" was the band's most polished and devastatingly introspective work, it also proved a fitting conclusion to Darnielle's venture into personal songwriting.

The Northampton date at Pearl Street is the first stop on the road for the band, in a string of Northeast shows following a number of West Coast performances. Following the March 22 performance in Washington, D.C., the band will conclude the tour with a handful of international dates for fans in Australia.

The Mountain Goats play this Thursday with openers The Moaners and Drew Hickum. Doors open for the event at 8:30 p.m. and tickets are $18 at the door. For tickets or a complete listing of upcoming events, visit ihegg.com.

Brian Wood can be reached at bjwood@student.umass.edu

THE MOUNTAIN GOATS
PEARL STREET
TOMORROW
MARCH 13
$18

John Darnielle and Peter Hughes of The Mountain Goats will bring their storytelling approach to songwriting to the Pearl Street Night Club on Thursday night. Darnielle is renowned for his abilities to craft songs that posses a distinct literary quality and an elaborate array of characters.

Cannes Festival's top film an acquired taste

BY KEVIN KOCZWARA
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Cannes Film Festival doesn't always pick viewer-friendly movies for their grand prize, The Golden Palm.

"Elephant" took top prize a few years back and, for many viewers, is unwatchable due to its long takes, lack of dialogue and minimalist approach to story and narrative. "4 Months, 3 Weeks and 2 Days" is a film in a similar vein as "Elephant," and is this past year's winner of The Golden Palm. It has long takes without the presence of visible actors, a small plot and only a few characters. The major difference between the two movies is that "4 Months, 3 Weeks and 2 Days" has a cast of professional actors and actresses and the director is telling a story in a narrative fashion.

Romanian filmmaker Cristian Mungiu serves doubly as the film's director and writer. He searches internally within both his and his country's collective pasts to a time when a communist government was in power. Mungiu smartly sets the film to a more understanding time, 1987. It is a period close to the fall of the Berlin Wall and the USSR, and a moment where the government's grip is slowly being relinquished.

The movie starts slow by showing the audience the everyday lives of college girls in a dormitory. It is painstakingly slow, but essential to the story. The idea of watching a girl knock on doors searching for cigarettes for 10 minutes may seem mundane and tedious but it holds a certain political, social and economic context for the viewer. Who cares about what type of cigarettes are bought? How much they cost? Why show the audience the way tobacco is bought and how people are bribed very simply by cigarettes and simple things in life? The answer is to illustrate money's devalued importance to the film's protagonists.

The film revolves around two female roommates who exemplify the old adage that opposites attract. One is outgoing, takes risks and is willing to do anything for her friend. The other is scared, shy and dumbfounded when it comes to the way the world works.

Otilia (Anamaria Marinca) is the strong go-getter of the two roommates. Marinca is convincing in the character. She is a strong lead actress whose facial ticks and eye movements show her emotions and intentions despite limited dialogue. She leads the audience through the dimly-lit streets and exposes the ever-present fear of police or other government officials. She is the guiding light for her roommate and an angel in disguise.

Laura Vasiliu plays Gabita, Otilia's more reserved counterpart. She is the one who needs the immediate attention due to her impending need for an abortion. She was supposed to have made all the arrangements with the hotel, the doctor and the plastic bed sheets. But she never does.

Abortion is illegal and their predicament is a difficult one. Finding a trustworthy doctor is just as hard as scrounging up the necessary cash, which Gabita fails to do as well. Otilia then takes charge of the situation to help her struggling friend.

What unfolds on the screen in less than two hours is something dark and haunting. It leaves you wanting more but as each day passes it fills the void left in the theatre by what seems to be a simple narrative and a lack of information. The story is never revealed and abortion is very rarely mentioned until the doctor arrives; it is all implied. The movie seems to move slowly and the scenes of Otilia at dinner with her boyfriend's family will seem useless and annoying upon initial viewing. Why leave such a tense place like the hotel room with one bed and a flickering light out in the hall?

Every action and motion has a purpose for Mungiu. The long shots create a tension. They can also feel drawn out. It is a double-edged sword he plays with throughout the movie. Staring at two chairs and a table while waiting for a character to return is a bit much, and an audience member's eyes may flicker and begin to shut until the character returns. The alleyways are dark and the camera moves and shakes with close-ups of faces, but they have a purpose. The camerawork gives the movie its feel, its emotion comes from the camera's point of view and the movements it takes as people walk with it, and then past it. It is as if you are sitting in on the events that unfold.

It is the haze of the world these women live in. Despite taking place in an all too familiar setting, the film illustrates the haunting realities of life in an oppressed nation and the ever changing nature of daily interactions within them. The dialogue is short and may feel unnecessary for the plot, but Mungiu intends for it to be everyday talk between families and friends, not the most exciting and very deliberately lacking wit.

The closing scene may be the most annoying to a viewer. In fact, it leaves viewers wondering if the film is really over or if the credits are a trick of sorts. For a movie of this nature, it is the perfect conclusion – stare across a table and a good bite to eat to end a hectic day that seemed like it would never end.

Kevin Koczwara can be reached at kkoczwar@student.umass.edu

Anamaria Marinca stars as Otilia in The Golden Palm–winning "4 Months, 3 Weeks and 2 Days." Despite the movie's warm critical reception, its heavy use of elongated shots, dark subject matter and minimalist dialogue makes it an aquired taste.

4 MONTHS, 3 WEEKS AND 2 DAYS
STARRING: ANAMARIA MARINCA
B+

'The Bank Job' fails to deliver on premise

Poor build-up, slow action doom latest heist picture

By Peter Rizzo
Collegian Staff

Jason Statham may well be on his way to joining the prestigious ranks of such awesomely bad action stars as John Claude Van Damme, Steven Segal, and Chuck Norris. Widely known for the so-ridiculous-it's-funny "Transporter" series, Statham has yet to make a movie with true crossover appeal. While he still has a long way to go before achieving this prestigious distinction, "The Bank Job" is an attempt by the actor to take on a more serious role.

What is unfortunate is that this movie falls flat almost immediately out of the gate. The film is implicitly set sometime in the 1970s but an exact date is never declared. The only evidence presented in the film that this is even the time period is the bad '70s fashion and a lack of advanced camera security at the bank in question. This is the first in a neverending array of half-baked ideas that just don't add up to anything substantial or satisfying.

Jason Statham stars as Terry Leather, armed with his signature British accent and wide array of humorous British euphemisms. Phrases like "turned to custard" and words such as "wanker" are placed frequently in his sparse dialogue to remind you that this movie is set in Britain, but do little to develop his one-dimensional character.

Aside from the glaring dialogue problems, the movie never achieves a plot line that is broader in scope than what the title suggests. The initial bank robbery is developed painfully slowly, and when compared to recent heist movies like "Ocean's 11" and the "Italian Job," it's just not that impressive.

The movie also features characters that could have easily been kept as minor contributors or clichés, and instead are given too much dialogue. The plot revolves around Statham's old love interest, played by Saffron Burrows, who comes and offers her old pals a chance for the big heist to get them all out of the game. Needless to say, personal interests get in the way and after the jewels are taken, all hell breaks loose.

The plot borrows heavily from Statham's early hit, "Snatch," but fails to handle the subject matter with the humor and cool that buoyed that film. Surprisingly, halfway through the movie, "The Bank Job" almost has the audacity to suddenly become a good movie. However, once the film gains enough momentum to escape from its agonizingly long setup, it never really brings the necessary action to reward everyone's patience.

The plot is usually just a minor inconvenience in Statham's movies and any holes are usually overshadowed by the large numbers of enemy forces to whom he hands out beatdowns like free candy. Here, however, the viewer is subjected to Statham trying to act in a movie, which doesn't work out as well as intended.

All in all, "The Bank Job" fails to register anywhere close to being a well-constructed heist movie and fails to even be a good Statham film. If you're looking for a movie with intense action, or are in the mood for a satisfying heist movie, it's advisable to look somewhere other than "The Bank Job," a film that fails to deliver on either front.

Peter Rizzo can be reached at prizzo@student.umass.edu

THE BANK JOB

STARRING:
JASON STATHAM

C-

JACK RILEY / COLLEGIAN

Jason Statham stars as Terry Leather in the latest of a long string of heist film to hit theatres. While predecessors such as "Ocean's 11" were successful in providing laughs and thrills, "The Bank Job" falls flat.

Canadian jokesters resume on-air rivalry

By Kate O'Hare
Staff Writer

While senators Clinton and Obama continue to slug it out for the Democratic presidential nomination, another feud of much longer duration, but with a much smaller war chest starts up again on Comedy Central.

Sunday at 11:30 p.m. EDT, "Kenny vs. Spenny" launches its fourth season, once again pitting Canadian childhood pals Kenny Hotz and Spencer "Spenny" Rice against each other in a series of bizarre and occasionally disgusting challenges. Usually, Spenny plays by the rules, while Kenny gets a little more creative (or, frankly, just cheats outright).

In the opening episode, "Who Can Handle More Torture?," the guys test their endurance for pain and humiliation, from swallowing hot sauce to having unnatural encounters with a ventriloquist's dummy and a hot dog.

Obviously, this is not a show for children.

"When we're doing the show," Rice says, "it's war. It really is."

"We actually built a trump card into the show," Hotz says. "We'll do everything in our power not to be humiliated on national television. That's really our number one incentive in the competition.

The fourth season of "Kenny vs. Spenny" premieres Sunday night at 11:30 p.m. on Comedy Central.

"Spenny's more into the competition. I'm more into not being humiliated. That's my motivation."

"Kenny vs. Spenny" formerly aired in the U.S. on GSN: The Network for Games, then moved late last year to Comedy Central. Along with the new season, the show adds two new executive producers, "South Park" creators Matt Stone and Trey Parker.

"Matt and Trey made (the new season) happen," says Hotz. "They got us on Comedy Central. How it happened for Spenny is, he met me. How did it happen? I don't know – planetary alignment, luck, perseverance. We had pictures of the right people with hookers."

"This is going to be a long interview," says Rice.

"It's pretty unbelievable," Hotz continues, "that we're only now starting to happen after years of being around. Long after we thought we'd quit, we're pretty happening."

Asked how the presence of Stone and Parker has changed "Kenny vs. Spenny," Hotz says, "It's not different at all. Actually, it's really the same show."

"It's a little meaner," Rice says. "Kenny keeps getting meaner every season. Other than that, it's the same show."

"I think it's funnier," Hotz says. "The stakes are higher. We know we're talking to American audiences now. (The budget is) a little bigger. We don't really need a big budget. In fact, I'm a little worried a big budget would ruin the show."

"But don't write that," Rice says.

"It is what it is," Hotz says. "Even Matt and Trey understood it. Creatively, we totally include them in notes. We like to pick their brains because they're Matt and Trey. They're (expletive) geniuses."

"They legitimize us to a certain extent," Rice says, "because we've always known the show is right, and they've always known the show is great. But I remember there was an executive, I won't say his name, and he said that our show was the worst show in the history of television – and he wasn't kidding."

"Your dad wasn't an executive, Spenny," Hotz says.

"And there was a satisfaction," Rice continues, "that I got from (Stone and Parker) putting their stamp of approval on it, and the numbers are great. It's very satisfying."

"Out of the entire planet," Hotz says, "they're our smartest, funniest fans."

And, believe it or not, despite their on-screen animosity, Hotz and Rice are truly pals off screen.

"We're natural opposites," Rice says. "So we're like a real-life comedy duo in that sense. I'm sort of the straight man in that I'm ethical, and I play by the rules, and he's the crazy man who will do anything to win. So a lot of the planets were aligned in our lives, having known each other for so long.

"People say, 'How can you guys be friends?' We're like family. Our fathers were friends. We've just known each other from forever."

It's that contrast, Rice and Hotz believe, that helps broaden their fan base.

"Ultimately," Rice says, "which is why the show is successful, is the audience indentifies with one of us. There's a legion of Kenny fans out there who love it when he does what he calls 'thinking out of the box,' what I like to call cheating. Whatever."

"And the three Spenny fans," Hotz says.

"And then there's the three Spenny fans," says Rice.

Childhood friends Kenny Hotz and Spencer Rice resume their bizzare televised rivalry on Comedy Central's "Kenny vs. Spenny."

Golden Booty Tanning Resort
(formerly known as Southern Sun-stations)
Same great place, same customer service.
6 University Drive
Amherst, MA 01002
413.549.8826
-High Pressure Tanning
-Just like Sunbathing at the Beach
-9 minutes on your back then... turn over for the remaining 9 minutes
Appointments only on the hour.
Come In and see our other great beds!

4 + 5 April | 2008
GLOBAL EYES
A Smith College symposium
new ways of seeing art
to explore how global influences are reshaping our understanding of the meaning of art
4 April | 5:30 PM
5th Annual Miller Lecture in Art and Art History
Maria Magdalena Campos-Pons | contemporary artist
Wright Hall | Weinstein Auditorium | Smith College
FREE and open to all
5 April | 8:30 AM–5:30 PM | Symposium
REGISTRATION REQUIRED
Detailed information + registration:
www.smith.edu/artmuseum/globaleyes
or 413.585.2760
SMITH COLLEGE MUSEUM OF ART

MICHAEL PIETRYKOWSKI / COLLEGIAN

UMass coach Travis Ford is hoping his team will make the NCAA Tournament for the first time since 1998.

UMass, URI look for bids

A-10 PREVIEW from page 10

the NCAA Tournament. Now, which of the following would help a team better: Winning a first-round game then falling in the second round OR getting the first-round bye and losing your first game in the second round?

It's a tough question to answer. Not getting that bye in the opening round gives Dayton, URI and St. Joe's that extra chance to add a good win and boost their case for an at-large bid.

Appearing on ESPN's First Take on Monday morning, Ford talked about how his team already has a win in this tournament (sort of) since it earned the bye. But will the NCAA Selection Committee look at it that way?

With the first-round bye's in mind, eight of the 12 teams in the tournament will be in action today at Boardwalk Hall in Atlantic City, N.J. First-round action will start at noon for the first game; the final game of the night will tip-off at 9 p.m.

No. 8 Dayton vs. No. 9 Saint Louis (No. 1 Xavier awaits winner)

If you go strictly by the seeds, this technically should be the most competitive matchup. That scenario is unlikely to play out, though.

In terms of sports cliché's, the "it's hard to beat a team three times in one season" rhetoric is one of the most overused in college basketball – but it holds particularly well in this case.

SLU came close to defeating the Flyers on Jan. 12 (68-57 loss in overtime) but were destroyed, 63-36, a few weeks later at home. The Billikens are a strange team. They lead the conference in scoring defense (61.5 points allowed per game) but are dead last with 60 points per game on offense.

A good part of that has to do with their extremely slow pace of play, but their talent level simply doesn't match Dayton's – especially if the injured Chris Wright is able to play for the Flyers. SLU's Kevin Lisch and Tommie Liddell III will have to play their best games for the Billikens to topple star Brian Roberts and UD.

No. 5 Saint Joseph's vs. No. 12 Fordham (No. 4 Richmond)

This will be an interesting matchup, as both teams are led by the play of their respective big men (Bryant Dunston for the Rams and Ahmad Nivins for the Hawks).

However, the game will likely be swung by the supporting casts, and the Hawks certainly have the advantage there. That was the case in the one prior meeting this season between the teams – a 70-55 SJU victory over Fordham.

Dunston had a strong effort in that game (18 points and eight rebounds) and was supported by the 19 points from guard Marcus Stout. But no other Ram had more than five points, while the Hawks had double-figure contributions from four starters.

If Saint Joe's gets passed the Rams, it will likely have to defeat Richmond as well, if it hopes to get an at-large bid into the NCAA Tournament.

With strong point guard play from Tasheed Carr and the duo of Nivins and Pat Calathes in the middle, the Hawks will likely be favored to do just that.

No. 7 La Salle vs. No. 10 Duquesne (No. 2 Temple)

Both teams enter this game in the midst of a slide, and in Duquesne's case, they come into the matchup with a depleted lineup.

Shawn James, the conference's leading shot blocker, suffered a shoulder injury against Charlotte late in the season, and is unlikely to play. The Dukes love to run up and down the floor, playing little defense, and they need the 6-foot-10 center's playmaking ability on defense to help counteract that.

Meanwhile, the Explorers have been healthy, but have been struggling nonetheless. After an impressive five-game winning streak, La Salle has dropped three consecutive contests – including blowout losses to UMass and Temple.

Despite a win in its last game over SLU, Duquesne has had it worse over that stretch – losing five consecutive games before its most recent triumph.

The two teams split their season series this year, with La Salle capturing the last meeting, 75-72, on Feb. 24. Duquesne ran the Explorers out of their own gym two weeks prior, scoring over 100 points in a 17-point victory.

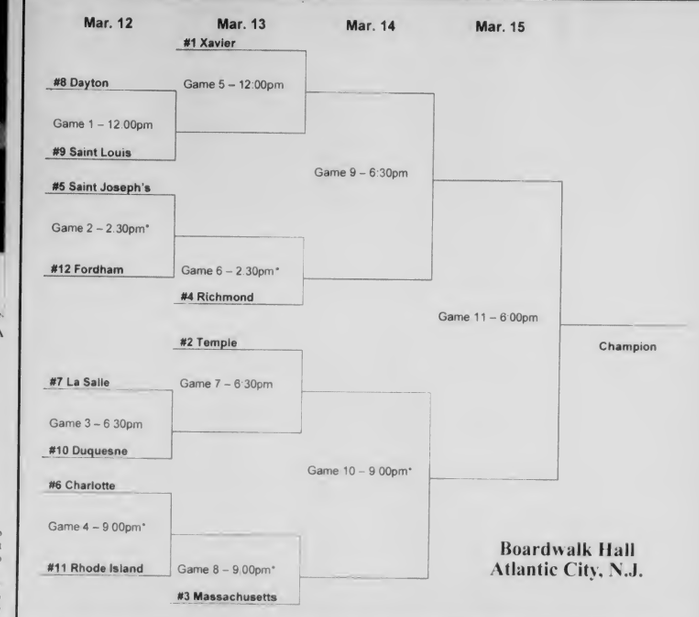
The key to the rubber match will likely be La Salle's Darnell Harris, who is one of the premier 3-point shooters in the country.

No. 6 Charlotte vs. No. 11 Rhode Island (No. 3 Massachusetts)

This has to be considered one of the elite matchups in the first round. Rhode Island's late struggles dropped them to an 11-seed, but this is a team that was ranked in the Top 25 for several weeks and is loaded with talent.

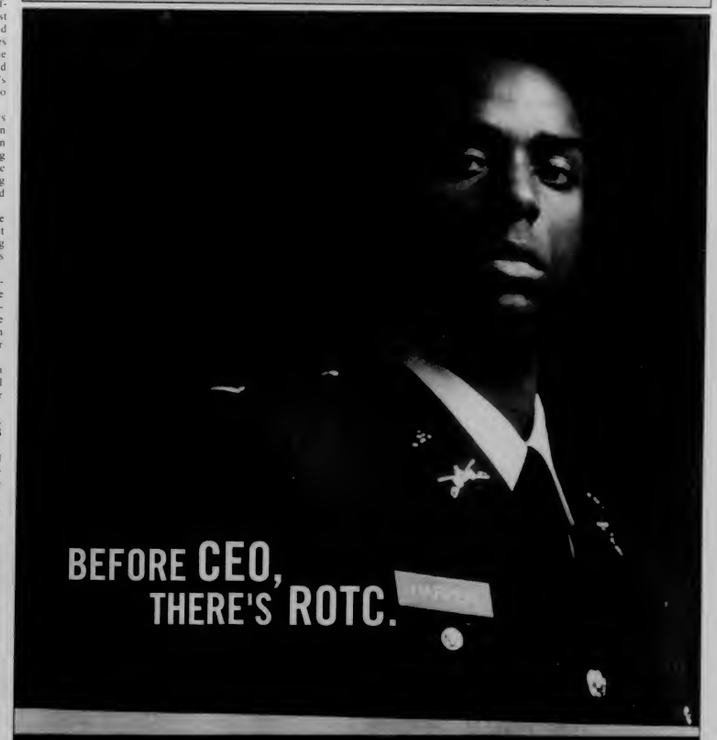
The 49ers have the better seeding, but it's the Rams, not Charlotte that have a chance (albeit small at this point) to sneak into the NCAA Tournament.

There was only one meeting between the programs this year, but that matchup could be more telling than the two between La Salle and Duquesne – because it happened just days ago.



The 49ers completed URI's late-season tailspin, going into the Ryan Center and taking down the Rams, 74-64 on March 8.

Charlotte's stars (Leemire Goldwire and Lamont Mack) had outstanding performances, combining for 53 of the team's 74 points on 12-of-20 shooting from 3-point range.



Rhode Island is a much deeper team on paper, but will have to stay out of foul trouble and limit Goldwire's (who scored 34 in that game) scoring opportunities.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@dailycollegian.com

2008 Atlantic 10 Men's Basketball Conference Tournament Bracket

FOR MORE COVERAGE OF THE ATLANTIC 10 TOURNAMENT AND UMASS'S CHANCES AT MAKING THE NCAA TOURNAMENT, BE SURE TO LISTEN TO THE COLLEGIAN SPORTS PODCAST AT DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM/PODCASTS

ENROLL IN ARMY ROTC
U.S.ARMY
Contact Major John Smolenski at 413-222-9870 or email jsmolens@acad.umass.edu.

Mills, Rosanio leave gaping hole for '08–'09

Mike Connors

It's too bad Tamara Tatham currently plays professionally in Finland – the Massachusetts women's basketball team sure could have used her services for one more season.

Tatham led the Atlantic 10 in rebounding last season (nine per game), but maybe more importantly, provided the team with 12.8 points per game, something they could have used desperately this season.

"We had more of a team effort, a collaborative effort last year where we had a complementary player in Tamara Tatham that gave us a consistent double-double," UMass coach Marnie Dacko said after the season ended. "We relied this year on Kate [Mills] and Pam [Rosanio] and we didn't get that third consistent player."

Junior Stefanie Gerardot became that player for a while, but after she brought her scoring average up to nine points per game, it dropped to 6.8 by the end of the season.

Alisha Tatham, Tamara's sister and another senior along with Rosanio and Mills, averaged 6.1 points, but no one else on the team averaged over 4.3 points per contest.

The Minutewomen's scoring average was nearly identical from last season to this season, but most of the team's wins came with monster nights from Mills, Rosanio or both.

Last season, Tamara Tatham gave UMass another double-digit scoring threat that they lacked this season.

The team's inability to find a third consistent scorer eventually doomed them in the conference tournament.

Dayton held the Minutewomen to 51 points, nearly 12 below their season average. Mills scored 17 points and dominated the boards with 19 rebounds, but Rosanio struggled from the floor (5-of-15) and was held to 11 points in a 57-51 Flyer victory.

The Maroon and White (13-17, 5-10 A-10) clearly missed Tamara Tatham this season, but the loss of Mills and Rosanio will be even more significant entering next season.

Mills averaged 17.4 points, 7.3 rebounds and over two blocks per game while Rosanio provided an emotional leader as well as a player who could score the basketball, averaging 15.9 points per game.

Mills was named to the Atlantic 10 All-Conference second team, and while Xavier's Stanley Burrell is currently complaining that his teammates were not given enough respect when regular-season conference awards were handed out, Mills could make a similar argument, albeit the teams had very different regular-season records.

It cannot be argued that the Minutewomen didn't have a disappointing season, and some will try to use that as an explanation as to why Mills failed to make the first team.

However, La Salle's Carlene Hightower made the first team, and her Explorers failed to qualify for the A-10 Tournament.

BRIAN TEMARAS/COLLEGIAN

UMass coach Marnie Dacko will be without her two leading scorers next season, Pam Rosanio (left) and Kate Mills.

Mills averaged more points, rebounds, assists and blocked shots than Hightower and also shot better from the free-throw line and the field.

Hightower was also a turnover machine – she recorded 53 assists while turning the ball over a whopping 103 times, more than four per game.

Rosanio also struggled with turnovers this season (112) but UMass will have problems replacing her scoring and intensity.

One player who must improve her play is point guard Kim Benton. After a promising freshman season in which she hit 50 three-pointers at a 35 percent clip, she struggled in 2007-08.

Benton couldn't find her rhythm all season and shot slightly over 24 percent from beyond the arc.

"I was asking her not even to think about shooting, just going in and trying to stay with her opponent, keep the ball in front of her defensively and set her players up," Dacko said of Benton.

"We have many other people that can shoot the ball, but she seemed to keep coming out and firing and finding ways to shoot the ball and kept missing shots. That kind of slowly broke her spirit down and she took the confidence out of herself."

Though her shooting was down from a year ago, Benton did a much better job this season taking care of the basketball.

The sophomore had 50 assists and 47 turnovers last year but greatly improved her assist-to-turnover ratio this season, assisting on 66 baskets and turning it over 36 times.

With the top two scorers graduating, the Minutewomen will also need scoring production from Gerardot and freshman Cerie Mosgrove.

Mosgrove averaged 2.6 points per game in limited action this season but showed potential in the team's final game of the season, a first-round A-10 Tournament loss to Dayton.

The Needham, Mass., native scored 11 points, including hitting 3-of-5 shots from beyond the arc.

UMass shot the ball poorly (29 percent) from international waters this season and since they'll be lacking the inside game they received from Mills and Rosanio, they'll have to rely on the 3-point shot more often.

This season, Dacko was pleased with her team's effort but expected more out of this season, considering the Minutewomen returned four of five starters.

"The game of Dayton was kind of, to me, a reflection as you look on your season that totally is a picture of what it looked like in the mirror – it completely reflected our entire season," Dacko said.

"I think for the most part, we defeated ourselves rather than the opponent beating us, and that's hard to live with," she continued. "But that's something we're going to have to live with and evaluate, and I don't think it comes down to one specific thing or person. It's a collective effort, and that needs to be corrected going into next year's season."

Saying the Minutewomen will need a "collective effort" next season is a huge understatement.

They'll need to make up for over half of this year's scoring production, and although the A-10 doesn't rank up there with conferences like the Big East or the ACC, it is a competitive league.

Dacko's a very capable coach and says the incoming class is the best one she's recruited thus far in her time in Amherst, but she better hope these recruits are ready to step and make significant contributions immediately.

Otherwise, she's going to be on the phone with Mills and Rosanio, begging them to find a loophole in the NCAA regulations that allows them to return for one more season.

Mike Connors is a Collegian editor. He can be reached at mjconnor@student.umass.edu.

Balise nets three in victory over Albany

LACROSSE from page 10

in the previous two games, both losses. Junior attack Tim Balise scored three goals and added his first assist of the season for UMass. And Rogers continued his impressive rookie campaign with his first-career goal and two assists.

The duo combined for the game's first goal at 9:33 of the opening quarter. Rogers circled the Albany cage with defender Mike Banks shadowing him. Balise worked himself open in front of Albany goalkeeper Brett Queener. Rogers freed himself of Banks and quickly hit Balise who stuffed the shot over Queener.

"Zach is an outstanding feeder. We're trying to get him to be a little more aggressive going to the goal. He's been doing that, he just hasn't finished," Cannella said. "He's going to continue to develop as an all-around player. Right now, he is an excellent feeder."

Albany presented UMass with some interesting matchup problems. Queener often leaves his post in cage to involve himself in the clearing game and transition offense. The Minutemen took advantage of his aggressiveness for their second goal.

UMass sophomore Kevin Wright turned the ball over near the Albany cage. Queener took a pass from a teammate and raced up field to clear his zone. His attempt failed and UMass quickly moved the ball up field. Manesis fired the ball from the top of the restraining box into the vacated goal.

The transition game led to another UMass goal seven minutes into the third quarter. Senior defender David Von Voigt leveled Levine near the UMass cage. Brian Danvers collected the groundball. The long-pole defender raced up field, and, rather than passing, entered the slot and fired a shot toward the ground. The ball kicked off the turf and over Queener's stick. The rare long-pole goal gave UMass a 6-3 lead.

"Brian's been working hard for that goal, but we hope he doesn't take too many shots," Cannella joked. "It's funny because the guys have done a good job of razzing him. Will Jeffrey scored in the scrimmage, other poles score in practice and he doesn't.

"We told him to shoot the ball high-low, and I think he listened on that one."

Joe Meloni can be reached at joe.meloni@gmail.com

CHECK OUT

OUT THE NEW AND IMPROVED WEB SITE

AT

www.dailycollegian.com

GET TESTED. GET ANSWERS.

In recognition of National Women and Girls HIV/AIDS Awareness Day

FREE AND CONFIDENTIAL HIV RAPID TESTING

Monday, March 10 9:30 am - 5:00pm Smith Campus Center

Tuesday, March 11 Friday, March 14 10:00 am - 6:00pm Amherst Common

Wednesday, March 12 9:30am - 1:30pm UMASS Campus Center

TAPESTRYhealth.org

800.898.7752

HIV

Terriers hosts 7th-seeded UMass Lowell

Catamounts host Huskies; Friars travel to the Heights

Hockey East

BY RYAN FLEMING
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Hockey East Tournament is set.

Boston University (17-15-4, 15-9-3 Hockey East) claimed the No. 2 seed in the conference tournament and will host No. 7 UMass Lowell (15-15-4, 10-13-4 Hockey East) in a best-of-three series beginning Friday night at the Agganis Arena.

In a teleconference Tuesday morning, BU coach Jack Parker commented on his team's season so far.

"In the middle of January I wasn't even thinking about the playoffs," he said. "Home ice was probably out of the question in the playoffs, so we've had a pretty good run. We had some opportunities to beat some teams that were ahead of us so we had to take advantage of that."

In the second half of the season BU went 12-3-2, with two of those games coming against conference regular-season champion New Hampshire.

BU forward Pete MacArthur was awarded the CCM/RBK Player of the Week for his hat trick last weekend against Providence. He also reached the 40-point plateau for the first time in his career, with 17 goals and 23 assists.

Sophomore goaltender Brett Bennett will start for the Terriers. Bennett's performance in the second-half of the season stabilized the Terrier defense.

"Bennett had to be the No. 1 goalie, and he had more confidence because he knew he had the job for a while," Parker said. "We've played much better in front of him. We've played a little more tenacious in front of him and not leaving him out to dry. By semester's break we were the worst team defensively in the league, now we're the fifth best team in the league, so we've had quite a jump in the second semester."

Poor goaltending and a lack of scoring led to a dismal first half for the Terriers. They lost 10 out of their first 16 games, including four home losses. The second half was a different story for BU. At one point, the Terriers won seven consecutive games, scoring at least five goals in three of those games.

"I think senior leadership, I think confidence and goaltending," Parker said of his team's second-half performance. "When you make a mistake and it doesn't wind up in the net it doesn't look that bad. Our goalies have bailed us out at times and we played with a lot more confidence because of that."

When talking about UMass Lowell, Parker praised its quickness and ability to consistently apply pressure throughout a game.

The River Hawks were inconsistent at times in 2007-08, and much of that can be blamed on their lack of experience.

"I think our team has been a little bit up and down as of late in terms of the results, but not so much in terms of our effort," MacDonald said. "A measuring tool for our young team is our effort, our execution and our ability to carry the play."

UMass Lowell is 3-7 in its last 10 games, which includes being swept this past weekend at Maine. In those 10 games, UML has been outscored 31-21.

NO. 3 VERMONT HOSTS NO. 6 NORTHEASTERN

Going into this weekend's conference quarterfinal, Vermont boasts an impressive 7-3 record, where it has outscored its opponents 22-18. With a 4-3 win over UNH last Saturday, UVM halted New Hampshire's unbeaten streak at 12. The loss also marked the first for the Wildcats since dropping a 4-1 decision at Massachusetts on Dec. 8.

Coach Kevin Sneddon of No. 3 Vermont (14-13-7, 13-9-5 Hockey East), whose team hosts No. 6 Northeastern (15-16-3, 12-13-2 Hockey East) this weekend, feels that his team is at its best right now coming off the win over UNH.

"First and foremost we're excited about getting involved in the Hockey East playoffs," Sneddon said.

"Obviously a very difficult year, as all of the teams learned. For our young team to be a No. 3 seed I'm very proud of our efforts. Ending our regular season with a win is a huge confidence boost. We're getting contributions at every position."

The UVM/NU series this season stands currently at 1-1-1. The aggressive Huskies pose a difficult challenge for a defense-first UVM team.

"They're very well coached. If you look at their system, they're very disciplined in their fore-checking," Sneddon said.

"They wait for other teams to make mistakes. Offensively they are very gifted. Most of our games have been very tight-checking, close games. We're excited to be involved in the Championship playoffs."

The Huskies have played some close hockey games of late. NU has generated more chances and played with more grit, like earlier in the season when it sat atop the Hockey East Standings.

"We actually played very similar the last six away games as we did earlier in the year," said Northeastern coach Greg Cronin. "They were all one-goal games that we didn't win. I actually like the way we were playing. I like the fact that we seem to generate an identity that we enjoyed a lot earlier in the year."

NO. 4 BOSTON COLLEGE HOSTS NO. 5 PROVIDENCE COLLEGE

Going into the playoff stretch, Boston College holds a record of 4-5-1 in its last 10 games. However, the Eagles have outscored their opponents 27-26 in those games. No. 4 Boston College's (17-11-8, 11-9-7 Hockey East) coach Jerry York has faith in his club and is confident that his players will do their job against No. 5 Providence College (14-15-5, 11-11-5 Hockey East).

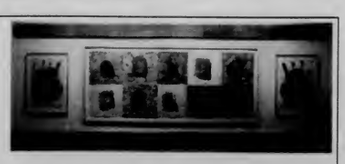
"We've played 36 games, so we have a pretty good feel for our club," York said.

"I feel pretty good about our attitude and our work habits that we've accumulated during the course of the year. We're looking forward to the challenge. It should be a very, very good series."

The Eagles are 0-2-1 against the Friars this year, as they have faced solid goaltending, constant defensive pressure and have been outscored 8-6.

"They've had good goaltending against us," York said. "We haven't created many grade-A chances; we have to create more of those chances and try to score some goals. That 4-5 matchup is the most tenuous of all the match-ups in a 1-8 playoff."

BC freshman goaltender John Muse is the only net minder to start all of his team's games.



PC coach Tim Army talked about his team's emotions going into this weekend's series. Coming off a tough weekend against BU, the Friars know they have a formidable opponent in BC. They will try and stay positive and feed off the playoff energy this weekend.

"We're excited about this coming weekend," Army said. "I think our players feel good, feel positive and are looking forward to the challenge that awaits us. Their team has had a lot of success in the last 15 years.

"I think for us as a group we have struggled on our special teams as of late. It's going to be very, very important. Over the last four weekends neither team has been as good as it has. Boston College's defense closes in on the puck very, very fast; they're very aggressive on the puck. We have to be disciplined. Our special teams has to raise its level for the weekend."

This weekend's series marks the first time since 1998 and the fourth time the Friars will play the Eagles in the conference quarterfinals.

Ryan Fleming can be reached at rfleming@student.umass.edu.

5th Annual MILLER LECTURE in Art and Art History

IN MEMORY OF DULCY BLUME MILLER, SMITH CLASS OF 1946

Maria Magdalena Campos-Pons

Exiled from Cuba and living in Boston, Campos-Pons will speak about her work and experience as an artist of Nigerian descent.

FRIDAY 4 APRIL 2008 5:30 P.M.
WRIGHT HALL, WEINSTEIN AUDITORIUM SMITH COLLEGE
Free and open to all. No reservations necessary.

This program is offered in conjunction with GLOBAL EYES: new ways of seeing art a Smith College symposium to explore how global influences are reshaping our understanding of the meaning of art, April 4-5, 2008. Info and registration: www.smith.edu/artmuseum/globaleyes or 413.585.2760

SMITH COLLEGE MUSEUM OF ART & MUSEUM SHOP

Maria Magdalena Campos-Pons. Cuban, 1959– . Birth Certificate. 1991. Woodcut on amate (bark) paper, carved wood, and etched glass. Purchased with the Dorothy C. Miller, class of 1925, Fund in 2007. Photograph by Thomas J. Gustaitis

413.585.2760 www.smith.edu/artmuseum Northampton, MA

Seven O's

EVERY WEDNESDAY KARAOKE

* * * * * *

LIVE BANDS
THURSDAY, 3/13/08
80 PROOF & LEGAL LIES
FRIDAY, 3/14/08
LAKE SIDE DRIVE
SATURDAY, 3/15/08
SHUT UP & DANCE

LOOKING FOR A PLACE TO HAVE A PRIVATE EVENT/PARTY?
CALL 413-530-6996

ROUTE 116, 330 AMHERST RD SUNDERLAND, MA 01375 (413) 665-9788

3 PM TO 1 AM M-F
1 PM TO 1 AM SAT&SUN
NEXT TO CUTTERS ARTS.

How do you like them apples?

5	9	4	1		8
			5	6		9
	7				9
	1	3				4	8
				4
	5	7				6	9
			3				7
		6		8	7
			6		5	3	4	8

ACROSS
1 Unwanted lip
5 Rapid
9 Requisites
14 Acacia or baobab
15 Length times width
16 Separated
17 Height
19 Publication
20 Brief time
21 Inarticulate grunt
23 Bite and bite
24 Map abbr.
25 Andes animal
27 Glossy cotton fabrics
31 Calum
35 Slow but steady movers
37 Musical beat
38 Atmosphere
39 Gauges
42 Gold in the Sierra Madre
43 Fasten once again
46 Intensified
49 Trap
52 Temples and navals
53 Flier
55 Boring routine
56 Chills and fever
58 Bovine reply
60 Property orients
64 Hold contents
66 Breaking point
68 Striped predator
69 Italian nobs family
70 Deceased
71 Cubic meter
72 Ornamental button
73 Latin being

DOWN
1 Stanch
2 Woody Guthrie's son
3 Appear
4 Cut off
5 Made plump
6 "Exodus" hero
7 South Korea's capital
8 Snarl
9 Tai cocktail
10 Of higher-income consumers
11 Part of a window
12 Verifiable
13 Mishmash dish
18 Started the pot
22 Horse feed
26 NYC opera house
27 Extra one
28 Sigourney Weaver movie
29 Legal wrongs
30 Lanka
32 Surrounded by
33 Binge
34 Mobsters
36 Blue
40 Durocher of baseball
41 Saw-toothed
44 Whole number
45 Listening device?
47 Newman and Hogan
48 Nairtie
50 St. Louis pro
51 Elevas places
54 Drink to
56 Makes a move
57 Way of walking
58 Compulsion
61 Mardi
62 Cole and He-Ioff
63 Popeye's Pea
65 Lode load
67 R-V connection

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

CAPTION CONTEST!

Submit captions and see the picture in color at:

www.dailycollegian.com/caption

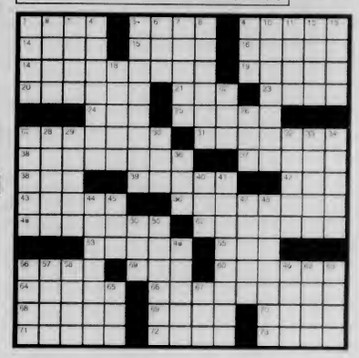
This week's winner gets an actual prize: two movie passes

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"Neither a lofty degree of intelligence nor imagination nor both together go to the making of genius. Love, love, love, that is the soul of genius."

-Wolfang Amadeus Mozart

RETRO GEEK BY STEVE DICKENSON AND TODD CLARK



SCRATCH 'N SNIFF BY DEREK CUNEO

FISHING IS RELAXING BY THOMAS FRINK

Continuing & Professional Education
UMassAmherstOutreach

Summer Session 2008

Don't Wait- Jump Start Your Career This Summer

Session I June 2 - July 10
Session II July 14 - Aug 20

Online Gen Ed's
Small Classes
Great Faculty

PLAN AHEAD!
UMassULearn.net

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Having red eye in a picture is a sign that the devil has a crush on you. Come on, even Satan gets the itch.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
It is not acceptable to start slacking for spring break quite yet. Wait for it... wait...and...THERE. Now you may slack.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
A mob of disgruntled Domino's delivery drivers will ambush you as compensation for years of stingy tips.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
It's safe to say that you are "in over your head" when describing your life. It is not safe to expect mermaids to save you.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
Look on the bright side – even though you're stuck playing second fiddle to your friends, most people can't play fiddle at all.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
You are more overdramatic than a Lifetime original movie.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Laughter is the best medicine and you, McDreamy, are a doctor.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
The Heavens will grant Middle Earth one miracle for every bad song Nickelback has made. There will be many miracles.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Celebrate National Kris Kross Remembrance Day wearing all your clothes backwards. Don't let me catch you frontin'.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Screaming out obscenities can promote a variety of internal serenities.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
It is not fair to your friends that you expect them to pop your zits. That's just gross.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
You always get the last laugh because you are mentally sluggish and intellectually feeble.

SHOOOW ME THE FUNNY!

comics@dailycollegian.com

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Montreal Weekend
From $99 Complete.
Best Hotels.
Best Prices.
montrealexpress.net
781-979-9001

APTS. FOR RENT

Center of Town 1,2,3 bedrooms. NOW SHOWING for June and Sept. NO FEES. Schedule a showing 253-7879 view apts. at www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

2 bedroom apartments in Sunderland HEAT, HOT WATER, CABLE AND INTERNET INCLUDED! Call ASAP 413-665-3856 Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin in June, Aug, or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

Studio 1,2,3,4 bedrooms available. Going Fast, Still guaranteeing for Fall Semester. ALL UTILITIES INCLUDED! Call ASAP 413-256-0741

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520

Office Assistant on Nantucket Island This Summer. Run errands, recieve inventory, computer data entry, answer telephones. Salary plus housing. Fax RESUME to 508-228-8778 or mail to Rafael OSONA P.O. Box 2607, Nantucket MA 02584 telephone: 508-228-3942

ACCOUNTANT REPRESENTATIVE, SALES REPRESENTATIVE, STORE KEEPER, CLERK AND SECRETARY NEEDED: Requirement(Computer Literate, Along with CV.) for more information write us at: Gina Shoes Limited Email: gina.limited@gmail.com

EMPLOYMENT

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

HOUSE 4 RENT

28 Stockbridge St. 6 bedroom house- 2 baths, living room, eat in kitchen, pantry, laundry, finished basement, yard, 2 car garage. 1.5 mi to campus! $2,925+ www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

SERVICES

School a pain in the eyes? Headache? Itchy eyes? Trouble reading? An eye exam can be the first step toward relief. Call Eye Care Services at UHS, 577-5383 to learn more.

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthright.org.

Concerned About Your Eating?
Do you eat too little? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic, 577-5101

TAPESTRY HEALTH providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling &rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable, Safe. 413-548-9992. 27 Pray St. Amherst. www.tapestryhealth.org

TRAVEL

Montreal Weekend
From $99 Complete.
Best Hotels.
Best Prices.
montrealexpress.net
781-979-9001

Mills, Rosanio leave gaping hole for '08–'09

Mike Connors

It's too bad Tamara Tatham currently plays professionally in Finland – the Massachusetts women's basketball team sure could have used her services for one more season.

Tatham led the Atlantic 10 in rebounding last season (nine per game), but maybe more importantly, provided the team with 12.8 points per game, something they could have used desperately this season.

"We had more of a team effort, a collaborative effort last year where we had a complementary player in Tamara Tatham that gave us a consistent double-double," UMass coach Marnie Dacko said after the season ended. "We relied this year on Kate [Mills] and Pam [Rosanio] and we didn't get that third consistent player."

Junior Stefanie Gerardot became that player for a while, but after she brought her scoring average up to nine points per game, it dropped to 6.8 by the end of the season.

Alisha Tatham, Tamara's sister and another senior along with Rosanio and Mills, averaged 6.1 points, but no one else on the team averaged over 4.3 points per contest.

The Minutewomen's scoring average was nearly identical from last season to this season, but most of the team's wins came with monster nights from Mills, Rosanio or both.

Last season, Tamara Tatham gave UMass another double-digit scoring threat that they lacked this season.

The team's inability to find a third consistent scorer eventually doomed them in the conference tournament.

Dayton held the Minutewomen to 51 points, nearly 12 below their season average. Mills scored 17 points and dominated the boards with 19 rebounds, but Rosanio struggled from the floor (5-of-15) and was held to 11 points in a 57-51 Flyer victory.

The Maroon and White (13-17, 5-10 A-10) clearly missed Tamara Tatham this season, but the loss of Mills and Rosanio will be even more significant entering next season.

Mills averaged 17.4 points, 7.3 rebounds and over two blocks per game while Rosanio provided an emotional leader as well as a player who could score the basketball, averaging 15.9 points per game.

Mills was named to the Atlantic 10 All-Conference second team, and while Xavier's Stanley Burrell is currently complaining that his teammates were not given enough respect when regular-season conference awards were handed out, Mills could make a similar argument, albeit the teams had very different regular-season records.

It cannot be argued that the Minutewomen didn't have a disappointing season, and some will try to use that as an explanation as to why Mills failed to make the first team.

However, La Salle's Carlene Hightower made the first team, and her Explorers failed to qualify for the A-10 Tournament.

RACHEL LOMBARDI/COLLEGIAN

UMass coach Marnie Dacko will be without her two leading scorers next season, Pam Rosanio (left) and Kate Mills.

Mills averaged more points, rebounds, assists and blocked shots than Hightower and also shot better from the free-throw line and the field.

Hightower was also a turnover machine – she recorded 53 assists while turning the ball over a whopping 103 times, more than four per game.

Rosanio also struggled with turnovers this season (112) but UMass will have problems replacing her scoring and intensity.

One player who must improve her play is point guard Kim Benton. After a promising freshman season in which she hit 50 three-pointers at a 35 percent clip, she struggled in 2007-08.

Benton couldn't find her rhythm all season and shot slightly over 24 percent from beyond the arc.

"I was asking her not even to think about shooting, just going in and trying to stay with her opponent, keep the ball in front of her defensively and set her players up," Dacko said of Benton.

"We have many other people that can shoot the ball, but she seemed to keep coming out and firing and finding ways to shoot the ball and kept missing shots. That kind of slowly broke her spirit down and she took the confidence out of herself."

Though her shooting was down from a year ago, Benton did a much better job this season taking care of the basketball.

The sophomore had 50 assists and 47 turnovers last year but greatly improved her assist-to-turnover ratio this season, assisting on 66 baskets and turning it over 36 times.

With the top two scorers graduating, the Minutewomen will also need scoring production from Gerardot and freshman Cerie Mosgrove.

Mosgrove averaged 2.6 points per game in limited action this season but showed potential in the team's final game of the season, a first-round A-10 Tournament loss to Dayton.

The Needham, Mass., native scored 11 points, including hitting 3-of-5 shots from beyond the arc.

UMass shot the ball poorly (29 percent) from international waters this season and since they'll be lacking the inside game they received from Mills and Rosanio, they'll have to rely on the 3-point shot more often.

This season, Dacko was pleased with her team's effort but expected more out of this season, considering the Minutewomen returned four of five starters.

"The game of Dayton was kind of, to me, a reflection as you look on your season that totally is a picture of what it looked like in the mirror – it completely reflected our entire season," Dacko said.

"I think for the most part, we defeated ourselves rather than the opponent beating us, and that's hard to live with," she continued. "But that's something we're going to have to live with and evaluate, and I don't think it comes down to one specific thing or person. It's a collective effort, and that needs to be corrected going into next year's season."

Saying the Minutewomen will need a "collective effort" next season is a huge understatement.

They'll need to make up for over half of this year's scoring production, and although the A-10 doesn't rank up there with conferences like the Big East or the ACC, it is a competitive league.

Dacko's a very capable coach and says the incoming class is the best one she's recruited thus far in her time in Amherst, but she better hope these recruits are ready to step and make significant contributions immediately.

Otherwise, she's going to be on the phone with Mills and Rosanio, begging them to find a loophole in the NCAA regulations that allows them to return for one more season.

Mike Connors is a Collegian editor. He can be reached at mjconnor@student.umass.edu.

Balise nets three in victory over Albany

LACROSSE from page 10

in the previous two games, both losses. Junior attack Tim Balise scored three goals and added his first assist of the season for UMass. And Rogers continued his impressive rookie campaign with his first-career goal and two assists.

The duo combined for the game's first goal at 9:33 of the opening quarter. Rogers circled the Albany cage with defender Mike Banks shadowing him. Balise worked himself open in front of Albany goalkeeper Brett Queener. Rogers freed himself of Banks and quickly hit Balise who stuffed the shot over Queener.

"Zach is an outstanding feeder. We're trying to get him to be a little more aggressive going to the goal. He's been doing that, he just hasn't finished," Cannella said. "He's going to continue to develop as an all-around player. Right now, he is an excellent feeder."

Albany presented UMass with some interesting matchup problems. Queener often leaves his post in cage to involve himself in the clearing game and transition offense. The Minutemen took advantage of his aggressiveness for their second goal.

UMass sophomore Kevin Wright turned the ball over near the Albany cage. Queener took a pass from a teammate and raced up field to clear his zone. His attempt failed and UMass quickly moved the ball up field. Manesis fired the ball from the top of the restraining box into the vacated goal.

The transition game led to another UMass goal seven minutes into the third quarter. Senior defender David Von Voigt leveled Levine near the UMass cage. Brian Danvers collected the groundball. The long-pole defender raced up field, and, rather than passing, entered the slot and fired a shot toward the ground. The ball kicked off the turf and over Queener's stick. The rare long-pole goal gave UMass a 6-3 lead.

"Brian's been working hard for that goal, but we hope he doesn't take too many shots," Cannella joked. "It's funny because the guys have done a good job of razzing him. Will Jeffrey scored in the scrimmage, other poles score in practice and he doesn't.

"We told him to shoot the ball high-low, and I think he listened on that one."

Joe Meloni can be reached at joe.meloni a gmail.com

CHECK OUT

OUT THE NEW AND IMPROVED WEB SITE

AT

www.dailycollegian.com

Terriers hosts 7th-seeded UMass Lowell

Catamounts host Huskies; Friars travel to the Heights

BY RYAN FLEMING
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Hockey East

The Hockey East Tournament is set.

Boston University (17-15-4, 15-9-3 Hockey East) claimed the No. 2 seed in the conference tournament and will host No. 7 UMass Lowell (15-15-4, 10-13-4 Hockey East) in a best-of-three series beginning Friday night at the Agganis Arena.

In a teleconference Tuesday morning, BU coach Jack Parker commented on his team's season so far.

"In the middle of January I wasn't even thinking about the playoffs," he said. "Home ice was probably out of the question in the playoffs, so we've had a pretty good run. We had some opportunities to beat some teams that were ahead of us so we had to take advantage of that."

In the second half of the season BU went 12-3-2, with two of those games coming against conference regular-season champion New Hampshire.

BU forward Pete MacArthur was awarded the CCM/RBK Player of the Week for his hat trick last weekend against Providence. He also reached the 40-point plateau for the first time in his career, with 17 goals and 23 assists.

Sophomore goaltender Brett Bennett will start for the Terriers. Bennett's performance in the second-half of the season stabilized the Terrier defense.

"Bennett had to be the No. 1 goalie, and he had more confidence because he knew he had the job for a while," Parker said. "We've played much better in front of him. We've played a little more tenacious in front of him and not leaving him out to dry. By semester's break we were the worst team defensively in the league, now we're the fifth best team in the league, so we've had quite a jump in the second semester."

Poor goaltending and a lack of scoring led to a dismal first half for the Terriers. They lost 10 out of their first 16 games, including four home losses. The second half was a different story for BU. At one point, the Terriers won seven consecutive games, scoring at least five goals in three of those games.

"I think senior leadership, I think confidence and goaltending," Parker said of his team's second-half performance. "When you make a mistake and it doesn't wind up in the net it doesn't look that bad. Our goalies have bailed us out at times and we played with a lot more confidence because of that."

When talking about UMass Lowell, Parker praised its quickness and ability to consistently apply pressure throughout a game.

The River Hawks were inconsistent at times in 2007-08, and much of that can be blamed on their lack of experience.

"I think our team has been a little bit up and down as of late in terms of the results, but not so much in terms of our effort," MacDonald said. "A measuring tool for our young team is our effort, our execution and our ability to carry the play."

UMass Lowell is 3-7 in its last 10 games, which includes being swept this past weekend at Maine. In those 10 games, UML has been outscored 31-21.

No. 3 Vermont hosts No. 6 Northeastern

Going into this weekend's conference quarterfinal, Vermont boasts an impressive 7-3 record, where it has outscored its opponents 22-18. With a 4-3 win over UNH last Saturday, UVM halted New Hampshire's unbeaten streak at 12. The loss also marked the first for the Wildcats since dropping a 4-1 decision at Massachusetts on Dec. 8.

Coach Kevin Sneddon of No. 3 Vermont (14-13-7, 13-9-5 Hockey East), whose team hosts No. 6 Northeastern (15-16-3, 12-13-2 Hockey East) this weekend, feels that his team is at its best right now coming off the win over UNH.

"First and foremost we're excited about getting involved in the Hockey East playoffs," Sneddon said.

"Obviously a very difficult year, as all of the teams learned. For our young team to be a No. 3 seed I'm very proud of our efforts. Ending our regular season with a win is a huge confidence boost. We're getting contributions at every position."

The UVM/NU series this season stands currently at 1-1-1. The aggressive Huskies pose a difficult challenge for a defense-first UVM team.

"They're very well coached. If you look at their system, they're very disciplined in their fore-checking," Sneddon said.

"They wait for other teams to make mistakes. Offensively they are very gifted. Most of our games have been very tight-checking, close games. We're excited to be involved in the Championship playoffs."

The Huskies have played some close hockey games of late. NU has generated more chances and played with more grit, like earlier in the season when it sat atop the Hockey East Standings.

"We actually played very similar the last six away games as we did earlier in the year," said Northeastern coach Greg Cronin. "They were all one-goal games that we didn't win. I actually like the way we were playing. I like the fact that we seem to generate an identity that we enjoyed a lot earlier in the year."

No. 4 Boston College hosts No. 5 Providence College

Going into the playoff stretch, Boston College holds a record of 4-5-1 in its last 10 games. However, the Eagles have outscored their opponents 27-26 in those games. No. 4 Boston College's (17-11-8, 11-9-7 Hockey East) coach Jerry York has faith in his club and is confident that his players will do their job against No. 5 Providence College (14-15-5, 11-11-5 Hockey East).

"We've played 36 games, so we have a pretty good feel for our club," York said.

"I feel pretty good about our attitude and our work habits that we've accumulated during the course of the year. We're looking forward to the challenge. It should be a very, very good series."

The Eagles are 0-2-1 against the Friars this year, as they have faced solid goaltending, constant defensive pressure and have been outscored 8-6.

"They've had good goaltending against us," York said. "We haven't created many grade-A chances; we have to create more of those chances and try to score some goals. That 4-5 matchup is the most tenuous of all the match-ups in a 1-8 playoff."

BC freshman goaltender John Muse is the only net minder to start all of his team's games.

PC coach Tim Army talked about his team's emotions going into this weekend's series. Coming off a tough weekend against BU, the Friars know they have a formidable opponent in BC. They will try and stay positive and feed off the playoff energy this weekend.

"We're excited about this coming weekend," Army said. "I think our players feel good, feel positive and are looking forward to the challenge that awaits us. Their team has had a lot of success in the last 15 years.

"I think for us as a group we have struggled on our special teams as of late. It's going to be very, very important. Over the last four weekends neither team has been as good as it has. Boston College's defense closes in on the puck very, very fast; they're very aggressive on the puck. We have to be disciplined. Our special teams has to raise its level for the weekend."

This weekend's series marks the first time since 1998 and the fourth time the Friars will play the Eagles in the conference quarterfinals.

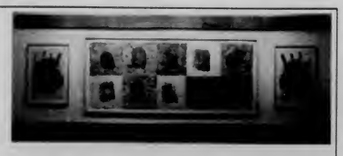
Ryan Fleming can be reached at rfleming@student.umass.edu.

GET TESTED. GET ANSWERS.

In recognition of National Women and Girls HIV/AIDS Awareness Day

FREE AND CONFIDENTIAL HIV RAPID TESTING

Monday, March 10 9:30 am - 5:00pm Smith Campus Center



Wednesday, March 12 9:30am - 1:30pm UMASS Campus Center

Tuesday, March 11 Friday, March 14 10:00 am - 6:00pm Amherst Common

TAPESTRYhealth.org

800.898.7752

HIV

5th Annual MILLER LECTURE in Art and Art History

IN MEMORY OF DULCY BLUME MILLER, SMITH CLASS OF 1946

Maria Magdalena Campos-Pons

Exiled from Cuba and living in Boston, Campos-Pons will speak about her work and experience as an artist of Nigerian descent.

FRIDAY 4 APRIL 2008 5:30 P.M.
WRIGHT HALL, WEINSTEIN AUDITORIUM SMITH COLLEGE
Free and open to all. No reservations necessary.

This program is offered in conjunction with GLOBAL EYES: new ways of seeing art a Smith College symposium to explore how global influences are reshaping our understanding of the meaning of art. April 4-5, 2008. Info and registration: www.smith.edu/artmuseum/globaleyes or 413.585.2760

Maria Magdalena Campos-Pons Cuban, 1959– Birth Certificate, 1991 Woodcut on amate (bark) paper, carved wood, and etched glass. Purchased with the Dorothy C. Miller, class of 1925, Fund in 2007 Photograph by Thomas J. Gustainis

SMITH COLLEGE MUSEUM OF ART & MUSEUM SHOP

413.585.2760 www.smith.edu/artmuseum Northampton, MA

Seven O's

EVERY WEDNESDAY KARAOKE

LIVE BANDS
THURSDAY, 3/13/08
80 PROOF & LEGAL LIES
FRIDAY, 3/14/08
LAKE SIDE DRIVE
SATURDAY, 3/15/08
SHUT UP & DANCE

LOOKING FOR A PLACE TO HAVE A PRIVATE EVENT/PARTY?
CALL 413-530-6996

ROUTE 116, 330 AMHERST RD SUNDERLAND, MA 01375 (413) 665-8788

3 PM TO 1 AM M-F
1 PM TO 1 AM SAT-SUN
NEXT TO CAMPUS APTS.

How do you like them apples?

5	9	4	1		8
			5	6		9
	7				9
	1	3				4	8
				4
	5	7				6	9
			3				7
		6		8	7
			6		5	3	4	8

ACROSS
1 Unwanted tip
5 Rapid
9 Requisites
14 Acacia or baobab
15 Length times width
16 Separated
17 Height
19 Publication
20 Brief time
21 Inarticulate grunt
23 Bite and bite
24 Map abbr.
25 Andes animal
27 Glossy cotton fabrics
31 Cilium
35 Slow but steady movers
37 Musical beat
38 Atmosphere
39 Gauges
42 Gold in the Sierra Madre
43 Fasten once again
46 Intensified
49 Trap
52 Temples and navels
53 Flier
55 Boring routine
56 Chills and fever
58 Bovine reply
60 Property orients
64 Hold contents
66 Breaking point
68 Striped predator
69 Italian noble family
70 Deceased
71 Cubic meter
72 Ornamental button
73 Latin being

DOWN
1 Starch
2 Woody Guthrie's son
3 Appear
4 Cut off
5 Made plump
6 "Exodus" hero
7 South Korea's capital
8 Sinai
9 ___ tai cocktail
10 Of higher-income consumers
11 Part of a window
12 Verifiable
13 Mishmash dish
18 Started the pot
22 Horse feed
26 NYC opera house
27 Extra one
28 Sigourney Weaver movie
29 Legal wrongs
30 ___ Lanka
32 Surrounded by
33 Binge
34 Mobsters
36 Blue
40 Durocher of baseball
41 Saw-toothed
44 Whole number
45 Listening device?
47 Newman and Hogan
48 Name
50 St. Louis pro
51 Elevens' places
54 Drink to
56 Makes a move
57 Way of walking
59 Compulsion
61 Mardi ___
62 Colo. and Hartzoff
63 Popeye's Pea
65 Lode load
67 R-V connection

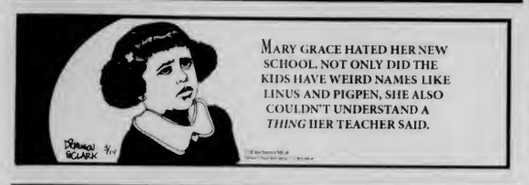
Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

CAPTION CONTEST!

Submit captions and see the picture in color at:

www.dailycollegian.com/caption

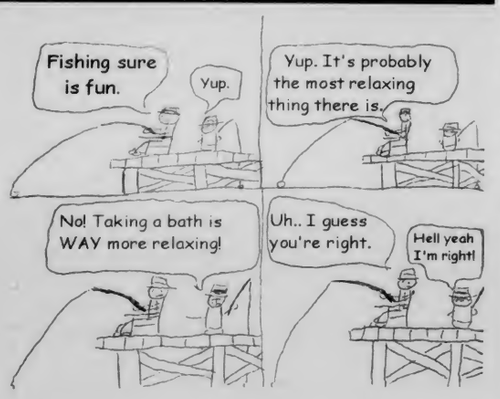


This week's winner gets an actual prize: two movie passes

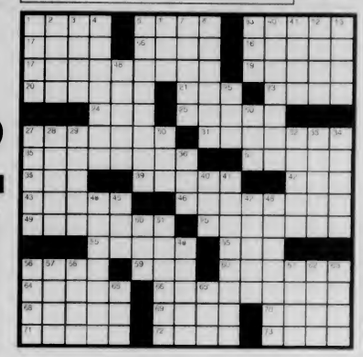
QUOTE OF THE DAY

"Neither a lofty degree of intelligence nor imagination nor both together go to the making of genius. Love, love, love, that is the soul of genius."

-Wolfang Amadeus Mozart



RETRO GEEK BY STEVE DICKENSON AND TODD CLARK



SCRATCH 'N SNIFF BY DEREK CUNEO

FISHING IS RELAXING BY THOMAS FRINK

Continuing & Professional Education
UMassAmherst

Summer Session 2008

Don't Wait- Jump Start Your Career This Summer

Session I June 2 - July 10
Session II July 14 - Aug 20

Online Gen Ed's
Small Classes
Great Faculty

PLAN AHEAD!
UMassULearn.net

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Having red eye in a picture is a sign that the devil has a crush on you. Come on, even Satan gets the itch.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
It is not acceptable to start slacking for spring break quite yet. Wait for it... wait...and...THERE. Now you may slack.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
A mob of disgruntled Domino's delivery drivers will ambush you as compensation for years of stingy tips.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
It's safe to say that you are "in over your head" when describing your life. It is not safe to expect mermaids to save you.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
Look on the bright side – even though you're stuck playing second fiddle to your friends, most people can't play fiddle at all.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
You are more overdramatic than a Lifetime original movie.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Laughter is the best medicine and you, McDreamy, are a doctor.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
The Heavens will grant Middle Earth one miracle for every bad song Nickelback has made. There will be many miracles.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Celebrate National Kris Kross Remembrance Day wearing all your clothes backwards. Don't let me catch you frontin'.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Screaming out obscenities can promote a variety of internal serenities.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
It is not fair to your friends that you expect them to pop your zits. That's just gross.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
You always get the last laugh because you are mentally sluggish and intellectually feeble.

SHOOOW ME THE FUNNY!

comics@dailycollegian.com

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Montreal Weekend
From $99 Complete.
Best Hotels.
Best Prices.
montrealexpress.net
781-979-9001

APTS. FOR RENT

Center of Town 1,2,3 bedrooms. NOW SHOWING for June and Sept. NO FEES. Schedule a showing 253-7879 view apts. at www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

2 bedroom apartments in Sunderland HEAT, HOT WATER, CABLE AND INTERNET INCLUDED! Call ASAP 413-665-3856 Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin in June, Aug, or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

Studio 1,2,3,4 bedrooms available. Going Fast, Still guaranteeing for Fall Semester. ALL UTILITIES INCLUDED! Call ASAP 413-256-0741

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520

Office Assistant on Nantucket Island This Summer. Run errands, recieve inventory, computer data entry, answer telephones. Salary plus housing. Fax RESUME to 508-228-8778 or mail to Rafael OSONA P.O. Box 2607, Nantucket MA 02584 telephone: 508-228-3942

ACCOUNTANT REPRESENTATIVE, SALES REPRESENTATIVE, STORE KEEPER, CLERK AND SECRETARY NEEDED: Requirement(Computer Literate, Along with CV.) for more information write us at: Gina Shoes Limited Email: gina.limited@gmail.com

EMPLOYMENT

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

HOUSE 4 RENT

28 Stockbridge St. 6 bedroom house- 2 baths, living room, eat in kitchen, pantry, laundry, finished basement, yard, 2 car garage. 1.5 mi to campus! $2,925+ www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

SERVICES

School a pain in the eyes? Headache? Itchy eyes? Trouble reading? An eye exam can be the first step toward relief. Call Eye Care Services at UHS, 577-5383 to learn more.

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthright.org.

Concerned About Your Eating?
Do you eat too little? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic, 577-5101

TAPESTRY HEALTH providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling &rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable, Safe. 413-548-9992 27 Pray St. Amherst. www.tapestryhealth.org

TRAVEL

Montreal Weekend
From $99 Complete.
Best Hotels.
Best Prices.
montrealexpress.net
781-979-9001

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 12, 2008 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Tim Balise scored three goals as the Minutemen withstood a late comeback attempt from Albany yesterday at Garber Field to win 9–8.

UMass survives late charge

Balise records three goals in tight victory, 9–8, over Albany

BY JOE MELONI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

With both Massachusetts and No. 18 Albany looking to end losing streaks, neither team appeared too determined to do so as the final seconds fell from the clock yesterday at Garber Field.

The Minutemen (2-2) held on for a 9-8 victory over The Great Danes (0-4), but just barely.

Albany attack Derek Dale led his team's furious comeback attempt with two goals in 18 seconds, cutting UMass's lead to 9-7 before Corey Small made it 9-8.

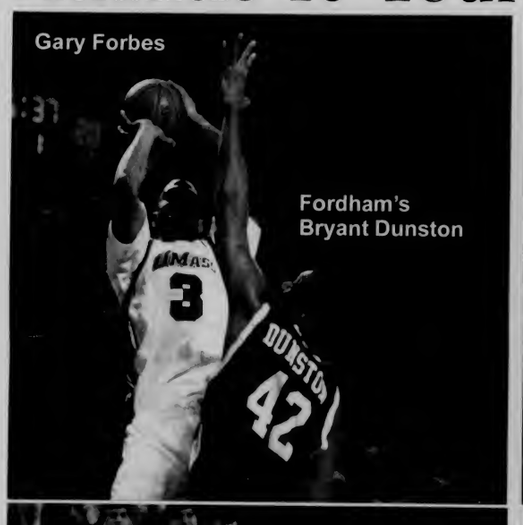
On the ensuing faceoff, Albany senior Jordan Levine locked UMass junior Joe Reale up, allowing teammate John Alpizar to scoop the groundball and head up-field with 1:08 remaining.

UMass	9
Albany	8

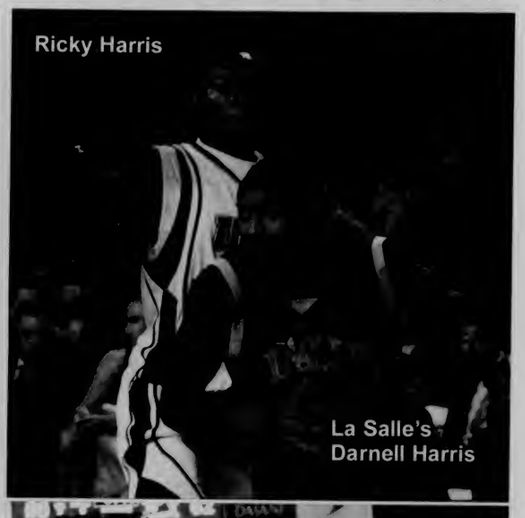
Alpizar found Dale covered by UMass defender Sean Krygier to the right of the UMass goal. After a failed dodge attempt, Dale tried a cross-field pass to freshman attack Matt Johnson. The pass sailed high, however, and, with 48 seconds left, it appeared as though UMass survived the Great Dane rally for their first victory in the series since 2003.

The Minutemen had two more clear attempts in the final minute, each of which they failed, allowing Albany second and third chances to knot the score at 9-9.

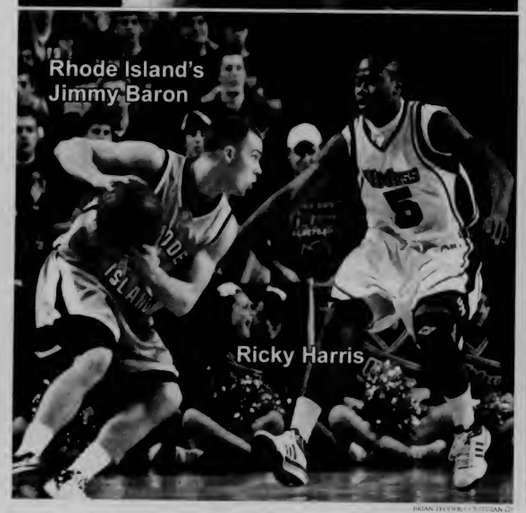
After senior Paul Manesis tried to muscle his way through two Great Dane midfielders, the ball fell from his cradle allowing Albany its last chance. Senior Steve Amman fired a shot toward junior goalkeeper Doc Schneider with 21 seconds on the clock. The shot rose as it approached the net, allowing Schneider to deflect it out of play. Freshman Zach Rogers backed up the play and officials awarded UMass possession with 13 seconds remaining.



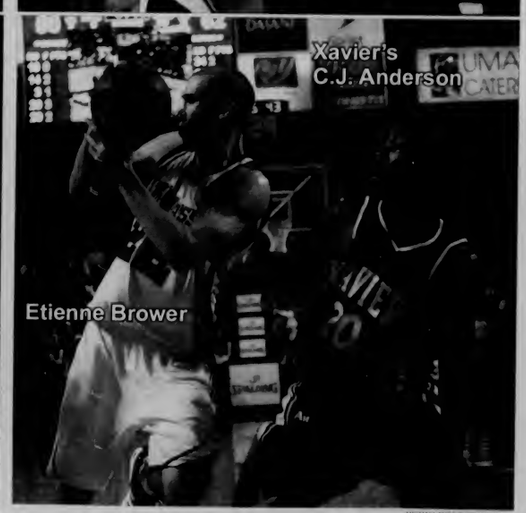
UMass dominated its defensive zone for the entirety of the first three quarters and most of the fourth. But its slips in the game's waning moments nearly cost them a win.



"We played great defense for about 53 minutes. We haven't been able to put a 60-minute effort forth. We came close today," UMass coach Greg Cannella said. "It was a really good effort. I'm really happy with the guys for the confidence."



The Minutemen also located the offensive rhythm that lacked



See LACROSSE on page 8

Atlantic 10 Tournament Preview

A–10 teams on bubble have final chance

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Heading into today's start of the Atlantic 10 Tournament, not much is known.

But we do know the following: The A-10 has 14 teams (go figure), two of them won't partake in the tournament (George Washington and St. Bonaventure), four teams will have first-round bye's (Xavier, Temple, Massachusetts and Richmond) and one team will win the event and receive the automatic bid into the NCAA Tournament.

What everyone wants to know is not just who will win the tournament, but which of the numerous "bubble" teams in the conference will be "dancing" in March. If Xavier (the prohibitive favorite) gets the automatic bid, could the country's seventh-best conference only have one team represented in the field of 65?

The No. 10 Musketeers are in no matter what, but the same can't be said for UMass, Temple, Saint Joseph's, Dayton and Rhode Island — five teams that have postseason aspirations that don't include the NIT. Strangely enough, it's the Flyers and the Rams (they were both ranked in the Top 25 at one time) that have the most work to do in that group to avoid the dreaded consolation prize for missing out on the NCAAs.

The Minutemen may be in the best shape of that group, even though Temple beat UMass (in overtime) and finished one game ahead of Travis Ford's team in the conference standings. UMass's postseason résumé is simply stronger than Temple's with more impressive non-conference and in-conference victories.

For UMass and Temple, one interesting question has been raised. Since each team finished in the Top 4 in the conference, they received a bye in the first round – but is that a good thing? Take Dayton and Umass, for example. Both teams are hoping to secure an at-large bid into

See A–10 PREVIEW on page 7

ATLANTIC 10 MEN'S BASKETBALL TOURNAMENT FIRST ROUND

No. 8 Dayton vs. No. 9 Saint Louis (Winner plays No. 1 Xavier)

No. 5 Saint Joseph's vs. No. 12 Fordham (No. 4 Richmond)

No. 7 La Salle vs. No. 10 Duquesne (No. 2 Temple)

No. 6 Charlotte vs. No. 11 Rhode Island (No. 3 Massachusetts)

INSIDE: UMASS BEGINS A-10 CHAMPIONSHIP QUEST | PAGE 12

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

PARTLY CLOUDY : HI: 43 LO: 29 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM THURSDAY, MARCH 13, 2008

A group of approximately 100 students and faculty members held a rally and marched on campus yesterday, protesting hate crimes, as well as the charges levied against Jason Vassell.

Rally brings attention to campus hate crime

Students, faculty show support of former student Jason Vassell

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A 13-minute march with constant loud chants in protest of hate crimes ended in relative silence yesterday as University of Massachusetts students and faculty members placed hundreds of flowers in a chain-linked fence to represent those who have been recently affected by hate crimes.

Each flower represented 30 of the over 10,000 hate crimes that were reported in 2007 across the country. But Wednesday's rally and march from the steps of the student union to the horseshoe in Southwest residential area was in support of Jason Vassell – a former UMass student charged with assault with intent to murder and two counts of aggravated assault and battery with a deadly weapon, following an alleged hate crime incident on campus on Feb. 3 involving Vassell and two white men.

John Bowes, 20, was charged with two hate crimes and disorderly conduct. The other, Jonathan Bosse, has not been charged. Yesterday's rally followed a vigil for Vassell on Feb. 27 and was intended to raise awareness and lessen his charges before his pretrial hearing scheduled for Friday in Hampshire District Court.

"He is a survivor of a hate crime and a violent assault, who is being further traumatized by being isolated; from his partner, his friends, his academic studies, his community, the legal system and the excessive charges against him," said Zane Barlow Coleman, a professor of biology at UMass who taught and knew Vassell.

"I find that unacceptable. I find it appalling," she added.

Students gathered to listen as professors and fellow peers held speeches at the student union that started around 12:15 p.m. and ended 30 minutes later. Some students discussed their experiences of racism on campus while the faculty members that spoke talked about Vassell's situation and about how violent acts on campus affect everyone.

"What took place here that evening at this University is something in which issues of justice, issues of fairness, issues of decency and the values in which we espouse as a community are threatened," Michael Thelwell, professor in the African American studies department said.

After the group of speakers concluded, about 100 people held signs and chanted as they marched to Vassell's former living area in Southwest, while many on-lookers watched, joined in or asked about what the rally was for.

The chants of, 'Hate crimes have got to go! Hey-hey, ho-ho!,' 'What do we want? Justice! When do we want it? Now!'

See RALLY on page 3

More notes found

Officials investigate additional messages threatening violence

BY MEGHAN MURPHY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

University of Massachusetts police are still investigating leads on four messages threatening violence that were discovered in men's bathrooms on campus over the span of a week.

The UMPD has not yet identified a suspect, although they continue to receive anonymous tips, according to UMass Director of News and Information Ed Blaguszewski.

Police believe that a longer time may have passed between the writing and the discovery of the third and fourth messages than the first and second, said Deputy Chief of Administration Patrick Archbald.

The Office of News and Information circulated campus-wide e-mail alerts after two similarly worded messages were found in Bartlett Hall and Furcolo Hall on Wednesday, Feb. 27 and Monday, March 3. A faculty member working in Hills South found the third message when he decided to check the men's bathrooms in Hills South after receiving the alerts, said Blaguszewski.

The third threat was mentioned in an e-mail updating students and staff on the developing investigation, but police chose not to issue a separate alert as they did with the initial two because they had already sent out the e-mail about the second one that same morning.

"What they need to do is to assess the credibility of the threat, or the language, and you also want to be appropriate on when you send out a campus alert," said Blaguszewski. "Because if you do it too often, then people can begin to not pay as close attention to them as they should.

"You need to make sure that you preserve the integrity of that communications vehicle so that when you send it out, people are taking the appropriate action," he said. "In this case, we're asking them to be vigilant and keep their eyes open."

An ROTC cadet found a fourth message with similar language to the first three on

See MESSAGE on page 2

Riders beat rival Mt. Holyoke

Regional competition next for equestrian team

BY EDEN UNVER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The University of Massachusetts equestrian team defeated Mount Holyoke in their region competition after coming in second place for the past 11 years.

The team is part of the Intercollegiate Horse Shows Association (IHSA), which is a national organization that includes 300 colleges and universities, according to the Equestrian Team's Web site. Western Massachusetts is zone one in region three of the IHSA which also includes 13 other schools.

These include four out of the five schools in the five college area – UMass, Smith College, Amherst College, and Mount Holyoke College.

According to the Web site, UMass and Mount Holyoke have been "neck-and-neck" in competing for the top-placing team for some time.

"Competing against Mt. Holyoke every weekend was not easy," said Joscelyn Gray, the team's secretary. "Sometimes we would be so close to winning, and they would just pull ahead unexpectedly. Being in second place only made us fight harder to win."

There are many factors that helped lead the team to the regional victory, according to co-captain Ariel Weisman.

"I think that our winning the region has a lot to do with confidence of our riders, and consistency," said Weisman. "We took on a lot of new team members that would help us put together the strongest roster

See HORSES on page 2

The UMass equestrian team defeated Mount Holyoke last weekend for the first time in 11 years. Co-captain Bailey Sheran rode Skip to victory in a jumping event during the competition.

Voter apathy marks recent SGA elections

BY JOSHUA WALOVITCH
COLLEGIAN STAFF

This year, 2,347 University of Massachusetts students voted in the race for the Student Government Association (SGA) presidency.

The total votes accounted for roughly thirteen percent of the total student population.

"There is political apathy that permeates throughout America and is exemplified here on campus," said Carla Dominguez, speaker for the SGA. "We all pay money towards a student activities trust fund and it only makes sense for the students to vote in order to have a say in where the money is allocated."

Each student at UMass pays $91 per year in a student activities fee which amounts to $364 over a typical student's four-year, college career. In total, each year the SGA is given a $1.8 million budget, which on March 6 and March 7, 87 percent of UMass students lost the opportunity to influence where that money could be spent because they did not vote.

"I didn't vote but I was aware of the elections," said UMass junior Daniel Grant. "Every time I was near a booth I was on my way to class or didn't have time."

After being informed of the $91 fee and $1.8 million budget, Grant said he would have been more likely to have filled out a ballot.

"If I had known this beforehand it would have been more likely that I would have voted," he said.

See ELECTIONS on page 3

Last week's Student Government Association elections resulted in new leadership for the organization that was decided by ballots cast by 2,347 UMass undergraduates.

UMass professor wins NSF funding

BY JESSICA SACCO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Assistant professor of the chemical engineering department, Lianhong Sun, received a five-year, $400,000 grant from the Faculty Early Career Development (CAREER) Program at the National Science Foundation (NSF) to continue research on the development of therapeutic protein production.

Sun started his research three years ago, and just recently gathered enough data to fund the program.

The goal of his research is to demonstrate a system to produce therapeutic proteins, as well as engineer a competent system to produce the human Interleukin-2 (IL-2) into the E. coli bacterium, which will essentially create the protein more efficiently.

The E. coli bacterium will be used as a model for his testing, and Sun will look to see how much of the therapeutic protein he is able to produce with this process.

"I believe it to be a better method than anything else," he said.

The next step will be to isolate the protein in its purified form, where it can then be used for medical purposes.

Sun is hoping to be successful with his work. He hopes that these proteins will help in therapies involved with infectious diseases, cancer, and HIV. The cost of many pharmaceutical drugs will be reduced as well.

The CAREER Program is the NSF's most prestigious awards for new faculty, and it recognizes and supports the early career development activities for those faculty members who have a good chance at becoming academic leaders of the 21st century.

Awardees are selected on the basis of creative, integrative, and effective research as well as education career development plans that supply contributions to research and education.

See GRANT on page 3

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 103

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Exter
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Michael Sarkes
